Calm After the Storm...

When King Rugby ascended his throne last week, other sports were shoved into the background. The soccer finalists took a back seat to their football playing brothers. The lacrosse addicts have been even more neglected.

The various groups slowly narrowed down so that group champions have been declared. With but one exception, the play-off berths have been decided. That exception is Group II, where Junior School, Meds II and University College tied for first place. In the play-off, School drew a bye whilst the other two battled it out over the week-end.

The medicinemen pulled somewhat of a surprise by upsetting the favoured Red and White squad with a decisive 14-4 score. The score in their previous encounter had been quite the reverse and had thus installed the losers as favourites.

The final outcome of Friday's game was never in doubt as the embryo physicians opened the scoring early in the match and were never headed. Although the losses carried the play, their hurried and inaccurate shooting, plus the close checking of the Med team, led to their downfall. Half-time score was 8-2.

High scorer of the game, with six goals, was McKay. Rogers counted five, Fenn two, while Alorc came through with a single.

U.C. were led by Ferguson, who netted two counters. Price and Davidson completed the scoring.

Meds meet Junior School to decide the group championship of Group Two.

walked to the skate wicket.

A shrill whistle greeted him and a strange voice asked sharply, "What size shoes?"

June-Bug, ignoring the voice completely, asked, "Why do little ducks walk softly?" Before the person could answer, he hurled "Cause they can hardly walk." Alf blipped him on the head and carried him away. So June-Bug, in his delirium, in order to meet the dead-line, told the Kitten all about the affair, and here it is.

Vic A has done it again! Yes, this stary aggregation from old Ontario's speaking of the contest between Vic A stary aggregation from old Ontario's strand have come out victorious in one of the best games of the year. We are speaking of the contest between Vic A and P.H.E. Srs., which took place in the O.C.E. gym last Friday night, in which Vic won 22-13. Pat Flynn, that diminutive refugee from the U.C. Follies, was the outstanding star of the game for P.H.E., scoring most of their points. Lois Dowson, Jeannie Wright and Sue Oliver were the notables on the guard line largely responsible for holding down the usually high-scoring Vic team.

The Scarlet and Gold team play some of the best basketball to be seen on this campus as a rule, and Friday night was no exception. Shirley Pierce garnered a neat 13 points for herself during the game and Mildred Donaldson was close behind with five points. Joan Campbell and Jan Hardy, played superlatively the Vic guard line, played superlatively throughout the entire game and held the P.H.E.'s to a very small score by virtue of their excellent man-to-man defence.

We didn't trust our own opinion of the game for fear of showing partiality, but after speaking to Joan Davis, one of the coaches, and Mariel Finlayson, a referee, we feel quite justified in saying that this was without a doubt the best game of the season so far. The teams had an enviable spirit—a "playing for the love of it" air which is often all too conspicuous by its absence. The playing was unusually clean and snappy—no fumbling, no scrambles, and very few penalties. All in all, we could ask for nothing better.

As a parting shot—a word to the baseball teams concerned in the finals: Your game, if it hasn't already been played, must be finished some time this week so the season can be officially closed. Will the team managers please see that the game is scheduled as early as possible.

Blue Sunday

Principal R. C. Wallace, of Queen's University, sounded the death knell of the University's Drama Guild Radio Workshop when he decreed that the University did not permit dramatics on the Sabbath and cancelled the programme scheduled for a week ago Sunday. In a vain hope that other arrangements with the broadcasting station could be made, the Guild persevered and produced the programme on the Saturday, but as it is impossible to reserve this time permanently, it is feared that the activities of this enterprising group will have to be suspended indefinitely.

In view of the fact that many university students will be entering the radio broadcasting field upon graduation, it is tragic that they should be deprived of this superlative opportunity for practical experience in the business by a narrow and outdated Blue Law. Why should the University, any more than any civic group, object to Sunday broadcasts? The universities are supposedly the home of progressive views and broad ideas. They are supposedly the moulding casts of the citizens of the future.

As a second, and even weaker reason for his ruling, Principal Wallace states that the time for which the broadcasts were scheduled (11:30 p.m.) was too late for the many freshmen involved in the air show. He himself, however, states that the question of special leave leaves for these girls did not alone decide the issue, and that depending on the merit of the individual girl, special leave might be granted. It would seem that this second objection was merely added in an attempt to justify a canyon-minded view.

It is not our position to judge or condemn the decision of the Principal of Queen's; however, we think that the head of a large and highly respected university should show more sympathy to such an admirable and ambitious project on the part of the undergraduates and not do his utmost to stamp out any and all initiative on their part.

Living in a city where rigorous Blue Laws are in effect, we feel that these enactments are outmoded and indeed singular in the world of today.

Manners

It has often been remarked that the age of chivalry is irretrievably dead; however, this does not mean that good manners are also to be tossed lightly overboard. Because noble knights do not rush up and gallantly spread their raincoats on the campus for the co-eds to trample on, it does not necessarily follow that we must descend to the other extreme. And it is evident that students are tending to become more and more inconsiderate and bad-mannered.

This outburst is occasioned by an incident which occurred in an eleven-thirty lecture a few days ago. At half-past twelve the professor was concluding his subject with a few pertinent remarks which were necessary to an understanding of what had gone before. However, a group of hungry students impatiently pulled on their coats, zipped up their cases and indignantly marched out in a body. Their attitude was that they had been granted a privilege in listening to the lecture for forty minutes, and that any extension of that period was an affront not to be borne. This type of rudeness is inexcusable. Not only is it a violation of all the standards of politeness, but also it shows a deplorable lack of common sense. The professor was communicating material to them which was essential to the understanding of the subject. The fact that the professor himself might have been vaguely looking forward to his luncheon seems to have been entirely ignored.

It is a commonplace that good manners consist of consideration for others; but, like most everyday remarks, there is an amazing amount of good sense in it. To make life a little more pleasant for someone, one does not go out of one's way to insult him. And that is what these students were doing. By waiting a few minutes to satisfy their hunger, they would have spared someone's feelings. Let a word to the wise be sufficient.

Organ Prelude

Convocation Hall

Dr. Healey Willan gave another inspiring organ recital at Convocation Hall yesterday afternoon.

As a tribute to the memory of Norman Wilks, Dr. Willan played the deeply moving Funeral March by Mendelssohn.

Handel's Overture to Richard the First, although not especially interesting, made an impressive beginning. This was followed by a group of three Choral Preludes. The first was written by Ralph Vaughan Williams on the Welsh hymn-tune, Rhosymedre. While not sight of the melody, Dr. Willan brought out all the richness of colouring in the harmony. The two following were written by Hubert H. Parry on the tunes, Martyrdom and Christ, Redeemer omnium, respectively. Here the beautiful melodies sang against a quietly-flowing background.

To conclude the programme, Dr. Willan played his own composition, Introduction, Passacaglia and Fugue in E flat minor. In it, the resources of modern dissonance and chromaticism are given meaning and stability by the classical form, making a truly fine work.

The next recital will be given by Dr. Willan on December 4.

LILIAN DOBSON

Errand for Bernice

Rayol Alexandra

Gertrude Lawrence is terrific! Appearing in a three-act triangle entanglement with but three actors, Miss Lawrence, in her own invincible manner, was able to hold the audience enthralled throughout the entirety of Errand for Bernice.

It takes an accomplished cast such as Miss Lawrence has to put over a rather sparse story, lifting it out of the dime novel into a human drama. One could very readily imagine the common-place level that the love scene between Bernice and her recently-acquired but adoring lover, Paul Rossler (Stephen Berkassy), might have descended to but for their consummate skill and complete sincerity. Paul's romantic nature and Swiss accent and naive simplicity was a perfect foil for the hard-bitten and droll Capt. Bruce Avery (Wendell Cory). Both suitors playing their parts to perfection, but Bruce, getting most of the punch lines, took the edge on Paul in the highly melodramatic last scene.

The story is relatively simple and the irony, at times uncomfortably blatant, is nevertheless effective. It is the story of an American army nurse (Bernice) on leave, only a few precious days of which remain. Desiring to leave herself behind in the memory of someone who will worship her always, she falls in love with a Swiss. Her childhood sweetheart whom she has just jilted traces her to the hotel, where she is making love to the new man, who does not suspect her real identity. The ruse is kept to the end, when, with complete about-face, Bernice becomes the hardened army nurse packing her trunk to leave amid the jeering remarks of patient Bruce who is heading for the other side of the world in a few days, the two of them perhaps never to meet again. But her mission is fulfilled; she is confident that her memory will live on in the memory of Paul.

As can be judged, ample scope was allowed for the full use of Miss Lawrence's talents.

THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1944

No. 43

Directory
Is Available
To Students

The total enrolment of students in the University for the present session is 6,738, as compared with a total of 6,323 last year, according to the "Students' Blue Book," the University of Toronto Directory of Staff and Students, which appeared last Friday.

The enrolment in Arts, the largest faculty, has increased from 2,985 in 1943-44 to 3,140 this year, which accounts for 155 of the 415 increase. The Faculties of Applied Science, Forestry, the Ontario College of Education, and the Schools of Graduate Studies, Law, Nursing, and the Department of University Extension, all show increased enrolment. In the Faculty of Dentistry and the School of Social Work the enrolment is lower this year. Little change is seen in the enrolment in the remaining faculties and schools.

In addition to alphabetical lists of staff and students, the Directory contains a list of important phone numbers, including residences, fells!

Shortly after the beginning of term, students were requested to make sure that their correct Toronto addresses and telephone numbers were entered upon their registration cards in the University Registrar's office and in the offices of their College Registrars or Faculty Secretaries.

From these cards lists were prepared by the Faculty Secretaries and forwarded to the Registrar's Office. In the case of the Faculty of Arts, the lists of students were compiled in the University Registrar's Office and forwarded to the four colleges, so that they might be checked and returned. The assistants in the Registrar's Office also referred to lists of students submitted by various residence and co-op houses, leaving no stone unturned to make sure that each student would have his address and telephone number appearing correctly in the Directory.

From these sources the final lists of staff and students were prepared and forwarded to the press. Even at this late date, many revisions were made as tardy students appeared to change their addresses at the last moment. And just at this time at least one senior student found that he had forgotten to register at all!

Vic Debates
Uphold
Salsberg Bill

By a majority vote, the motion, "Resolved that the Salsberg anti-discrimination bill is an unwarranted infringement of personal liberty," was defeated in the afternoon session of the Victoria College Debating Parliament.

Jim Younger, Minister of Education, was the speaker of the House for the session.

Harding Vowles and Joan Thomas, speakers for the affirmative, stated that discrimination can only be overcome by education, not by legislation, and that such legislation is a denial of our democratic rights as free individuals.

The speakers for the opposition, Les Pickering and Kay Morrison, contended that at least outward discrimination would be impossible under such a law and that for our own welfare some laws are necessary.

The floor of the House was then thrown open for discussion. Margaret Albright, leader of the opposition, expressed the opinion of the House by stating that all present recognized that discrimination of any type was undemocratic and that the Salsberg Bill would place restrictions on the personal rights of individuals.

Housing Scheme
Is Inexpensive

As one of the first moves in an educational programme provided by the Citizens' Housing Association to acquaint citizens with the problems of this city, Mr. Nathan Straus addressed the opening session of this association's Housing Conference at Central Technical School.

Mr. Straus was appointed by Pres. Roosevelt in 1939 as administrator of United States Housing Authority, Washington, D.C.

Paying tribute to Sir Raymond Unwin, "the international leader of housing," he told of England building a quarter of a million houses between 1919 and 1939, more than half of which were occupied by families in the lower income group, and that the programmes in the United States were modelled after those of Great Britain. He stressed how it had been found that annual subsidies from the government and local private investments were found necessary to keep rentals down.

Mr. Straus advised Canada to use tested administrative and financial techniques like those successfully used in England, Sweden and the Netherlands. Avoid overcrunching, plan on large-scale projects (at least 200 acres), plan bravely financially for at least three years ahead, were some suggestions given.

Brief Prepared for Canadian Youth Commission to be Discussed by Dr. Stuart
Robinson

MEDICAL OPINION VARIED

Medical students at this University will meet to discuss and ratify the Health Brief, prepared by the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes, at the regular meeting of the Arts and Letters Club, to be held in Wymilwood at 7 p.m. tonight. The brief was drawn up at the National Convention of CAMSI at the University of Montreal two weeks ago.

The brief consists of thirteen principles and represents a composite view of medical students all over Canada for a national health plan, which would be acceptable to them as the future executors of that plan. The brief has been printed and distributed to every medical student in the country and provision has been made for every student to ratify each principle on a uniform ballot sheet.

Many controversial issues are contained in the brief and it is expected that the varying opinions held by the medics will produce lively discussion.

Presenting the brief will be Dr. Stuart Robinson, M.D., last year's national chairman, and John Macivor, chairman of Toronto C.A.M.S.I.

When ratified, the brief is to be presented to the Canadian Youth Commission and it is not unlikely that it will form the basis of post-war health legislation. Thus in a truly democratic way, Canada's health is being planned on our own campus by those who have that problem to solve—her future doctors.

The Varsity Reviews

The Trinity Review

Forty pages of literary effort are included in the Autumn issue of the Trinity University Review. For a college magazine which comes out only four times a year, that is a rather small volume of literary output, and from the lateness of publication one is led to suspect that it was not a process of ruthless selection that kept down the Review's size.

The impression given by a glance at the contents of the Review is that the fault lies in a general apathy of the students towards any experimenting with putting their ideas into print. The decline seems to be just as prevalent at Trinity, which has recently enjoyed a favourable reputation for its writers, as elsewhere on the campus.

Coming down to actual cases, we are forced to admit the wisdom of the choice of a humorous verse as the best work in the issue, for although the story of Rupert the Rabbit by Rose Marie Moore is strongly suggestive of Uncle Wiggly, it has dashes of genuine humour.

Serious poetry is represented by Graham Cotter's bit of free verse, By Our Soldiers' Tower, which comes closer than most poems on this type of subject to expressing the related feelings of tragedy and hope.

Other poetry in the issue is not outstanding. R. E. Mackie's gentle ridicule of psychology is perhaps worthy of mention because of its genial mixing up of calculus professors, love, stipples, Kant, glands and hormones, and deriving from them one hardly homogeneous whole.

The prose in the issue is not of high standard. Even the editorial, signed with the letters M.C., snarks of superiority as it talks of the transition of life at home to life at college. The living at home to life at college. The tendency to make remarks on things in passing is carried on in O. R. Orr's article On Approaching Modern Poetry, which, though ample as far as it goes, is too short to amplify the conclusions it reaches.

E. J. Pratt
To Discuss
Own Poetry

Dr. E. J. Pratt will lecture in Convocation Hall on Tuesday, at 8:30 p.m., under the auspices of the Toronto Alumnae Association, which is affiliated with the Canadian Federation of Convocation Alumnae.

Dr. Pratt is lecturing in place of the scheduled lecture by Marie Ward. Mrs. Ward was forced to cancel her engagements in Canada and return to New York due to the fact that her son contracted poliomyelitis.

After the lecture, Victoria Doyle and the students of Loretto, St. Joseph and Notre Dame colleges will sing.

Tickets are on sale at Convocation Hall, and the public is invited.

Gun is Gone Dirty Meds!

Too Many Big Shots Gum Up the Works at School: Straight from the Cannon's Mouth

DEAR ME!

"... And from this mass of evidence one unmistakable fact stands out: the school cannon has been hooked." This shocking news was first received when the inimitable Wo crashed open the plot by which Skale hoped to win the game. The cannon was to shoot the ball up to a plane which, in turn, was to drop it behind the U.C. goal line.

The dastardly deed was kept secret so well that most skulken had not the slightest notion of the crime. Moaned Whitey Belch-Haw: "What! It's gone? Not bad enough we lost the game! The cannon too!"

Pomas M. Terry has a theory all his own. Quote: "U.C. plan to threaten Warden Lickerbreth with bloody cannon ball extermination should he fail to vote the Royal College as the best-dressed outfit on the campus."

Told that the cannon had mysteriously disappeared, Sonny Jiggins expostulated: "What? Canon Dody gone?" S.P.S. lecturer "Sue" Braynes, while jangling madly on his slide-rule, gasped: "We're already designing a bigger, more powerful one for next year's final game."

The only comment available from the gang at the King Cole room was: "Dawwww... hic... wasshad?"

One young chick in the department of Fine Art, on being asked to make some funny comment, said: "That's fine! Yea, Arts!"

Opinion of members of the U.C. squad seems to indicate that the disappearance of the cannon saved them the game. Said snap Bone Ronsten: "They planned to deafen us all with terrific explosions so that we wouldn't be able to hear the quarterback's signals in the huddle... But we fooled 'em, fooled 'em, fooled 'em..." and his voice was submerged in hideous laughter.

Missing link is the mysterious disappearance during the last quarter of the game of Miss Lassie-Fooeese Jaylor. When last seen she wore a brown tam and her hair over her eyes to avoid recognition.

Production of the new cannon was stopped abruptly when Bike O'Cryin' rushed into The Varsity office, screaming: "Stop the story! Hold the press! Sue The Varsity! It's a frame-up! The cannon hasn't been stolen at all! I know where it is... but I ain't tellin'..."

Three Must Go...

... in the lacrosse play-offs to be held this and next week. All remaining semi-finalists were decided yesterday, as Junior Meds edged Junior School 8-7 and will engage Senior School next Thursday, and Forestry nosed out Vic 12-10 in an overtime game, and will be pitted against Senior Meds next Friday.

We expect that Sr. Meds and Sr. School will be the finalists for the Dofac Cup in two games to be played some time next week. But a lot of things may provide something of an upset, and Forestry, if Al Carmichael keeps up his high goals per game average could do the same.

Yeah, Meds! ... In the Group II play-off game between School and Meds, MacKay practically eliminated School all by his lonesome. He wrapped up seven big goals and delivered them in person to goalkeeper Secord, of School. Rogers was the only other doc to perform a major scoring operation, with a lone tally. For the Engineers, Tredgett sank three, while Daniel, Doyle, Farquar, and Teghtsoonian all got singletons.

The game was a real thriller all the way. At the end of the first half the score read 4-4; at the end of the third period, 6-6; and with two minutes to go, 7-7. Yes, it was a very close game. Only superior defence work on the part of the Medicos won it for them.

Timber!

The Forestry-Vic game was a little more thrilling than the other. It was not a neck-and-neck affair until very late in the last half. Vic led 4-2 going into the second quarter and held the two-goal lead at half time, 7-5. After about three minutes in the third stanza, they had extended their lead to 10-5. From then on, Forestry shut Vic out, scored five goals themselves in the last two quarters, and two more in the overtime period.

Fullerton with six goals was the best Vieman on the floor. Hart with three and Pearce with one played a very good offensive game for the losers. For the Foresters, Carmichael notched eight, and Cox and Hamby picked up a brace apiece. Goalkeeper Vetter played a superb game for Forestry, as did Carmichael on the attack, and Johnson, who played a hard-checking defence.

Lynn Howard's bit of fiction, These Things One Wonders Of, is perhaps the best prose of the issue, but in trying to achieve the mannerisms of the Frenchman-in-English, he is rather more reminiscent of an imitation of Damon Runyan.

Margaret Ross' short story, Journey Home, has the failing of almost all students' stories on a serious theme — it cannot achieve the desired mood. The author is not to be singled out for blame; it seems a common failing of students everywhere. KEN McRAE

The long-awaited game between St. Mike's and P.H.E. Sr. came off last night. It was the first indecisive game of the season in the Senior League, ending in a 26-all draw.

All the way through, they tell us, the score was as close as the final one, and up until the last 2 minutes of play it was anyone's game, possibly the Double Blues, as they had a 1-basket lead. Then P.H.E. potted one to even up the score, and there it stayed. The old and reliable combination of Mike Mahaney and Rose Marie Cunningham went through the old and very reliable motions of putting the ball in the basket very neatly at each clear opportunity, despite one of the toughest guard combinations. The St. Mike's team was put at a disadvantage when Miss Cunningham was gently led to the bench for 4 fouls. Pat Flynn and Doris Clark were the leading lights of P.H.E. and majored in the scoring efforts, but in all, the P.H.E. shots showed the effects of lack of practice. This is a factor that is harder to lick than the best guard line.

In the final analysis it was a "terrific battle" all the way thro' and in a way was not up to Friday night's contest. Somehow in games with St. Mike's there is a spirit of being Out to Win. We haven't made up our mind whether this is a Good Thing, or Not a Good Thing, but it adds a certain intensity to the game that is inclined to rough it up a bit. Because of this roughness we are inclined to think that it is Not a Good Thing. So consider it deplored by us, until we see a good point about this spirit.

Anyway, it was one of the better games of the year.

High Standard

Eaton Auditorium

A delightful concert, inaugurating their new series of weekly recitals, was given last Saturday afternoon in Eaton Auditorium by the internationally famous Hart House Quartet — James Levey, Henry Milligan, Cyril Glyde, and Boris Hambourg. It is satisfying to note that this institution, whose numbers (except for its mainstay, Boris Hambourg) change frequently, is able to keep up its high standard of performance.

Quartet playing, by its very intimacy, belongs in the drawing-room. The musical connoisseur as well as the novice come closer to the composer in this form of musical expression perhaps than in any other. Mozart's Quartet in D minor, probably his most famous chamber work, expresses the composer's maturely thoughtful yet optimistic nature in various moods with such artistic perfection that we are lifted into the realms of absolute music where words seem paltry.

Debussy, the late 19th century English composer, shows a distinct resemblance to Debussy in his musical ideas. Most of the Quartet was too impressionistic for this reviewer's taste, with no one melodic line but rather with turbulently impatient individual lines and transcendental harmonies. The Late Swallow movement, however, dedicated to the untimely death of Norman Wilks, did have a mournful and elusive beauty all its own.

Brahms, the deep dreamer, was given new expression in the playing of his Piano Quartet in G minor with Max Pirani brilliantly interpreting the piano part.

Delightful as the concert was, it was felt that the overbrilliance of the first violinist's tone and the relatively obscure second violin, made for an unbalanced effect at times. This is but slight criticism of an otherwise enjoyable performance.

Changing Of Divorce Laws Favored In School Debate

Affirmative Side Wins by a One Vote Margin in Debate Concerning the Possible Future of Our Divorce Laws

DECISION NOT DEFINITE

The resolution that "Our divorce laws should be modified to permit divorce on the mutual desires of both parties" was carried by the slim margin of one vote at the S.P.S. debate yesterday afternoon. Bob Singer was the speaker for the House and Cyril Fry was the Clerk.

Prime Minister Jim Gow, III Civil, introduced the case for the government and based his argument on the fact that in the present modern society divorce is essential.

Murray Lount, III Civil, the leader of the opposition, stated that since children provide the basis of a nation's strength, divorce should be discouraged by every means. He went on to say that children who are victims of divorce cannot lead normal lives and consequently develop complexes which often affect their later lives.

Ed Durand, III Mech, second speaker for the government, reasoned that companionship is the fundamental reason for marriage and not just procreation. When this mutual bond is broken, said Durand, there is no longer a reason for the marriage to exist.

Colin Wrong, I Aero, stated, in speaking for his side, that divorce laws should not be modified; there is a great possibility that people, after being divorced, would not live morally. He added that it is the duty of parents and an irrefutable law of nature that they should rear and look after their offspring until they reach maturity. Children of divorced parents, who are forced to live with each parent alternately, miss the joys of home life, form prejudices against each parent in turn, and fail to obtain a level perspective of life.

The motion was then put to the House for open discussion. Among views expressed was the following: that the laws of Ontario are medieval, the only grounds for divorce being adultery.

Birdwhistell's Unorthodox Career Includes Wrestling And Dancing

By Frank Rasky

On the campus now there is one pedagogue who claims that professors are human beings too—and practices what he preaches.

New lecturer in Social Anthropology, here, he is a charming young man with the almost unbelievable name, Ray Birdwhistell. And as his students know by this time, it's his practice to finish off a lecture and then take the group to a Bloor Street sweetery and there, over a coke, discuss things with his scholars.

Those who know Mr. Birdwhistell are not astonished at this unorthodox method. For Mr. Birdwhistell himself is unorthodox. Self-confident almost to the point of being brash, the 27-year-old lecturer has a wide range of knowledge which he vents with a honed wit, has a husky physique, an infectious smile, curly brown hair. And, as he admits, he also has a wife.

Mr. Birdwhistell explained his teaching technique in an interview yesterday at his curious office in the Museum which is cluttered with the skulls of a human and a monkey ("To remind me how little we differ in the end"), a scrawny image of Buddha in ebony ("To remind me what happens to people when they begin philosophizing too much") and several empty match folders ("To remind me to get some more matches"). Here, speaking in the slang that makes him so popular, he also made himself abundantly clear.

"I don't think a professor is a god," he said. "I believe a professor should mix with students. In that way I find out what they want to know and tell them what they ought to know, if I can. You can't possibly hope to drive home all the knowledge you wish during a lecture. It's like a guy with 40 buckets of water trying to pour those contents into 40 empty coca-cola bottles."

"It is not the professor's duty essentially," he said, "to transfer the summation of knowledge he possesses to the minds of the students. I think that if he stimulates reading—introduces the students to the wonders that await them in the text books, then he has achieved his purpose."

"For myself, I like talking informally with my pupils. I like telling them stories to brighten up lectures. I even like teasing them. Then I like getting together with them—though this may be pretty hard in wartime—and getting

Noted Author To Discuss Subject 'Europe's Children'

Robert St. John, noted war correspondent and author, will address a public meeting at Convocation Hall at 3:30 p.m. on Sunday, Dec. 3. "This war is without question going to bring about a world-wide revolution. Not necessarily revolution in the usually-understood sense, but a revolution in the way-of-life for millions of people," claims Mr. St. John.

"In India, Africa, and China," says Mr. St. John, "men who had never seen a gasoline engine before this war are learning to drive jeeps, repair trucks and service planes. War has introduced to them a mechanical way of doing things and when the war ends these people are going to want to raise their standards of living by mechanical means."

Mr. St. John comes to Toronto at the invitation of the Save the Children Fund, Canadian Committee, and his Convocation Hall talk will concern "Europe's Children." Thousands of dollars have been sent to Europe by the Save the Children Fund for the relief of these children since war began.

In the summer of 1939 he went abroad as foreign correspondent for the Associated Press. He arrived in Paris the day Poland was invaded.

Within the next two years he saw the Polish campaign, the two Iron Guard Revolutions, Nazi troops enter Bucharest and Bulgaria, the fall of Yugoslavia, the bombing of Belgrade, the fall of Greece and Crete, and the "blitz" of Britain.

In England he helped dig air raid victims out of the ruins of Canterbury and worked in a munitions plant.

He is the author of "From the Land of Silent People" and "It is Always Tomorrow."

U.C. French Club To Stage Comedy In Hart House

A lorgnette borrowed from Miss M. B. Ferguson, Dean of Women, University College, and a silver-headed cane, borrowed from Prof. S. E. De Champ, U.C. French professor, are two of the strange stage props which will appear in Hart House Theatre tonight.

The U.C. French Club, which is staging Moliere's comedy, "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," tonight at 8:15 p.m., claims that though their play presents many peculiar props, their most distinctive one will be Miss Peggy Miller, whose picture appeared in The Varsity a few weeks ago, and who was also a Folies chorine.

Miss Miller will have a leading role in the comedy, singing Clerambault's well-known aria, "Jupiter et Europe," and she will also sing in two duets along with Jack MacAllister.

Colourful costumes will highlight the show which includes a Turkish scene and other vivid panoramas, said Ainslie Campbell, executive member of the club. She said there would be a four-piece orchestra, with dancing being directed by Miriam Lavine, III P.H.E.

The cast, she said, has been rehearsing every evening last week, and last night there was a full-dress rehearsal. Tickets, which are reported to have had a wide sale, are still available in Hart House box office and the U.C. rotunda.

Arts, Letters Club Hear CAMSI Plan

The report on the Health Insurance Brief will be given to the Canadian Youth Commission by December 5 by the Toronto CAMSI organization, it was announced last night at a meeting of the Arts and Letters Club.

Dr. Stuart Robinson, last year's national chairman, gave a brief history of CAMSI and its aims. John Macivor, chairman of the Toronto CAMSI, gave a summary of the plans for projects made at the eighth National Conference at Montreal.

John Macivor also outlined the thirteen principles of the Health Plan. It was decided that another meeting was necessary to discuss these principles, because the time was taken up by a discussion of the part CAMSI is playing, and its relation to the Canadian Medical Association and the Youth Commission.

New Canada Year Book Has Extra Articles

Through a special concession, paperback copies of the 1943-44 edition of the Canada Year Book may be obtained for $1.00, which is half the regular price, said Mr. S. A. Cudmore, Dominion Statistician. This concession applies to teachers, university students, and ministers.

The number of copies which has been set aside for this purpose is restricted, so that applications should be made early. They should be addressed to the Dominion Statistician, Dominion Bureau of Statistics, Ottawa.

The Year Book is an official study of social and economic conditions in Canada and economic conditions in Canada. Special articles have been added concerning the effect of the war on Canadian industries and transportation. Other features concern aviation, Canada's reindustrial experiment, and the development of fur production. There are also studies on post-war reconstruction and rehabilitation of ex-service personnel, and on social welfare.

Epic Disaster Of Titanic Described In Pratt's Poem

Poem Stresses Implications of Disaster; Martyrdom of Jesuit Priests Eulogized in "Brebeuf and His Brethren"

ALUMNI MEET

The almost unbelievable combination of circumstances which led to the sinking of the Titanic in 1912 is the greatest example of irony in marine history, Prof. E. J. Pratt stated at the meeting of the Toronto Alumnae Association in Convocation Hall last night. In his poem on the wreck of the Titanic he tried to express the implications of the disaster as if contrived against the human race rather than to recreate the actual event, he continued.

Prof. Pratt then gave an account of the feeling of security of both the passengers and the crew as well as all the world, who felt it inconceivable that a liner like the Titanic, provided with all modern appliances, including the recent use of wireless, should be shipwrecked. She was described as a "lifeboat in herself."

Following two readings from the "Titanic" to illustrate his point, the speaker turned to his epic poem "Brebeuf and His Brethren." The story of the Jesuit priests who suffered martyrdom at the hands of the Iroquois in 1649 is a great act in history, he said; seemingly a failure, the holding out of the priests for 20 years is a supreme success of faith, endurance and sublimity of courage.

The fibre of the sensitive, cultivated men is seen in their long resistance to the temptation to renounce their task as much as in their sacrificial death, the speaker went on. In conclusion, he read passages from "Brebeuf and His Brethren," the torture of Brebeuf by the Indians, his following letter to France, and his last hours.

"Ave Maria" and "Hallelujah" were sung by Victoria Doyle after the first half of Prof. Pratt's lecture.

Mystery Wolf Dance Promises Big Thrill In School Nite Show

The Wolfing Hour will be 12:30 Friday night.

That's all the Engineers will divulge about the "Mystery Wolf Dance," scheduled to come out from under the wraps at the tenth annual Skute Nite this Friday. "Officials" runs the terse communique, "promise a surprise for this event." And that's all we can tell you.

No secret, however, is being made of the annual extravaganza of gals, gamms, and glee in the Hart House Theatre. Most of the girls in the Little Red Schoolhouse will be on hand to add glamour, plus two old veterans, Don Gibson and Gus Campbell. Three sittings of the rousing revue will be staged, at 8 p.m., 9:15, and 10:30, to accommodate the clamorous throngs.

Music for the rug-cutting bolliemakers is spreading into every corner of Hart House. Bert Niosi will play in the Big Gym, Jack Evans in the Upper Salon, Hannigan's Mountaineers in the East Common Room, and the All-Nite Record Men, appropriately enough, in the Music Room.

What are tersely described as "The Mermaids" will displace the traditional and non-appearing Seal and Bear in the swimming-pool show, scheduled for 9:30, 9:55, and 10:40.

Movies will be shown in the Great Hall from 8:30 till 11:30; and Ben Lucas, cartoonist, will whip up caricatures of volunteer sitters in front of the Great Hall all evening.

Co-Ed to Equestrienne Because of Hungry Horse

From campus to circus is the queer course that one Varsity co-ed's career has followed.

With no kingdom to give, Ruth Waddington, former U. of T. student, gave up her college education for a horse. The animal is "Phoenix" and for the steed, Miss Waddington confided in an interview with the local press during a visit to Toronto, she paid a $50 down payment.

But the horse's healthy horse-size appetite soon began to bite deeply into Student Waddington's budget and finally, in order to keep the animal in oats, she was obliged to bid farewell to higher learning and take to supporting "Phoenix" as a full-time occupation. Managing to finance "Phoenix" in this arrangement, she continued to haunt every circus that hit the town. Last fall, when the big top moved into Maple Leaf Gardens, she was in the opening-night audience and from her perch in the stands she was fascinated by a "simply gorgeous white horse" in the show.

Darting back after the performance to get a closer view, she discovered both animal and rider and skidded to an astonished stop, declaring, "Good heavens! That looks like a Lippizianer!"

Surprised, the rider looked up and confirmed, "Yes, dot's right. Dis is a Lippizianer."

A mutual regard developed from this morsel of dialogue. The horseman, Bernard van Leer, a wealthy Netherlands refugee, offered the thrilled girl a position as equestrian with the troupe. She accepted and, six months later, after clearance with Selective Service, she became a professional horsewoman, realizing a childhood ambition.

Today she rides a magnificent animal named Troja, but her first equine possession is not forgotten. Phoenix still lives in Toronto, eating oats provided by Miss Waddington's circus earnings.

The Humanities And Engineering

The Man

Why is an engineer? This is the man who, interested in the practical aspects of our civilization, takes the findings of the pure scientists and mathematicians and applies them to the business of ordinary, everyday living. This is the man who has given to society the automobile, the radio, the four-lane, high-way, and Nylon stockings. He is, traditionally, at least on this campus, a he-man type who, slide-rule in hand, daily makes his way to the north-west corner of Bloor St. and Avenue Road; a man who has neither the time or the inclination for the more aesthetic things life has to offer. Very often he is pictured as a boor, or at least a diamond-in-the-rough. Artists, Meds, and theologs glibly generalize on the subject of Skulermen, on what they, as a group, think, say, and act. Why has this stereotype persisted in spite of the fact that each one of these people who so glibly generalize knows scores of students at The Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering whom they cannot, in any way, make fit the picture? Possibly, twenty years ago, a student engineer was exactly the type of person they habitually think of as a Skulermen, unlettered, ill-mannered, and prosaic.

Today, however, this Faculty embraces all types of students who run the whole gamut of personality and character; they range from the art and music loving engineer right down to the carburetor and crank-case loving engineer, from the engineer who writes poetry for relaxation to the engineer who drinks beer in his leisure time. Today most of these much-maligned students are aware of their important role in society, interested in the social sciences and their relation to our government and society, and have some, albeit inarticulate, philosophy of living.

The Course

One of the chief objections usually aimed at Schoolmen is that they lack background in literature, the humanities, and the social sciences. Unfortunately, this is, more often than not, true. The student who spends anywhere from 28 to 35 hours a week in lectures and laboratories and his evenings writing laboratory reports simply does not have the time to give to these other subjects, and as a result, his interest in them naturally wanes. He finds it difficult, when in conversation with a group of students of the arts, to contribute anything save the most commonplace clichés.

Fortunately, however, this situation is nearing its end. Many engineering schools in the United States, by increasing the length of the semesters, have found it possible to include a more or less complete survey of the humanities. In 1940, the Committee on Engineering Education, which is composed of the heads of 21 engineering schools in United States and Canada, published a report, "On the Aims and Scope of Engineering Curricula" in which it advocated the strengthening of engineering education by the organization of the curriculum in parallel integrated sequences of scientific-technological and humanistic-social subjects, and the transfer of some of the more specialized subjects to the post-graduate period. The professional engineer, who must in the course of practising his profession associate with all manner of people, cannot afford to be merely a technician. He must be a well-educated and well-informed person.

Last spring, the students in the final year of the engineering course at The University of Toronto voted for a course in Political Science and Economics; as a result of this, a non-compulsory course in Modern Political Trends was given at the end of the day's lectures by Prof. Lorne Morgan, and the students responded by packing the lecture hall on every occasion Prof. Morgan spoke.

This year the Faculty Council has included in the curriculum of every year in engineering, several non-technological courses which are being received with the same enthusiasm. If the results of this experiment are favorable, this aspect of engineering education will be extended in the future.

The Future

Engineering is a profession which has, in the past, not received its due respect. Many people would not dream of grouping engineers in the same category with doctors, dentists, lawyers, and clergymen, in spite of the immense contribution they have made to humanity and our civilization. This is partly due to the disrepute in which members of the profession are held by the general public, arising from preconceived notions, and partly due to the loose organization of the profession in the past. Now, however, the profession is not loosely organized; the efforts of such groups as The Engineering Institute of Canada, and The Professional Engineers of Ontario, by setting relatively high standards and requirements that must be met before a man can call himself a Professional Engineer, have raised it to the same level as that of the other professions. It is now up to the individual members of the profession, by making full use of their extended opportunities at college, to gain and hold the respect of the public at large.

ART MUSIC Drama

French-Canadian Artistry

Hart House Art Gallery

French-Canadian art of an interesting and stimulating nature is now on exhibition in the Hart House art gallery, in the canvas paintings of Jacques de Tonnancour. The print room shows a representative group of French reproductions, illustrating the dominating influences on the visiting artist's subject matter and techniques.

Most outstanding perhaps is the strong rich colouring of the figures and remarkable green contrasts in the landscapes. The exhibition calls one back again and again, and there can be no mistaking the lasting mental impression of this art. No doubt many find this type of painting difficult to appreciate, for Tonnancour does not paint as a camera sees. In Panoramic View of Cotes-de-Neiges, greens are played against blacks so that masses and shapes emerge in contrasting relationships. The same impressions, Cézanne-like in origin, are found in many of the landscapes. The viewer has much in store for him if he pauses for mental gymnastics.

A certain bold outline and frank interest in planes and contrasting studies in colour make the figures and portraits of vital significance. The backgrounds are chosen to set off these objectives to advantage. As a rule they are simple in colour and geometric

SO WHAT?

"I should rhapsodize over a rat," exclaimed an incensed Champus Cat today, in pointing out to an interested Varsity newsmagazine of idling intellectuals, the main features of her recently acquired philosophy in life.

"For the common cat of the back fence, a rodent occasionally, okay! But for me—a cat of effluence—a mouse? Nay, I say. My meat's the Muse."

"Proceed ad inf," her audience urged on cue.

"I have here some samples of the poetry this puss has been producing so prolifically of late—for your perusal perchance? Indeed, for better or for worse, if you were to coerce I might recite."

"I ought to explain that the recent discovery of a volume of Ogdenshery has degenerated me into a composer of mediocre jingles. I'm trying to make a Nash of myself. Imagine this feline making a bedline for lyric laurels! Ain't it quaint?"

"But Champus, precious," pleaded Grasskirt, "leave us don't get so discouraged! We would give ear to these lucubrations of thine which you have lately incubated."

"Oh Grasskirt, darling, you are always so—so—so," floundered Champus, fishing for an adjective. "Have you heard 'Witness my fitness. At last I'm Atlas. To periodic PT assisted some by Wheatie, I owe my physique so gorgeously sleek. It used to creek. Cast a glim! How trim?"

"No, I haven't heard that one. How does it go?" straightmanned Grasskirt. "That was it. It's finished. 'Thirty,' as we in the trade are wont to say when we mean 'Amen' or 'The End.' Did you enjoy it?"

"It shows merit," opined Grasskirt, uttering stock criticism No. 263934.

GRASSKIRT . . .

"Oh, Grasskirt, darling, you are so—so—so!"

"Ah, ah, careful, Champus. Thou repeatest yourself."

"I have a more profound piece here," the Cat continued. "It concerns itself with 'The Future of Man.'"

"And what are your observations thereto?"

"I remark that Man is Going to the Dogs. I am preparing a sequel, already on 'The Future of the Dogs.' I have another which I entitle rather provocatively, 'Morpheus is More Fun.' It goes thusly: 'A little bit of insomnia isn't going to be homnia.'"

Volleyball Playoffs Starting Next Monday

Field of Twenty-nine Teams in Playdowns: Sr. School, Sr. U.C. and Jr. School are the Seeded Teams

S.P.S. DOMINATES

The volleyball playdowns get under way next week, starting on Monday, and will likely continue through until just before Christmas holidays are a final winner is determined. Eighty-three teams were entered at the first of the year, and these were divided into twenty-seven groups. Twenty-nine teams will enter the play-offs, two from each of the first two groups and one from all the rest.

Where department or year teams are tied at the end of the regular schedule, the one to go into the eliminating rounds is decided by a toss of a coin as the number of faculty points for the Reed Trophy will not be affected.

Sr. S.P.S., Sr. U.C., and Jr. S.P.S. are the seeded teams of the play-offs, getting byes into the second round. There is a possibility of a tie in six of the twenty-seven groups. Jr. U.C.

School vs School In Swim Final

The Swim League final will take place at 5:00 p.m. on Thursday in Hart House pool. It will bring together the two strong teams from School, Jr. S.P.S., and Sr. S.P.S.

Last Monday afternoon Sr. School qualified for the final by eliminating Trinity College. Jr. School gained the final the same day by beating out another S.P.S. team, the thirds.

J. C. Boa manages Sr. S.P.S., while the Juniors are coached and looked after by A. Patterson.

could emerge tied with Trin. A in the second spot of Group II, if Trin. A wins the game between these two this week. The other deadlocks could occur in Groups V, XII, XVII, XXIV and XXVII.

The teams who will gain the final rounds are as follows: Sr. S.P.S., Sr. U.C., Jr. S.P.S., Jr. U.C., or Trin. A, P.H.E.I., Knox A, For. A, St. M. B., II Dents or U.C. Econ, Trin. D, U.C. Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerry Ewins

HOCKEY NEXT . . .

With the Mulock Cup resting in the proud possession of University College after last Thursday's game, rugby is rapidly disappearing from the campus for another year, and hockey is taking its place. Hockey is already well organized among the various faculties, as nearly all are making good use of their free time on Monday nights.

One of the features of the Jennings Cup League this winter should be the type of hockey displayed. Due to the fact that there will be a Varsity team, there should be an improved brand of sport at the Arena, as all those who are playing for the Blues are also eligible for Intramural teams, with the exception of the men in Graduate Studies. Many of those who could play hockey that was Junior A class or better were playing for teams outside the University last year in order to find competition keen enough for them. This year we will have most of them in the Intramural League, playing on their faculty teams as well as the Varsity team. The conditioning and coaching that they receive from Ace Bailey should help to improve each man's playing ability to the extent where the league will be of a higher calibre this year.

The Standing Hockey Committee met on Monday and came up with a league consisting of six groups, with three teams in Group I and four in each of the others. This will give every team the opportunity of playing six games at least, so all you fellows will be assured of lots of hockey. Here's the way it looks.

Group I finds the three strongest teams in the league pitted against each other in the persons of Sr. S.P.S., Meds I and U.C. I. U.C. has lost nearly all of their championship team of last year and so, according to all pre-season dope, should be the door-mat of the group. Since two teams from this group enter the play-offs, Meds and School are practically assured of at least a crack at the semi-finals.

Group II includes Jr. S.P.S., Meds II, St. Mike's A, and Vic I; Jr. S.P.S. being the favoured quantity. S.P.S. III, Dents A, Trin A and U.C. II make up Group III. The Schoolmen are rumored to have a very strong team here also, and should cop this group championship. Group IV has S.P.S. IV, Vic II, Knox A and Forestry within its limits. Forestry has moved up the ladder two groups from last season, due to their increasing ability to put a better-than-average team on the ice every year. If Mel Lawson is eligible they should win this one. Group V includes Dents B, Trin B, St. Mike's B and Knox B. These are all of unknown calibre, so any one might win it. The last group, Group VI, sees Emmanuel, Wyldcliffe, S.P.S. V and Meds III bunched together. If S.P.S. still have enough good material left around the south end of the campus, they will probably take this group.

The league is to get under way on Monday, January 8, with the first scheduled game at 5:15 p.m. Tuesday's games will be from 1 to 2, Wednesday's two at 5:15 and 6:15, Thursday's from 1 to 2 and at 4, 5 and 6 o'clock, respectively, and Friday's at 4:15 and 5:15. This playing time will be utilized to best suit the timetables of the faculties concerned. Meanwhile, the practices will continue until the teams can get organized and rounded into shape.

SINS OF OMISSION . . .

Seems that a couple of very deserving fellows got left out of the Mulock Cup write-up because of some lost copy. Credit should go where credit is due, and it is due Nels Kuhn and Bill Wade, of U.C., for their efforts in the rugby final. Both played terrific games and, although this is rather late to say so, deserve to receive mention for it. Perhaps the forthcoming All-Star teams will help to further justify this.

"The Sportswoman"

By Janice Murray

PART THE FIRST . . .

Having wasted perfectly good fingernails watching Vic A win a game against U.C. Sr.'s by the narrowest squeak of their young lives, we are feeling very beat-out. The final score ended up 17-14 for Vic, but could just as easily have gone the other way, and through most of the game it did. When, at the end of the third quarter, Vic did settle down sufficiently to see that the basket was at the end of the gym, and not at the side, they romped away with 3 baskets to bring them out in front.

U.C. stars were Gwen Innis and Barbara Allen of the guard line, who held as solidly as the U.C. rugby line a few days ago. The whole forward line starred equally well, Joan Davis and Marion Taylor to mention only two, were very good. Vic held well, with Joan Campbell and Rowena Smith fooling many good U.C. breaks. Rowena Smith played the best that she has this year, justifying her choice as an All-Star last year. Shirley Pearce and Helen Stewart played better than the rest of the forwards, but all in all Vic's shots, the most dependable part of their game, were off. It was a near thing.

PART THE SECOND . . .

Well, so we were wrong. It seems that it was only in High School who couldn't play basketball when we thought we were seeing double. We mean the Tate twins. Vic seems to thrive on it as Vic II whipped U.C. II 33-8 last night. This leaves the field open to P.H.E.I. II or Vic II, and it all depends on whether P.H.E. downs Pharmacy. If this happens, there will be a 2-way tie in this league and there will be Play-offs (Oh, Happy Day, more games to watch!). On the Vic line-up there were the faithful forwards, Jan Young, Joan Robbins, and Ann Smith (who copped 6 baskets all by her little self) and the defence featured Betty Fullerton.

U.C. had their mainstay, Helen Taylor, a guard, on the floor last night, and no one could say enough about her playing. We won't try, but we will say that she worked like a Trojan to save her team, intercepting passes all over the floor, and getting the ball up to her forwards. We also mention June Ward, the U.C. captain, a steady forward, who has done a lot to hold her team in the scoring race. Anyway, exit the U.C. II's.

PART THE THIRD . . .

Just now a phone call came which delighted us. Orchids to Meds-S.P.S. for two things—(a) calling up the nite-office and telling us what happened in a game, one of the few times it has happened;

Willan Concerto

Massey Hall

The highlights of last night's concert by the Toronto Symphony Orchestra was Dr. Healey Willan's Piano Concerto in C minor. The Concerto was given its first concert performance by Miss Agnes Butcher, for whom it was written. The work was heard last August for the first time on one of a special series of Canadian programmes arranged and mostly conducted by Jean Baudet, C.B.C. supervisor of music, as part of the N.B.C. Inter-American University of the Air, 1944 summer series.

This is a new genre for Dr. Willan, and he has handled the task with great skill. The Concerto is perhaps more British than Canadian in spirit. It is solid and melodious, with no blatant modernism. However, the solo instrument is not always used to advantage, owing to a tendency towards too heavy orchestration. Though played in one uninterrupted movement, the Concerto has three distinct sections: a lively Allegro, an intimately glowing Adagio, and a bright, imaginative Allegro. Especially effective were some passages for muted strings, full of intense feeling,

Just as it is difficult to appreciate fully the modern rhythmic structure of the first movement, so it is difficult to judge fairly Miss Butcher's performance in such a new work. However, we felt that she interpreted the Concerto with deep understanding, assurance and vibrancy. It was a brilliant performance in which soloist and orchestra were one under the sure baton of Ettore Mazzoleni.

Mr. Mazzoleni opened the programme with a strikingly artistic arrangement of a Frescobaldi Toccata by the great 'cellist-conductor, Hans Kindler, whose clear musical insight into the total possibilities of the modern orchestra is apparent here. The Toccata requires precision rather than technical skill. Unfortunately, the orchestra lacked certainty in the opening measures and the tone of the woodwinds was uneven, but the climaxes were firmly achieved.

In the closing number, Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony, Mazzoleni had the orchestra at his finger-tips and wrung from the symphony all its emotional significance. There was a splendid balance of parts, subtle changes of tempo, with a full resonant tone in the strings, with dramatic climaxes. It was one of the most brilliant performances that the symphony has given this year.

JACKIE DOHERTY

(b) winning their fifth straight game 31-11 against Nurses, to take their league very decisively. The game was fast and good. By "good" we mean that passes and plays clicked and the team worked as a unit not as a number of individuals. By lowering the concept to individuals we find that Mary Barnett (Mickey), Natalie Staron, and Jean McPherson were the three outstanding forwards, while Hil Verecoter and Persus (Percy) Hughes held the guards together. Persus has an uncanny way of getting the ball when it is still as high as the S.P.S. bets on their football team before the game on Thursday, and she makes one wonder if she will be all in one piece when she comes down with the ball. She always is.

Nurses have a solid guard which had the Meds girls foiled until the second half. Then the forwards got the measure of the Nurses and plowed thru' to cinch the show. Nurses are lucky to have Marg. Arnston and Peg McPherson on their team. These two had their opponents wondering for quite a little time.

At this time comes the little comment about "enthusiasm." It is inevitable, so we warn you here and now that if you aren't interested in joining us in praise of the Nurses' will to win and spirit, you had better stop reading here. After all, what else can you do?

Today's column will dedicate itself to the hapless task of proving that there's more to a professor than a mortar-board or that a pedagogy should not be branded as a brain on one side and a classroom on his other.

Reminiscing one day, for instance, as all good profs do, a pedagogy in anthropology was remembering the unconventional actions of the pedagogy who trained him in a United States college.

Well, it seems that the anthropology department in this hall of learning was being transplanted into a larger room in another building. So, while the construction was going on, the anthrop lectures were held in the Faculty of Theology.

"Often," recalled the reminiscing prof, "this was a means of terrible confusion. Our professor, who was something of a wag, used to love fondling the skull of some tribal native while lecturing. One day, as usual, he was fingering the bizarre bones, when the door burst open and in came a wayward theology student. Unperturbed, the professor placed the skull in front of his own face, turned to the theology, and yelled 'Boo!' The student turned on his heels and ran, and to this day he probably still thinks there's a voodoo man in that room."

SHADES OF EDGAR ALLEN POE!

And here's another prof, also thinking back to the days when he was more affluent in hair, who one day turned to his class and revealed what he considered to be the high point of his career.

It happened, he remembered, when he was an undergrad taking lessons from a cranky old crotch of a prof who was teaching Italian. So one day this prof asked his 19th-century flock whether anybody knew the French word for "English Channel."

"Naturally, being in an Italian class, the students didn't expect they'd have to know French, too, and so they looked bewildered at the query. So enraged was the prof that he took 20 minutes' time out to scold his scholars, with reprimands that everyone studying Italian ought to have a good grounding in French, too.

"Then," said our reminiscing prof, "came the apex of my career. In the middle of his harangue, I put up my hand, with mild impudence, I asked him a question. The question was, 'Sir, in that case, can you tell us the German word for English Channel?'"

"The professor of Italian stammered, looked outraged, mumbled to himself embarrassedly, and then stamped out of the room."

ONE WORLD, ONE GOVERNMENT—ONE LANGUAGE?

Perhaps the medico at the University's Health Division might not be classified as a prof, but from what we gather, this doc has one affinity with pedagogues—a bad memory.

So you can imagine how dazed a certain third-year-man was the other day when being examined, to find that he bore the distinction of being the only student that the doc recalled from the past year.

"I remember you," blared the doc to the fame-lit student, "you're the guy that had the highest content in the university of haemoglobin in your blood last year."

YOUR AUTOGRAPH, PLEAUZE!

Some students hate their profs, while others puppy-love them. And the latter was the case with this young babe, who had what she aptly called a "crush" over her English prof.

In fact, she was so crushed that she had somehow obtained a photo of the prof, and she used to embarrass him no end by bringing it to class and staring at it with appropriate sighs.

Once the prof got wind of this, naturally, he tried all sorts of means to conclude this tender affair, with scolding her, ignoring her, speaking to her in private even—but all to no avail.

One day, though, the fellow students of this babe were surprised to see that the photo was no longer kept on her desk. The day before, it seemed, the prof had failed her in a test.

ROMANCE IS SO MERCENARY THESE DAYS.

WHAT'EVER HAPPENED TO THE FOLLIES DEPT.:

It happened in a French lecture. The prof was gushing forth praises of the French poet, a gentleman called Lamartine, and commenting particularly on the writer's tendency to recapture emotion at the sacrifice of detailed description.

So, after a long and euphemistic analysis, the prof declared: ". . . and thus in this marvelously dramatically ecstatic poem feeling is evident though at no time do you know whether the heroine is blonde or brunette, fat or thin, pretty or ugly, quiet or noisy" . . . and here he ended abruptly . . . "or whether she would have made the tall or short chorus."

Even professors do outside reading. This one found that one of his psychology students had written an article for Saturday Night magazine on mental hygiene and, after reading it, she also advised her class to read it, with the proviso that they discover one error which it contained.

Well, word got around finally to the neophyte author, who is still at University, and for the life of him he couldn't discover the error, either. So one day he went up to this prof's office, apologized for making the error, whatever it might be, and asked how in the world he had erred.

At which point the prof apologized too, for criticising the article, and then pointed out that the mistake was a misquotation of statistics, which was very grave indeed.

The student grinned. "My dear woman," he advised the astonished prof, "it so happens that those statistics incorporated into the article were taken from a lecture you gave us last year."

employed as a professional wrestler and for another two nights he worked as a professional dancer.

"I used to dance on the R.K.O. circuit in exhibition ballrooms," he says. "The only flaw was that I had curly hair and in those days plastered oily hair was the vogue. So I turned to concentrate on wrestling. But one day a fellow wrestler stamped on my stomach too weightily. So then I turned to anthropology."

Mr. Birdwhistell laughed and then he began to talk seriously. He told how he graduated from Miami University in 1940, won a scholarship to attend Ohio State University, won an M.A. in Sociology and Anthropology in 1941, received another M.A. at the University of Chicago in 1942, did research work for the Washington Office of Indian Affairs, did further research for the University of Chicago—and came here in September.

When speaking of the subject he teaches, Mr. Birdwhistell drops his trenchant manner and speaks fervently. "I'm not apologetic about the social sciences," he says, "I don't stand to take any kidding about it. In contrast, it's only a short time ago that doctors were considered barbers."

"Similarly it's about time the public stopped considering some of the social scientists as airy crackpots. There are many social ills we can cure if given sufficient money and time. In Canada, the social anthropologists could do much. For example, we can hold the Canadian society up to light and compare it with other societies—a diagnosis. Then we analyse our social ills—relations between English-French Canada, for instance, or between the Indians and Whites."

"There are some anthropologists who study the dead," he concluded. "There are some other antropolopologists who study what is alive. I belong with the latter school."

Sidney Smith Emphasizes Physics Laws

Dr. Sidney Smith, Principal of University College, told the Engineering Alumni Association of the University of Toronto last night that in order to solve post-war problems Canadian democracy must give thought to the laws of physics.

He declared that in the present maladjustment of society the engineer has a greater place in public life because of his trained insistence on the definition of terms—such as "liberal, right, left, capital, labour, radical, and reactionary."

Despite the contribution of the physical sciences to possible happiness and wealth, Dr. Smith claimed that the "contribution of engineers has created more problems than it has solved, because we have not had the persons to fit their discoveries into the fabric of society."

The job of reconciling new knowledge with use, however, is not the responsibility of the scientist, and "there cannot be a moratorium on research" but the engineer "shares with the rest of society the responsibility of ameliorating the malignant influences of any Frankenstein he may have created," said Dr. Smith.

University Ski Club

SNOW LURES STUDENTS TO VARSITY SKI GROUNDS

By Sid Jourard

Yesterday, with the first fall of snow, indicating the approach of winter, the wheels were set in motion to organize a bigger and better ski club in the University.

Although the majority of undergraduates and co-eds are unaware of the fact, once they have paid their fees to the bursar in the fall, provision has simultaneously been made for their membership in the Varsity Ski Club, and they are granted the privilege of the use of the grounds belonging to the Club.

Situated right in the skiing belt, three miles west of Newmarket, the grounds are the envy of that large and famous organization, the Toronto Ski Club, who avail themselves of the trails and jumps. In return for this privilege, they offer membership in their club at the fantastically low rate of two dollars, a saving of six dollars to the enthusiastic but financially embarrassed Varsity skier.

Arrangements for overnight lodging, a necessity to the ideal skiing week-end, are provided by several Youth Hostels; and the farmers in the neighbourhood, in past winters, have been found to be quite willing to "put you up for the night" for small compensation. Formerly, vast crowds of ski-bedecked students were rushed to Newmarket in rented buses each Saturday morning, but since the war such transportation has been suspended.

But it is the aim of the Varsity Ski Club (and its temporary head, Joe Peller, vouches for this) to encourage enthusiasts to the point that large groups would be willing to go to the grounds

Common Room Voted to Vic

At the open meeting of the Victoria College Union yesterday it was decided that the reserve cash of the V.C.U. is to be turned over to an established fund for a men's common room.

Bob Russell, president of the V.C.U., in explaining the financial situation to those present, stated that the V.C.U. has a reserve fund from the various activities carried on throughout the college. At present there is a total of $350 in the fund, and it was decided that this should be added to the already accumulated $600, which is in the form of Victory Bonds.

The common room, which at present is the basement of Vic, will be transformed into a lounge for men. Much of the money in the fund will be used in furnishing this lounge.

Forthcoming plans for the Vic-at-Home, Feb. 9, were discussed, and it was reported that music is to be provided by Matt Kenny and his orchestra at Eaton Auditorium.

Representatives of Various Political Parties Reach Unanimous Decision at Meeting of Youth Forum

IN WOMEN'S UNION

That conscription of some kind is advocated by all opposition parties, was the decision reached at a meeting of the Youth-Forum on Current Affairs at the Women's Union last night.

Mr. Clifford H. Howard presented the opinions of the Progressive Conservative party. He stated that the Conservatives have consistently and constantly demanded complete conscription for overseas service ever since Mr. John Bracken's speech of Dec. 21, 1942. They proposed the formation of a regular army and opposed the draftee plan.

Early in 1944 the officer in charge of recruiting for M.D. 2 stated that reinforcements were urgently needed. In July, 1944, Mr. Gordon Graydon asked that the draftees be sent overseas, but until October 31 the present government decided that the need was desperate.

General A. G. L. McNaughton has agreed on the plan for conscription put forward by Mr. King, Mr. Howard said, after both Colonel Ralston and Air Minister Power had resigned, for opposite reasons.

Prof. W. J. Curdy spoke as the representative of the C.C.F. party. The C.C.F. stands for conscription as a principle not only in an emergency but because it is the expression of the desire of the majority. It believes that it should be the responsibility of the government to send draftees overseas.

The C.C.F. will support conscription even under Premier King, Prof. McCurdy said. Here the difficulty of an opposition party arises as to what statement of policy it should make. The C.C.F. would like total conscription of men, material, and money, but is willing to meet the government half way.

The Labour-Progressive party was represented by Mr. R. S. Kenny, who said his party is willing to support the Liberals in their policy with regard to conscription. The party supports the war effort but they would not allow the problem of conscription to be used to destroy the King government.

Mr. Kenny believed that it was more than a question of whether or not to send men overseas; it involves party politics, the Liberals versus the Progressive Conservatives. In his opinion, King is supported by Quebec while a Conservative premier would be able to get only anti-war ministers in his government.

Flimsy Whimsy Veils Male

Vancover—(CUP)—The Saturday editor of the Ubyessey made news recently when he crashed the annual "stag" party of the U.B.C. Women's Undergraduate Society. Disguised as a co-ed, he sneaked past the girl at the door and joined the other girls, who were dressed in nightgowns and pyjamas. He was not noticed during participation in games and other events, though he was nearly discovered during the sing-song, but explained his bass voice off as a bad cold.

Finally, near the end of the evening, one of the girls, a sports reporter on the Ubyessey, recognized the culprit, and the entire group of girls chased him out. He got away with the masquerade by decking himself out in a green cruddle-wick gown over blue pyjamas, with feminine accessories.

New Course Now Offered To Students

Following the example set by the University of British Columbia, which recently established a course in marriage, the Department of Household Economics here has installed a new course of six lectures on "Family Social Relations" for fourth year students.

In the first lecture the reasons for studying this subject were given. It is intended to be a cultural subject in a sea of science. With its aid the students will be able to understand human relations and solve their personal problems, and it will be an education for successful marriage. Its appeal is both sociological and psychological and is intended to stimulate understanding of other people's problems.

Marriage should be a co-partnership, not a relation in which one member dominates, it was explained in the lecture. Those concerned, believe that a similar course should be given to the men as there should be a recognition of existing conditions by both participants in this partnership.

U. Staff Members May Soon Return

Mr. Arthur MacNamara, director of Selective Service, has announced in Ottawa that consideration is being given to the return to universities of university staff members now on leave of absence.

This statement was made after the University had held a meeting in Ottawa. The University Advisory Board, established last year to advise Labour Minister Mitchell on university matters, is at present considering post-war education and the return of ex-servicemen to the universities.

Record Hour

The record programme, held daily from 3:45 to 5:00 in the Women's Common Room at U.C., is open to the men and women of every college and faculty.

Varsity Literary Issue

CHRISTMAS-GREEN VARSITY OFFERS OPEN CHALLENGE

"My first short story saw the light of print in the Green Issue of The Varsity; and its cash prize was the first stepping-stone on the way to a literary revenue (deducting taxes) of eleven thousand a year."

"Had it not been for the camaraderie of the campus, I would never have started to write. The editors of the Twenty Bright Magazines are ogres who bite o the heads of the beginners, but the editor of The Varsity was not. I owe it all to The Varsity."

Perhaps you will be giving that interview some day. If your aspirations run that way, the time to start is now. The deadline for contributions to the 1944 Christmas Literary Issue has been set at December 8.

Printed in seasonally green ink, the traditionally Holiday Issue is largely devoted to undergraduate literary and artistic efforts, and cash prizes are oered for the winning entries.

Short stories, essays, light and serious verse, and art, are all in demand, and will be judged and classified separately for prize-money purposes.

Short story writers in particular are urged to dust off their typewriters before

Kidd to Speak At C.C.F. Club

The University C.C.F. Club will hold its third meeting of the term tonight at 8:00 p.m. in the Green Room of Wyllmwood. The speaker, W. Clive Kidd, will address the audience with a talk: "Labour Faces the Facts," an outline of the affiliation of Labour to the C.C.F. Mr. Kidd, a graduate of the University of British Columbia, in Political Science and Economics, is now employed in the capacity of research director of the United Steel Workers of America. His duties consist of the examination of financial reports of the large corporations, that unions might be well informed when industrial disputes arise.

Mr. Kidd has long been associated with trade unions and was employed in Sudbury nickel mines during his undergraduate days on vacation.

Students from all faculties are requested to attend.

Radio Representative To Speak at Meeting

In joint meeting with the I.R.E., the Engineering Institute of Canada will hold the fifth of the '44-45 series of lecture-meetings this Thursday evening, when Mr. S. T. Fisher, of Rogers Radio Tubes, will deliver a paper on "Radio for Over Land Long-Distance Telephone Service."

The time will be 8:15 p.m., and the place Hart House Debates Room. All Engineering students are invited.

Columbia University Professor Attributes American Genius for Organization to Territorial Greatness

HELD IN U.C.

The American genius for organization and genuine desire for improvement will find expression in any international organization in which the United States is included, stated Prof. Bartlett Brebner, of Columbia University, yesterday afternoon, speaking on "The United States and World Organization." This was the third in the "Peacemaking and World Order" series of lectures, held in University College.

Americans are inclined to depend too much on the mechanism as an organization, however, and on the complicated checks and controls they invent for their apparatus, the speaker continued. They might not watch, repair and improve a peace mechanism as they should, since they would be too ready to scrap it rather than mend it.

Prof. Brebner attributed the deeply ingrained genius for organization partly to the territorial immensity of the United States and partly to the fear of possible individual misdirection of power.

Commenting on the national economic attitude of the United States in the conception of her place in an international body, Prof. Brebner gave his opinion that the U.S. will not embark on anything like Britain's policy of free trade, although her capital wealth, productive capacity, and economic possibilities now are analogous to those of Britain in the latter part of the last century.

There is, however, a move towards more international trade, as opposed to the pre-war "Protectionist Pattern" of tariffs and exports. He stated that he believed a free trading world is not to be expected in the near future, and that we are within reach only of a "policing stage" of international political organization.

"Flying bombs have done what Wilson's idealism failed to do," he said, asserting that there is an increasing development in America of the character of world citizenship, and a decrease in isolationism. The people are becoming sufficiently afraid of international violence to do something about it even if they have attacked disease, starvation, and ignorance, which threaten domestic peace and security.

"Isolationism" is not unique in America, the speaker said, recalling examples from history of the many forms of this "anxiety to keep out of trouble." No (Continued on page 3)

FOUND: One sloop, 14-footer or thereabouts. Owner may have same by calling at University Health Service and paying for advertisement.

That ad. hasn't appeared in The Varsity's classified columns yet, but the Health Service may be driven to it soon. The craft in question turned up in the parking-lot behind 43 St. George Street about 11:30 Monday night, with not even a footprint for a clue, according to Mr. J. M. Thomas, of the First Aid staff.

The boat is described as a 14-foot sloop, too far dismantled to be of use to yachting enthusiasts in the Taddle as it stands. Rudder, mast, and centre-board have been removed.

Mr. Thomas had only one comment: "Somebody please take it away!"

Minorities

The mere sound of the word "minorities" brings to mind some of the greater problems of the day. Differences in appearances, manners, speech, custom, and religion invariably stand out from the crowd as something to be held askest.

Anthropologists uphold the view that assimilation of these differences into the masses would soon present an even surface. For where there are no differences there can be no minority problem. Objectively and theoretically, assimilation is the best solution. One race, one religion and one language would end all prejudices and biases.

It is essential, however, to approach this problem from a practical aspect. To have assimilation, those who will be assimilated must give up their religion, racial customs, habits, and characteristic features. For people not placed in the minority, such a plan seems almost reasonable. If further analysis is made, we may easily see the reluctance of a Roman Catholic, Jew or Mohammedan to give up their ancient religions, bounded in traditions and customs which mark their very behaviour and manner. Nor is it feasible that the Italians should yield their art, the Germans their scientific approach, or the Spanish their music and dance. The mother tongue of our immigrants or fellow French-Canadians are all a matter of acceptance and adoption, the use and choice of which spell democratic freedom. The negro, the Chinese or any other coloured race would find a wall barring their assimilation even if they were willing to forego their native birthrights.

The only answer is education, learning and understanding. Each religion, each race and each tongue have within them hidden beauties which contribute colour to world society. Differences do tend for an interesting society, adding to the tone of life and to the monotony of a single encompassing group.

Appreciation of the best in these distinct groups along with an eagerness to learn more about them will result in international toleration. Tolerance is not the proper word to be used regarding the acknowledgment of minority groups. It is more than tolerance which is required—reception and welcome would sound the keynote to harmony among humanity.

Exit Hazing?

All forms of hazing involving mental or physical torture, including paddling, will be banned officially and absolutely by all colleges and universities throughout the country, and offenders, both individuals and organizations, disciplined if the request of the National Interfraternity Conference is followed. A resolution declaring such forms of hazing a menace to the welfare of educational institutions and the various organizations which are a part of the institutions, as well as to individual students, was passed unanimously at the 36th annual meeting of the National Interfraternity Conference.

While such forms of hazing have been condemned in earlier sessions, this is the first definite request made for action by the administrative officers of educational institutions. For years the National Interfraternity Conference and its 60 member fraternities have tried through educational means to eliminate questionable hazing practices among the 2,422 undergraduate chapters of the 200 fraternity campuses in this country. In placing the responsibility for prohibition and enforcement upon the local administrative officers, fraternity leaders hope that the problem will be solved.

The formulation of such a resolution should be heartily applauded. Since fraternities are not officially recognized on this campus, the adoption of the plan must come from the fraternity members themselves. To date we have received numerous letters bitterly complaining of the hazing involved in initiation. Since the letters were unsigned, we cannot publish them. The tenor of the complaints was that such actions were juvenile and not acceptable to ex-servicemen. Specific instances of initiation resulting in rudeness to the C.W.A.C.'s were cited. Spontaneity of student spirit often leads to rashness of this variety but provision should be made to avoid these occasions. The National Interfraternity Conference's suggestion appears to be the culmination of sound and serious thought which could be well taken by the colleges as well as fraternities.

If a university spirit after this war will be parallel to that of the last war, some precaution must be taken to prevent similar recurrences. Initiations and like gatherings will merely foster the desire to cast off all inhibitions and enter into mob spirit. Fortunately, campus opinion this year is singularly free of sentimental desires to compensate for any wartime restrictions. It is to be hoped that this spirit will prevail when those who are listed on The University honour roll return.

ARTS MUSIC Drama

Father And Son

Conservatory Concert Hall

The Parlow String Quartet, maintaining the high standard of performance they established in the first of their current series of concerts, played two Russian chamber works yesterday afternoon.

The Glinka Quartet in F major, anything but Russian in nature, gives no indication that the composer would some day be considered the Father of Russian Music. It is essentially a classical work, bearing the marked influence of Mozart and attempting to be casually pleasant. Even in the adequate performance given it by the Parlow String Quartet the composition was notably undistinguished. It is, however, academically interesting in that it represents the early work of the man who was first to lend national character to Russian music.

Of greater interest was the Tchaikowsky Quartet in E flat minor, Opus 30. Melancholy, introverted and shameless in its revelation of the composer's personality, the work may be closely identified with the three famous symphonies. In fact, the orchestra would present a much better medium for the sentiments expressed here, and this reviewer anticipates the day when Tchaikowsky's chamber music will be made generally available in the more palatable form of orchestral transcriptions.

In the performance of both works the players once more demonstrated that they are keenly alive to the meaning of the music they play. Their performance is accurate and artistic; their interpretations marked by finesse and understanding. Unfortunately, they stand alone among Toronto's string quartets.

PHILIP FREEDMAN

High Comedy

Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme

The University College French Club last night demonstrated to a packed theatre that high comedy is international and immortal. Molière's seventeenth-century satire on the comedy of manners transcended unskilled direction, over- and under-playing, and poetic dialogue in a language unfamiliar to the actors and (through their own fault) incomprehensible to much of the audience. The production, in short, was overwhelmingly successful.

We do not mean that the play was seebryucteS. We do not mean that the play is actor-proof. It could have been spoiled in a dozen ways: speech too halting, action too stilted, the spectacular interludes too long-drawn-out for harmony. That the players fell into none of these traps is a tribute to their good taste and enthusiasm.

Martin Ostwald played suitably à la bumpkin as the parvenu "homme de qualité" whose ridiculous enthusiasm for perfecting himself headlong in music, dancing, swordsmanship, philosophy and a dozen other social accomplishments is the mainspring of the plot and the butt of most of the satire.

Mary Crichton, as his wife, exemplified the amazingly apt casting that pervaded the production. She looked her part and lived it: shallow, a hindrance,

The campus was in an uproar yesterday when it was disclosed that while Hob Grasskirt, IV Electrical Engineering, had been laying a sight for experimental surveying just north of Baldwin House, he accidentally discovered oil.

Immediately after this fantastic discovery, students from the Faculty of Applied Science stamped over to the scene, with Dean Critchmeyer R. Pounk closely following. The group then gawked at the gushing swirl of oil which poured up to the air like a geyser, while Dean Pounk shouted to his students: "We're rich, boys, rich! Grab your transits and mark off your claims before those Arts students try to horn in."

Hardly had these words been uttered, however, when a window from the third floor of Baldwin House slid open and the raucous voice of raucous Prof. Gerti Bilkedhison, well-known instructor in Ancient History and Ancient Ich-theology, sounded forth. "Oh, no you don't," he is said to have said, "I heard you, and I've telephoned all other Arts-men."

From the confusion that followed it was difficult for The Varsity to ascertain the exact sequence of events, but it was learned that University College had cancelled lectures for the afternoon while the students, led by Dr. Kidney Myth, late professor at Western U. and Snaff U., now president-elect of the University here, were permitted to grubstake claims around the original discovery.

Dr. Myth refused to be quoted on the matter, but he was seen rolling in his checked blouse and faded breeches. With an air of defiance, he told the press that he did not care what a certain swell at Hart House did contend about such unconventional clothes, but he didn't care a fig about it, anyway.

"I haven't worn these lovely clothes since my wild-ot days—mining out West and in the Yukon; and nobody can stop me from putting them on now, see!"

"Attaboy," said Mrs. Myth. "Don't take any sass from these here Eastern varmints. I never did like that there mortar board and gown on you, anyhow, if I had my druthers."

Students halted work for a few minutes, however, to cheer the efforts of J. Doberman Pincher, University constable, who rounded up two shirking barbers from Hart House who were stealthily attempting to catch drops of oil from the gusher with saucapans, with the intent of bottling the stuff and selling it as hair oil.

Work was again halted, however, when inquiry was begun as to the whereabouts of Hob Grasskirt, the discoverer of the gusher. An hour's search failed to disclose the migrant miner, until suddenly Lungs Larkin, well-known P.T. Instructor, who had also tried to stake a claim, pointed a finger in the sky to the top of the oil stream. There, spinning like a top, was Grasskirt, sitting on top of his claim.

1944 ALL-STARS

The annual Varsity (the Undergraduate newspaper) All-Star football team are finally about to be unveiled. As is the usual custom, these All-Stars were chosen by football managers of the respective teams found in the intramural league. As is the usual custom, but six able bodied managers turned up with their nominations. To these were added the selections of two of this department's ablest sportswriters. Thus, eight of the most ardent football followers on the campus are responsible for this year's All-Varsity rugby team.

To Ross Clare goes the honour of being the lone All-Star to receive a unanimous vote. Eight makeshift ballots gave Clare a first place vote for a backfield spot. Nels Kuhn, of University College, and School's Gus Campbell missed the same honour by a lone differentiating ballot after piling up seven votes for a berth on the first team.

This year's edition of the All-Star team sports nine repeaters, with but three of these in the backfield. Ross Clare, Art Staley were voted back onto their first place berths, while Vern Booth again missed the top team by a very narrow margin.

Centre Dana Collings retained his position of last year, as did linemen Giardine, Craibbe, Cros, Sharpe and Bromley.

The Mulock Cup winners and intramural champion University College squad contributed the larger portion of the newcomers in the persons of Kuhn, Bill Wade, Alex Saltzman and Aaron Horwitz on the first team, and Doug Whittle, Ed. Currah and Colin Cranham on the alternate.

The final analysis shows a number of discrepancies in the positions accorded different players. For these, the blame must be showered upon the selectors who plucked the shining lights from the various clubs. The case of Cross may be taken as an example. A middle by trade, he was selected for an inside post by the majority of voters who selected him. Whilst this may bring some variations in opinions, we felt that any man capable of polling such a number of votes deserves to be on the resulting team, even if not in his common position.

Interesting to note is the fact that four teams are unrepresented. Whether this is due to the voting or to the calibre of the line-ups we are unprepared to say. Blame it on the four missing managers.

Now for the teams.

Rev. R. Gartrell To Address SCM

This week-end, at St. Paul's Anglican Church, the S.C.M. is to hold a conference, the main purpose of which is to prepare S.C.M. briefs for the Canadian Youth Commission on "Religion," "Education," and "Citizenship."

The meetings will be held in the Parish Hall.

This conference is open to everybody in the University. It will begin on Saturday at 4:45 and conclude Sunday evening with a University service in Trinity Chapel, where Rev. Roy Gartrell will be the speaker. The leaders at the conference will be Dr. John Line, Rev. Gerald Hutchinson, and Rev. Ed. Lute. There will be worship, addresses, followed by questions and discussion, three group discussions on "Religion," "Education," and "Citizenship," and recreation, including singing, bowling, etc. Let the S.C.M. know soon if you plan to attend.

Rev. Lute to Conduct Study Group of Gospel

Under the leadership of Rev. Ed. Lute, the general secretary of the S.C.M. for this University, the S.C.M. of U.C. is starting a new study group. The topic for the group is "Jesus as Teacher."

The group will study the life and teachings of Jesus, as found in the four Gospels. The outline for the study will be the book by Dr. H. B. Sherman, entitled "Jesus as Teacher."

This group is open to everybody who is interested in the subject. The meetings will be held every Friday at 4:30 in the Common Room of the Women's Union.

let's go places

The picture showing at the Uptown this week is a musical extravaganza featuring a thread of a plot, which we enjoyed, around which is built stages of beautiful girls, giving way to more stages of beautiful girls. The costumes change, that is, they get less and less, all the way through, but the girls are as good. The music is not anything that will set the world afire but, put across by Susannah Foster and Maria Montez, it is satisfying and tuneful.

The story starts with the rivalry, which is fundamentally good-natured, of Dugan (Donald Cook) and O'Rourke (Jack Oakie) as saloon-cum-night-club owners in the Bowery. After much throat-cutting, and a scene featuring Lillian Russell, always a "must" in such pictures, the rivals move to 14th Street and thence to Broadway.

Of course, Dugan falls for his imported actress Marina (Maria Montez) and starts putting her in deep dramatic roles. The two rivals, partners for a while, split; and Dugan's deep dramatic brings failure. Marina walks out, the two are reunited in a new musical venture, inevitably success follows, and with it a little more, the end. Turhan Bey appears as Dugan's piano player, and he and Susannah Foster provide the love interest.

The only criticism is that the sound track synchronization was out, for it does detract from the effect to watch Miss Foster with her mouth closed, when you are sure that you are hearing her singing that there will always be a moon.

We enjoyed the picture very much, and as escapism entertainment it should score a medium hit.

Peacemaking ..

country except Switzerland has worked so long and hard from its very beginning to keep out of war, and yet when the trouble was great enough, precautions failed, since merely desiring neutrality is not effective in retaining it, he said.

Prof. Brebner concluded by suggesting that the United States would probably play the roles of policeman and welfare worker in an international organization enthusiastically, perhaps incurring censure thereby, but the fundamental aspirations of the United States for amelioration are much like those of Britain and Russia. He revealed his hope that politics, "the essence of power" used in the nations to ensure peace internally, may be employed increasingly to prevent war externally.

Blood Donors Needed Now

"The response to the Blood Donor Drive has been slightly disappointing," Peter Aykroyd, chairman of the Blood Donor Committee, said yesterday.

The blue cards have been filled out quite satisfactorily, but many students fail to turn up at the clinic at their appointed time. "In view of the war situation, we feel that they should take the drive more seriously," he added.

Each day two groups of twelve students have been giving donations. Many of these report that they did not find it to be an ordeal, and some even maintain that they found it rather fun.

The committee hopes to organize 36 groups from second and third year S.P.S. to donate blood before Christmas.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

but fundamentally far more sensible than he.

Eric Krub and Peggy Garnham gave themselves langorous airs as genuine though penniless aristocracy, highlighting suitably the double comedy of the ridiculous norm to which M. Jourdain aspires, and his equally ridiculous failure to achieve even that.

The four disputing professors of the noble arts, who by turns instruct their wealthy clodhopping pupil, pity him patronizingly, and break one another's skulls to the glory of their chosen studies, were capably caricatured by Douglas Creighton, Murray Sachs, Gordon Margold, and Kurt Levy. Levy in particular would have delighted the Comic Muse herself in the long scene wherein he upholds la sagesse and attempts to drive fine diction into the head of his employer.

Especially well played were the parallel love scenes between M. Jourdain's maid and valet on the one hand, and his daughter and her penniless suitor on the other. Nowhere in the play did lines spring more readily to the actors' lips than in the passages of stylized banter between these pairs of lovers, he forward first and she needed, he retreating later and she advancing, the characters swinging to and fro with the dialogue step by step across the stage.

The spontaneity of the maid (Monica Allcut) deserves special mention, and the ease with which she handled her brief but exacting part. Daughter Lucille (Marjorie Henderson) had little to do but be beautiful, which came easily. Harold Atin as the valet and Fred Bull as Lucille's suitor made finished lovers and just sufficiently burlesqued their later appearances in disguise as Turkish potatoes.

The music (flute, violin, viola, and cello, with songs besides) was delightful, the ballet polished, and the costumes eye-filling.

It is interesting to speculate on whether the exigencies of an untrained audience really made necessary the overplaying of M. Jourdain's part to such an extent as to miss completely the underlying pathos of Molière.

Martin Ostwald seemed so confident an actor that we cannot but assume that his parical gestures and grimaces were deliberate. By injecting a copious dose of Charley's Aunt he conveyed the surface humour to the merest duffer at parley-vous. There would have been just as many laughs had the play been in Sanskrit.

But was it too obviously a play to the groundlings? Our discomfort in the face of such enjoyable farce is hard to account for. Our own French is as bad as anyone's, but perhaps we do not like to be reminded of the fact.

And what of the very real tragedy of M. Jourdain? This foolish middle-aged man deceiving himself with perfumed airs, making love to a countess, huffing his servants as he imagines the aristocracy to hully theirs, growing so ridiculous in the eyes of his family that only their exploitations of his folly can extricate a satisfactory conclusion, and even then not bring him to his senses—is there no pathos there, no shadowing of the endless follies of man?

We think there is; and we think it was missed in performance. It was missed because M. Jourdain was played farcically, not sincerely; played so because the nature of the audience required it; or perhaps because an interpretation of the part that will combine the visible bourgeois gentilhomme in particular with the incarnate vagaries of mankind in general is beyond the reach of however talented an amateur.

We wonder about that point, but we will not argue it. For we are writing from intuition alone; and it has been said that one must be older than forty to sish with the conviction of experience at the admirable searching ironies of Molière.

Eaton Auditorium

Yesterday at Eaton Auditorium a large audience heard the Rosselino Opera Company present excerpts from Cavalleria Rusticana and Carmen. Weldon Kilburn conducted a small but select group of musicians as well as the singers.

In Cavalleria Rusticana, Defena Morello as Santuzza was a better singer than an actress. On the other hand, Elizabeth Davidson in the difficult role of Mamma Lucia displayed a fine voice but a lack of dramatic ability. Tatsuo Sanmiya as Turiddu and Pasquale Bruno as Alfio were outstanding. They both have powerful voices and they dominated their duets and choruses.

Merle Stewart was a beautiful and bewitching Carmen, her acting and dancing being on a par with her singing. The duet of Micaela, Lily McVeigh, and Jose, James Rosselino, was dramatically acted and as both their voices carry well it was the best understood part of the programme. Pasquale Bruno came back for an encore as Escamillo, the torador. The gypsy dancers, under the direction of Elisa Lopez, were brilliant and deserving of high praise.

Stainless Steel

GAINED WORLD RENOWN

WHEN the Burlington "Zephyr" sped like a silver bullet on its first run from St. Paul to Chicago in 1934, the fame of a new structural material rang around the world. True, Stainless Steel had been used as early as 1916, but for the first time the amazing strength and rust proof qualities of Stainless Steel were utilized by modern designers and engineers to revolutionize railway construction. This new train was completely encased in Stainless Steel (8% Nickel, 18% Chromium), so thin—yet so strong—that weight and operating costs were reduced, and hours cut off its running time.

Soon this alloy was being used in airplanes, automobiles, hotel and hospital kitchens, in the pulp and paper, oil and chemical industries. Another new market for Nickel with far-reaching peacetime possibilities was thus developed to replace and overshadow the war markets lost in 1918.

Today Canadian Nickel is again diverted to war purposes, and again the industry looks to the future with confidence. Plans are ready to develop and expand old and new peacetime markets, so that the Nickel Industry may continue through its own initiative and enterprise, to make still greater contributions to Canada's welfare.

H.M.S. Pinafore Scheduled For An Extra Performance By Victoria Music Club

C.B.C.'s Godfrey Ridout Directs Music for Gilbert and Sullivan Operetta; Tickets Sold at Hart House Box Office

TO HAVE UNDERSTUDIES

Preparations are now in full swing for the production of H.M.S. Pinafore in Hart House Theatre by the Victoria College Music Club. Originally planned for three performances only—the evenings of Dec. 8 and 9, and the matinee of Dec. 9—heavy advance mail orders and sales made it necessary for the club to secure the permission of the Social Capital to stage an additional performance on the evening of Dec. 7.

Musical direction of this year's performance of the popular Gilbert and Sullivan operetta is under Godfrey Ridout, of the C.B.C., Canadian musical composer and arranger. In charge of stage direction is Mr. Geoffrey Hatton, of the Eaton Operatic Society.

Those singing the leading male roles in the production will be Doug Thomas, Doug Spry, Charles Boyd, Bill Hosack, Helge Hongisto and Roy Watson. Lois Bovee, Betty Capes and Gwen Mihalko will take the leading feminine roles.

For the first time this year, the club is planning to have the understudies for the leading parts appear for the matinee performance on Saturday, Dec. 9. The four understudies who will take part in this performance are Barbara Chrysler as Josephine; Margaret Kerfoot as Buttercup; Art Peachey as Sir Joseph Porter; and Jack McAllister as Captain Corcoran.

Members of the executive point out that the additional performance is being run in the hope that all who wish may see the performance. Remaining tickets for the Saturday matinee and for the Thursday night performance will go on sale Monday at the Hart House Theatre box office from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

There will be a box in the U.C. Rotunda today and tomorrow for the nominations of U.C.'s contestants in the typical co-ed competition. From the entries submitted, the representatives will be selected to compete with representatives from other faculties for the "Miss Co-ed" title of the University of Toronto. U.C.'s nominee will be present at the "Red and White" dance which, for the records, was known in previous years as "Joint Lits."

Radio Beam Used Instead of 'Phone

"Radio for Overland Long-Distance Telephone Service" was the subject of an address by Sydney T. Fisher, vice-president of Rogers Electronics Tubes Ltd., to a joint meeting of the Engineering Institute of Canada and the Institute of Radio Engineers at Hart House last night.

Considering the relatively small population of Canada spread over a large area, an efficient, reliable and commercially sound system of communication is necessary, said the speaker. Mr. Fisher stated that this could best be provided by means of radio beams in the very-high frequency ranges of 100 megacycles and over.

An interesting sidelight was Mr. Fisher's explanation of the phenomena encountered at very high frequencies, where electricity is no longer conducted along wires but literally poured down hollow tubes.

A demonstration of noise reduction by using frequency modulation (FM) and of light waves being conducted along curved paths of lucite, which is in effect conduction of electromagnetic waves along a dielectric rod, was given by the speaker.

Civil Engineering Related to Forestry

At a meeting of the Foresters' Club last night, Professor R. F. Leggett, of the Department of Civil Engineering, discussed with the Forestry undergrads the correlation of his profession and theirs.

Mr. Leggett began by outlining the close relations existing between Forestry and Civil Engineering today. His relations fell into three classes: the use of timber in design, its use in construction, and the importance of the practice of forestry to water conservation. As to design, the speaker referred to the Mosquito bomber, its body designed entirely for wooden construction—possibly the most daring example of wood utilization yet. Construction, the speaker continued, has little distinction from design. He said that his classification was meant to cover the use of lumber during large-scale structural operations in which, for every dollar spent, more than one board foot of lumber is used. In such jobs, which today frequently run to over $1,000,000, the actual consumption of sawn lumber is very large.

As graduates, many Civil Engineers meet dam construction work, and Prof. Leggett said that the need of such work is brought before us every spring in newspaper accounts of floods; the main reason for such floods is that they occur in river valleys which have been stripped of their forests. He said that this happens in Ontario and in other parts of Canada and the U.S.A.

In closing, Prof. Leggett briefly sketched the most direct bearings which Civil Engineering has upon Forestry. These are bridge construction, road construction, and the building of earthen dams, all bearing upon logging operations.

Indoor Mile Champ Is H. H. Speaker

Gil Dodds, Divinity student at Gordon Theological Seminary in Boston, and holder of the world's record for the indoor mile, will speak in Hart House Theatre next Tuesday at 1 p.m.

In January of this year, Gil was awarded the Amateur Athletic Union's James E. Sullivan Memorial Trophy, when 690 sports-writers voted him the one "who, by his performance, example, and influence as an amateur and a man, has done the most during 1943 to advance the cause of sportsmanship."

His first major triumph came in 1940, when he won the National Collegiate Athletic Association's four-mile run. In 1942 he participated in the Millrose games in Madison Square Gardens.

Dodds won his first major mile in 1942, when he defeated Les MacMillan, winner of 19 consecutive mile races, in the N.A.A.U. championship games. In March of this year he established a new world mark for the indoor mile, when he was clocked at 4:07.3; and a week later he shattered this record at Chicago to 4:06.4. It was the seventh consecutive mile race he had won this season.

The fastest indoor miler in the world considers his life work to be in the ministry, and running is only a hobby.

Mr. Cleve Kidd says that Labour Can Achieve its Aims only through Political Action; Platform Given All Parties

HELD AT WYMWILWOOD

Mr. Cleve Kidd, the research director of the United Steel Workers of America, addressed the C.C.F. Club of the University in Wymwilwood last night. The subject of his talk was "Labour Faces the Facts."

He opened his subject with a statement of his affiliations, and the aims that are being sought by labour in those affiliations: "The only way that organized labour can achieve its aims is by taking positive political action, throwing the weight of its accumulated votes in the direction of the party which is in agreement with those leanings. In Canada, the Canadian Congress of Labour, representative of over 250,000 industrial workers, has a Political Actions Committee which supports the C.C.F. as being the only party which will accept their aims in their policy."

Mr. Kidd spoke of the rapid growth of the labour union movement since the beginning of war industrialization, and the need to organize labour still further. "For," Mr. Kidd stated, "only 15 per cent of Canadian labour is unionized."

"At a recent union convention, the C.C.F. outlined a number of aims, both political and economic, which included reasonable working hours, minimum wages, decent working conditions, and participation in politics by labour so that these aims might be fulfilled," Mr. Kidd added.

U.C. Literary Club To be Inaugurated

University College students interested in becoming members of a literary club are invited to attend a meeting to be held in the Women's Union at 8:15 p.m. Monday, Dec. 4.

This will be an organizational meeting. The purpose of the club is to study contemporary literature, both prose and poetry, as well as the fostering of creative writing ability among undergraduates. It is hoped that meetings will be addressed by students rather than by non-student speakers.

Anyone in any course of University College who is interested in such a project is invited to attend this first meeting.

Exit the Military

Since Pearl Harbour, the position of colleges and universities in the United States has been almost specifically that of training schools for the Armed Forces. There has been widespread criticism of this policy from both sides of the border, counterbalanced by the criticism of the liberal policy of the Canadian Government with regard to universities here. At the School Dinner several weeks ago, Dean Wickenden, of the Case School of Applied Science in Cleveland, openly denounced the American policy of drafting university students indiscriminately and the turning over of university facilities to the military as short-sighted, and went on to state that the Government was creating a hiatus in the flow of adequately trained men for the post-war years that might never be made up in our time. In spite of the praise that has been given such enterprises as pre-medical unit training, V-12, and A-12 courses in the colleges, he said that the instruction given in these curricula was of a specific nature and for a specific purpose and would not serve the recipient in place of a regular university education.

Here in Canada we have had similar schemes on a smaller scale in the form of No. 1 and No. 2 Army Courses but no claim was made that these courses were a substitute for a complete university education. Men who have taken these courses are to be given credit for one year of Engineering if they choose to return to the university on the cessation of hostilities.

Perhaps due to the more heartening war conditions or perhaps due to a change in policy on behalf of the United States Government, the universities are once more being given over to civilian instruction. It has been recently announced that for the first time in nearly three years the facilities of Hamilton College in Clinton, N.Y., will be made available to civilian students with the opening of the Spring Semester. The final military students will finish their courses and leave on December 30. A month-long recess in January will provide the longest respite that has come to the Hamilton faculty since 1941. This may be an indication that the Government realizes the precarious position in which the country will find itself some time in the future and will begin to grant deferments to university students south of the border.

In any case, this is a welcome omen for those who fear for the future of liberal education on this continent.

Competition in the University

One of the dominating principles underlying activity in modern life is competition. There is a tendency in the educational systems today to deprecate this element; in fact a number of universities in the United States, Sarah Lawrence College in Bronxville, N.Y., in particular, have abolished the system of examinations and marks in order to overcome it. They believe that the result of this measure will be to stimulate the individual interests of the student. In the long run, they believe that a secondary aim, the desire to equal or excel our fellows, will be accorded its proper, inferior position, giving way to a more important aim, that of developing ourselves as interested and interesting individuals.

However, this attitude ignores a fundamental feature of human nature; external impetus is often needed to create interest. This is the principle underlying the lecture system. One of the more important sources of developing interest is competition, but, like anything else, this can be carried to the extreme. On the other hand, if given the proper direction, it can open our minds to different avenues of thought. If one finds that one's fellow man has become vitally interested in something, it is only natural to feel curious about it. The next step beyond curiosity is to discover personally what the object of interest is. Then, having taken the initial step in thoroughly arousing our interest, a whole new field is opened before us, and we attempt to find out all we can about it. This is competition; it does not have to develop into an overwhelming greed to know more about something than anyone else. When it degenerates to this it has become an end in itself and loses its true function.

Competition is merely an aid to stimulate and develop interest in the world about us. Life has often been described as a race, and competition is a push to get us off to a good start. It is one thing to be interested in Oriental languages but it is all the more fascinating if we know that there are other people who are interested too. No one can know more than a small amount about any subject; but human knowledge is made up of the inter-relation and correlation of all the little bits of knowledge of the individuals who make up the human race. Competition is necessary to discover the "little bits."

The Intelligent Electorate

Some time within the next four months there must be, according to statute, a general election. On this occasion it will be the duty of all enfranchised members of the student body to register their vote. Presumably undergraduates recognize this responsibility, realizing as they must, when they consider conditions in Europe, that today this assertion of their citizenship is as much a privilege as a duty.

Recognition of this elementary democratic principle is, however, not enough. A country has the right to expect more from those of its citizens who presumably have benefited by a university education; it has the right to expect genuine interest, active participation, and strong leadership. We consider therefore that one of the primary duties of every college student is that he should, while on the campus, familiarize himself with the party system and acquire an understanding of the questions of the moment. For a thorough-going knowledge of party platforms a student may have to go farther afield, but opportunity is provided on the campus through the medium of the Modern History Club, the Political Science Club, the International Affairs Society, and various political organizations for students, to gain knowledge of the various aspects of some of the current problems.

In an earlier editorial we commented on the pessimistic view of the future so often encountered in Youth today. This attitude is undoubtedly partially induced by references to the "pork barrel" and "dirty politics" which are so continually in the air. Perhaps the comment most frequently and universally uttered in connection with all political organizations is "There's so much graft." Naturally, this is not conducive to an optimistic view of the future, but in many people it produces the opposite effect to that which it ought, in that it makes them feel that as politics are so dirty they are best left alone. It is justly said that this type of individual deserves whatever administration he finds himself with, for democratic government is successful only in proportion to the interest it creates. Government by the people means, not government by some of the people, or a few of the people, but government by all the people. There is therefore no justification for the existence of the type of university man who considers that his learning places him in a position where he is privileged to ignore political matters on the ground that they are dirty or on any other. Education is a trust and its fulfilment lies in service. Our hope for the future and for more honest administration is based on the statistical record that the present generation is better educated than any before.

Roland Hayes

Roland Hayes

Massey Hall's cold and dreary stage came to life last night when Roland Hayes, the internationally acclaimed Negro tenor, began to sing. Throughout the whole recital, which ranged from Bach to Negro folk-songs, Mr. Hayes maintained perfect poise. His diction, excellent at times, seemed a little blurred at others.

Marvellous breath and tone control was displayed in his interpretation of Now, O Lord, I am prepared (Continued on page 4)

SKULE SUBOTAGED

IF WE DON'T CUT THE OAK
THE SUB WON'T SOAK:
ASSERTS LIKERBRETH

Campus police were called to Hart House late last night to quell a riot when officials of the House and executives of the Engineering Society came to blows over some technical difficulties arising from the proposed School Nite Revue today.

J. Skunky Boor, president, and Jessie Packer, vice-president, were removed to the Sick Children's Hospital suffering from wounds about the head and face as if struck with a blunt instrument. It is stated that Comptroller Gilhooley, Warden Lickerbreth, and Hay Cowcatcher drove the Engineers from the House, beating them furiously with the Hall Porter's desk.

The controversy over the Revue arose when Director "Sheep" Herder, having viewed the plot of the Revue around a submarine, endeavoured to force the sub through the doors of the House for rehearsal and found them an inch too narrow. Sally MacSwoon, while persuading the Hart House officials to hack several inches off the antiquated oak doors, met with complete rebuttal from Lickerbreth and Co., who were at the time playing a game of "Life" in the green room.

The Engineers were adamant. From years of practice the Hart House moguls were adamant. The Engineers, taking action with knives stolen from the Great Hall at noon, instigated the riot which followed.

In order to create the proper atmosphere the show this year was to have its setting in the pool, maintaining the aquatic motif throughout. Members of the audience were to be equipped with (Continued on page 4)

THE FINALS APPROACH

Yesterday's two lacrosse games in the big gym in Hart House provided Sr. S.P.S. and Sr. Meds, the highly-favoured strong teams from Group I, as the finalists for the two, possibly three, play-off games next week. All went according to plan. No upsets—no thrilling climaxes—no nuthin'. The underdogs went down to defeat in each game. Both were amazingly clean games (which, when translated into lacrosse jargon, means that the refs weren't calling them close).

S.P.S. showed a very powerful team in all its departments. Craibbe and Cross threw up a stonewall defence bulwark while Turner and Steele effectively carried their offensive. It's doubtful, however, if they can as sufficiently hold the expertly welded sticks of Nikaïdo, Toogood and Spooner in check as they did their junior brothers' main threats, McKay and Rogers. This boy Nikaïdo is about as close to a real picture player as anyone in the league. Once he gets that ball into his stick it's a problem and a half for any man to try to take it away from him, and he seems to be absolutely unperturbed by how many opponents are out after his scalp. He is so shifty that he nearly always draws an extra man to check him, especially around the goal, at which point he promptly whips the ball over to the unchecked man. His shot is deadly in its accuracy. Last night he put one between the Forestry goalie's legs and into the bottom corner of the net from what was technically an impossible angle, behind the black line in the end zone. Watch him in the finals.

The Forestry quintet put up a gallant battle against the strong Meds I team in the latter game of the double bill but were just out of their class. When they could figure no other angle of silencing the potent sticks of their rival semi-finalists, they resorted to a stiff bodychecking game. This seemed to pay off in results for them as they were only outscored 6-4 in the final half as compared to 10-1 in the first. Johnston was the main advocate of this policy and did quite an effective job right under the noses of the referees, receiving no penalty or warning of any kind for his actions, in spite of some sheepish glances referee-ward on his part. Nikaïdo got a little annoyed at one point, enough so as to take a poke at Hambly and receive the game's only penalty for it.

Sr. S.P.S. and Meds I will be well matched in the finals. It's a case of which will be the more effective, a mediocre Meds' defence and an excellent offence or a strong School defence and a rather effective offence if Turner can lose his check and Keary gets back on the floor. Personally, we'll go to the games and see what happens, rather than stick out our much-stuck-out neck, on the subject.

Meds I & SPS I Meet in Finals

Meds I lacrosse team made the finals yesterday, with a 16-5 win over Forestry. Nikaïdo, Spooner and Toogood led the team to victory, while Carmichael and Johnson showed the best for Forestry.

In the first quarter, Meds shot their way to 4-1 lead on two goals each by Toogood and Nikaïdo. Cox was Forestry's only scorer. Meds were in top form in the second stanza, extending their lead by six, to make it 10-1. Spooner, Nikaïdo and Toogood were the scorers, with a pair apiece.

Rae, of Meds, opened the scoring in the third and his goal was followed by a quick one by Spooner. Then Carmichael broke away and put the Foresters on the score sheet again. In the final quarter, Meds were held to a 4-3 scoring margin. Rae, with two, Fielding and Strathman were the scorers for the medicamen, while Carmichael, with two, and Hambly beat Feigman for the sou'westers.

Sr. S.P.S. lacrosse team gained the final round by defeating Meds II by a 14-11 score in a close semi-final game played yesterday. This gives School the right to meet Meds I, last year's champs, in a best of three series.

Meds II were surprisingly strong and threw a scare into School by working themselves into a 10-8 lead late in the third period. Inability to stop Turner and Steel was a major reason for the defeat of the Medsmen as these two stars scored seven of their team's goals. McKay and Rogers were high men for the doctors with five and four scores respectively.

The Sportswoman

By Janice Murray

This is the column as it should have appeared yesterday. However, both linotypes broke down at the Press, so it is slightly belated.

WELL! OR WELL?

This is about all we can say. Though we are trying all sorts of different emphases on this little word, it still sounds like a meek and apologetic "Well." Our state of mind arises from the fact that although St. Hilda's has played and lost single games in an evening, never have we held a triple-header in this line. Last night we did. Hooray, hooray, always in the lead with something!

In the first game U.C. Freshies slapped St. Hilda's ditto in the face with a 20-4 setback, or as they kindly informed us, "showed us what being taken for a ride really meant." The game was fairly open with an even number of breaks for each side (we said so and we stick to our guns), but U.C. had it all over the young Saints in shooting. The game was especially good in showing off the excellent ball-handling of Mary Hicks, of U.C. This kid has good "floor sense," derived from a couple of years playing boys' rules. This experience seems to invariably make a better player as they have a speed and familiarity with the game that adds that professional touch, and also adds a useful knowledge of just how far one can go and still be legal. Jill McLachlan, of the Saints, had some good breaks that came to naught, and Mary Louise Knoll threw up a tight guard on the U.C. forwards, especially Mary Hicks, who came into her zone. All in all, not a good game from the style standpoint, tho'.

Second blow came when St. Hilda's Juniors were liquidated by P.H.E. Jr., 24-11. This was a messy, scramble game, and each team tried to outdo the other in making it more so. We won't say who succeeded, but it was a close thing. In the scoring line it was not so close, and as usual it was the bad aim of the Saints' forwards which made this so. Kay Scanlon played best for the Saints, while Sally Fox, Betty Jackes and Ruth Woolatt starred for P.H.E. Ruth is the best guard on the P.H.E. team, they tell us, and has succeeded in felling many luckless shots in the past.

The third setback was the crowning glory, when P.H.E. Sr. sent St. Hilda's Sr. home to tell their supporters that they lost 44-8. Now that's a score that not many teams round here can top! (One must be proud of something.) This, too, was not good basketball, although it was fun. The Physedders were playing what will probably be the last game of their careers (as were most of the Saints) and they wished to make it good. They did (see above) and ended up by popping the ball in the basket very neatly after the first second they got it. At the first, however, the Saints had the P.H.E. girls worried as they had far more shots on basket than P.H.E. had. Had these clicked it might have been different, so P.H.E. said, but they didn't, and it wasn't. Anyhow, Ann Corrigan, the Saints' top forward, got so attached to the centre throw circle that it was only with difficulty that she was persuaded to give up this position when St. Hilda's did score a basket.

BORN: to P.H.E. Sr., a star last night, when they discovered that Betty Macintosh could outclass all the rest of the forwards. The other stars were Mardie Adamson and Nancy Fairley. We could suggest to P.H.E. that they keep their guards playing forward and vice versa if the results are always so good.

After waiting hours for the results to come in for the last game—and we really couldn't expect them to as only five people had said they would phone—we found out that Dental Nurses came out second in the race with Meds-S.P.S. for the bottom berth in the league. Dental Nurses, aided by Marg Yorrick, got 18 points against 6 for Meds. Meds' stars were Mary Struthers and Barb. McKinnon.

A TEARFUL PLEA

Is hereby issued by St. Hilda's. It seems that their new ball, used but 5 times, was deserted at O.C.E. and before it could be retrieved another team claimed it from the Lost and Found, i.e., the janitor. It has St. Hilda's name on it and tho' it's pretty it would be far happier at home in St. Hilda's games room than wandering round the campus. Could all managers check their balls and see if they have it?

Any Time's SHOPPING TIME

ADVICE TO A YOUNG MAN aiming to Please. The Evangeline Shops report that more and more men are shopping for ladies' gifts. They have come to the conclusion that this fact is a natural compliment to the Evangeline staff of expert advisers on such questions as whether, being blonde, that certain person will look well in a brown Ascot scarf, or, being a brunette, you should say it with jade or yellow. They can also steer you to a pair of gloves which will make certain her next handclasp will be a warm one, or straight to the handbag which will make the girl's eyes glow with a new light. They're pretty good at helping you pick a winner in any price range, and they've had plenty of experience with the question of what to give Aunt Sue.

IF YOU'VE BEEN FIGHTING off a head cold, try this... a Mecca and mustard poultice. It's surprising how many uses there are for that compact home-remedy kit of Mecca which has been used as a household matter of course for burns, boils, fly-bites, cuts, etc. Mecca is the result of long years of perfecting its original formula, which basically was so good that the name of Mecca has meant quick relief since your grand-parents' time. Mecca costs only 25 cents, and is a good two-bills' worth of health insurance.

IF YOU'RE ONE OF THOSE lucky people whose parents have decided to see the light and make it a fur coat this Yuletide, take thought and drop into E. F. Coats with a fashion future are the ones you'll see at Springer's, where you can snuggle into one of those new luxury Alaska Seal coats; the coats that are as suave and certain and flattering as if they'd just stepped out of a glamour magazine. by Bach, while Comfort ye my people gave him an opportunity to show his wide range of volume.

Of the three selections by Franz Schubert the most outstanding was the lilting melody Die Forelle. Mr. Hayes' high notes in L'Ombre des Arbres amazed the audience for their clarity and intonation. Tyler's Ships that pass in the night was well done.

The Afro-American folk-songs were rather disappointing because most of them were not well known and did not seem to possess the inspiring melody and lift that is so characteristic of favourites such as Swing low sweet chariot.

Mr. Hayes was very capably accompanied on the piano by Reginald Boardman, whose fine piano technique and musical appreciation were most clearly evident in Saint-Saens' Danse Macabre. Singing to a very appreciative audience, Mr. Hayes was called back for numerous encores.

Captivation

Eaton Auditorium

Once again the duo-pianists, Virginia Morley and Livingstone Gearhart, have taken Toronto music-lovers by storm by virtue of their recital at Eaton Auditorium. Their charming personalities and seemingly effortless performances, combined with their complete technical control, made for an evening of perfect co-ordination and genuine enjoyment.

Opening with the two contrasting Bach Choral Preludes, I Call to Thee and In Thee is Joy, the duo-pianists showed themselves masters of interpretation.

Undoubtedly the Brahms Variation on a Theme of Haydn was the climax of the evening. Although requiring greater concentration on the part of the audience, it was nevertheless a masterpiece of rare technical and interpretative supremacy. These variations are of such difficulty that few soloists attempt them in concert performance and though it is doubtless easier to produce the desired effects with two pianos, yet the artists found each variation well within their scope. The result was that each section sparkled in its own right and the whole was comparable to a rare and beautiful jewel.

A group of contemporary American works followed and Gearhart's own composition, American Sketch, was well received. An arresting introduction presented the theme which was based on two American songs, When Johnny Comes Marching Home and the Negro spiritual Deep River.

The first encore, the Rimsky-Korsakov Flight of the Bumblebee, brought a thrilled ripple from the audience. The original Baby Boogie was indeed lighter-provoking and the artists seemed to enjoy the performance as much as their delighted audience. A lilting arrangement of Cole Porter's All the Things You Are, left us humming it in a vain attempt to recapture the irresistible performance of the two pianos.

The Mermals, integral part of the annual tank show, were to be clad in rugby outfits with a view to keeping the audience's eyes on the submarine. As a send-off, the submarine was to do a triple half Geynor with twist from the board into the shallow end of the pool, remotely controlled from the seventeenth tote box from the end in the locker room.

Science of Radio Described by Sheen In R.C.I. Lecture

"Electronics, Television, and Frequency Modulation Radio" was the subject of a lecture given by Mr. H. L. Sheen, B.Sc., manager of the Radio Division of the Canadian General Electric Co. Ltd., at Convocation Hall last Saturday evening.

Mr. Sheen described Electronics as the "art of using vacuum tubes for doing things." With the use of electronics, the slightest trace of lemon in a glass of water can be detected. Electronics is used in present-day communication, entertainment, measuring instruments, medical apparatus such as the X-ray, and industrial machinery. It may also be used in the detection of electro-magnetic waves, the amplification and generation of small currents.

The electronic method has the speed of light, is quiet, and has no moving parts. The electronic tube seems to prove conclusively the truth of the statement, "The vacuum—there is something in it."

"Frequency Modulation," Mr. Sheen concluded, "carries sound by varying the frequency of the carrier wave while the carrier power remains constant."

The progress of television has been rapid, especially in recent years, and has now become an accomplished fact. In 1926 the first television picture was flashed across the Atlantic. Now pictures may be flashed across at the rate of thirty per second. Some day television will encircle the globe.

The chief purposes of frequency modulation in radio are the elimination of static, interference, and fading, and the improvement of tone qualities, Mr. Sheen said.

Correspondence

... (Editor's Note.—The following is a letter received from an old Varsity staffer who has gone West. It is very rarely that the old guard keeps in touch with the younger fry... so, without further comment, we print it herewith.)

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Dear Madam,

"And just what," the flight sergeant inquired witheringly, "has an Arts course done for you?"

Even dropping the personal angle left him with a pretty fair question—one that a lot of servicemen are asking as they scan the educational benefits open to them.

A few years ago, surrounded by academic atmosphere, I could have given him a fairly snappy come-back about the value of a liberal education. But it wouldn't have meant much to him. The humanities don't mean very much to men who think in terms of jobs. They know all about the free tuition and the dependents' allowances, but they're far more interested in fitting themselves into a peacetime community than in finding out about Socrates and the Industrial Revolution.

Barrack-room life isn't very stimulating to the thirst for general knowledge so dear to the hearts of faculty orators. The same is probably true on the battlefield or on shipboard.

Quite a few servicemen are definitely interested in a professional career and are doing their best to bone up on correspondence courses fitting them for entrance into a medical, dental or science faculty.

These men are only too anxious to make the most of their opportunity for a university education. But most of them are woefully lacking in confidence as to their ability to get back behind a school-desk three or five or even ten years away from it.

About half of them are probably discouraged enough to take the first good job that comes along after the war and forget about being doctors or dentists or scientists.

Someone is going to have to do a job of selling servicemen the idea of a college education, if anything more than a token result is to come of the plans that have been so carefully laid out.

Yours sincerely,

L.A.C. EDGAR SIMON.

'Chinese Ancients' Is Lecture Topic

"Teachings of the Ancients in China" was the subject of an address by Bishop W. C. White in the museum theatre Friday afternoon. Bishop White, who has spent several years as a missionary in China, is the director of the School of Chinese Studies in this University.

Outlining in chronological order the philosophical doctrines of classical Chinese scholars, the speaker illustrated the similarity of Chinese, Greek, and modern thought.

"The old philosophers of China still live, and we are given a glimpse of their depth of thinking and thought. Our scholars have a fellowship with them that transcends the barriers of race, creed, and time," he said. Dr. White mentioned the spirit of sturdy independence reflected in the songs and poems of ancient times.

Dr. White emphasized that the place of women in China, then as now, was not as depressed as we commonly believe.

"Their rightful place has been recognized throughout the ages," he said, and to illustrate the point he read poems and stories concerning feminine duties and privileges. "Today, they are freer than our women," he concluded. "In both government and church they have equality."

French-Canadian Artist To Review Own Work

Present exhibitor in the Hart House Art Gallery, Jacques de Tonnancour arrived last night in Toronto from Montreal. He is to speak on his paintings this afternoon in the gallery at 1 p.m.

For four years, since leaving the Ecole des Beaux Arts, M. de Tonnancour has been endeavouring to perfect his own style of painting in oils, and at the age of 27 has achieved a foremost place among French-Canadian painters.

"His review at noon today should prove one of the most outstanding art criticisms on the campus for the present year," said M. W. B. Burwell, secretary of Hart House.

"ELIMINATE EXAMINATIONS" ECHO VARSITY STUDENTS

By Al Appelbaum

Last week's "Jazz" edition of the McMaster University Silhouette facetiously announced that there would be no Christmas exams this year. This news may sound joyful to many, but a campus poll on that subject indicates that the students of the University of Toronto, reflecting seriously on this matter, think that Christmas exams are a good thing.

"In the first place," said Bill Woods, I Law, "if such a headline appeared in The Varsity, a demolition squad would be sent forth to burn up all the books around this place. This would be all right but I imagine they would have a hard time putting them together for the final exams. No, I think we should have Christmas exams."

"I think that cancellation is a good idea," said Jordan Livingstone, I C. and F., "because we have a set of exams at Easter. There is so much of a rush at Christmas that it would be easier for the students if there were no exams at that time."

"I'd love it," stated Muriel Young, II Household Economics, "It would ruin the Christmas spirit to have to look forward to exams. Everybody is so tired at Christmas time that I think we should have a rest period then. Anyway, I think that final exams are enough."

Dorothy Oelbaum, I Pass: "I think it's very bad idea because you wouldn't have a chance to review your work. On the other hand, it wouldn't give the student a fair indication of his standing and he might be lulled into a false sense of security by the time the final exams came around."

According to Dr. W. R. Taylor, of the Department of Oriental Languages, a term mark must be handed in to give the professor a fair indication of the student's standing. "I am not wedded to any period for exams," he said, "but I do think that it is necessary to reveal any defects in knowledge that the student might have."

"In a way I think they are very necessary," said Elsa Escallon, III Pass, "because it would entail a lot of work to study for the final exams alone. If you have studied for your Christmas exams, then it would be very easy to work for your finals."

"No," stated Doreen Cohen, I Household Science, "It is very important that we have Christmas exams because it is an incentive to settle down to real work."

Youth Hostellers Hold Annual Rally

"Hostel membership in the Great Lakes region has increased 20 per cent in the last year," said executive member Ray Dunford, at the sixth annual rally of the Canadian Youth Hostel Association last Saturday.

The hostellers hope to get public assistance through the Dominion National Fitness Council, which was set up last year under the chairmanship of Major I. Eisenhard, said Ray Dunford. It was granted a quarter of a million dollars to promote recreation of all kinds, in all provinces, when the province contributes an equal sum. So far, Ontario has not participated in the plan, he said.

The Canadian Youth Hostel Association was founded in 1934, and established in Ontario in 1938. There are 17 hostels in Ontario now, and travelling is possible north to North Bay, and west to London. Travel between the United States and Canada is possible under the plan.

U.C. LITERARY CLUB

There will be a meeting, to which all University College students interested in contemporary literature and creative writing are invited, at 8:15 tonight in the Women's Union.

Rocket Trip To Venus Theme Of School Nite

Rocket ships and chorines, both male and female, featured the annual presentation of School Night in Hart House Friday night.

Bob Sheppard turned out a show, the audience felt, that would have been an evening's entertainment in itself without the added attractions of cartooning by Ben Lucas, swimming by the Mermaids in the Hart House tank, and dancing to the music of Bert Niosi, Jack Evans and Haunigan's Mountaineers.

The revue showed the effect of aerodynamics on the Schoolman's mind, and the skits revolved about a rocket trip to Venus. The show took the form of a three-act play with a prologue.

In the prologue Dean Young (Paul Temple) and Prof. Loudon (Walter Finley) give a send-off to the flyers as they prepare to embark for Venus in Prof. Loudon's dream-child, the rocket-ship, Columbus.

Act One finds the flyers out in the stratosphere somewhere, consuming vast quantities of beer in an attempt to forget what they left behind and to supply fuel. However, with Superman's aid, the music and associations of the campus are brought to them, including "Whitey"

Belshaw's "Fool from School" and the King Cole Quartet, Jack Foreman, Bill Kerrigan, Mac Baker and Bill O'Loughlin, the latter singing a ditty involving gin, rye and rum.

"One Night on Venus," Act Two, depicts the terrible fate which befall the flyers when they reached Venus. There were no men there, only beautiful girls who knew absolutely nothing about men. A frustrated flyer, Bill Tamblay, attempted to explain the situation to them with not much success but was enticed to stay at the sight of a beautiful girl carrying a case of School's well-known beverage.

In the final act the flyers get lost en route, due to certain slide-rule miscalculations, and wind up having a conference with the devil, who welcomes them home. The highlight of this act was a rocket ship which came zooming down the aisle on a wire suspended between the back of the theatre and the stage. This, along with all of the colourful stage-props, was ingenious and showed the imagination of the producers.

All in all, it was one of the best shows to hit the campus.

Robert St. John Speaks on Campus

Robert St. John, famous N.B.C. commentator and author of a best-seller ("The Land of Silent People") has visited 25 countries during the war and saw the doom of Yugoslavia, Greece, Poland, and Crete. Yesterday afternoon, in an address heard at Convocation Hall, he gave an account of some of the ravages of war he had observed on Europe and its children.

Starting out with a few significant impressions gathered from invaded countries, Mr. St. John pointed out that the younger generation has consistently been the first and worst sufferer, but that it was also the mainspring of every resistance movement.

Major General von Rundstedt, whom the speaker had once met, quite openly planned to reduce the population of occupied countries by one third, particularly through starvation of children. "This plan," Mr. St. John said, "has been followed ruthlessly."

Mr. St. John appealed to the Christianity, Humanity, or at least the Self-Interest of his listeners to do everything in their power to save these children now in liberated countries. "If they are not led back to a normal existence they will become dangerous scars on Europe's future," he said, adding that potential cynics or fascists can easily grow out of such victims of war, who have suffered both in body and mind. "If we neglect the future generation now, our own children might well suffer their fate one day," Mr. St. John concluded.

Refreshing

Hart House Concert

There is much good music that artists hesitate to play for fear that it may not go over with the audience. It should therefore be a source of pride to members of this University that Cornelius Yesselen chose to play a programme of relatively unknown yet excellent cello works at Hart House last night.

The major work was the Sonata Opus 8 by Dohnanyi. This rather conservative work was interpreted with satisfying restraint. In the Theme and Variations the playing of Frances Marr, who assisted at the piano, was shown to advantage.

Of the other pieces, the most notably performed were the Lullaby by Scott (an encore) and La Filleuse by Dunker, which may some day replace the Flight of the Bumble Bee as a concert classic.

Besides offering a relief from the more frequently heard compositions, the programme was refreshing in another respect, namely, that the performance was throughout of a very high calibre.

Mount Alison Prodigy

Eaton Auditorium

Francis Chaplin, the remarkable sixteen-year-old violinist sponsored by Mount Allison University, made his Toronto debut in Eaton Auditorium Saturday night.

Chaplin opened his lengthy and exhilarating programme with the Prelude and Allegro, written by Kreisler in the style of Paganini. His audience was easily captivated by his sincerity, his tireless energy, and his eager boyishness. In the Handel Sonata in E major which followed, he played with an assurance and vigour that characterized his whole performance.

The Kreisler arrangement for violin and piano of one of the best-known unaccompanied Bach Preludes was interpreted with distinction. In the Lalo Symphonie Espagnole Chaplin had the tendency to play sometimes in a too deliberately studied manner and with not enough abandon. Nevertheless, he is capable of great sensitivity.

The second half of the programme was

War Services Drive Again To Feature Float, Coed Contest

A new slogan, "Wear a blue disc and complete the circle around the campus," will be the by-word of the University's gala War Service Drive which will be launched on the campus this Wednesday. The annual affair, which last year netted $590 each to the Red Cross and the Salvat Army, will raise funds this year with the sale of blue tags and coffee and doughnuts, and a fee of 10 cents for admission to Convocation Hall. Activities will be centred there instead of Hart House in order to accommodate more people.

The colourful parade of faculty floats will begin in front of the School of Practical Science and Applied Engineering. Then it will sweep down the campus, past Convocation Hall, past University College, in front of the University Library and back to Convocation Hall. Lieut.-Col. W. S. Wilson, Commanding Officer of the 1st Battalion, C.O.T.C., and Col. A. D. LePan, superintendent of University grounds, will judge the floats.

While these judges deliberate, the Salvation Army Mobile Canteen will sell refreshments in front of Convocation Hall and entertainment will be provided via loudspeaker.

Inside the Hall will be held the traditional "Typical Co-ed" contest plus the new "Best Dressed Undergraduate" contest, with Warden J. B. Bickersteth selecting the sartorial winner. Tagging will begin at 8:30 a.m. and continue all day.

On Wednesday night at 8 o'clock the Mulock Cup will be presented to the victorious U.C. rugby team at a "come single, go home double" night at Women's Union. This event, with admission free to all U.C. members on presentation of admit-to-lecture cards, will include skits, refreshments, and dancing.

filled with brilliantly executed bravura passages. Failure to achieve a sufficiently sustained tone marred some of the lyric passages. Although his bow control is not always perfect, his attack is good and his left hand technique strikes one as being exceptional.

Francis Chaplin is without a doubt one of the most promising youngsters Toronto audiences have heard this season.

Massey Hall

The pathetic lamentation of a race now suffering throughout Europe the darkest moment of its history was recaptured Saturday evening in the voice of Moishe Oysher, the Jewish concert artist.

Though Mr. Oysher also included in his repertoire Yiddish folk-songs and interpretative pantomime lyrics, in the manner of a Jewish Ruth Draper, which called for encore after encore from an enthusiastic Massey Hall audience, he was most brilliant when singing the simple and sad Jewish prayers.

To an alien ear the Yiddish synagogue hymns appear to be a unique vocal genre, though perhaps having an affinity with Negro spirituals or chanting of people suffering—not complaining—of their burdens. Unlike the laments of the coloured people in the South, though, the Jewish hymns are rooted in their religion. They are founded on the dark times in the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries, when the synagogue in the European ghettos was both Jewry's club room and sanctuary, even a fortress, and the synagogue music their only form of art.

Mr. Oysher is admirably equipped to express these reverent hymns of woe. trained to sing this musical form of the last 34 years, beginning at the age of three, he has a full, deep-throated voice which was perhaps most understanding when delivering Look Down From Heaven and the prayer, Hachivenu, though a little too flamboyant in a hymn of his own creation, Have Mercy O Lord.

Linokufkooftypist Murdkufkoofered

The University today joined in mourning the timely death of Elain Shirdi, 90-year-old blind and deaf Varsity linokufkooftypist. It was found that the unfortunate Shirdi had been murdered in cold blood by irate members of the undergraduate newspaper, who, tired of his years of typographical errors, had stabbed him in the back with a cold icicle borrowed from the roof of Trinity College.

As is the custom, the faculty and students of the University were asked to recall any outstanding deeds achieved by Mr. Shirdi during his lifetime, but none were forthcoming except from a white-bearded janitor of Victoria College who claimed that he recalled one issue of the newspaper in 1802 when only 50 errors appeared in The Varsity. This statement, however, was proved grossly false when examination of the Varsity back-files revealed that that issue contained the usual number of woe-begotten and mis-begotten typographical monstrosities.

In the false bottom of a cuspidor in a dark corner of the University Press, decorated with pious epigrams and printer's ink-coloured wreaths for the solemn occasion, Varsity staffers discovered a slip of paper containing the inscription for Mr. Shirdi's tombstone, which the wisely anticipatory scoundrel had kept hidden through the years of his senility. It reads:

SPORTPOURRI

Men

By Mickey Micoshio

A Great Athlete . . .

Shortly after the noon hour tomorrow Hart House Theatre will be the setting for the appearance of one of the most renowned sportsman to have stepped onto the local campus in the past few years. Holder of the world's record for the indoor mile, Gil Dadds rates as the foremost miler on this side of the Atlantic.

Dodd's first claim to fame was lodged in 1940 when he outsped starchy opponents from all parts of the United States to win the National Collegiate Athletic Association four mile event.

Still a comparative unknown, he participated in all track meets he possibly could. His first major victory came in the National Amateur Athletic Union games in 1942, when he won the mile.

During 1943 the name Dadds was synonymous with track. The followers of Cunningham now turned to a new idol. The slim, bespectacled Dadds rewarded his admirers by winning seven consecutive mile events.

The crowning event of his athletic life was attained over a year ago when the A.A.A.U. awarded him the James E. Sullivan Memorial Trophy after six hundred sportswriters had voted him this honour. This trophy is annually awarded to the man "who, by his performance, example, and influence as an amateur and a man, has done the most during the year to advance the cause of sportsmanship."

However, that is but one phase of his life. While still in the public eye, he has been fitting himself for his place among mankind. Dadds is a Divinity student at Gordon Theological Seminary in Boston and considers running only as a hobby. The ministry is to be his life work.

Dadds comes to Toronto under the auspices of the Christian Business Men's Committee to speak to high school students in the belief that "this man stands for the finest things in life and his record should place him in a favourable position to recommend his experience to those who may hear him."

This is not the first example of an athlete turning to the ministry as major league Billy Sunday gave up baseball in a similar circumstance. His success was remarkable. There is no reason to believe that Gil Dadds will not be equally successful when the committee places such a responsibility on his shoulders while he is yet a student.

Women

By Peggy Wallace

Last Thursday's basketball games were certainly some of the most decisive of the current season. P.H.E. Freshies triumphed 20-4 over Vic Freshies in the first encounter. It was a good, clean game and Vic showed up to better advantage than did U.C. against the competent Phys. Edders. Grace Barnett scored 14 points for P.H.E. on lovely long-shots despite the efforts of an excellent Vic guard line.

U.C. Jrs. bested O.T. 19-13 in the very close second game. Joan Western and Peggy Insole stood out for U.C., but to attempt to single out any one girl from O.T. would be sheer folly. Occupational played as a smooth-running unit and although the game was slightly rough the passing was quite good throughout.

St. Mike's "overwhelmed," to quote one of the referees, Vic 31-3 in the third round of the evening. It seems to us a crying shame that Vic B should be put in that loop because of their lack of experience and, most important of all, their lack of a coach. Those scrappy, hard-playing gals from the north end of the campus deserve a better break, and if given an equal chance could have made a fair name for themselves—witness their wonderful losing battle against St. Hilda's! Rosemary Cunningham, for St. Mike's, was an unbeatable player and top scorer for the evening.

In the last tilt of the night, P.H.E. second team came victorious over Pharmacy to the tune of 30-12. Although the result was almost a foregone conclusion, Pharmacy played a wonderfully happy, high-spirited game throughout, exhibiting the best sportsmanship we've seen in a long, long time. Edna Muir and Bertha Perill carried the play for Pharmacy but found the going incredibly rough against the brilliant playing of Vee Gilchrist and Joan Christie with Kay MacMillan's steady influence.

And as a postlude to this discourse we would like to remind the curators of basketball that there is a meeting "you know where" tonight at 5 p.m. Also, for those interested in the play-offs, P.H.E. seconds are playing Vic seconds for their group championship at 7:30 Wednesday on the O.C.E. floor. The games are bound to be more interesting now that the play-offs have arrived, so why not plan to come up to O.C.E. tonight?

"SECRET COMMAND" Whist the ordinary American spy film is derived straight from the Western (Crook versus Hero replaced by Enemy Agent versus Hero) this one introduces the agents of destruction quite unsuspectingly, hidden behind the faces of a few ordinary looking workmen.

Pat O'Brien is a most lovable hero, quite capable of enjoying a laugh or two about himself and not at all a trigger toughie in the Hollywood sense. Matched with Carole Landis, who impressed us rather more in her recent sprightly literary efforts than as an actress, he gradually emerges as a vital counter-spy. So vitally, apparently, that movie-morals had to be relaxed sufficiently to allow the two—it is unbelievable to live together, unmarried. We must add, though, that Miss Landis rescued Hollywood's virtue in the end, by demanding separate bedrooms.

The film finally mounted into a bombastic fight, of a calibre we have missed for a long time, and then quietly anticlimaxed itself into a most mediocre Happy End. E.D.

"Rugged Individualism" In Canada Is Outdated Says Rev. Dr. M. M. Coady

Co-Operatives May Succeed Where Individualism has Failed, Declares Nova Scotia Extension Department Head

SOLVE WEALTH PROBLEM

The democratic solution for the wealth problem in Canada, said Rev. Dr. M. M. Coady, president of the Department of Extension at St. Francis Xavier University, in an address last evening at the Victoria theatre, is to find some method other than individualism, to return to the people a part of the national income.

"However," Dr. Coady went on, "we must be thankful for that individualism we have, individualism in the sense that we have freedom, the freedom to free ourselves from the overpowering tyranny which has besetted most of Europe today. Otherwise, individualism has failed to a great extent."

The system in which we live is one of rugged individualism, he said, one where it is considered democratic if man rises from a lowly position and achieves great things in business and finance. But democracy is here only when the great men of learning take time off to enjoy the fruits of their labors, go back to the farm and to the fishing-village.

The problem is one of education, one of economic organization, Dr. Coady continued, designed to meet the needs of the people where they are, and as they are. Unionism is one answer, an easy one, an elementary one. The Unionists, however, stated the speaker, only touch one phase of the economic process, what the individual worker gets out of the deal. They do not touch the life of the community. Here, individualism fails lamentably.

There is also the co-operative plan, the speaker said. The complex structure of modern capitalism is based on the most elementary economic processes of society—food, clothing, and the like. There is the alternative of social legislation. Pope Pius XI, Dr. Coady quoted, said that when private enterprise becomes too powerful for public welfare, it should be socialized.

All floats taking part in the parade Wednesday in connection with the War Services Drive will assemble in front of the Engineering Building at 12:15 noon.

No Permanent Peace With Capitalist System Is Debaters' Problem

A debate closely related with post-war reconstruction is the topic to be discussed by the Interfaculty Debating Union tonight at 8 p.m. in Alumni Hall at Victoria College.

The motion, "Resolved that permanent international peace cannot be achieved under the capitalist system," will be upheld by Guy Mathurin, St. Michael's College, and June Wong, U.C., and will be opposed by Harry Hodder, Vic, and Barbara Hood, St. Joseph's.

Dave Kirkwood, IV Trinity, president of the Interfaculty Debating Union, in a statement to The Varsity, said: "The question is of vital importance not only with reference to our financial and economic set-up, but also in determining the political relationship between the U.S.S.R. and the Western Democracies. The present generation of undergraduates will have a hand in deciding questions of this nature, perhaps within the next 15 years. I hope that in the debate there will be a representative expression of student opinion."

Tonight's session of the Interfaculty Debating Union is conducted in the manner customarily used by the host-chamber, which in this case is The Victoria College Debating Parliament. Royce Frith, III Law, is the speaker.

ARCH OBOLER UNUSED

Montreal—(CUP)—Plans have been cancelled for the recording of Arch Oboler's "The People March," which was scheduled to be disc'd at the C.B.C. studios last Saturday, it was announced by the McGill Daily.

It was said that the executive of the Workshop encountered difficulties in making a satisfactory arrangement with the C.B.C. for the use of a studio. All C.B.C. studios were almost entirely taken up with priority programmes.

"The People March" will be recorded at a later date. It is expected that the programme will be set for next Saturday. An additional script will be cast in order to provide a further recording for the following week.

MATHEMATICIANS MEET

Montreal—(CUP)—Professors of Mathematics from all sections of Canada will attend the first Canadian Mathematical Congress during the third week in June under the sponsorship of McGill University and the University of Montreal.

Among the speakers will be some of the most eminent mathematicians of England, France, and the United States. After the Congress the delegates will attend a meeting of the American Mathematical Society, which takes place the following week at Macdonald College. The committee of representatives from various Canadian universities arranging the Congress hopes that the meeting will bring about a closer understanding between French and English mathematicians.

U.B.C. ON RADIO

Vancouver—(CUP)—The University of British Columbia Radio Society has gained a position on the provincial C.B.C. network. Arrangements have been made for a series of University-produced programmes entitled "U.B.C. and Canada."

The programme is the first of its kind on the campus and was achieved after much discussion with C.B.C. heads. The programmes are of the fifteen-minute variety, but they may be lengthened to 30 minutes if network time will be available.

Featured on the novel series is news of the University's contribution to the war effort, a review of the problems facing the University and its plans for post-war development.

In order to lend a Dominion-wide spirit to the programme, reports concerning other universities will be presented.

Youth Plays Big Role In New French Regime Says Willson Woodside

France will not be one of the great European powers directly after this war, was the conclusion reached by Willson Woodside, journalist and military commentator, yesterday afternoon at the meeting of the International Affairs Club in the Women's Union.

"Inside France the Socialists are emerging as much the strongest party. Although France has been greatly weakened in population and in material supplies she is a great deal stronger in spirit, he said. The people of France have not regained their confidence completely, for they remember that Britain has come through the war, while France collapsed.

"The part that youth is playing is amazing; the government being almost entirely composed of new, young men," he said. Mr. Woodside contrasted this with the conditions in Italy, where the only candidates for leader of the government are elderly men.

Tomorrow's Fun Includes Street Dance, Contests, Gay Skits And Tagging

Hope to Exceed Sum of $1,180 Collected Last Year for Red Cross and Salvation Army. Warden J. B. Bickersteth to Decide Most Satisfactory Undergraduate Will Hold Street Dance in Front of Convocation Hall

S.A.C. IN CHARGE

Street-dancing, the sale of blue-colored discs, original floats, vivid skits, pretty co-eds, sartorially impeccable undergraduates and plenty of noise will highlight the University's War Services Drive which gets under way tomorrow at 8:30 a.m.

The job of selecting the beauteous femmes from each college is almost completed. University College yesterday chose their two contestants from a long list of over 60 possibles. Forestry, though refusing to allow the names of their candidates to be divulged, also chose their entries. The two girls to represent U.C. will be Marg Johnston, of Household Ec. II, who also entered last year, and Joan Cameron, Pass I.

New U.C. Letters Club Aims to Provide Outlet For Authors

Organized in response to student demands for creative writing opportunities and the study of contemporary literature, the Modern Letters Club of U.C., with more than 20 attending, met last night in the Women's Union.

"The need for such an organization has long been felt by those who deplore the inadequacy of the present English curriculum along these lines. Many students plan to do creative writing in the future and for them a knowledge of contemporary literature and an interchange of ideas on the subject is essential," said newly-elected President Bob Weaver.

All undergraduates and graduates of U.C. are welcome to the club, he said. Active participation rather than faculty member speakers will be featured. While drawing up their new constitution, members agreed that their group would attempt to focus their attention on literature as differentiated from journalism, since The Varsity seemed to serve appropriately enough those interested in studying newspaper work.

The following executive was elected: President, B. Weaver; vice-president, M. Dale; secretary, M. J. Waite; treasurer, J. Reaney; publicity director, H. Kenner.

The next meeting of the club, scheduled for the early part of January, will consist of a symposium of four papers on Thomas Wolfe, followed by discussion and refreshments.

U. of Montreal Students Weld Banners Protesting Against Conscription

Montreal—(CUP)—A crowd of two thousand youths including students from the University of Montreal paraded through the streets of Montreal recently in protest against the Government's order-in-council sending home defence men overseas.

Some of the men carried banners reading: "Down with Conscription" and "Are We Cannon Fodder?"

This is Canada's largest anti-conscription demonstration to date. The procession was orderly and quiet, reported the policemen and plainclothesmen who kept a close watch throughout the two-hour display.

Occupational Therapy have chosen Ruth Heney, II, who was dubbed "North Toronto C.I.'s Most Popular Girl" in 1943, and Lois Brooks, I, who, though she never attended North Toronto, is one of O.T.'s most popular girls in her own right.

Trinity have selected Miss Anne Gamble, IV, and Joyce Crisall, I. Meds. Victoria and S.P.S. have either (a) found themselves unequipped to deal with the situation adequately in the short time of twenty-four hours or (b) have not found enough material in the short time of twenty-four hours. They have promised, however, that today's sun will not set until their decisions have been made.

Although the complete list of judges for the great event to take place in Convocation Hall between 12:30 and 1:30 has not been submitted, it has been definitely stated that one of them will be Mr. Bill Diamond, who in his spare time is manager of the Hart House Theatre.

Slogan for the affair this year, coined by Miss A. E. Parkes, of the Students' Administrative Council, "Wear a blue disc and complete the circle around the campus," will stimulate the sale of tags, as did last year's by-word, "Two bits for a T."

The Drive, which will attempt to provide funds for the Salvation Army and the Red Cross, was until this week under the direction of Allen Glaser, but due to his illness, it is being generally managed by the Students' Administrative Council. Miss Parkes expressed the hope that the gala affair will even top last year's net collection of $1,180.

Newest feature this year will be the "Best Dressed Undergraduate" contest, with Warden J. B. Bickersteth acting judge. The tradition of conducting a street dance will be continued—only in front of Convocation Hall instead of Hart House. Music via loudspeakers will be played at noon here while judges select the best faculty float.

War Services Drive

To-morrow the annual War Services Drive will again swing into action. Since its inauguration the drive has yearly expanded to its present campus-wide activities. Each December for several years, students at The University have willingly contributed to the Red Cross and the Salvation Army. Both causes in peace as well as war-time have merited such solicitous responses. They present one opportunity to students of giving material aid to their not so fortunate fellows in the services.

Although the average university student is contributing much by attendance at university he can supplement his services by donating a quarter for a tag and by participating in the entertainment to-morrow.

The drive has been very capably handled by the chairman and other members of the S.A.C. who have planned its main features to derive the utmost enthusiasm from its some seven thousand potential auditors. The Salvation Army will again send up its Mobile Canteen for the greater part of the afternoon. Last year its sales did not achieve expectations of the committee. In all probability the new situation of the canteen away from the Hart House Tuck Shop will augment the total.

Once more floats and co-ed contests will attract campus attention for a few hours. If the spirit with which this drive is usually greeted prevails, the success of the day should be assured both in enjoyment and in funds.

Ottawa Calling

By Neil MacDonald

GRIM SITUATION

It would be difficult to exaggerate the gravity of the present situation in the Canadian House of Commons. As this column is written, on the evening of November 30, the tension has eased somewhat, but it is extremely serious, and inevitably carries the most unpleasant undertones for the future of our country.

Opinion in the capital now concedes that the present government will most probably secure a vote of confidence on the Prime Minister's motion, calling for support of the policy of sending a limited number of draftees overseas to reinforce our armies in Western Europe and Italy. Just how long it will be before the vote is taken is uncertain, but the government's support will probably increase as time passes.

The more talking which is done on the subject of reinforcements and sending draftees overseas, the more obscure the real issues in the case become. These are two, and the answers have not yet come out of the House (although they may have been discussed in the secret session): why are only 16,000 draftees being sent, and how will the 16,000 be chosen? The implications of the two questions are extremely grave, for it is apparent that insufficient rest periods have, up to now, been given to our overseas troops and that any process of selection of draftees for service overseas is open to the criticism of discrimination.

No one can criticize the government for its present hesitations without being aware that it has been facing extreme difficulties: protest marches on the West Coast (which turned into near mutiny) and even in the capital have pointed to that.

One can, however, allow General McNaughton's remarks at one point in the House to pass without comment. If this reporter heard correctly, the Minister of Defence stated that his plan of increasing voluntary enlistments had failed, because he had not received the support of the press and the people of Canada. It is sometimes difficult to understand public feelings: in this case, however, it was clearly a case of the people wanting action, and not being prepared to accept a further trial and delay of an outmoded system.

Public opinion in Ottawa is running very high and the House galleries have been crowded at every public session. There has been cheering at times, and a great deal of handclapping from the public galleries. Since all of this is illegal, and subject to disciplinary action, the extent to which feeling is aroused may be imagined.

None of this discussion can save a single life overseas. What is required is constructive action now. Right or wrong, the issue can be fought out afterwards, and heads will fall then if necessary, but now is the time to get the reinforcements to the front.

Colonel Ralston has clearly indicated the extent of the need; it is up to the present Minister of Defence to make certain the need is filled.

ARTE-MUSIC Drama

Avec Plaisir

Eaton Auditorium

A small but keenly interested audience had the rare pleasure of hearing the relatively little-known voice and string quartet Il Tramonto of Respighi, with words by Shelley, performed last Saturday afternoon by the Hart House Quartet in the second concert of their present series. The soprano solo, taken by Marjorie Beeby, was sung with great lyric beauty. A quartet is an especially difficult accompaniment for voice and, although the voice blended well with the strings, the rhythms tended to drag, becoming disjointed at times. Nevertheless the general effect was enjoyable.

Of the modern composers, the Hungarian Dohnanyi is considered extremely conservative, with a melodious consistency which makes him easy to follow. The arrangement of movements in his Quartet in D flat major is unusual, however—Andante, followed by Presto and closing with Molto Adagio. The mood throughout is sad and wistful, using the lower register, with purple passages for both viola and cello. Subdued though it was, there were crescendos that lacked an intensity which they might have acquired.

Written in the middle period of his life, Beethoven's Quartet in E minor is mature without being oppressively obscure in meaning. It is extremely difficult to choose one movement above another for interest as each has such a marked individuality. Written for a prince who played the cello, the quartet naturally featured that instrument. The Molto adagio, with its haunting of theme from one instrument to another, required the most exacting performance from the quartet, which they did admirably. Perhaps the most effective part of the whole program, the Finale, was whipped off with great flourish. The whole work showed a polish acquired through familiarity.

That Infernal Nonsense

Royal Alexandra

There was that requisite Doily Cartish ring to last night's performance of Trial by Jury and Pinafore by the Gilbert and Sullivan Opera Company at the Royal Alexandra. The chorus might, in fact, at first blush have been taken for the originals: in spite of an advanced maturity which make-up could do very little about, their choral work left nothing at all to be desired.

The principals found their stride in the Pinafore. Ralph Rigs as Sir Joseph was easily the most popular player: in spite of a raucous voice he carried the show with his exquisite sense of G. and S. clowning.

Sullivan was never kind to contraltos—last night one could have wished for more scope than Buttercup affords for the fine contralto voice and evident histrionic ability of Catherine Judah. James Gerard was a satisfying Ralph, complete with the palish personality and fluent, slightly lush tenor one expects of the mock-hero role. Then Josephine—ah, yes, Jo-

APACHE DANCERS CHOSEN FOR DRIVE

KUF KOOF

A Seabiscuit Island Dance contest, combining the best features of the Apache and the Egyptian Dance of the Seven Veils is the newest innovation of tomorrow's War Service Drive, chairman Percy Bysshe Glasen announced last night.

This decision was arrived at at an emergency committee meeting in the Binge Hole Room of the Partly Plastered Hotel, traditional campus-wide campaign centre.

"Braaaaaack!" announced Glasen to his cringing cohorts, briskly opening the meeting with a few well-chosen words. "Ooooooh—kufkookkufkook!" replied the others, indicating their complete accord with the chair.

PERCY BYSSHE GLASEN

"Braaaaaack!" he said.

"Lissen here, boys," roared Glasen (III Hydraulics) as in a frenzy of despair he absent-mindedly washed his gavel in a half-empty mug of Schlitz, "this here drive so far is a flopperoo. The Best-Dressed Man contest is hopeless: Lickerbreath will obviously award the prize to himself. And as for the Most Typical Co-ed, I happen to know two people at least are trying to pack the judges' court. President Dody, as in last year's contest, has exhumed his grandmother's pinafores in a drastic attempt to disguise himself as a co-ed and nab the prize-money so he can outfit himself with a Chancellor's Moustache-cup and Beard-bowl.

"On the other hand, Miss Marryin' Bee Gersfuson, Dean of Women, U.C., also has her heart set on the prize, to raise money for the Whitney Hall Chapter of the Lily White Co-ed Society. She and Dody have been raising one another's bribes to the judges all morning. Yes, boys, things are grim."

"Braaaaaack!" he added for emphasis. "Ooooooaaagh kufkookkufkook!" came the unanimous response. "You're right, boss. Something NEW must be added."

Several cryptic suggestions having been unanimously voted down, beer was called for and unanimously guzzled down. Clinking their seidels of Pilsner, the committee muttered hoarsely, "Skoll—Dirty Skoll!" but even this stimulant failed to by-pass the impasse.

Lured from his Zulu Sex-life class at a nearby table by the wafted scent of Pilsner, Professor Fey Skirtwhistler, Social Anthropologist and internationally acclaimed expert on bump-and-grind dancing and the art of rabbit-punch wrestling, joined the guzzling group of committeemen, followed by a one-eyed bilingual waiter named Dewey Bloom who carried a trayful of short beers in wise anticipation of the Professor's usual mammoth order.

"I have a bright idea," said Skirtwhistler. "Let's have..."

broke in the waiter in Zulu. "Just what I was thinking," chimed the Prof. "You mean..."

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasius

OH, SHUCKS

Do you ever feel down and out? Do you ever get fed up with things in general? Does it ever seem to you that things aren't clicking just right? If you do, perhaps you'll appreciate our mental state.

Before us dawns a yawning chasm of blank paper. In one hand are letters from two latent journalists budding forth at two universities formerly enveloped by the Intercollegiate Big Four. Each, in his way, asks about the prospects of our powers-that-be voting in favor of the return of intercollegiate hostilities at the next meeting of the Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union.

Ironical, isn't it?

In the other hand are two notes. One is a brief sketch of the embryonic Varsity hockey team. The other is a note to the effect that practices for the basketball Blues will be held today and Thursday.

A bit more enlightening.

Mac McCutcheon is again at the helm of the basketballers after a near perfect pinch-hitting job last year when Warren Stevens hurriedly departed for the services. Under Mac's tutelage the Blues, if memory serves us correctly, closed the season with a record of nine wins and but one loss. Quite an enviable record at that!

The only defeat suffered last semester was at the skilled hands of the smooth Detroit Tech quintet. Amongst the scalps garnered were a couple from H.M.C.S. York, Hagersville, Manning Depot, West End Y, Assumption College of Windsor, and York Belting, who later strove forth to greater laurels.

Officially, we don't know what portion of last season's personnel is back for another try. Vern Booth, Don Gibson, Doug Spry, Joe Ryan, Spooner, Turner, and Vandemark have been sighted hovering around their familiar haunts. Could be a few more are also around. That gives Mac a basis for the team.

To these add Grossman, Mayzel and Cole. All three are reputed to be class as far as basketball players go. It all adds up to a commendable team on paper if a few freshmen stars are uncovered.

If the success of the other major Varsity team parallels that of McCutcheon's Blues, we feel certain that everyone will be happy come the spring.

Acc Bailey's charges have reached the reaper's stage. The bulk is too great for comfortable moulding and so a few must be cut off the squad. We have a hunch that later in the week a number of the hopefuls will be told that they simply do not fit in with the Bailey system of hockey.

And we do wish that someone would return that jacket to Bailey. It would be a shame to lose a good coach through pneumonia or something. Give it back, fella; souvenirs are cheap.

So this somewhat clarifies the picture for all those interested. How the points were figured out remains a bit of a mystery to us, but anyone can find out by seeing their basketball rep and getting her to do the thinking for us. Anyway, the finals promise to be exciting to say the least and we hope that there will be a good few people up at O.C.E. gym come Friday evening.

Student Track Champion Gil Dodds Speaks Today At Fellowship Meeting

AT HART HOUSE

Divinity student Gil Dodds will be the main speaker at a gathering of the Varsity Christian Fellowship in Hart House Theatre this afternoon at one o'clock. Dodds is better known for his feats in the sport world for which he was awarded the James E. Sullivan Memorial Trophy earlier this year.

Gil Dodds is brought to Toronto through the efforts of the Christian Business Men's Association to address a number of high school students in the belief that his high standards of life will influence his listeners.

Dodds began his running career when an accident prevented his school from being fully represented at a track meet. After winning the event, he took up running more seriously and in 1940 won the four mile event at the National Collegiate Athletic Association games.

Success from this point ran hand in hand with the slim runner as he won a major victory in the A.A.U. games and later participated in the Millrose Games at Madison Square Gardens.

Early this year he broke the existing record for the indoor mile and in the following week broke his own mark.

Meds Blackball S.P.S. Win by a 14-4 Score In Lacrosse Tourney

Meds I trounced Sr. S.P.S. 14-4 yesterday to take a one game lead in the best of three series for the lacrosse championship and the Dafeo Cup. The game was one of the most bruising of the season, and tempers flared frequently. Meds had a wide margin in the play and, except for the fine work of Anderson in the School nets, their total score would have been much larger.

Nikaïdo was the outstanding player on the floor, scoring seven of his team's goals. This man is undoubtedly the best player in the league. His work in the early stages of the game was right out of this world.

In the first quarter it looked like it was going to be a tight game. Meds led by a 3-2 score at the end of the period on three goals by Nikaïdo. After this, however, the docs drew away from their heavier rivals, leading 7-2 at the half. They added seven more goals in the last half while Steel, with two goals, was the only Schoolman who could put the ball in the opponents' net.

Besides Nikaïdo, Rae also played an outstanding game for Meds, scoring four times. Spooner, with two goals, and Toogood with one, were the other marksmen for the winners. Anderson in goal was the big star for S.P.S. Steel and Cross also turned in good efforts. The teams met again Wednesday in the second game.

Line-ups: Meds—Blanchet, Hughes, Toogood, Nikaïdo, Fielding, Spooner, Bryans, Rae, Feigman, Strathman.

Sr. S.P.S.—Turner, Craibbe, Steel, Cross, Venchiarutti, Boyle, Sheppard, Cooke, Anderson, Keary.

sephine! The audience would have been well satisfied with Kathleen Roche's provocative beauty, her youth, her arch wit, her demure acting, her shimmering parade of crinolines—but she sang well too, with the ease and exuberance of a little lark.

It was interesting to one raised on a diet of amateur G. and S. to make comparisons. The timing was especially remarkable: two operas were run through without a moment's drag, and with a minimum of waste through applause or scene-changing. It's risky business doing G. and S.: tradition has made sacrosanct the last decreed wiggle of an operatic finger. The presentation last night cleared all the hurdles and did not by "that infernal nonsense Pinafore."

Mayhem in a Nunnery

Hart House

It would have been difficult for the St. Michael's College Players to have made a poorer choice than that of "Murder in a Nunnery" which they staged in Hart House Theatre last night, and which is to be shown again this evening.

This satire on the lives of nuns in a convent would have been perfectly acceptable if the author would have been satisfied with what could have been a good comedy, but it would take a better man than he apparently was (the program does not name the author of this epic) to combine comedy with drama, religion, murder, and of all things, a Nazi spy who showed up in the last act to provide a motive for the killing. We won't attempt to delve into the story. It isn't worth it.

As to the acting, it is doubtful if there were any Katherine Cornells or George Arlisses in the cast; and it was quite unfortunate that the limited number of rehearsals prevented them from knowing their cues and lines as well as they might.

Since there were so many nuns portrayed, it was often difficult to distinguish one from the other, all of them wearing identical robes, but aside from this, the staging was handled quite successfully. Impressive lighting effects and the excellent props made the play easy on the eyes if it wasn't easy on the ears, particularly since it took three long acts to get it over with.

he explained to the committee.

"But . . ." protested the committee, "they'd have to dress like Skulemen. What would Lickerbreth say?"

At that moment an impenetrable figure whirled through the revolving door.

"I would say I am sick of being branded as a sissy," came the Warden's voice. "Gil hooley looks me in that plus-lined office all day. But I just snuck out through the false bottom of the porter's desk, and I want Beer."

"For my money," said Skirtwhistler, "you are still a sissy." And grasping the Warden's left ankle he whirled him above his head. "We'll have the dance elimination contest now."

The Warden's garters popped. His Old Oxfordian Tie whipped from beneath his vest by centrifugal force. Pilsner and Schlitz bottles were dashed to the floor. The whirling Warden became a mere blur of grey.

Then, with a rending of straps, the Warden's artificial leg came loose in Skirtwhistler's hands and the rest of him shot across the musty room into the dumbwaiter.

No inquest will be held.

hither and yon

with frank rasky and hugh kenner

Well, as we always say, it's never too late to slip in an item on profits, even though this subject was pretty well squeezed dry in a last week's column.

The pedagogue who prompts this revival of interest teaches at the Faculty of Dentistry; and it seems that the bane of his ivory-towered existence is lateness on the part of his students. In fact, one day the other week, we're informed, he became so het up that he began faying down the law, telling his students that the next day the door would be locked and bolted five minutes after the hour.

Well, sure enough, the next day the instructing molar-yanker firmly bolted the door as planned, and turning to his class of neophyte molar-yankers began lecturing. But, as you would expect, he was soon interrupted by a feeble knocking on the door. The knocking developed into a rapping and then into a pounding.

It became so intense that the prof finally interrupted his lecture and, making disgusting noises with his teeth, walked over to the door. When it was opened, 10 dents walked in, were roundly scolded, and walked to their seats.

Five more minutes elapsed. More knocking. More disgusting noises. More scolding.

When, five minutes later, a feeble rap sounded once more, the uncontained prof rushed to the door at once, walked outside the room, and began shouting angrily.

But the students inside, already scolded, had become disgruntled, so they stole to the door silently and while the prof was shouting, slammed the door shut, with him outside. The next knocking on the door was not feeble. It was loud. And it came from the enraged prof, who was finally permitted to enter by his loving scholars.

QUOTH THE RAVEN, NEVER-MORE.

The chubby cheeks of one undergrad we know still glow with shame whenever he recalls another door incident, which you now will hear about.

An out-of-towner, this student bunks at a certain swank apartment-house room, along with a pal. But you know how apartment-houses are; like other roomers, it's the practice of this undergrad to forget his key and to open the door by sliding his hand around the hallway milkbox and so unhooking the latch.

One day when he was in a particularly weary mood, he automatically walked to the hallway, undid the latch milkbox-wise, and swung the door open. Throwing his coat over a chair, he was prepared to walk into the kitchen when a voice from the bedroom called out, "Herbert, Herbert, is that you?" It was a female voice.

Frightened, the student leaped for his coat and was about to sneak out when the bedroom door opened slightly and a pale face peered out. It was the face of the woman neighbor, who lived in the same apartment-house as our undergrad, but in the apartment directly above his on the next floor.

(SHE ALWAYS LOOKS AT HIM WITH A QUEER GLINT WHEN THEY MEET NOW.)

Freedom of the press these days grows freer and freer, we contend. Since it was zero weather last Sunday and he had an hour to kill, anyway, a Varsity cub reporter walked into the warmth of a certain residence and pretended to take one of those polls on student opinion this paper runs from time to time.

The payoff came when the cub's story was used by The Varsity with a by-line and, what's more, he walked out of the residence dated up with one of the residence babes for that evening.

A CUB IS AN ANIMAL WITH LONG, PURRY HAIR. . .

Not that this item is meant as a slam at the dear old Varsity Green issue (deadline for contributions is Dec. 8, plug, plug), but we are prepared to take a glum view of its poetic contributions this year if they are anything like what they say last year's were.

For our authority, we quote a news story which appeared on Nov. 30. It reads:

"The Editors expect great things of the verse contributions this year, following last year's precedent in which poetic contributions were by far the most numer-ous-Buhhgoldnashouta flup-I TTT-ous and the meatiest."

THAT'S ENOUGH KUF KOO-FERY FROM YOU, MR. SHRDLU.

We have heard of professors moved to profanity by student non-attendance and professors who took their lack of appeal for granted. But a hitherto unique effort at self-rehabilitation comes from the bearded patriarch of a Modern Languages department who moaned to a half-strength class that his appeal appeared to have departed.

"But, never fear," he murmured, "I shall take steps to meet the twentieth century on its own level. Hereafter I shall sugar-coat the dull spots in my lectures by playing upon my saxophone."

Even the Hall Porter of Hart House can meet his match. The other day the Hall Porter was confronted with an unprecedented Situation, which involved violent climbing of chesterfields and grovelling on carpets. At last, in despair, he summoned Expert Assistance.

Two days later came the following bill:

"MOST TYPICAL CO-ED" TO BE CHOSEN THIS AFTERNOON

President Celebrates Birthday

University To Observe President's Anniversary

LAST AS PRESIDENT

Today the staff and students of the University of Toronto extend their heartfelt congratulations to President H. J. Cody on the occasion of his 76th birthday. There is to be no special function to celebrate the occasion but, recalling the many years of devoted service to the University and knowing that this will be the last time he will celebrate his birthday as President, it is with sincere appreciation that we wish Dr. Cody many happy returns of the day.

Dr. Cody has been President of this University since the retirement of Sir Robert Falconer in 1932. During these twelve years he has guided the University through its most troubled era, the depression and war years. He has successfully maintained the high standards of the University and has helped to formulate the plans for post-war reconstruction.

President Cody has always been closely affiliated with the University of Toronto. He was a gold medalist in Classics and obtained his degrees of Bachelor and Master of Arts here. He has been a member of the Board of Governors since 1917 and Chairman from 1923 until 1932.

The universities of Toronto, Manitoba, McGill, Western Ontario, Glasgow, McMaster, and Brown have conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws. The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by Queen's, Trinity, Wycliffe, Emmanuel, Knox, and King's.

Dr. Cody has long been respected by the Church. He was rector of St. Paul's Church, Toronto, from 1899 to 1932, and was appointed canon of St. Alban's Cathedral in 1935. Four years later he became Archdeacon of York.

Varsity Debaters Veto Capitalism

The resolution that permanent international peace cannot be achieved under the capitalist system was upheld by a majority of three votes at the session of the Interfaculty Debating Union held in Alumnae Hall, Victoria College, last night.

The first speaker for the affirmative, Guy Mathurin, II St. Mike's, stated that since profit motives predominate, and since war requires money, capital will not be advanced unless there is profit to be derived. Hence capitalism will nurture war.

Harry Hodder, III Vic, speaking for the negative, contended that there was no basis for associating the tendencies for war such as war profiteering, expansion and imperialism, and protectionism with capitalism. War was caused not by these with capital but these without.

Stating that insecurity grew under capitalist system, June Wrong, II U.C., added that this made for class conflicts which in turn lead to national and international strife.

Barbara Hood, III St. Mike's, drew an analogy between the capitalist system and the world community. She said that the characteristics of both are compatible.

University Blood Donors Organized by Committee

Among the hardest working people on the campus—or anywhere else for that matter—are the members of the committee who did all the work to organize the Blood Drive.

According to Pete Aykroyd, IV S.P.S., the Blood Donor Committee was divided this fall into two groups, the organizational and the operational. In charge of the organizational group was Mary Bell, IV Arts, headed the operational group. The duty of the organizational committee was to find out the names of those who wished to begin donating blood and those wanting to continue doing so. Therefore blue cards asking for the names, addresses and phone numbers of those interested in donating were handed out to students at the time of university registration. In this way the names of 1200 new blood donors were obtained.

These blood donors were divided into groups of twelve and a captain for each group was appointed. It is his duty, after being notified two days in advance by a member of the Blood Donor Committee, to phone the members of his group and tell them the time of the donation. Two "seconds-in-command" of the group also phone three members each. When the group members appear at the clinic at 99 St. George Street, cards containing their names are left behind. Those who are unable to come at the specified time are given an opportunity to make another appointment. Every Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday four groups are handled at the clinic.

The total amount of blood donated by new members this fall up until the end of this week will be 300,000 cubic centimetres, the average donation being about 300 c.c.'s. It is hoped to get an additional 200 members before Christmas. In January a blood donor campaign is to be held.

Future plans of the committee are to let all new recruits be handled by the Red Cross itself and to select a chairman for next year's committee. Furthermore, blood donor cards will be filled out with applications for university registration.

Many people will be surprised to know that at present there is no "blood bank" in Canada, for the supply of serum was exhausted by urgent demands from overseas. This only stresses the desperate need for blood, which is used up as soon as it is obtained.

The one to whom most of the credit for organizing the Blood Donor Committee goes is Mary Bell, of IV Arts, who heads this committee. These are the other committee members: Elizabeth Kennedy, Carol Good, and Joan Snyder, all of III Arts; Joan Bartlett, Lois Hurst and Joan Plummer, of IV Arts; Margaret Morris, June Schondelmeyer and Ann Gardiner, of IV Arts; M. E. Merwin, of I Arts; and Eleanor Sheldon, a graduate.

Herron's Flannels Win Vic Contest

Victoria College saw red yesterday afternoon. It was at the contest for the best-dressed man, held in Vic's Alumni Hall at 4:00 p.m., when Don Herron walked away with the title, attired in bright red flannels.

The contest had been going well with 12 or 13 well-dressed individuals sporting diamond socks, bright red ties, well-padded shoulders, and white, starched collars. The contestants having been measured and criticized, Mme. L. Riese, lecturer in French and honorary judge, called for any volunteers from the audience. The doors opened and in strode a figure clad in spats, white socks, overcoat and white silk scarf, cane, and white gloves, and, to top it all, a high hat. Up the aisle he went, bowing politely and with a broad aristocratic accent, apologized for being late.

Mademoiselle and her three cohorts, girls from the student ranks, measured

Football Team Feted by U.C.

An innovation in University College social functions will be "Red and White Night" to take place in the Women's Union tonight. It is to be held in honor of the U.C. football squad which this year won the Mulock Cup for the first time since the inauguration of the contest.

The program will include the presentation of four skits by each of the four years of the College. The remainder of the evening will be devoted to dancing.

In the course of the evening the traditional Mulock Cup will be presented. In addition to a celebration of the football victory, the "Red and White Night" will also serve as a climax for U.C. students to the War Services Drive festivities. President Bob Bell, on behalf of the U.C., expressed his regret that the affair will be restricted to U.C. students exclusively due to the restricted capacity of the Union. Admission will be free on presentation of University registration cards.

Causes of Disunity Noted by Faucher

The main difficulties in Canadian social relations are determined by the peculiar geographic and economic situations existing in this country, said M. Faucher said that the fact that there sociology, addressing the University College French Club last evening on "The Social Problems of Canada."

Commenting on the social problems, M. Faucher said that the fact that there is no continuous stretch of agricultural land in Canada as in the United States, has concentrated certain types of industry in small areas.

Because Canadian unity is hindered in this way, there are five geographical Canadas, the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, the Prairies, and British Columbia, he said. The multiplicity of points of view is shown by the strong nationalism of French Canada. M. Faucher stressed the real difficulties which hinder Canadian unity, and said that the solution to the problem rests with the youth of Canada. French and English Canadians can live together in harmony without losing their originality, he stated.

The social part of the evening commenced with the singing of French Christmas carols, followed by games and contests. The meeting closed with refreshments and dancing.

Co-Eds, Floats, Dancing To Feature To-day's Drive

Colored Ribbons Will Admit Wearers to Co-ed Contest at Convocation Hall. W. R. Dymond, Manager of Hart House Theatre will be a Judge. Warden Bickersteth will Select Best-Dressed Man from Representatives of All Colleges

USE TAPE MEASURES

Beautiful co-eds, two from each of the colleges and faculties of the entire University, have been selected to contest the title "Miss Typical Co-ed" as part of the program of the War Services Drive which will be held today. Other features of the program include the selection of "the best dressed man" by Warden Bickersteth of Hart House, a parade of floats and street dancing to recorded music.

Tags in the form of blue discs will be sold by itinerant co-eds throughout the entire day, starting at 8:00 a.m. The current price quoted is "two-bits." In addition to these tags, colored ribbons will be sold at ten cents each which will admit the wearer to the program in Convocation Hall. Proceeds from the sale of these tokens will be divided between the Red Cross and the Salvation Army.

Health Brief To be Discussed

During the last few days the CAMSI national health plan has aroused a great deal of feeling among the students in the Medical faculty of this University. The question has arisen as to whether or not the brief, originally scheduled to be presented to the Canadian Youth Commission before December 5, should be sent to the Canadian Medical Association for the criticism of its members before going to the Youth Commission. The strong feeling that this question has aroused has led to the calling of a meeting in Convocation Hall this Thursday at 4:00 p.m. to discuss it.

The meeting will have as its chief speaker Dr. T. C. Rowley, permanent secretary of the Canadian Medical Association, who will speak on various forms of health insurance, and then hold an open forum during which he will invite any comments, criticisms or questions concerning the CAMSI National Health Plan, or the business of national health planning.

Ben Orenstein, who has succeeded Al Klaven as chairman of the War Services Drive, due to Klaven's sudden illness, is jubilant over the progress of the committee to date.

"The theme of the drive this year," he said, "should be a sort of Mardi Gras in that it is an opportunity for students to kick up their heels, which have been so long restrained, in a manner befitting the best pre-war tradition. And at the same time they make a very worthwhile contribution to an important cause."

The judges of the Typical Co-ed contest include W. R. Dymond, who is considered somewhat of an authority in this matter since, in his capacity as manager of Hart House Theatre, he has viewed all college musical shows originating on this campus. Also among the judges are Professors J. E. M. Hancock and M. G. Griffiths, whose qualifications are unspecified. In reply to a query (Continued on page 4)

Library Segregation Unpopular Tradition

By Jack Granovsky

There is no rule against male students using the women's reading room and vice versa, but merely tradition. The Varsity learned yesterday. Now that the men's reading room is again open for business, a lively controversy has arisen as to whether the traditional segregation of the sexes will continue or not. In another of its "scientific polls of campus opinion" The Varsity found a wide and emphatic range of opinion.

The view of Jack Fine, II Pol. Sc. and Ec., in answer to the question, was: "Stone walls do not a prison make. Nor iron bars a cage!" "It's a cage," as he dazedly left the co-ed compound, headed for the sanctuary formerly known as the men's reading room.

According to Maryann Shier, Moderns and Modern History, "Although it's less enjoyable, now that the men are supposed to be gone we can concentrate a little more on the coming exams. But why are there still some boys in here?" Among the male relics was Ted Glazier, Meds I, who in replying stated: "It is necessary in study to occasionally change the focus of the eyes and here, wow, what a change!"

Other thinking students such as Babs Flint, II Law, are saying: "It's going to be an awful shock to come upstairs from the Law reading room and have to start working. It will take a week to adjust. Why should the boys get the big room, anyway?" She continued, "In order to get some notes, you would have to borrow a man's coat, turn up the collar, and sneak in."

Among the quitters in the—so far—men's reading room, Paul Reece muttered: "The whole thing is obviously a scheme of the Lily-Whites Society to keep fellows and gals at Varsity separated." When questioned as to why he was in the men's reading room, he replied: "I'm a Lily-Whiter."

The following reaction was noted by Maryl Sanderson, II Pass: "The more co-education, the better."

Said Ted Knagg, I Mechanical, in the co-ed room: "I didn't know there ever was a separate men's and women's reading room, and, besides, I like it better here."

"Half the joys of study are gone, social contacts limited, and I'll probably said Sid Journe, II Psychology, winking at the blonde who had just sat down.

Estelle Heakes, Meds I, commenting on the sudden re-appearance of chairs, remarked: "It wouldn't have been so bad if they (the men) only took one chair, but the feet on the other one was going too far. However, I really do miss them."

Another of the hearty remnants remaining was Bari Allen, II Aeronautics, who muttered: "These artificial restrictions be they law or custom only lead to frustration."

The trend of opinion seems to indicate that another hoary tradition is being discarded at Varsity, thanks to the appetites of a hoard of termites in dry clot, who were responsible for the original closing of the men's reading room.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1944

We're Off!

"Street-dancing, the sale of blue-colored discs, original floats, vivid skits, pretty co-eds, sartorially impeccable undergraduates, and plenty of noise" was yesterday's capsule summation of the Annual War Services Drive that swung into action at 8:30 this morning.

In other words, the campus as a whole is going to have fun today, and committeemen and stray faculty members will probably be run slightly haggard. In the golden age of intercollegiate sport, student high-jinks found a natural outlet on frequent all-out parades to the Stadium, on wacky stunts and team dances and post-game celebrations. Colleges and faculties forgot their dividing walls, and the University as a whole realized and gloried in its unity.

War brought an end to that particular brand of high spirits, but fittingly enough a wartime difficulty brought with it a specifically wartime solution. For the past few years, the War Services Drive each fall and the I.S.S. Drive each spring have taken on the color of the frenzied old campaigns to "Beat Queen's" and "Beat McGill." Students at a University very actively at war are far more serious-minded than were their predecessors of ten or even six years ago; but the old spirit glimmers beneath all the current emphasis on drill and blood donations and pass-out-you-go. The fire of college youth is subdued but unquenched, and today is one of its cues to flame hilariously.

It is unlikely, all the same, that any student forgets the deeper purpose of the Drive, and the unmatched and painful sacrifices which it is the business of the campaign to alleviate in some measure. There is no need for us to publicize the splendid work of mercy that the Red Cross and the Salvation Army are doing throughout the world today. The student who buys a tag or a ribbon today is doing more than purchasing admission to the bald-headed row to ogle the choicest pulchritude on the campus. He is extending such small material aid as he is capable of giving to the dusty millions of grimly fighting men in France and Italy.

Students as a class are a far from wealthy lot. By merely attending University today they are making their biggest contribution to the successful completion of the War and the erection of a lasting Peace. Their place is in the front line of the War of Ideas. But to this vast, intangible, and on that account frequently unnoticed contribution, they can today add some share of material relief to the crying total of wartime human suffering.

Let the student remember this as he buys his blue disc today; and then dig a little deeper and buy two.

Blood And Mud

Every once in a while our dander goes up. The culprit of the moment is the McGill Daily, which has seen fit to devote front-page space in a recent issue to as spiteful a little squib at a sister university as has yet come to our attention.

Commenting that the Blood Donors Drive on the Toronto campus seems to be a case of "much talk and little work," the Daily conveys the impression that Varsity students are an apathetic lot who persistently jeopardize the war effort by failing to keep their blood donation appointments.

We might, if we were journalists of that kind, close our eyes tight and let go with both linotypes at so misleading a slur. We might, showing more control, take the Daily news staff gently aside and read them a little lecture against editorializing in the news column, or against tucking away what amounts to a serious charge in a vacant hole near the bottom of a page. We trust the Daily's night staff for the issue in question were young and inexperienced; if so, they have some excuse. Any ripe journalist would know that such an item as the one in question, disparaging a major phase of a great University's War Effort, requires careful investigation of the facts, and plenty of space if substantiated.

The Daily's squib appears to be based on The Varsity's report of Blood Drive Chairman Pete Aykroyd's statement that the response to the Drive has been "slightly disappointing." Had Mr. Aykroyd charged our students with such shameful apathy as the Daily's wording would imply. The Varsity would not have used its report for sport-page filler. The Varsity's staff are better journalists than that.

Some of our students may exhibit apathy; and that, we deplore. But the Daily exhibits such a mingling of journalistic ignorance, sophomoric irresponsibility, and sheer bad taste that we find no adequate invective for reply. G'wan home, McGill. Clean up your own house.

AR MUSIC

Designed For Youth

Massey Hall

The Toronto Symphony Orchestra is performing one of the most progressive musical functions in the development of musical appreciation among the maturing generation with their inauguration of the Secondary School Concert Series. High standard of performance, excellent choice of programs and young performers, along with the enthusiasm of conductor and audience, make for an enjoyable musical evening.

The conductor cannot be criticized for choosing popular compositions because they are, on a good average, completely new discoveries for most of the audience. The lighter and more popular works are chosen for their wealth of melody and descriptive value. If a young person is to be introduced to classical music with the view in mind that he is to enjoy and appreciate it, the best method is to start with an appetizing diet of the more popular variety.

The main feature on last night's program was the performance of Beethoven's transitional period Concerto in C Minor, with Margaret Ann Ireland as guest pianist and under the inspired baton of Ettore Mazzoleni, associate conductor of the orchestra. Written in the conventional eighteenth century form with a lengthy introduction, the content however looks forward to the nineteenth century with its new freedom and the richness of harmonies of the romantic school. Miss Ireland, whose attractive personality immediately won the heart of the audience, interpreted the work with sincerity and maturity. Her sense of phrasing was excellent, her trilling and subtle nuances of shading were quite thrilling. Her young audience probably listened with a keener interest than they would have if an older person had been performing. Mr. Mazzoleni skilfully welded the orchestra with the piano.

An orchestral sneeze begins Kodaly's Suite from "Hary Janos", a hero of Hungarian folk-lore. Making use of all the resources of the modern orchestra, it vividly portrays, with a satirical hand, all the fantasy, humor and pathos of this romantic figure of Napoleonic times. The truly descriptive Viennese Musical Clock movement and The Battle and Defeat of Napoleon, with its priceless funeral march played by the saxophones and trombones, were particularly interesting.

Smetana's Vltava (The Moldau) is the second of six symphonic poems written in dedication to Prague and follows accurately the adventures of the river as it flows majestically through the city and on to the sea. The orchestra flowed fluently under Mr. Mazzoleni's baton.

A perennial favorite, that lifted Vienna out of the depths of despair over her defeat at the hands of Poland just one hundred years ago, is the Blue Danube Waltz of Strauss. It was played with colorful abandon which delighted the young audience.

The same program will be given on Friday night and it is well worth the consideration of the musically interested students at this University.

Lickerbreth Loses Old School Tie to Best Dressed Aborigine in Hart House Scuffle

WARDEN INDISPOSED

Seabiscuit Islands, New Guinea, Apr. 11, 1863. (Special to The Varsity.) (Delayed)—Departure of H.M. King Kufkoof Walleye Potboiler of the Seabiscuit Islands Local 212 Inter-Island Cannibals' Union to take part in a Best-Dressed Man contest in an obscure town named Muddy York in North America was announced today.

King Potboiler, resplendent in his necklace of shark's teeth and loin-cloth skin, stepped into his private dugout canoe at sunrise this morning and paddled off into the dawn. On his left wrist he wore a set of false teeth taken from a boiled missionary who said he would have no further use for them, and he was crowned with a discarded metal-buckled galosh, formerly the property of the British Ambassador.

"His Majesty will strike across the Pacific by way of the Laxative Islands," explained the soothsayer between swills of sarsaparilla, "and will arrive at the Panama Canal shortly after it is built. He will then drift up the North Atlantic coastline on the back of a friendly turtle and enter the Gulf of St. Lawrence in the summer of 1944.

"If he is not chosen Best Dressed Man, our citizens will swarm over and eat the judges to a man, to avenge this slur on the prime of our Seabiscuit Islands Dandyism."

Toronto, Dec. 5

Believed at first to be a fraternity initiate, a coal-black bearded man wearing clam-shells, galoshes, and false teeth and carrying a primitive canoe on his back marched up the City Hall steps today and asked where the Best Dressed Man contest was being held. On being detained by the morality squad he bit off the Chief Constable's ear and vanished through a window munching his juicy morsel.

All ways of approach to the University of Toronto are being patrolled by squad cars, and an immediate arrest is expected.

Calling all cars calling all cars this is car 313 black man believed to be person wanted sneaked up behind us and ate both our back tires send help at once he's nibbling my left arm.

Waylaid by an unclothed stranger with a toothsome grin early this morning, J. Burblin Lickerbreth, Warden of Hart House, enquired sternly why he was not wearing a tie. The stranger appeared offended and proceeded to take Mr. Lickerbreth's tie by force, offering in exchange a necklace of shark's teeth. Doctors say the Warden's condition is improving but that he has been prostrated by shock and will be in no mood to judge this morning's Best Dressed Man contest. Comptroller Gilhooley is expected to stroll onto Convocation Hall stage, run his eye up and down the contestants, and do the honors in his boss's place.

Avukah to Hear Ex-Chairman

The application of socialism in Palestine will be discussed by Harry Steiner at the Avukah meeting tonight.

A graduate of the University of Toronto, Mr. Steiner was chairman of the Avukah Society and a member of a Fabian organization that existed on the campus to foster the ideals of the Fabian socialists.

He feels that the world can derive an object lesson from the effective results of socialist and co-operative living in Palestine. For it was only through his co-operation and communal living that the elemental needs of life could be satisfied and hostile nature controlled.

At the conclusion of the contests to be judged in Convocation Hall both "Miss Typical Co-ed" and "The Best-Dressed Man" will circle the campus atop the winning float. After which the entire University population is expected to join in the dancing and general revelry which will take place outside Convocation Hall.

Dentantics Revue Features Skating

For the first time in the history of the Hart House Theatre there will be figure-skating on natural ice. This will be one of the antics in the coming Dentantics Revue on Friday, Dec. 15. Besides three skits and Georgia Dey, former songstress with Mart Kenney, there will be original music by Pearlman, a six-piece Dixieland Band, and glamorous Dental Nurses.

During the dancing in the main gym to the music of the boogie band of Frank Bogart, there will be a contest to select the "Girl with the Most Beautiful Set of Teeth."

"This 25th anniversary of our Revue will put the Faculty of Dentistry on the theatrical map," said Ross Richardson, Dentantics director. "We are out to make it the best," he said, adding it had been "cleaned up considerably." "We feel that it will compare more favorably with other campus shows, and we are prepared to prove it."

Runners-up were Hal Logan, attired in a sports sweater, tails, and a green hat, plus a shoe brush; Ron Mercer, who was eliminated for wearing a double-breasted coat; George Donor, who squirmed too much when tickled by the judge's tape; and several other Vic men who proved that the fellows up in that end of the campus could walk confidently through Hart House any day.

Nor were the girls neglected. Beverley Echlin and Jane Shoemaker, both freshies, will represent Vic in today's Typical Co-ed contest.

Mobile Canteen --- 1917 Vintage

The Most Typical Co-ed would have swept the boards with her voluminous skirts if she had rustled across a campus stage in the year this picture was taken . . . that is, if her parents twenty-seven years ago would have allowed her to compete. And she would have slapped any judge who puckered his lips for so much as an innocent whistle. But in 1917 the Students' Administrative Council was not quite as alive to the realities of war as its successor to-day. In that year, the mobile canteen pictured above was presented by the S.A.C. to the Canadian Red Cross.

WAR SERVICES CAMPAIGN NETS $1,300

Canada's Post-War Status Prof. R. G. Trotter's Topic

Queen's University Professor Speaker in Fifth Lecture of "Peacemaking and World Order" Series

CANADA "MIDDLE POWER"

The fifth in a series of public lectures on "Peacemaking and World Order" was delivered yesterday afternoon. The speaker was Prof. R. G. Trotter, head of the Department of History at Queen's University, who has taken an active part in the Canadian Institute of Internal Affairs.

Prof. Trotter, in discussing "Canada and World Organization," gave a comprehensive view of Canada's post-war role in the community of nations, and of the changes in her status resulting from the part she played in the first World War and in the present conflict. The chief importance of the League of Nations in Canadian eyes was in recognizing Canada's position as a nation; but having gained recognition, Canada was content to take a back seat in international affairs, maintaining a position of irresponsibility.

However, Canada can no longer expect to shirk her full share of responsibility in world affairs, Prof. Trotter continued. Her new "middle power" position has given her increased influence. This influence was won by initiative and assumption of responsibility, and to maintain it Canada will have to continue to display these characteristics. No matter what form the world organization may take, it is essential that the triangle of Britain, the United States, and Canada remain closely integrated.

The war has made Canada the third trading nation of the world, a leading military, naval, and air power, and an equal partner with Britain and the U.S. She has played an important role in combined resources and food boards, on U.N.R.R.A., and in the recent air conference. Canadian achievement in the fields of exchange control, price ceilings, and post-war rehabilitation, has come to be a model that might well be followed by other nations. Therefore, argued Prof. Trotter, it seems reasonable to expect Canada to progress after the war, both in national achievement and in international influence, as long as she shows willingness to assume responsibility as an independent nation.

Undergraduate Shatters Tradition of Hart House With One-Man Exhibition of Water Colors

Among the thirty paintings by Wilfred Beny, 20-year-old student at Trinity College, to go on exhibition in the Hart House Art Gallery in December, will be a study of Tom Rutherford in the role of Hamlet, the production in which he appeared at the Royal Alexandra last summer. This is the first time in the history of Hart House that an undergraduate has given a one-man show.

"The moment Rutherford appeared on the stage I knew that I wanted to paint him," Beny said. "Choice of subject is by no means arbitrary; only an unhesitating communication between the subject and artist can form the raw material for an expressive painting."

The portrait, which was painted in one five-hour sitting, shows Hamlet in the duelling scene just after he is wounded. This is the moment, Beny believes, when a disillusioned intellectual achieves the realm of a mature being. None of the traditional props surround Hamlet; the sword, the poisoned cup and the skull are all absent. The particular tragedy of an isolated Dane is lost in the psychological realism of man's struggle for maturity. Portraiture is a new enterprise for Beny. Most of his previous work has been predominantly Western landscape. "A landscape can be as expressive as a face though in a more subjective vein," said Beny. "A humanistic approach is lacking in this field of Canadian art for landscape, without the human effort it symbolizes is meaningless."

Beny has been accepted by the recognized Art societies since he was 15, when a watercolor of his was selected by the National Gallery to go on a Dominion-wide tour with the Canadian Society of Painters in Water-Colour. Since then he has been accepted annually by the Manitoba Society of Artists, and received special mention at the recent opening of the Saskatoon Society Art Galleries. For the past two years he exhibited with the Ontario Society of Artists, and at present is represented in the special wartime section of the O.S.A. in the National Gallery at Ottawa.

Mullock Cup Awarded Victors

The University College Literary and Athletic Society and the Women's Undergraduate Association inaugurated a "Red and White Night" in the Women's Union last night, consisting of skits presented by each of the four years.

The affair this year was held particularly in honor of the U.C. football squad which won the Mullock Cup for the first time since it was originally awarded. Professor McAndrew presented the cup to Bill Wade, captain of the team, who accepted it on behalf of all players.

Joan Cameron, I Pass Arts, who was chosen the Typical Co-ed earlier in the day as part of the War Services Drive in Convocation Hall, was introduced to the audience. This was the second time that a U.C. girl has been dubbed "Typical Co-ed"; last year it was Dana Duthie.

The skits presented were mostly take-offs on campus activity, more of interest to U.C. students than any other faculties. Fourth, third and second years dealt with the co-educational Junior Common Room, the U.C. Parliaments and Whitney Hall life, respectively, while first year presented an Apache Dance scene to the tune of "Frankie and Johnnie were Sweethearts."

Frankie's Tie To Be Auctioned In I.S.S. Four-Day Winter Drive

In an interview with The Varsity, Gordon Stulberg, chairman of the I.S.S. Drive Committee, stated that the I.S.S. Drive would be held late in January to give aid to students in all war-stricken countries.

The I.S.S. Drive will last for four big days, each day including a mammoth and inclusive campaign. There will be a gigantic Ski Nite which will incorporate all the highlights of the major productions on the campus.

VARSITY REPORTERS

All news reporters on the staff of The Varsity must sign their names on the list posted in the news office, Room 42-A, U.C., on or before Monday, December 11.

Typical Co-ed Receives D.T.C.

At a special convocation of the Knox College Student Association held at the evening meal, in honor of winning the first place in the float contest of the University War Services Drive, the student body conferred the D.T.C. (Doctor of Typical Co-ed), honoris causa, upon Joan Cameron, guest of honor and the University's typical co-ed.

Miss Cameron was presented for degree by J. D. Jack, B.A., who stated: "Never in the precincts of this Presbyterian Penthouse have we been privileged to present, so pretty a person with so pious a degree."

Miss Cameron accepted her honor at the hands of Allen Farris, B.A., president of the Knox College Association, while the registrar, Peter Reid, B.A., graced her shoulders with her doctor's hood. Along with her diploma, honoris causa, Miss Cameron received a corsage of red roses.

Norman Young, B.A., then presented the guest of honor with a Knox "K", highest award of the College. "She certainly deserves it," said the speaker, for being such a good sport."

The University's Typical Co-ed left the dining hall amid the cheers of all, and upon being asked how it felt to dine alone with 103 men, she replied, "I think it's wonderful."

Then there will be a mile of pennies to be sponsored by the P.H.E., and it is hoped that the pennies will make a complete circle of the campus. There will also be a "colossal" Auction Sale, at which the Publicity Committee hopes to auction off Frank Sinatra's bow-tie, a golf ball signed by Bob Hope, John Barrymore's autobiography Goodnight Sweet Prince, autographed by Diana Barrymore, and a plaid shirt from Bing Crosby.

Stulberg's parting words were—"For goodness sake, make the difference between the two drives clear. My life depends upon it!"

Chinese Caravan Route Helen Fernald's Topic

On Friday afternoon at 4:00 in the Museum, Miss Helen E. Fernald will speak on "The Great Caravan Route," giving a brief resume of the geography of this ancient Chinese road. The lectures will be illustrated by slides.

Miss Fernald, who received her A.B. from Mt. Holyoke, has just taken up her duties as special lecturer in the School of Chinese Studies and Assistant to the Keeper of the East Asiatic Collection of the Royal Ontario Museum. She has taught and lectured extensively in the field of Far Eastern Art, and has spent several years in positions with Bryn Mawr, Columbia, and the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania.

ATTEMPTED MURDER

Recent inquiries into the number of entries turned in for the Green Issue of The Varsity dedicated to literary efforts of the undergraduates revealed the sad fact that this issue was becoming greener and greener owing to attempted starvation on the part of students who have failed to bring in material. Tomorrow is the deadline . . . cash prizes for the best short stories, poems, essays and art . . . Room 42-A University College.

Joan Cameron, I Pass Arts Wins Typical Co-ed Title

Knox Float Depicting "Stiff Presbyterian" Judged Best in Parade; Don Harron of Vic. Clad in Red Flannels and Buck Teeth. Convinced Warden Bickersteth he is "Best Dressed Man"; Prize is Sedate Necktie

TYPICAL CO-ED IS U.C. FRESHIE

By Hugh Kenner and Frank Rasky

While bald-headed row leaned forward hungrily and more than 1,700 students shook the rafters of Convocation Hall with whoops of approval, pert, blonde Joan Cameron, I Pass Arts student from University College, smiled herself into the prize money as the most typical co-ed of the University's annual War Services Drive yesterday.

Though early-morning rain whipped against the campus and promised to dampen the ardor of 8:30 taggers, students put aside their umbrellas as the sun shone on the day's big noon-time events. Street-dancing, the float parade, sale of multi-colored discs, snappy ad-libbing from inside and outside loudspeakers, breath-taking beauty on parade, undreamed-of sartorial impeccability and the antics of Warden J. B. Bickersteth helped net approximately $1,300 as the University's contribution to the Salvation Army and the Red Cross.

Tagging

The day's fun began early in the dawn hours when Jean Nicholls, assisted by Helen Bushell, both III Victoria College, dispatched a crew of co-eds, two from each faculty, to take up positions throughout the campus, tag box in hand, one at each college and one at some outside vantage spot.

"It was wonderful for the girls to turn out as they did—despite the rain," said Organizer Nicholls, interviewed at her committee headquarters in Room 82 U.C., where she was snatching a rest, with her shoes off. She explained to The Varsity that she had just completed a trek to each tagging station around the whole University. "It's a bit tiring," she said, rubbing her stockinged feet, "but the co-operation I received from the girls made it worthwhile."

Float Award to Knox

At 12:15 sharp the blare from loudspeakers under control of wise-cracking Gordon Thompson, S.P.S., drew throngs of students to the south of the campus, where they lined the roadway twenty deep for the parade of floats.

Swinging off past the Library with the C.O.T.C. band in the fore, the parade, under the command of Impresario Bruce Taylor, S.P.S., displayed all the flourish of a Mardi Gras carnival and made the vaunted Santa Claus spectacle look slightly pallid in contrast.

The decision of Lieut.-Cols. A. D. Le Pan and W. S. Wilson awarded the prize to the unorthodox funeral cortege from Knox College. From atop a hearse containing a recumbent form surrounded by empty bottles, and labelled "The Fortieth Bier," the archangel, labelled "A Stiff Presbyterian," trumpeted his warning to the four corners of the campus.

Wheeled from behind were, amongst others, a School Boat burdened with a Santa surrounded by over-developed helpers; a Trinity pulpiteer indelicately revealed "Keeping Abreast of the Times"; a tireless crew from Forestry wielding instruments and proving that the bush suffers no man-or-woman-power shortage; a Victoria facade oddly enough enclosing Scriptural advice against the background of a well-known Men's Magazine; and a dentistry cart showing a patient writhing in agony though at the same time seriously honoring the 100th anniversary of the discovery of anaesthesia by Dr. H. Wells, of Hartford, Conn.

For those onlookers, hungered and grown hoarse with cheering the parade, a Salvation Army mobile canteen was on hand to dispense aid and comfort. Major Fred Mundy, Salvation Army officer, disclosed for the sake of those statistically-minded that the aid and comfort totalled a sale of more than 200 cups of coffee and 450 crullers.

As the overflow audience milled into crammed Convocation Hall, the Skule Nite orchestra responded to the anthropoid antics of conductor Whitey Belshaw with solid soundings of current jive hits.

Bickersteth Judge

Allegedly keeping the crowd under control was Benson Orenstein, embryo Groucho Marx, who welcomed Warden Bickersteth as "the man most qualified to appraise fine points of dress" and paraded the contestants for the inspection of the learned judge.

The trophy, a necktie of chaste pattern, was awarded to Don Harron of Victoria College, "because he wasn't wearing a sweater." Fully clad in red flannels, a price tag, a safety pin, a dress-cane, and a pair of buck teeth, Harron was unanimously acclaimed the most eye-stopping spectacle on parade.

Almost equally startling, but more warmly garbed, were the handkerchief-moustached dandy of S.P.S. with his slide-rule on a silver chain; U.C.'s raccoon-coated rah-rah boy; the Dent who came with tools strung on his belt, equally prepared to attack a patient or a leaky faucet; Forestry's backwoodsman swinging his axe in quest of a fir-tree or an unsympathetic judge's neck; Trinity's debonair, immaculate, and pantsless fashion-plate; and St. Mike's zoot-suited refugee from Harlem.

While bald-headed row and Judges Dymond, Griffiths, and Hancock licked ecstatic chops, the Drive reached its palpitating climax as the 21 glamor finalists filed onto the stage.

After the initial line-up, the girls paraded their charm one by one, pirouetting in the centre of the platform for the benefit of raucous engineers who demanded a back view, and occasionally scattering their poise to the four winds as the tripped over a treacherous microphone plug.

The winner was selected from the final line-up by an unanimous decision arrived at without benefit of tape-measure, and received a pot of tasteful red-and-blue flowers from the fortunate master of ceremonies.

Guidance Needed?

In a recent speech to the Varsity masthead, Mr. R. E. G. Davis, director of The Canadian Youth Commission, disclosed the thought-provoking information that eighty percent of Canadian youth do not believe that private industry can provide all the post-war jobs needed without government aid. He pointed out that any optimism concerning the economic future of youth after the war lies mainly in Ontario. In other provinces, youth is definitely pessimistic. According to the surveys being conducted by the commission, nearly half of the civilian youth and more than half the youth in the services expect another war within twenty-five years. More than half of both these groups expect thousands of Canadians to be on relief after post-war prosperity ends. Thus the majority of Canadian youth support some form of world order, and want some reform measures to ensure full employment, social security and educational opportunities.

It is quite obvious that insecurity ranks the minds of young Canadians. In some respects it is a constructive frame of mind which apparently will lead to action. In other ways it denotes a tendency towards a complete lack of faith in any policy whatsoever.

In any theory, be it philosophical or political, certain assumptions must be accepted in order to reach a practical working conclusion. Youth in the present sceptical state in which it appears to be, inevitably demands concrete rational proof to back every statement and when this is not forthcoming, the theory in question is relegated to the confines of impracticability. Mortimer Adler, in his book "How to Think About War and Peace", very aptly reasons that as long as people believe there will be another war, then permanent peace is impossible. Mr. Davis' speech again drives home the necessity of sound thought where constructive criticism is to be levelled.

University Women

The following is an editorial from 'Saturday Night' which we feel merits space in our columns:

The Board of Education of Kingston, Ont., recently refused to allow The University Women's Club of that City the use of a school building on Saturday morning "for a story, music and games hour for children four to seven years old." The refusal was legitimate enough being based on a regulation of the Board that school premises are not to be used by outsiders on Saturdays. But we are fascinated by some of the discussion which preceded the decision. Trustee Elmer Cogswell said he was afraid that the story hour might be used for inculcating in the children's minds ideas that were not advantageous to the democratic way of life, and added that "a lot of sin can be covered up in the words 'University Club'".

The theory that University Women's Clubs are sinful and are likely to mislead children into ways that are not advantageous to democracy is new to us. That there is a certain distrust in some quarters, of persons possessing university degrees had come to our attention chiefly through the columns of the Toronto Telegram. But we had not supposed anybody had thought them likely to lead astray young Canadians of four to seven years of age. The idea is alarming. Persons with degrees are rather favored by our educational system for the instruction of children of slightly maturer years, and it may be necessary to start a movement for the expulsion of all university trained persons from the teaching profession and the substitution of people like Trustee Elmer Cogswell who can be relied upon to teach only the pure word of democratic faith, including presumably the doctrine that the less a person knows, the better fitted he is to teach democracy.

Pardon My French

Pressure of space has held over until today the interchange of correspondence which follows. We welcome letters from readers concerning views, providing they are (a) signed and (b) not personally abusive. While Miss Chandler transgresses somewhat in the latter category, we feel that Mr. Kenner is amply able to take care of himself. We therefore publish his reply without further comment.—Editor.

Art, Music and Drama Editor,
The Varsity.

Dear Madam:

To the intelligent audience who enjoyed the presentation of Moliere's Bourgeois Gentilhomme, it must seem strange that The Varsity should assign the review to a critic whose rather startling views on Moliere's theatre prove that he has completely misconstrued the play. It is the consensus of opinion that the cast deserved something rather better than his incompetent criticism.

This inability is amply illustrated by two examples from the text of his review: his reference to the "poetic dialogue" of the play, and his philosophical musings on Moliere's "underlying pathos." In the first case, it is obvious to even the most casual reader of Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme that the prose is gross, not to say vulgar. Thus I feel called upon to remind the critic that his French must be sadly lacking, certainly more so than that of the majority of the audience, who, it is to be noted, laughed more uproariously at the perfectly audible lines than at the pantomime. In the second case, any student of French drama knows that Moliere and his troupe played even Le Misanthrope as pure farce, and that his highly-trained audience were bathed in tears of laughter.

Perhaps, in criticizing the farcical aspect, Mr. Kenner has in mind the remark of the pedantic Boileau, who, after seeing Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, wrote, "Je ne reconnais plus l'auteur du Misanthrope." But I rather think that since the 17th century comedy is a closed book to him, its critics also must be.

It is therefore unfair that the reviewer should criticize the cast's lack of ability or their unfamiliarity with French, since his own appear to be so much more glaring. The players, most of whom have made French their field of research, have studied Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme from a literary as well as a dramatic point of view, aided by their director who has specialized in the psychology of the 17th century.

It is to be hoped that in future the critic will either base his reviews on something more stable than his own inimitable intuition, or else confine his activities to another column of The Varsity.

Library Scores With Lost Prof.

Takes Lead 6-4 Over Hart House in Annual Contest, as Geophysipoly's Next-of-Kin are Satisfied

WALLEYE EXULTANT

Dr. Sniffy Waller, noted geophysipoly, has been reported long overdue at the faculty desk in the Library and is officially listed as missing. The Varsity learned early today. Next of kin have been notified.

Dr. Waller, who does not ordinarily use books, is understood to have entered the Library jungle in quest of Whitman's Leaves of Grass. For some time past, Prof. Waller, in co-operation with Premier Gorgeous Pew, of Queen's Park, has been working on a theory that the population of Ontario can be increased indefinitely, each new family being maintained on a small patch of grass or scrub. Whitman's book is regarded as a pioneer work in the field.

Last seen wearing the regulation professorial battered hat and torn raincoat, Dr. Waller disappeared on the afternoon of Nov. 30. Speculation is rife in some quarters as to whether the missing savant, while wandering aimlessly around the stacks, was picked up by some Library mull and either taken to the cleaners or filed away for re-binding.

An alternative theory, given some credence in the Library office, is that Prof. Waller has been inadvertently wrapped up in a bundle of newspapers and put out for the salvage committee.

In any case, Library officials are jubilant over the scoring of another point over Hart House in the annual Lost Professors Contest. "Waller's disappearance puts us up 6-4 on Lickerbreth's crew," exulted Librarian Walleye when interviewed in his office. "It looks as if we've got the game sewed up for this term."

He explained that the first round of the contest ends Dec. 20, and the second begins on Jan. 5, 1945. The intervening period is regarded as an open season during which no score is kept. "We don't want the affair to degenerate into a free-for-all," stated Mr. Walleye.

He hinted at collusion between Library officials and professors who disappear in the stacks, pointing out that it would be an easy matter for professors to be kept incognito among such miscellanea as Phys. Biz., Soc. Doc., etc., re-appearing after Dec. 20 in time to share the first term prize with Librarian Walleye. "They could hide there for months," he asserted, "without anybody being any the wiser. Including themselves."

meaning of what they read as to take mortal offence at the slightest shading of disparage in an honest attempt at evaluating a dramatic performance that no one, least of all the players, could have expected to be perfect.

The review in question consisted of an ecstatic appraisal followed by a philosophical appendix. It would be singularly ungrateful of the players to imply that they "deserved something better" than our tributes to their "good taste and enthusiasm," "almost perfect casting," and "overwhelming success."

Miss Chandler, however, is sufficiently indignant to draw from one word in the first half the convenient inference that we know no French, and from the tone of the appendix the inference that we are ignorant of the French critical writings of the last 250 years. Her chagrin is wrapped in as juicy a specimen of the argumentum ad hominem as we have yet encountered.

School Squares Lacrosse Series

Sr. S.P.S. squared their best two out of three games series with Meds I yesterday by trouncing the doctors 18-11 in the second game of the lacrosse play-downs for the Daise Cup. The game was played in the big gym, and one of the largest crowds of the year turned out to see it. Meds suffered a severe reversal of form to that they displayed in the first game when they shellacked School 14-4.

Sr. S.P.S. got off to a good start, and led 4-1 at the end of the first quarter on goals by Steel, Keary, Boyle and Cross. Nikaido got Meds' lone tally. They then flung in two more, Cross and Steel getting them in that order. This put Meds on the short end of a 6-1 score and they never really recovered. Before the half ended, Nikaido and Spooner got two goals apiece and Too-good and Rae also added to Meds' cause with single scores. Steel countered with two for S.P.S. to make the score 8-7 at half-time.

Meds took a short-lived lead on two very nice goals by Rae, set up by some pretty passing. Turner tied the score and then Steel put the Schoolmen one ahead on a goal that trickled through the side of the mesh and provoked considerable argument. Then Rae got another on a beautiful play. The goalie was drawn out of his net expertly and had no chance on the shot.

After this it was all School. Steel, Turner and Craibbe counted before the period ended, while Spooner picked up one lone goal for Meds. In the fourth quarter Meds fell off considerably, and School took advantage of every opportunity. Turner, Steel, again, Boyle and Turner counted in that order to amass a final and very decisive score of 18-11 in School's favor.

Speaking OF SPORT

(Alan Harvey, sports columnist with The Canadian Press in Ottawa and Toronto prior to joining the Navy nine months ago, contributes today's column from H.M.S. Signal School at St. Hyacinthe, Que., where, he says, "they are unsuccessfully trying to make a wireless man out of me." Harvey was sports editor of The Varsity in 1939-40)

By Alan Harvey

Frankly, men, we're worried.

Like the rookie pitcher thumbed to the mound after a long stretch in the bull-pen, there is a lump in our throat and a quaver in our knees. One of the last things we expected, when composing our farewell SOS in the Press five years ago, was that we might be asked to try again. But here's the windup . . . the pitch . . . and the high, hard one.

NO FLOWERS, PLEASE

If somebody will hold our parrot and our spyglass for a moment, this veteran of a storm-tossed shore station will train a long-range periscope on a few matters dredged up in the wake of a slightly eccentric football season. For instance, there's the story of the 19th Grey Cup final—and a bouquet of daisies.

The daisies, looking slightly more bedraggled than your best girl's corsage after School Nite, were displayed in the dressing room of Navy combines from H.M.C.S. St. Hyacinthe and Donnacona as they groomed for the Dominion championship clash with Hamilton Wildcats. Accompanying the flowers was a telegram, ostensibly sent by the President, Sammy Manson, of the Wildcats, which said, in effect, that the Sailors would be completely erased by the Wildcats.

Well, everybody knows what happened. The Sailors performed a slight case of murder on the Wildcats to win a shocking 7-6 verdict. There were some who thought the telegram and the battered bouquet might have had something to do with the outcome.

Anyway, it's a nice touch. After the game, it was revealed that the telegram and the flowers had been sent by Glen Brown, former Ohio State lineman, who is the Navy's playing coach.

THE JEEP STRING MURDERS

We derived vicarious satisfaction, although we did not see the final, from the performance of Navy's Johnny Miles Taylor, probably the most ignored athlete ever to wear the hero's halo in a national final. Perhaps it is just that we never slept in the same dorm with a football hero before. Seriously, the nineteen-year-old deserves more attention than he received for scoring three touchdowns (one of which the officials disallowed) and collaborating with Jack Wedley and Steve Levantis on the tackle which gave the Navy its winning point.

Taylor, who looks more like a high school boy than a football star, engineered the games most sensational play, when he came from nowhere to pluck one of Dutch Davey's passes and streak twenty yards for his team's lone major. Pressbox pundits diagnosed the play as a spot pass, but Taylor says the toss actually was intended for Quarterback Alf Hurley.

"I saw Alf taken out of the play, so I cut over myself," Taylor said as he sprawled in his upper bunk one night just before lights out. "Dutch hit me with the pass and I cut for the sidelines, after that it was only a matter of 18 yards or so."

Before joining his present team last year, Taylor played two seasons, his first in organized football, with Montreal's West Hill High School. After the war, he hopes to play a little bigtime football and then settle down to his fondest objective . . . "Coaching a high school team somewhere."

This signal school supplied most of the talent which brought Navy its first major championship in sport. Besides Taylor, Davey, Levantis, Wedley and Hurley, St. Hyacinthe representatives include Lieut. Sam Abbott of Stanstead, Quebec, Donald (Bucko) McLeod, Tommy Bainbridge, Curley Hiltz, Ginger O'Brien, John Shworak, Leonard, Webb, McFall, Segal and Chard. Hurley, now Lieutenant-Commander, will be remembered as the quarterback of the University of Western Ontario Mustangs, intercollegiate senior champions in 1939.

Victoria Make Basketball Semi-Finals With 20-13 Victory Over P.H.E.

By Janice Murray

Last night the League B final to decide the League entry to the University Women's Basketball Championship play-offs was played between P.H.E. II and Vic II teams. In the hot and furious tussle Vic emerged at the top of the heap by a score of 20-13.

In the first quarter the Physedders had the Victoria girls tied up in knots as they potted basket after basket, and at the end of the half the score stood at 11-4 for P.H.E. After the break at half-time Vic started to click and led by Betty Fullerton the forwards piled up points for the Searlet and Gold to raise the score 13-12 at the end of the third quarter. In the final quarter the Victoria team finished off their rivals by netting baskets from all corners of the floor.

The Victoria guards were outstanding in this game. The P.H.E. forwards were only able to score one basket in the last half. P.H.E.'s guards held very well throughout, but at the time when Vic began to take the play in their own hands they began to fall apart, leaving the openings needed by the Vic forwards. Outstanding forwards on the P.H.E. team were Kay MacMillan and Vee Gilchrist. Marg. Pellow played a staunch game for the losers on the guarding end. Joan Chalk led the Vic guards in the tightening up which resulted in blanking the P.H.E. team in their attempt to get baskets in the last half.

The semi-finals for the Championship will take place Friday at 7:30, at O.C.E. gym, when Vic A will meet Vic II, and P.H.E. Freshies will meet Meds-S.P.S.

By Janice Murray

Today is the Day . . .

when we start retracting statements that we made and statements which we didn't make but which were attributed to us. We commence:

1. The suggestion that certain team captains contact other team captains to play off a final game which appeared in yesterday's Varsity purporting to be about basketball, should have read baseball. What a difference a "b" makes when slipped in by a finetypist or a night editor in the wee small-and-getting-bigger hours of the morning!

2. A couple of days ago there appeared a statement that Vic B had no coach. This is incorrect, as Vic B had a coach who faithfully came out to all the games that her team played. However, there are other things related to the unfortunate Vic B team which might be mentioned.

This team is composed of girls who have not played since High School. This year they decided that they would turn out to basketball practice and they did. Unable to make the A team as there were about 30 girls who tried out, they asked their Athletic Association if they would consider having a B team, secured a coach, arranged for practice time and started in. Unfortunately the coach was as busy as most people are these days and could not turn out for more than one practice. Then the lambs were led to the slaughter in the Senior group. This allowed all the teams to pile up at least one win, but it trampled upon the Vic B aggregation. Vic B is of too good material to take this to heart too much, but nevertheless it is a severe blow to anyone who plays to be beaten time and again and to have no means of defence. And that is what happens. Had this team been considered by merit and not academic standing they would have been put in the Junior group, and would have been given time to practice. Also they would have had stiff and concentrated coaching to teach them the elements of College Basketball as compared to the High School game.

Early in the year we mused idly on the fact that it was not a good idea to separate the teams in groups Seniors against Seniors and Freshies against Freshies. This we will retract. It has proven to be a very good idea and we hope that the Head of University Basketball next year will carry this tiring and thankless job as well and efficiently as Lois Dowson has this year. However we feel that if the teams are to be grouped in this manner, that a Senior B team, composed as it is of the seconds, will be put in a group lower than the A group. This is really only logical.

Last Night . . .

And this heading appears for almost the last time, U.C. held its annual year Basketball games. This is a custom observed in most of the colleges and it certainly is fun. Only the first game of the little series was played when U.C. Sr. defeated U.C. II 24-23. As the score shows it was a close, very close game. The Seniors were led by Joan Davis, their flashy forward star, while Barbara Allen played her usual sterling game in the centre guard position. The Juniors were sparked by June Ward and Birdie Tate, who shared the scoring honors between them.

Aviation WAS GEARED TO COMMERCE

ABOUT 1926 an era of great expansion began in the aviation industry on this continent. During the following eight years, networks of airlines spread over North and South America.

Nickel Steels, because of their superior strength and toughness, were used for crankshafts, connecting rods, propeller shafts, gears and other vital parts of the new airplane engines. Other Nickel alloys were used to give longer service life at high temperatures when exposed to corrosive exhaust fumes.

The Canadian Nickel industry through its research laboratories and rolling mills, gave every possible assistance to the aviation industry. Thus another new market was developed to help take the place of war markets wiped out in 1918.

Today Canadian Nickel is again diverted to war purposes, and again the industry looks to the future with confidence. Plans are ready to develop and expand old and new peacetime markets, so that the Nickel industry may continue, through its own initiative and enterprise, to make still greater contributions to Canada's welfare.

we should have retained sufficient control to say "brightened" or "stylized." But surely Miss Chandler does not accuse us of not knowing the play was in prose? We mentioned the occurrence of such dialogue as one of the difficulties of production, and later commented on the way it was handled in the singularly beautiful stylized badinage of the parallel love-scenes.

And by the players' "unfamiliarity with French," what could we have meant, taking the phrase in its context, but that French is not their natural speech? Will any of them swear, hand on heart, that the one language leaps to his lips as readily as the other?

Finally, our musings on the depths of Moliere are far from unsupported. "Si Moliere ne provoquait que le rire, il y a longtemps qu'il serait oublié," wrote George Sand; and rightly.

His sombre sides were seriously over-emphasized by the Romantic critics from 1815 to 1830: witness the actor Perlet, whose instructions on how to play Tartuffe, dated 1828, ooze with such phrases as "cette passion sombre"; "son odieux caractère"; "l'effet terrible." Chateaubriand at the same period wrote of Tartuffe and Le Misanthrope that "leur comique se rapproche beaucoup de la gravité tragique."

The reaction against Romanticism discounted these extravagances heavily, but their element of truth remains in the conclusion of Prof. Fellowes: "Moliere was a member of that clan of individualists whose very greatness kept them apart from their fellow-men and colored their creations as well as their lives with a profound sadness."

Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, commissioned for the entertainment of King Louis, "contains less of Moliere the philosopher than Le Misanthrope." But his moral purpose was recognized even in his own day, and is present beneath all the clowning.

Moreover, professors of French in colleges other than Miss Chandler's, whom we do not name only because they might resent the limelight of controversy, have been heard to stress in their lectures the element of pathos evident in the sincere efforts of M. Jourdain towards self-improvement.

We raised the point because the horse-play of the U.C. production seemed overdone; and we hinted that the leading player slipped it in knowingly to please the groundlings.

This inference is substantiated by Prof. Ashton's remark that the dramatist himself saw the necessity of "including enough of the farce element to ensure amusing that portion of his audience that was not satisfied with the masterly study of character in its relations to the family and to society at large."

In a quiet and amiable conversation with the actor in question, we were assured that our assumption was exactly right. He overacted knowingly, and of a set purpose. All we question is the validity of his purpose.

CAMSI Health Plan Differs With C.M.A. On Wages And Scope

Dr. T. A. Rowley, Secretary of C.M.A. Outlines Pamphlet, Expresses Fear of Medicine Becoming a "Trade"

SUGGESTS UNION

Dr. T. A. Rowley, secretary of the Canadian Medical Association, addressed a meeting of the Canadian Association of Medical Students and Internes on the subject of health insurance yesterday in Convocation Hall. Dr. Rowley took time at the first of his talk to outline the organization of the Canadian Medical Association, and to point out the advances in medicine since the last war.

The topic of health insurance was classified as part of "medical economics," which includes all matters concerned with the practice of medicine; controls, limitations, salary, and conditions under which the doctor will work.

A pamphlet listing the principles relating to health insurance, approved by the Canadian Medical Society in 1944, was brought to the attention of the meeting, and it was found to differ from the CAMSI Health Brief in two of its principles. There was a disagreement over the matter of salary, CAMSI holding that a basic wage should be paid all doctors, with regard for the conditions under which they work, plus a per capita rate for each patient treated. C.M.A. holds that it is not in the national interests to convert the whole medical profession into a salaried group, and that such a move would destroy the doctor-patient confidence and the morale of the profession. The second disagreement was over the matter of a plan including all citizens. While CAMSI holds that the plan should be all-inclusive, the C.M.A. believes that the upper income brackets should pay for the "medical frills" they demand.

In respect to the Haggerty Bill now ready to go before Parliament at Ottawa, Dr. Rowley pointed out the inadequacy of the money provided for the medical services outlined in the bill, and said that any scheme for financing such a bill should be put on trial for about three years and then revised. The speaker warned the medical students to keep a careful watch in the future to prevent the medical profession from becoming a mere trade, under government control, and a powerful political weapon.

Interesting points of the discussion were: the C.M.A. saw no reason to disapprove of the presentation of the CAMSI brief to the Canadian Youth Commission, but warned against putting down opinions without knowledge of the facts; that the medical profession could not work under a government scheme of which it did not approve; that the C.M.A. was glad to see active discussion of health issues by CAMSI, provided the discussions dealt with facts, and that the C.M.A. would welcome CAMSI as a part of the C.M.A.

Tower Bell Heralds Bill 'U.S. Union'

This afternoon the U.C. Parliament will sit to discuss a bill entitled: "Resolved that it would be wise for Canada to join the United States after the war," at 4:00 p.m. in the Junior Common Room.

The bell in the tower will begin ringing at 3:55 p.m. to summon all members of U.C. and visitors from other colleges to join in the debate.

"The government has a tough fight on its hands," declared Prime Minister Paul Reece, "but our cause will be firmly upheld by two excellent debaters, Hon. Ed Safarian and Hon. Stefan Stokoli. I have not the slightest doubt that the far-sighted vision and wisdom of the U.C. Parliament members will stir them to support the government in this initial aspect of its foreign policy."

Hon. Ed Safarian, speaking for the government, told The Varsity: "For economic prosperity and international security in the post-war world it is imperative that Canada link herself with the United States."

Hon. Bob Marjoribanks issued the following statement on behalf of the opposition: "It is the plain duty of every serious-minded student to attend today's debate and help defeat this monstrous proposal of the government which would reduce Canada to impotence and destroy her national entity. We are asking the House for an overwhelming defeat of the government."

O.C.E. Students' Ball Features Magician

The pedagogues from the Ontario College of Education will have a Ball for the first time in several years tonight at Hart House. Dancing will start at 9:00 p.m. to the music of Archie Wilson's band.

The floor-show will feature Johnny "Houdini" McDonough, the campus magician, who is working on a device—as yet unperfected—to make professors disappear.

Tickets may be obtained from the executive at O.C.E., and also at the door.

MILITARY TRAINING FOR EX-SERVICE MEN

A student who enrolls in the University after his discharge from active service may, in some circumstances, be liable to receive an Order-Medical Examination or Military Training from a Divisional Registrar.

If the student intends, in the event of receiving such an Order, to apply for postponement of Military Training in order that he may continue his course at the University, he should take Military Training at the University and thus comply with the National Selective Service Mobilization regulations respecting students.

Arsenic-Alcohol Beautiful Teeth Cow Chem Club Is Claim to Fame

At the second meeting of the Chemistry Club last night, President Harold Schiff opened the session with a description of the trip to Hamilton and the visit to the steel plant.

The suggestion was forwarded that three professors should set up a type of "Information, Please" evening at which all students with either theoretical problems or practical ones could attend.

Dr. L. G. Rogers was the feature attraction of the evening. He told the members how not to poison their relatives.

"The first stuff I had to examine was a man who had been under the ice from November to April, and when I had a look at him in May there was a jar full of him left," he explained.

Dr. Rogers brought forth his little black bag and showed some of his exhibits. The first one was a jam jar, painted by a willing housewife. At the bottom of which were some of the stains of the Paris green with which her husband killed himself. Next came a capsule with strichnine in it and a bottle of silver-cyanide enough to kill twenty or thirty people. One of the most interesting exhibits was a vest pierced by a .38 caliber bullet.

"Now one of the most dangerous crimes or diseases in this world is the drinking that is going on. The ordinary human body has 70-75 per cent water in it. If the analysis of the blood shows one thousandth of a part of alcohol in it, the man is drunk. This small amount means about four to five ounces of standard whiskey. In twenty thousand there are only about four who have no reaction to alcohol."

"Crime is a disease that can and has to be cured. It will eventually vanish of course, as our mental cures improve. There is cause for each one, and when the reason is found it can be cured medically," he concluded.

In a world of its own is the Faculty of Dentistry's newest campus contest, one to select "The Girl With the Most Beautiful Set of Teeth," announces Russ Wallace, Publicity Director for this year's Dentistics, to be held Friday, Dec. 15, in Hart House Theatre.

"Other contests have highlighted beautiful limbs, beautiful hair, beautiful eyes or beautiful personality," says Wallace, "but our contest brings to the public an awareness of an important part of each individual's physiognomy—the molars."

Another feature of the show, he said, will be the blues-singing of Georgia Dey, former soloist for Mart Kenney, now singing for Bert Niosi. She will appear at the Dentistics at the special request of her husband, Mac Gibson, II Dentistry.

Another vocal innovation will be the introduction of classical selections, soloed by a Dental Nursing songstress, Tillie Young. Music by Sholom Pearlman and the six-piece Dixieland Band will serve as background to three hilarious skits, all under charge of Dentistics Director Ross Richardson, III Dentistry.

Dancing in the main gymnasium will wind up the evening, with Frank Bogart's band doing the boogie-woogie honors.

Tickets will be on sale at Hart House box office for faculties other than Dentistry on Wednesday, Dec. 13, from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

The record program, held daily from 3:45 to 5:00 in the Women's Common Room at U.C., is open to the men and women of every college and faculty.

Santa Claus Here To Stay With All The Trimmings Too

By Al Appelbaum

Yes, good old Santa Claus, St. Nick, Father Christmas or whatever you may call him, is here to stay.

A recent survey across the campus on whether Santa Claus should be banished for the duration of the war revealed that nobody would get rid of that grand old joy-bringer.

"Christmas wouldn't be Christmas without Santa," said Joe Storey, IV Architecture. "Getting rid of him now would be a very poor idea because he certainly boosts home morale, and that's what we need a lot of these days. Santa Claus is an institution by now and I can hardly imagine a children's Christmas without him."

"Oh, no," said Anne McCarter, I Pass, "we couldn't get rid of Christmas time. I don't think the war should have any effect on Christmas or Santa because children have no realization of struggles, and as such should not be made to suffer on that account."

When questioned on the subject, R. B.

Taylor, IV Mining Geology, replied: "Santa Claus is a realism among children and Artsmen, and out of sympathy for them it should be carried on. Seriously, I see no greater promoter of good will than him and, anyway, who then would bring me such nice gifts so regularly?"

"Don't get rid of Santa Claus," stated Helen Bushnell, III Pass. "He is the only one who brings me good things and I can count on him. Besides, there is nothing I love better than going down to the department store and shoving kids aside to sit on his knee. All kidding aside, I don't think there would be any Christmas spirit without Santa and his reindeer."

"What would we do without Santa," said Joan Fulford, I P.H. and E., "I've watched his parades since I was a little girl and I would hate to miss them now. We have had enough things taken away from us due to the war, and Santa should definitely not be one of them."

Several Professors Speak On Children To Psychology Club

Lenin's Rise Last Topic Of Pares

In his concluding lecture of the term yesterday in Convocation Hall, Sir Bernard Pares traced the rise of Lenin and the Bolsheviks in 1917. Sir Bernard told, how, after the resignation of the Czar Nicholas, a provisional government was proclaimed, headed by the revolutionary nobleman, Alexander Kerensky.

"For the first month there was much jubilation among the people. They had confidence in the new leaders and hope of winning the war," said the speaker. As a result of the immense size of the country, all Russians at that time were tinged with socialism, explained Sir Bernard.

The radical socialists broke into two factions, the Bolsheviks who hoped to establish a totalitarian government by force, and the Mensheviks who tried to introduce socialism by peaceful reform, he said.

The provisional government and its new system of soviets, he said, was weakening slowly. However, he explained, it did pass two outstanding reforms—one according full independence to Poland and another purifying the church. But the provisional government was faced with the insurmountable task of getting the state machinery back into motion again and keeping Russia in the war, he stated.

On April 16, 1917, Lenin returned from Switzerland, where he had remained during the revolution. "He came in to reap. He knew what he wanted and what Russia needed," emphasized Sir Bernard.

Lenin strode ahead with a three-point slogan: "Peace, Bread, and All Power for the Soviets," and with this the Bolsheviks finally gained control of the government, he concluded.

In the spring term, Sir Bernard will complete his series of lectures on Russia, covering the period from 1917 to the present day.

Engineering Society Hears About Welding

"The most important advancement in the oxy-acetylene welding industry in the last ten years has been the development in the United States of the distribution of oxygen in liquid form," said D. W. Duncan, president of the Dominion Oxygen Company yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Duncan was addressing the final meeting for the fall term of the University of Toronto Engineering Society. He is a member of the class of '28, and was introduced by Les Elliott.

Mr. Duncan stated that the oxy-acetylene industry is still comparatively young and the ship-building industry on the west coast during this war would have been impossible had it not been for the development of oxygen in liquid form.

Mr. Duncan predicted a promising future for a recent development called pressure welding. "This modern equivalent of the forging process has in addition to its welding aspect another field of application in metal-surfacing," he said.

The speaker concluded his lecture with a series of slides on the Unionmet welding process, another recent electric-welding development.

"Biologists and Anthropologists Are at Odds" Stated Dr. Ford: Birdwhistell Speaks of Work on Indian Affairs

DEFINES CHILDHOOD

"Understanding the Child" was the topic under discussion at a meeting of the Psychology Club at Wymilwood last night. Dr. M. L. Northway, of the Psychology Department, in her capacity as Faculty Adviser to the executive of the club, introduced the panel of speakers, each of whom was allowed fifteen minutes to expound his views. The speakers were Dr. E. M. Ford, of the Biology Department; Mr. R. Birdwhistell, of the Anthropology Department; and Dr. W. E. Blatz, Director of the Institute of Child Study.

Dr. Ford dealt especially with the question, "When does childhood end?" In defining the period of childhood, the zoologist thinks of the physical growth, he stated. The most rapid development and greatest changes take place before birth, he explained, and each organ takes a different length of time to mature. Detrimental genes can be inherited which prevent maturity and cause conditions, such as mongolism, which is present once in every thousand births, he said.

"The biologists and the anthropologists are at odds," stated Dr. Ford, "for the latter maintain that there is no fundamental difference in race, but the geneticists know that differences in skin and hair are caused by a different frequency in the genes."

Mr. R. Birdwhistell began by saying: "The basis for most of the antagonism between the biologist and the social scientist has been a mutual misunderstanding of our various positions." He showed the conflict of culture versus personality but said that social structure and personal structure are one and the same. Mr. Birdwhistell discussed the question, "What is the child?" He claimed that it is a social reality from the moment that parents begin to adjust themselves to it. It must be homo sapiens since it is born of homo sapiens but the environment determines what kind of homo sapiens it will be, he stated. He continued to say that the human unit consists of the biological unit plus the social unit, made up of social experience.

Mr. Birdwhistell spoke of his work with the Indian Affairs Department in the United States. He worked among children of the various tribes, studying how they passed through the cultural maze, which begins to take effect almost as soon as the child is born, he said.

"You can take all the biology and all the social science, and all the psychology of the last fifteen years and yet you will never understand the child, for you cannot share its consciousness," stated Dr. Blatz. He emphasized that we are interested in the consciousness of the child. "That statement cannot be challenged." He continued to say that the one criterion of the human being is that he is the only animal which questions his own purpose, the question being "Why?"

Education of an Engineer

In a previous editorial the question of the addition of Arts subjects to the present curricula in engineering schools in United States and Canada was discussed at some length. It seems apparent from the present trend in engineering education that at some future date these men, whose technique is vital to our way of life, will graduate from the universities equipped not only with a knowledge and training specifically scientific but also with an adequate background in the humanities and the social sciences.

However, at the present time it will be unanimously agreed by both the engineer and the artisan that the engineer's university education is not broad enough. The engineer, since he is an important part of the world today, is under the tremendous burden of having to know not only his own profession but also that of the artisan. This heavy responsibility for the engineer has grown with his metamorphosis from a skilled technician into a respected professional man.

In the same way that the education of the artisan does not begin and end in the lecture room and library, neither should that of the true engineer. Today, education in most universities includes such extra-curricular activities as The International Affairs Society, The Arts and Letters Club, The Modern History Club, and The Varsity. It is true that artisans participate in these activities to a greater extent than does the engineer since they provide an extension of their academic courses and, generally speaking, they have more time available than does the undergraduate engineer. Herein lies the failing of the present engineering training.

However, the engineer should realize this and the fact that there will be little opportunity in the post-graduate world for him to expand his knowledge of economics, politics, psychology, philosophy, and English. The influence of these spheres of learning on everyday living is generally accepted, and no better opportunity for the engineer to become acquainted with them exists than his active participation in college clubs and societies dealing with them. These campus clubs should be included in the program of every engineer; they will enable him to form opinions on the complex problems of the contemporary world with much more adequacy and conviction than he is able to do if he is wholly absorbed in the technical aspects of his college course.

By virtue of his training, the engineer possesses the ability to think clearly and accurately; if given the proper direction, the engineer will formulate an opinion regarding any problem after an exacting and logical analysis of the facts pro and con, just as he does in the scientific laboratory. It is necessary that the complete picture of the background and ramifications of the problem under survey be at his disposal, and these cannot be obtained impartially from the news and editorial columns of the daily newspapers. This is why participation in college discussion groups is of the utmost importance to the engineer in rounding out his education. The opportunity to thus round out his education is within reach of every undergraduate engineer, and it is to his own disadvantage and to the detriment of the entire country if he fails to grasp this opportunity.

Demonstration

It was recently reported over the wires of the CUP that students of the University of Montreal had participated in an anti-conscription parade in the streets of Canada's metropolis. Though of an orderly nature, the parade was the largest anti-conscription demonstration to date. Although we retain a liberal mind on the current issues in Ottawa and realize that a strong difference of opinion does exist among the varied elements of the people of Canada regarding the government's policy with regard to this matter, we take issue with the students at the University of Montreal for their part in the demonstration.

The French-speaking students at this university, by their very presence in the university, are taking advantage of a concession on the part of the government in not interfering with the education of Canadian youth. All of these men are even now enjoying the advantages of deferment of military call-up. Some of these men were reported to be carrying banners reading "Down with Conscription" and "Are We Cannon Fodder?" when no attempt whatsoever had been made to interfere with their present status. By their actions, motivated as they were by unreal issues, they jeopardized the position of university students all across the Dominion. Students everywhere are proceeding to university with some hesitation in these days of military crisis in spite of the fact that they have been repeatedly reassured by the government that the completion of their education is their prime duty to the country at the present time. Demonstrations such as the one in Montreal rouse the indignation not only of unsympathetic outsiders but also of those directly connected with the universities.

The action and the frame of mind of the student body at the University of Montreal is a far cry indeed from that of the students at McGill University. Male students enlisted in the C.O.T.C. at McGill have applied for and been granted the privilege of wearing white flashes on their epaulettes and in their caps in order that they might not be confused with members of the NRMA or "zombies." Many of the students had been insulted in the streets of the zombie-conscious city and they felt that they were being discriminated against unjustly because they were nothing on their uniforms that differentiated them from members of NRMA.

It is to be hoped that the authorities of the University of Montreal have not condoned the action of these rash young men but have taken some disciplinary action against them for their indiscreet conduct.

Art, Music and Drama

Bell-Like Clarity

Eaton Auditorium

To pinch-hit, especially on short notice, must be one of the most difficult jobs in the world for an artist. To be able to present an ideally chosen program, not too light nor too heavy, and to captivate her audience completely is an accomplishment worthy of the great. Jean Dickenson did just that last night at Eaton Auditorium.

The most outstanding quality of Miss Dickenson's voice is its unusual lightness, accuracy and bell-like clarity. Nothing in the calisthenic vocabulary of the coloratura soprano—ritornellos, runs and trills in the upper register—seemed to faze her. Quick skips and trilling in octaves made the particularly difficult Swiss Echo Song (Eckert) a real triumph. The same effect was attained in Le Coucou (Canteloube), but Mulder's Staccato Polka proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that even the most demanding agilities of the throat can be made pleasant to listen to.

Facial expression plays a large part in Miss Dickenson's interpretation, whether with a raised eyebrow and sly wink in the coquettish Seguidilla, or the sentimental lament of Quand la hache tombe (Gretchanioff), or the teasing and completely bewitching Laughing Song from "Manon Lescaut," or the strangely ultra-modern wanderings of Charles Ives' Ann Street and Mists. One would certainly need to possess absolute pitch for the last-named compositions.

The more serious part of the program was one of the most difficult of all arias, Shadow Song, from "Dinorah" of Meyerbeer. Requiring a flute obligato of precise timing, the poor heroine sang her song of woe with a caressing rubato on her cadenzas which, after long intervals, came back to a piano accompaniment and, to our amazement, right in tune.

As an accompanist, William Hughes was all that an artist could desire, never intruding, but always there for support.

The audience was sent away completely satisfied and Miss Dickenson's gracious personality and remarkable voice will be remembered for a long time.

ELIZABETH HOPPER

SAVANT'S EXIT SHOCKS PRESIDENT

"Shocked and startled" was the phrase used by President Dody to describe his reaction to the disappearance of Prof. Suiffy Waller, distinguished geophysicist, in the Library recently.

"I had no idea that the Library and Hart House run up scores as high as 6-4 in a single term in their Lost Professors Contest," he went on. "We at Simcoe Hall consider ourselves lucky if we get one or two in a whole year, and Kuox is the same. There'd be no game between us if either of us could count on scoring four or more times in a term."

Queried as to what is done with the salaries of faculty members who become scores in the inter-institutional game of lost professors, Dr. Dody was non-committal. "We can look after that," he said. "Our main problem is to know what to do with their students. Fortunately the students seem rather careless about the faculty members, and rarely notice when one disappears. A few keep hanging around, however, and it's quite a problem to know what should be done. Frequently we have no alternative but to graduate them—after they've paid their fees, of course."

In the Library, meanwhile, Dr. Waller remains missing, and Library officials are disinclined to look for him. "We should ruin our own score by looking for lost professors?" asked Librarian Walleye sarcastically. "Let Lickerbreth's gang come and try to lower our score, if they can. We won't stop them." Questioned as to the rules of the game, Mr. Walleye admitted that he couldn't legally prevent people from entering the Library jungle if they want to, no matter what their errand. "Some even come after books," he said.

Hart House officials are reported tonight to be organizing an expedition to the Library in search of Dr. Waller and are hourly expecting a dog-team to arrive from the north. "It isn't that we care so much about the Library scoring over us, asserted Warden Lickerbreth, 'but we've had a run of bad breaks on our own side lately, and it will be easier for us to reduce the Library's score than to increase our own. Some of our best men are out with minor injuries sustained during the earlier stages of the game.' He cited the case of two assistants who had been badly bitten during the accumulation of Hart House's fourth point. "It was a professor of dentistry," he explained.

Varsity Blues Team Downs Watchmakers In First Hockey Match

Blues Showed Game Spirit and Had the Lead All the Way; Bain and Shand Prove Mettle on Defence Line

SCORE 17-4

By Reg Wallace

The Varsity Blues hockey team welcomed Ostranders Jewellers last night to the tune of 17-4 in the first practice tilt. Ace Bailey had 17 hopefuls in his line-up and used them in three shifts with the remainder as utility men.

In the first period the Blues showed plenty of spirit and kept the puck consistently in Ostrander territory. Andison notched the first two tallies for Varsity on fast passes from Hughes and Shand. Both teams suffered from the usual first-of-the-season troubles—wild passes, wilder shots, and lack of condition. As the period progressed, however, they showed steady improvement and tightened the play considerably. A scant few seconds before the bell, Murray countered on a beautiful pass from Adam, making the score 4-0 for Varsity.

Resuming play almost immediately, the teams settled down to a second period packed with scores. Terreyan banged in the Jewellers' first score a mere five seconds after the face-off as the visitors made a powerful bid for supremacy. Time and again Buckman and Cumming bore down on the Varsity defence, only to be foiled by the close checking of Bain and Shand.

Taking full advantage of a face-off in Ostrander territory, Hughes, flashy right-winger on Bailey's first shift, stick-handled his way in, single-handed, to score the Blues' fifth goal. Running wild, he immediately marked up two more counters on accurate passes from Hart, to leave the score at 7-2 for Varsity. The play ranged quickly up and down the ice as both teams intercepted pass after pass. Then Hughes and Shand each scored once and Murray twice in quick succession for the Baileyens, while Galbraith and Hodges notched two more for Ostranders as the period drew to a furious close.

The third period began with the score standing at 13-4 for Varsity and soon developed into a one-team show. The Blues' superior condition and faster skating began to tell and Boa whacked home another tally almost immediately. Lawlor and Petrullo showed up well as a team, with the former piling up two goals and the latter one and an assist in the short space of three minutes towards the end of the game. The final score was an overwhelming 17-4 for Varsity.

Outstanding among the Varsity hopefuls were Murray, for his three lone-wolf goals, and Hughes, for his handy ability to shoot while going away from the goal. Lawlor, star forward of the game, played heads-up hockey and, moreover, deserves a lot of credit for withstanding temptation in the form of a juicy offer from Marlboros. Bain and Shand, starring on defence, were the main reasons why the Jewellers failed to score more than four goals.

Now that the Blues have their first game behind them, they should develop rapidly next week. Next Thursday at 5:30 they meet Ostranders again in a second practice tilt, and their official hockey season will open with a game against Victory Aircraft, scheduled for Friday the 15th at 8:15 p.m. in Varsity Arena.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Jerry Ewins

IT DOESN'T SEEM QUITE FAIR . . .

The way the Intramural "V"s were awarded this year. When we say "way" we don't mean that the choices for the honor weren't considered by enough competent groups of officials. They most certainly were. In the case of rugby, for instance, which is where we feel that things didn't work out just the way they should have perhaps, the names submitted were hashed over and finally passed upon by first the Standing Committee for Rugby, second the Intramural Sports Committee, and lastly the Athletic Directorate of the University. What we do mean is that some fellows got "V"s who were not as deserving of them as others.

There are a couple of cases in point which have been brought to our attention in discussion around the campus the past few days. Firstly, there's Agro of St. Mike's. Granted he turned in a good effort for the Irish this fall but there was only one space left vacant among the twenty-four for a candidate from St. Mike's and he was elected to the spot. There were other men more worthy of the honor than he was. We are thinking of, and can name four, in the persons of Fred O'Brien, Mortson, Petrullo and Rochi. This is purely from our own observation of the team at their games, of course, but if there are any other factors entering into the nomination beyond the players' ability on the gridiron we fail to see them. Then there's the case of two awards going to Dents, Bob Murray got one of these, and we think justly deserved it. But regarding the other one, we fail to see that there were any other outstanding players on the Dents team in our observation of three of their season's games. If another man on Dents was to be picked besides Murray, then we think it should have been Bob Marshall. Bill McManus got their second "V". He probably turned in a very good brand of play along Dents line, we aren't quite sure, but he was not prominent enough this fall to receive a letter. Better this one should have gone to one of those St. Mike's men.

Also, we don't completely agree with the method adopted for choosing these men. It was stated to those making the choices that they were to pick each man on his merit only, regardless of how long he had been playing rugby at the University or whether he was in his final year or not. Seems to us that a fellow who has played for his faculty for a couple of years or more and is about to graduate and lose contact with the University, would value a letter just a little more than one who is in his first or second year, and will have plenty of other chances to win one before he leaves. As an illustration of this, we think the nomination of Cranham of U.C. was justifiably turned down, but possibly that of MacDonald of V.C. should have received more consideration.

As a remedy for all this, we offer the advice that the matter should be brought up again in the Intramural Sports Committee, and that those names about which there is any question, be reconsidered by this legislative body. It could be done easily enough if the faculty representatives are willing. As a side note we suggest that St. Mike's should try to send as competent men as possible to all of the Standing Committee meetings.

ANOTHER SQUAWK . . .

Emerges from the second game of the lacrosse finals day before yesterday. It should have been brought forth out of the first game, but it wasn't. The squawk is about the refereeing. Sr. S.P.S. out weighed their Meds rivals by a considerable amount to start with, and could have handed out all the stiff checks they chose to without much opposition, and kept it legally within the rules of this indoor murder, but rough play started creeping into the game. Charging, cross-checking, wall-barring, etc. went unchecked by the referee. Either he didn't see what went on or he sets a very low standard on what he considers a penalizing offence. We think that two refs should be on hand for all games, especially the finals. One is too easily intimidated by the opinions of very excited participants.

As far as straight lacrosse goes, stickhandling, pivoting, passing, and such, Meds should win the sudden-death final, tentatively scheduled for next Wednesday, with very little trouble. S.P.S. have an edge in the goaltending department in the person of Anderson, but such men as Nikaido, Toogood, Rae and Spooner will be hard to hold off the scoresheet. Steel played a very heady, clean game last Wednesday, and was responsible for eight of the School goals. If he keeps up a pace like that in the final, and Turner can get hot to help him out, it should be really close. In any event, it promises to be a battle plus, so don't miss it.

RECAPITULATION . . .

As the Basketball season draws to a close it would seem opportune to discuss the merits of the system inaugurated this year. It all boils down to a basic comparison between competition and equality of a sort. On one side of the ledger we have the positive factors—those of placing the experienced teams together in one loop, a means of deciding the year winners throughout the whole university and not only in the separate colleges as before. The equality we were mentioning is of a rather dubious ilk. Whether it is better to class all senior teams together regardless of strength and put one or two teams behind the eight ball (cf. Victoria College B team) is a matter for the Athletic Directorate to decide.

On the other end of the scale we have the negative factors, which unfortunately this year seem to have outnumbered the good points. Several teams as mentioned above found themselves hopelessly outclassed while others were given what practically amounted to free passes into the final round. This uneven distribution of teams cut down to a great extent the spirit of competition which usually pervades the Varsity finals. All the really tough games will quite probably have been played in the earlier rounds, leaving the more unexciting encounters for the big playoffs. And speaking of playoffs that is a large-sized disappointment to many of the girls who have played hard all year—THERE ARE TO BE NO FINALS—that is no decisive final game. Instead there will be a round-robin play-off between the winners of the various leagues. The only real objection to this column can find to such a procedure is the element of doubt involved. Should any of the games be at all close the losers unfortunately will be able to say: "We might have won had we had eliminations."

TO BY-STANDERS . . .

Now that the finals loom large on the horizon it's time the games were lived up a bit by someone else but the teams doing a little yelling. So far, the games might as well have been played in a vacuum for all the attention paid to them. St. Mike's seems to be the only college interested enough to attend games in a body. The Round Robin finals will be played in Hart House as always, so let's all get over and fill the place to the rafters on the nights our faculties are giving their all foah deah old Varsity. How about it, gals—are you with us?

Professors, as this column has said before, are abominable. This one was making a feeble attempt to be cute one day when lecturing on auto-suggestion.

"You know what auto-suggestion is," the psychology pedagogue giggled playfully. "It's like a person mattering to himself the old rhyme, 'Day by day in every way I grow better and better'."

At which point an anonymous jester from the back rasped hoarsely, "You moy, my dear, but I'm sure I don't!"

O TEMPORA! O MORES!

Desire to grow better and better is also evident at Vic, where the current issue of Acta runs this quarter-page big-type ad:

We suggest IMPROVEMENT.

Vaguely reminiscent of Social Credit is the babbling query that floated above the howling delirium of the throngs storming Convocation Hall yesterday noon:

"Is it true that if I buy one of these ribbons for a dime, I get in free?"

ECONOMICS 2a.

And now, here's a poem about a student who wasn't carnivorously minded. His name was Holboist, and he was last seen hanging out on page four of the McMaster Silhouette:

Holboist was a little spout

He never wore a poiple shoit,

He never used to go and float

He never cared about a skoit—

Holboist was an introvoit.

This one comes from a Varsity staffer who was working as a reporter this summer with a Toronto daily. One day the city editor despatched him to cover, of all things, the annual convention of the Association for Deaf Mutes.

Well, naturally, the poor newsbound had trouble getting his facts from the silent members at the hotel where the meeting was being conducted, but he finally did via pencil and pad conversation.

On his way out, he noticed the hotel platform being prepared by several silent carpenters for a big show which the Association was holding that night. Sensing a good story, he whipped up to the stage and had another laborious pencil-and-pad conversation, finding out after 20 minutes of writing that the show was being directed and acted by deaf-mutes.

Absent-mindedly, the reporter said aloud: "My, my, isn't that interesting?" To his astonishment, the silent carpenter opened his mouth and roared, "My gawd! So you ain't deaf either!"

Yon again to Western, with whom we are on speaking terms again now that the Campus Buzzer flurry has died down. A recent Gazette tells of the innocent pair who were waiting for a bus one cold and wind-swept night, the sort of night when buses run an hour late, and on the sort of street where there's no wind-break for blocks.

But, wait! There was a telephone booth.

So into the telephone booth they stepped, and stood for a while waiting for the bus and keeping warm (says the Gazette), and conversing in low tones.

Then comes the rumble of a heavy vehicle, and suddenly some men leap off a Telephone Co. truck, heave the booth on to their tonneau, and cart it away.

NO COMMENT.

The Varsity Reviews

Acta Victoriana

We would hate to be the editor of Acta. For that matter, we would hate to be editor of any college publication just now, but the current dearth of creative writing at Victoria College makes even the Trinity Review look interesting. With the Green Issue deadline today (plug), The Varsity is having its own troubles in this field just now, and feels, paradoxically, in a singularly charitable mood.

Acta Victoriana in its first issue for the fall term goes on for 16 pages before an undergraduate contribution appears; and the total number of pages occupied by creative writing, out of a 48-page magazine, is exactly six. We would hate to be the editor of Acta.

Following an editorial (by a graduate of 21 years' standing) and a rather good factual pen-and-ink drawing (by a Schoolman), Dean Bennett's opening address to the college, Karsh's photograph of Sir William Mulock, and a collection of Victorian anecdotes concerning the late Chancellor (assembled by Professor Sissons), Acta gets properly under way with a sixteen-line poem.

We have no intent to disparage the faculty contributions. They make by far the best reading in the book. But in view of the editorial phrase, "a sample of student interest and student thinking," which is quite rightly upheld as the magazine's policy, their presence in such bulk seems slightly ironical.

As to the literary content: almost the whole blot of thinness and badness in the book is erased by Phyllis Bloom's Autumn: The Bridal of Persephone, which is skilfully versified and hauntingly beautiful. It is not construction; it is creation. It exhibits real poetic power. It is quite the best undergraduate poem we have seen.

Sylvia Boorman's The G.T. (a footnote supplies the translation "Gruesome Twosome") is much the most respectable piece of prose in the issue. The theme, which makes no great pretensions, is deftly handled, full of naive humor, and leaves a pleasant taste behind.

The soul-torture undergone by writer and reader in C. Murdock's Helen is scarcely worth the evanescent total effect: an effect so evanescent that it barely exists, and leaves us wondering just what the writer was striving for. If he was attempting what we think he was, then we refer him to Belloc's The Good Woman, where he may find something the same done perfectly. His presentation is verbose and on the whole bad.

And what else is there? There is At the Museum by Anne S. Thompson, which deals with "How Cloth is Made" and resolves our most horrible doubts by being too high-schoolish to be a press release. There is a page called Incidentally by Jean E. Hare, which starts like a meatless "hither" and bursts (surprisingly) into Advice to Freshmen. There are plugs about Men's Athletics, Women's Athletics, the Dramatic Club, the Music Club, and even Don't Use the Telephone in Wartime. There are good, if unnecessary, reviews of The Bob, "Othello," and the paintings at Wymwood. There is an ecstatic appeal to book-buyers signed "A Prattian Convert"; and there is a desperate piece of filler reviewing a pamphlet on Reconstruction—The General Economic Setting.

And that is all. Yet, we would hate to be the editor of Acta.

The movie, "Marriage is a Private Affair," based on the novel by Judith Kelly, formerly of Toronto, is the story of the mental conflict of a young wife who is disillusioned about the stability of marriage because of her mother's marital meanderings.

Rather reminiscent of "The Constant Nymph" in its appeal to a feminine audience, this picture, nonetheless carries with it a psychological interest.

Lane Turner, as the bewildered young wife, turns in an amazing dramatic performance, looking as beautiful as ever.

The harassed husband, played by John Hodiak, was a stable carter, the anti-thesis of his spouse, forerunning a striking contrast. Keenan Wynn, appearing briefly as the tough sergeant who relayed the vital message that brought about the happy ending, provided a neatly executed comic interlude.

Though long and sometimes lacking in action, this picture had Lana and John, which should be enough.

Government Ousted As Canada-U.S. Union Downed by Majority

Opposition Calls for Defeat of Bill on Grounds of Devotion to Mother Country, Divergent Interests

EARLIER MOTION UPHELD

Heralded by the tolling of the West tower bell, the third session of the twelfth U.C. Parliament was held Friday afternoon, to debate on the government's motion, "Resolved that it would be wise for Canada to join with the United States after the war." The resolution, defended by the Hon. Ed. Safarian and the Hon. Stefan Stykolt, envoy extraordinary, was defeated by large majority. The motion was opposed by the Rt. Hon. Betsy Mosbaugh, leader of the opposition, and the Hon. Bob Marjoribanks.

Speaking in defence of the resolution, Ed. Safarian said that Canada's immense natural resources can be properly exploited only by an increase in her population and that this, in turn, can only be accomplished by union with the States. Canada belongs not to a British but to an American civilization, and has no actual nationalism of her own but is divided by barriers between French and English elements. In conclusion, he said that since the only solution to the French Canadian problem and the problem of increasing trade lay in union with the States, Canadians today had the choice of honorable union now or dishonorable annexation in the future.

Speaking in opposition, Betsy Mosbaugh emphasized the basic differences between Canadian and American society. She stated that American society was more stereotyped and that the American people were more prone to mass hysteria. Because of these differences it would be impossible for members of either society to accept the government of the other. An idea such as that of union was a mark of social escapism which would only make its appearance in time of depression, when the States would be least likely to accept it.

In the post-war world Britain will be neither willing nor capable of defending Canadian interests, said Stefan Stykolt, second speaker for the affirmative.

The ascendancy of Britain is over and it is to the advantage of Canadians to ally themselves with a power whose ascendancy is rising and whose culture is like their own. The union, he continued, would be in conformity with the three most prevalent political trends of the day, firstly the trend toward regionalism with its idea of "A nation for a continent, a continent for a nation"; secondly with the trend towards the coalescence of all English-speaking countries, and finally to the trend towards internationalism.

Bob Marjoribanks, second speaker for the negative, said that the national culture which Canada is belatedly achieving would be overwhelmed if she were to join the States. The cheap, jazzy mercantilism which is typical of American society is distasteful to Canadians, he asserted. Affection for the British Empire is very prevalent among Canadians and to the majority of them the idea of union is akin to treason. Union, he concluded, would only result in the formation of more factions, and an irreparable chaos.

Previous to the main debate the House carried a motion that "This House deplores the segregation of the sexes in the Library."

And One Cheer More

Hart House

Full of pep from the rollicking chorus to the grand finale, the Victoria College Music Club's production of "H.M.S. Pinafore" scored another triumph in their traditional presentation of G. and S., directed by Godfrey Ridout.

Victoria has a real "find" in Lois Bouck, whose interpretation of Josephine, both singing and acting, was easily the highlight of the operetta. Her aria, The Hours Creep on Apace, which closely approaches grand opera, is usually a stumbling block, but Miss Bouck glided over it with the greatest of ease.

The supporting cast was particularly good and choice of one above another would do injustice to well-deserving performers. Doug Thomas as the pompous, slightly ridiculous Sir Joseph, played his part, if not in the strictly conventional G. and S. tradition, at least to the great amusement of the audience.

Doug Spry, with a fine baritone voice, made a stately captain. Unfortunately, Ralph (Charles Boyd) was suffering from an untimely attack of laryngitis. Little Buttercup (Betty Capes) sang her part with the required coquettishness; the Bos's Mate (Helge Hongisto); and Cousin Hebe (Gwen Mihalco) sang with gusto. The most thorough transformation job made satisfying shudders run down our spine with Bill Hossack as Deadeye Dick.

The illusion of being on board ship in the mid-nineteenth century was excellently created by Jack McAllister and his staff. Costuming of choruses and principles were effectively and colorfully done. The obvious enjoyment of the gallant crew and dozens of cousins was sufficiently infectious to send us away humming merrily.

Botanical Garden Desired in City

Recommendation that other Canadian cities follow the example of Montreal and introduce botanical gardens into their post-war city planning emerged from a Royal Canadian Institute meeting at Convocation Hall Saturday night at which Dr. W. J. Robbins described "Plant Life in Botanical Gardens."

At another in the Saturday series sponsored by the Institute, Dr. Robbins' address was illustrated by a color film and concerned itself with the Botanical Garden of New York City. The film depicted the many unusual specimens of plant life which are in cultivation in this Garden.

Strangest of these, commented Dr. Robbins, is a Venus Fly Trap which devours flies, pencils and other small objects. The film also showed the New York Garden at various stages of its development.

"The original garden occupied the present site of Rockefeller City," observed the speaker, adding that "the rent now paid for the use of this land provides for the upkeep of the present gardens located near 102nd Street."

In addition to possessing grounds devoted entirely to the scientific study of plants, the Garden also includes collections of perennial flowers and annuals, he said.

In conclusion, Dr. Robbins referred to the record of the Victory Garden section of the Botanical Garden which he termed "amazing." One-tenth of an acre, he revealed, annually produces tons of vegetable. Dr. Robbins is Director of the New York Botanical Garden.

interesting and intriguing choice of program. A wide variety of musical styles and shades was presented. The Quartet's remarkably easy leaps from early Beethoven over Smetana to Fauré must have been accomplished with the aid of an invisible pair of musical seven league boots. We felt a considerable part of the audience which probably had been unable to secure that indispensable equipment, did not find all efforts so easily negotiable. But their efforts were sincere and undoubtedly made for a deeper appreciation of the performers' high standards.

The first work on the program, Beethoven's Quartet in B flat major, is characteristic of the German master's early style, lacking the profundity and distinctive features of his later chamber music. His dependence on Haydn is still clearly recognizable but without any deeper significance. The Adagio contains some lively passages such as the delightful counter-play between violin, viola and cello. Cyril Glyde's performance on the viola was particularly noteworthy in this movement. The exuberant Scherzo, Beethoven's contribution to the realm of musical form, is still a far cry from the vigor and compelling force of his later Scherzos. In this, as in the other pieces, it seemed that James Levey compromised his extremely able handling of the violin by a lack of subordination to the other instruments. We felt a little more restraint on his part would have improved the musical proportions.

Smetana's Quartet in E minor with its romantic subtitle, "From My Life," is reminiscent of Dvorak's New World Symphony not only because of a similarity of ideas but because of the inherent qualities of its music which are symphonic rather than chamber. As a consequence, the work suffers from a lack of co-ordination with the laws of chamber music. In the second movement (a la polka) he is, perhaps, more successful in achieving the necessary integration. But the Adagio with the obligatory nostalgic flavor in the romantic mood, constitutes a departure from this policy again.

Charley Barnett and his current orchestra displayed their wares at a packed Queensway Ballroom Saturday night. Barnett's bands have nearly always produced thrilling music. This one, with few exceptions, didn't. There was no Wings Over Manhattan, little Ellingtonia and no soloists to compare with the late Bus Etri. In fact, the guitar chair was not filled at all.

The band started off poorly, Lyman Vunk's trumpet lead falling dismally on a few of the high written passages. Further hampered by the missing guitar and the loud drumming of Harold Hahn, the band only showed brief flashes of the drive and power that one expects from a big-time swing outfit. Excepting Barnett himself, Porky Cohen's trombone solos, of which there were all too few, supplied the majority of the kicks. Though ignored completely by the pep crowd, this boy blew well constructed phrases and made the most of his big tone in the three or four solo spots allotted him. Peanuts Holland was heavily featured, both on trumpet and as a vocalist. His singing of I Like to Riff and Things Ain't What They Used to Be were good to say the least, and went over well with the audience. His trumpet playing, like most modern jazz trumpeting, consisted of a series of disconnected phrases played loudly. Marty Napoleon's poorly amplified piano was scarcely audible, but what was heard was well worth hearing. Kay Starr, the girl vocalist, is very talented. She sings well, too.

Barnett's usual flashy and exciting playing style sounded most convincing when he used his alto. He possesses a terrific technique and an original tone, but his wild frantic stuff on tunes such as Cherokee grew boring after a while. On the other hand, his beautiful Hodges-like alto and soprano playing made for good listening.

There was little else to commend in the band; the saxes as a section were merely competent, and the sound given by the four trombones left the impression that at least two of them were not playing. The trumpets made with a powerful section tone occasionally, but went out of tune or missed notes completely on the high-note screamers.

History Club Plans Party

With the slogan "Lots of fun for everyone," the Modern History Club Christmas party to be held in Cartwright Hall in St. Hilda's College this Wednesday, Dec. 13, at 8 p.m., promises to be a gala affair, stated Bob Wilson, a member of the executive.

A melodious quartette of real live professors are to enliven the proceedings, which include a sing-song, skits, dancing, refreshments, and, above all, Santa Claus.

All this is provided free, for a slight admission fee hardly worth mentioning, Wilson said, and everyone is welcome.

Anti-Semitism Is Forum Topic

Freshmen Stay Western Ruling

London—(CUP)—It was announced this week that the fifty per cent rule, applicable only to freshmen, will not be enforced this year at the Christmas exams.

Last year, 92 students were dropped at Western and affiliate colleges because of the application of the fifty per cent rule, which was enacted by Selective Service in conjunction with Canadian University officials.

Western will not be uniform with other Canadian colleges which do not enforce the ruling. It was felt previously that some inequalities resulted from Western applying the rule twice.

S.P.S. Men Urged to Write

Fifty copies of "A Canadian Freelance Writer's Guide to American Magazine Markets" are available at the University Library W. S. Wallace, Head Librarian, told The Varsity yesterday. This pamphlet, which has been compiled and issued by the magazine section of the Wartime Information Board, gives a brief outline of the editorial requirements of 44 American magazines.

The booklet has been compiled under the direction of William Stephenson for the purpose of increasing the number of potential contributors to the foreign magazine market, particularly that of the United States.

According to Mr. Stephenson, it is in the field of trade journals that the greatest need for a more extensive knowledge of Canadian industry lies. Trade journals are the media through which ideas, questions and good will are transmitted to the manufacturers, buyers and technical men in each of these particular industries.

University students especially those in science and engineering, should be encouraged to express themselves by writing short articles for these publications, Mr. Stephenson said.

Christmas Cheer Brought to Poor

There will be food on the table and full stockings by the fireplace on Christmas Day in five houses in the district served by the University of Toronto Settlement House.

Christmas will be Christmas for five needy families living just five minutes from the U. of T. campus due to the generosity of the women residents of University College who have undertaken to provide gifts of food, clothing and other necessities on December 25.

Bereavement and scarlet fever were just two of the conditions existing in these homes which would have barred the Yule spirit this year.

Understanding of Modern China
Helped by Knowing Past History, and Geographical Factors

LAST LECTURE OF TERM

The geographical background of China and its commercial history were discussed by Bishop White in his final lecture of the season in the Museum Theatre on Friday. Assisting him was Miss Helen Fernald, of the School of Chinese Studies.

Miss Fernald, in describing the geography of China, pointed out that because of the Tibetan plateau on the south, and the desert land and steppes on the north, there has been a continual movement of migration and trade from west to east.

The first trade routes were utilized by Alexander the Great. These routes were on the southern and northern borders of the Gobi desert, where scattered oases offered protection from the heat of the desert. Because of the aridity of the southern route, only the northern one is now used, said Miss Fernald.

In speaking of the people who came over the trade routes, Bishop White said: "Although the Chinese were isolated by geographic location, there were outlets through which cultural influences trickled. These people came, not to conquer but with a definite mission in mind."

Bishop White told of the reports of envoys regarding copper coins bearing the head of the Emperor. He also showed a slide of a similar coin found in China bearing a strange untraceable inscription.

In the third century B.C., approximately nine-tenths of the people in China were not Chinese, stated Bishop White. There were traders, conjurers, missionaries, monks, bishops, and clergymen. The result, he said, is reproduced in figures buried in tombs. The figures were glazed and represented warriors, musicians, dancers, Armenians and Ethiopians.

The next lecture in this series will be given on January 5, 1945, and the subject will be "The Chinese Language and Its Literature."

I.D.U. To Meet U. of Syracuse

This winter the University of Toronto will take part in inter-University debating, D. H. W. Kirkwood, president of the Interfaculty Debating Union, told The Varsity yesterday.

The I.D.U. will send a team to debate against the University of Syracuse at the end of January, and two weeks later a team from Syracuse will come to Toronto to debate, he stated.

The Toronto team will be backed by the Students' Administrative Council and its members will represent the University as well as the I.D.U.

Although the topics of the debates are as yet undecided, a tentative list consisting mainly of political subjects has been drawn up for consideration.

Thrilling Games Open Girls Finals

The first round of the University Basketball finals was played last Friday night at O.C.E. gym. In the opening encounter Vic Juniors won a 16-6 victory over Vic Senior A's. The Junior team had a definite height advantage and put it to good use in getting rebounds and tip-offs.

The Seniors sorely missed their steadiest player, Mildred Donaldson, who suffered a head injury the day before and consequently will be lost to them for the remainder of the season. They exhibited a definite uncertainty in their shooting and passing, which probably accounted more than anything else for their defeat.

The score stood at 10-6 for the Juniors at half-time and when the game was resumed at the end of a ten-minute intermission it was definitely the Juniors' night to howl. Although the play was rough and at times bunched, it was fast, clean basketball and exciting to watch.

The Juniors were most accurate on their shots rarely missing a free throw, and when the final whistle blew the tally stood at 16-6 in favor of Vic Juniors. Leone Eunson, Joan Robins, and Jan Young were largely responsible for the Juniors' fine showing, while Joan Chalk, Helen Stewart and Mary Coleman fought a gallant but losing struggle for the Seniors.

In the second tilt, P.H.E. Freshies defeated Meds-S.P.S. 17 to 13 in a very close, thrill-packed match. The whole struggle finally boiled down to a duel between the Barnett twins one of whom was on each team. Meds-S.P.S. had a fine, smooth-running team and played better basketball on the whole than P.H.E., whose passing and general technique lacked such finish.

When it came to guarding, however, the P.H.E. line stood out for their quick interceptions and fast breaks. At half-time the score stood at 12-6 for the Combines but P.H.E. tightened up in the last half and began to slowly pull ahead.

This game was cleaner and not as bunched as the first. The players seemed

The volleyball playdowns have reached the quarter-final stage after last week's many elimination games. The first of these was played Saturday at noon and saw the Sr. S.P.S. team emerge victorious over P.H.E. I in their series with a score of 2-1. They will thus go on to the semi-finals tomorrow, and are the favorites for the championship.

The others to reach the quarter-finals all play today. III Civil meets Jr. U.C. Sr. U.C. play St. Mike's, and Knox A comes up against Jr. S.P.S. Both semi-finals will be played on Tuesday.

The final will be on Thursday, and will be a best three out of five game series instead of the usual two out of three.

Mary Barnett and Natalie Staron turned in excellent performances for Meds-S.P.S., but couldn't quite keep their team ahead. OUR HOCKEY BLUES

Ace Bailey's men showed themselves to have plenty of class in their first workout against outside opposition last Thursday when they walloped Ostranders Jewellers 17-4. That's an eleven goal surplus, and for a team that didn't appear to have anything resembling proper organization in their passing plays, or even know one another by their first names, that's pretty fair hockey. With more practices forthcoming to develop these front line combinations, we should see a really good team take shape in the future.

Some of the fellows who were instrumental in getting this team started were surprisingly not out at the game. Two of these whom we missed in particular were Bryans and Callaghan, both of Meds. Ace Bailey should get the fullest co-operation possible from all of you fellows who are playing for the outfit and also the rest of us among the student body. If this team is to be a successful undertaking, it is going to need all the support we can give it. We want to show the Athletic Directorate that a team such as this can definitely be operated in war years along with other diversified activities, and operated successfully.

By way of the grapevine comes the news that Mel Lawson of Forestry is coming out to practice this Wednesday. He should be still in good condition from his fall performance with the Hamilton Wildcats, so if he hasn't forgotten the hockey he once knew, Ace Bailey will be glad to get a hold of him. Also comes the good word that Bill Wade has either received a change from his E category at the Health Service or a parental consent from home, and was seen at practice last Wednesday. He could very easily help out on defence with the type of hockey he played for U.C.'s Jennings' Cup team of last year. There is also rumored to be a freshman at Trinity who played goal for Trenton R.C.A.F.'s O.H.A. entry a couple of years ago and is just recently back from overseas.

Quite a few men showed up to very good advantage in the game last Thursday. Red Shand and Harvey Bain made an excellent defence combination. Both also proved that they could capably lead the team on the offensive. Bob Murray played well up forward, but did not combine with his line-mates. Hughes was very surprising in the fact that he scored three goals, exhibiting a very accurate shot. He was a defenceman last year for Meds, and this was his first experience as a forward. Ken Anderson played a good game, but lost out on a couple of goals when he was right in on goal missing the net with his shot. Hart went well in the capacity of a rushing defenceman. Lawlor looked to be the best man on the ice with his very smooth style.

The team has a practice this Wednesday at 5:15 p.m. up at the arena. Ace Bailey intends to narrow the roster to three forward lines, two defence combinations and two goalies at this practice, if possible. Then there will be another game with Ostranders on Thursday at 5:30, and the official opening of their makeshift schedule on Friday night at 8:15 with Victory Aircraft. These games will be well worth seeing, so get up to the arena and take a look at your team at one or both of them.

By Janice Murray

Last night as we were vainly racking our brain for the wherewithal to write our daily stint, Lois Dowson called to tell us the reasons for the system used all this year in Basketball. We presented the good side of the argument, which we think outweighs any objections, a couple of days ago, while Peggy showed the opposite opinion, which she felt should also be expressed, in our column. Now Lois clarifies the whole thing as follows:

"The Intramural Basketball schedule that has been operating these last few months was chosen in preference to two other possible schedules — on Oct. 26th by the Basketball club. The schedule the club chose grouped the original 24 entries into 4 leagues of 6 teams each and the leagues were arranged so that the girls of the same academic years were grouped together as much as possible. The club felt that by doing so each scheduled game on the whole would offer more skill, circumstances and interests. At the same meeting the Basketball reps decided to adopt a round robin final series in preference to the elimination method. The main reasons for this choice were that this method allowed the more interesting and skilled teams to participate in more games more fairly than elimination finals would.

"Since time would not permit each team to play its opponents in its league twice, the point system was adopted, whereby a win garnered 3 points, a tie 2 points, a loss 1 point and a default 0. This point scoring system was to be used in the finals, therefore there would be league champions and intramural champions determined by the highest scores in points obtained by the participating teams in the schedule and the round robin final respectively.

"I feel that it is a bit premature to discuss the merits of this system, but since it has been brought to the fore, I would like to mention one point. The Basketball Club arranged games and finals in the interests of the participants and not the spectators. It is true that some 'really tough games' will have been played in the games schedule, however, under the system inaugurated this year, there is just as great a possibility of there being interesting finals for the spectator as there would have been under any other system.

"Frankly, how would you have seeded 23 teams of unknown and largely untried ability which you would have had to do under any other system of scheduling under our conditions? Would your method of seeding necessarily have brought the best spectator-games to the finals? We wonder.

"Well, the Basketball Club tried their best to give the best to all. We would appreciate fair and constructive criticism from everyone. So gals, come out to the finals at Hart House this Tuesday and Thursday. The remaining games of the final schedule are as follows: Tuesday, Dec. 12 at 7:30, Meds-S.P.S. vs Vic I; at 8:30, P.H.E. Fr. vs Vic A; Thursday, Dec. 14 at 7:30, Meds-S.P.S. vs Vic A; at 8:30, P.H.E. Fr. vs Vic II. Remember these games are at Hart House."

AGAIN US

Well this seems to answer everything. On our part we again congratulate Lois and the Basketball Club on a hard job well done. We hope that all the sports clubs which have yet to run off their schedules do them as efficiently.

And in the inter-year games held by the Royal College, U.C. Freshies defeated U.C. II 17-13, in a fast hard-fought tussle.

Whether there will be any more to this series we don't know, but if it is an elimination bout, it seems to leave the Freshies holding the bag, and a bag full of laurels, at that!

Any Time's SHOPPING TIME

IT'S NEVER TOO LATE to mend a poor complexion. Go to any beauty specialist and the first thing you'll learn is that cleanliness is the most important factor in keeping a healthy skin. Unfortunately, plain water is not sufficient to keep a face clean in these grimy and smoke-filled Canadian cities in the winter time, and soap is often irritating to a delicate skin. . . . So obviously the thing to do is find a reliable cleansing cream and use it wisely. Du Barry Cleansing Cream is a recognized leader in cleansing creams. Makes a perfect gift, too.

FASHIONLAND is in a holiday mood. . . . Fashionland, that popular Third Floor round-up of fashions at Northway's, where clothes of a Varsity trend are assembled for your approval and quick shopping convenience. Northway's knew what they were about when they decided to collect a group of daytime and evening clothes, "date dresses" and classroom classics, coats both dressed up and casual, millinery as well, all grouped where you can inspect them at your time and leisurely convenience. This time-saver idea adds up to scientific shopping these days when minutes count.

HANDBAGS . . . gloves . . . and a collection of Costume Jewellery straight from New York, the large and gala pieces which dress up a simple basic frock without further trim . . . there's a grand assortment of these perfect gift ideas on Fairweather's Main Floor for your next shopping spree. When it comes to gifts in the tradition of high finesse, Fairweather's are right there in front as always. Fairweather's are going to extra trouble to gift-wrap your gifts on request, too . . . and any girl knows that there's a bit of extra thrill in getting a Fairweather-wrapped gift.

GOING HOME for the holidays is a lot more fun when you can bring along something for the family. The Evangelist Shops are showing a smart little jumper dress that would make a wizard gift for young sister (get one for yourself, too, and play the big and not-so-big sister act. She'd love it). The Evangelist Shops are simply packed with other knock-out numbers in feminine gift ideas. And MEN, remember you'll fall into good hands if you tell your gift responsibilities to one of those well-trained Evangelist salesgirls. They know the gift story from A to Z, and will be sympathetic to your bank-account.

with janice murray

T'other day, in a well-known professor's lecture, the conversation, one-sided as most lecture conversations are, veered to the interesting topic of baby talk. "It is a fact that women are the people who are responsible for children talking baby talk." Rising from her chair in wrath, a female of the species shouted: "No they aren't, or at least er-men are too."

As we always say, a feeble excuse is better than none.

Street cars have provided us with Hithers in the past, and women street-car conductors are favorite sources. On the Yonge car we heard the over-wrought female conductor say: "Front doors out! Please go out the front door." She kept repeating this until some hardy souls, seeing the financial gain of such an idea, started making a be-line for the said front door. Seeing this, she got more excited and really shouted it, until someone told her what she was saying. She blushed charmingly and stuttered that she meant the back door. Near pandemonium resulted, however, and at least ten people escaped into the night without having paid their fare. There is nothing so satisfying as seeing the T.T.C. being done out of their 7 1/2 cents' worth of ill-gotten gains, except, perhaps, doing it yourself.

Oh, to be a serviceman on Sunday!

At a banquet held not so long ago, one of the boys was wearing the King's uniform, enhanced much by a brilliant plaid shirt. The girl next him turned and caught him trying to do up his top button so the beautiful Forestry garment wouldn't show. He apologized for having it on at such a formal affair, but the sweet young thing wouldn't hear any of it. "Oh, don't worry about that," she said soothingly, "I've seen simply everything under those uniforms." Oh, yes, she blushed, and beautifully, too.

Culled from the Trinity College Dublin's College Miscellany is the following: Look here you chaps, said St-k, I can't stand your feeble jokes, And I'd like to have the fact more widely known.

For I hear somebody stated That when I was vaccinated They used a needle from a gramophone.

Yet I think you will agree Whether true or false this be The error made had no effect on me.

And Freshies always seem to make Hithers. For instance, there was the Freshie who attended a Fourth Year Honor English lecture, given by one of the more humorous and crusty professors of this institution. At the end of the lecture, the Freshie whipped up to the prof. and said, archly: "Oh, Professor —, your lecture was wonderful. I understood every word of it, and I'm only a Freshie, too."

"And why not?" retorted the savant. "It was in English, wasn't it?"

And one of the most tantalizing and speculation-arousing things that we have seen was the sign announcing to all the world that this was the T.T.C. Traffic Improvement Plan, and that traffic would be re-routed into, of all places, WHITNEY HALL. We suppose that there are some people who would follow this ill-advised and risky plan. Engineers, we deplore 'em.

Fauré's Piano Quartet in C minor, was the most valuable composition of the program in which the instrumentalists also reached their highest level of performance. The pianist, Sylvia Kamin, deserved special praise. From what we might almost call "program music" we abruptly entered the realm of pure and abstract music. The vibrating lightness of the Scherzo is an intriguing introduction to the lyrical beauty of the Adagio which ends on a note of calm, restrained and classical in the true sense of the word. The mark of a most refined and self-critical musicianship is apparent throughout. The final Adagio is done in the same manner, impersonal, abstract and in no way attempting to employ music for painting images. Both from the point of view of performance as well as that of musical creativeness, this work was the most impeccable and a fitting conclusion of a memorable afternoon.

ERIC KRUH

Velvet Glove

Wynilwood Concert

The well-known concert-pianist, Mr. Alberto Guerrero, was the feature artist of the Wynilwood musicale last night. Mr. Guerrero chose to open the program with the Weber Sonata in C major. The second movement revealed a great depth of tone quality and feeling. A delightful contrast was supplied by the third movement with its graceful brilliancy. A sparkling Moto Perpetuo, showing off the artist's flawless technique, as well as the unevenness of the piano's action, was an impressive finale. The second portion of the program consisted of three compositions of the 17th century French composer, Couperin.

The first two, Gavotte and Les Borricades Mysterieuses, were played in a lilting harpsichord style while Passe-caille with its interesting chord structure supplied a fitting contrast.

The Liszt group showed that Mr. Guerrero has an iron hand under his velvet glove. Terrific facts of technical virtuosity were masked under an amazingly smooth exterior. The Etude in F minor with its shimmering beauty, and the Poème Op. 10, No. 3 in Andante and Allegretto, are two examples of this.

Mr. Guerrero's aptitude for portraying subtle rhythms was shown to best advantage in the last portion of the program. The graceful Chopin Mazurka in C sharp minor with all its distinctive Polish sentiment, was the highlight of the evening. The Maiden and the Nightingale, by Granados with its pulsating exotism, brought a highly interesting and delightful evening to a close, leaving the audience with the desire to hear much more of Mr. Guerrero.

London—(CUP)—Last Sunday, Col. Henry Cockshutt, 76, one of Canada's leading industrialists, former Chancellor of the University of Western Ontario, and Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, died.

Marquee says "Lost in a Harem," but this could be "Buck Privates" or any one of the any other dozen-odd Abbott and Costello productions. It contains all the ingredients of their former attempts, "A HAREM" plus the added attractions of beavies of Hollywood chorines in flowing pantaloons, Jimmy Dorsey's band—all hypnotized—a maniac who adds to the complications by going berserk at the mention of Pocemoco, site of a past murder.

Worthy of mention is a new routine consisting of an imaginary Mike, his home and furnishings, with sound effects. Laughs are, as usual, provided by the antics and facial expressions of Abbott's round stooge.

Better than some, but still not up to the standard set by their first picture, the movie lopes along at an adequate rate, unhampered by plot. There is much eye-catching scenery, per chance left over from other M.G.M. extravaganzas as some of it looks vaguely familiar.

The rest of the bill features Southern United States, with scenery and melodic backgrounds. We only wish that Carlos would hurry home.

First Prize Essay

St. Jean Berchmans

By John Speers, IV Victoria

The parish of St. Jean Berchmans is not uniquely different from other working-class districts of Montreal, except perhaps in its newness; but to the several blocks of homes that are established within its borders, it could be mistaken for no other place in the world. It is neither rich nor poor, although there are a few who have neared the first state, and many who hover on the brink of the latter. No one would call it a slum, yet it is often as inadequately housed, and almost as unbeautiful of aspect. The three-storey tenements stretch down the Boulevard as like as castings from a mould, smart, specious blocks of architectural pretense, neither warm nor light enough within. However, the brick front is as brave as it is false, and the wrought-iron outer stair-cases are elegant enough, twisting up to the higher storeys, one to one side and one to another, like great Victorian mustachios.

At the corners of the Boulevard and the car-lines are the shops, gay with the display of wares. M. Lemieux, the tailor, lives in an endless deluge of textile and thread, for the parishioners have the flair for dress that is proverbial with their race and their city. M. Hebert has a hardware store, a universally prosaic place; a drug-store, a bank, and several grocery-stores complete the business section. Perhaps we should mention M. Bousquet, the florid-faced barber, a smiling, bowing, hand-rubbing marvel of genial service, perennially pink at the broad taunts of the clients, for he has only one child, and that a daughter. There is, of course, M. Collin, the shoe-maker, who is a first-rate worker—when he is sober. He is not, they will tell you, "bon catholique," and people begin to take their shoes further afield. Meanwhile Mme. Collin goes to St. Joseph's shrine on the mountain to pray, for Frère André has secured the liberty of many slaves to "la boisson."

Overshadowing all, serene and vigilant like a mother watching her children at play, stands l'Eglise St. Jean Berchmans. She is beautiful in her towering maternity, a figure of holy amplitude, like a Titian madonna. "Hæc est domus Dei," her portals announce, and the great steps are seldom empty of those who go in and out of this holy Home of their own making. The parish is far from a mere section on a map; it is a living thing, and this its throbbing heart; here are embedded the roots that steady the sapling organism in the levelling winds of the hour.

The men of the parish are mechanics, artisans, laborers, employed for the most part in railway shops or textile factories, and earning wages by no means commensurate with their large families. Only one or two have found advancement: they grumble much about the monopoly exerted by the English on the better positions.

"Some day we shall change that," observes M. Dauth with a grimly eschatological air.

Meanwhile young Georges must quit school to work at his father's side, but since he is quite happy to do so, and no one thinks it a pity, it is only the stranger who finds something tragic in the sight of the diminutive Georges, weighed down with lunch-pail, starting for work in the early morning. Curiously enough, since the girls have less earning power, and are left at school long enough to have some convent training, they are better educated than the men; a stranger to the charming vagaries of the broad patois will find that he can understand the housewife better than her husband, for she has learned a polished speech at school. Often enough the merchants of the parish depend on their convent-trained wives to write their bills, pen their letters, and keep the books: their own contribution is a native shrewdness which schooling might temper but could scarcely make sharper.

One cannot think of the parish without immediately seeing children. A picture of St. Jean Berchmans without them would be like a picture of a tree without its foliage. They are very like all children, I suppose; but certainly there are more of them, and are they not just a little more curious, more mischievous, more restless and merry than any others? There is little Irene, for instance, full of diablerie, the terror of the street, though to be sure her twin, "Tit-Claud," is as innocuous a lad as one could find. There is Jacques, who served a brief term as errand-boy for the tailor, until the clients complained of dust-trodden snits and incorrect change. But there are the steady ones, too—Laurent, who sells La Patrie with a sturdy acumen; Jean-Claud, called Paquet because of his chubbiness, who kept his father's store for several days when he was ill; Michèle, who minds the small fry of the vicinity with an astounding devotion, and dreams of becoming a "maitresse d'école"; Nicole, who to even her devout parents is inordinately pious, and who lives on a diet of extra prayers and voluntary offices seldom indulged in by children of her age—Nicole will, she hopes, join an order when she grows up.

They are all too fond of "les chicanes," which they inflict on the neighborhood without respect of persons; but there is an added tang to the trick on the English, because their anger is so incoherent. A stone crashes through Mrs. Parsons' window. A furious woman in curl-papers appears at the door, uttering what the children guess to be curses. A dialogue ensues, in which, although each side speaks in its own tongue, there is a Pentecostal grasp of the other's meaning.

"You filthy little beggars, who threw that stone?"
The children look at one another with mock-bewilderment.
"WHO THREW THAT ROCK?"
"Sais pas, moé," mutters one of the boys with a haussement of the shoulders.

"If you don't own up, you little French villains, I'll phone the police!"

Police is an electrifying word in any language. The children become voluble and gesticulate frantically.

C'est pas nous autres! C'est les blokes qui restent là-bas!"

The blokes to these children are any folks who speak English; all other Europeans fall under the facile classification of pollocks. There are frequent tiffs between the canadiens and the blokes, although in twos and threes they get along perfectly. Perhaps there is just a tendency in the 'tits-Canadiens to succumb easily to mob-spirit;

SURVIVAL

WILFRED R. BENS, IV Trinity

First Prize Serious Verse

Europe, 1944

By Margaret R. Gould, Graduate Studies

Held by the street's fantastic irregular windings
Weighed to the curve with the turn of the previous centuries
Sensing the shadows dissolve into slant-rising mist

Music is made for the dance by the creaking of wagons
The stage is set, with snow the theatrical backdrop;
But the children, their parts only partially learned, and forgetful, Respond not.

Silent and sibilant-footed they move in the shadows
Close to the walls where the old men, bitterly jibing, Tremble with cold, jealous, and scarcely distinguishing Phantom from youth.

The one in the buttress of houses stands in the driven
Angle of snow, bone-hands pendant, lips barely twitching
Yet at his whisper the children move to the cart tracks
Unseeing:—

Siberia, Africa, Spain, cold-hearted America,
Lapland and Iceland and Norway, yellow Arabia,
Persia, Thibet, Samarkand, melt into fragments,
Are lost,

And the world is a single snow track, shadow deserted—
Space and night and the distant creaking of carts—
And the dancers dissemble (unlovely, grotesque in the dusk)
Dead patterns.

The figure lowers his hands, and the children, still silent
Creep to the walls where the old men, grouping their heads
Greet them and reach probing hands and whisper unheeded
Their sorrows.

All the street darkens, the children in crouched immobility
Look toward the one who in darkness has impaled the pattern
Feeling his absence; yet have they never quite realized
His presence.

First Prize Short Story

Sergeant Peter

By Vincent Tovell, IV University College

It was cold. The fog rolled in from the sea in huge white clouds and the night air was opalescent with it. The rows of lights along the city streets were hardly visible through the thickness of it.

The lamp by the window in Sergeant Peter's room at the top of Mrs. Razaeki's boarding house seemed even dimmer than usual that night. The sharpness of the bright cone it usually cast across the bed and onto the floor mat by the bed was blurred for once; in fact the whole of the little gabled room was misty, as greyed and cheerless as the air.

Sergeant Peter actually felt the weather about him more than he saw it. He was in that state when we are most keenly sensitive to all the atmosphere around us, feeling with a special insight the forces that add up to a mood; he could for nothing in the world have described the scene in words. He was lost entirely in a mood within himself. Perhaps Sergeant Peter was merely drunk. The bottle on the table was, and he regretted it, not as full as it had been earlier that evening. But then the alcohol may have had very little to do with it. Perhaps it was the fog, and the ship's sirens coming to him across the bay, deep and monotonous, that reminded him each minute, like the staccato of his clock, of the morning and the sailing of the convoy. Perhaps it was the long evening he had been forced to spend alone in this room, listening expectantly to every ring of the telephone three flights below, which had made him so alert now and had brought him to such a trembling state of sensory awareness.

The call had been due at nine-thirty, she had specified the time as the only hour suiting her plans, but even before this time he had gone to the balustrade at each ring and peered down, thinking to see Mrs. Razaeki start up for him. He hated to drag himself back into the room afterwards lest it ring again and he lose a moment of the time allotted. Before nine-thirty he had sat with his great coat on to keep warm, huddled on the edge of the bed, waiting, as eagerly as a child for a party; his mind was filled with the words he would try to say and he planned the length of each thought he would express. And after the call did not come, he whiled away some time with an old magazine, but before long the words on the page danced before his eyes and would not form into lines, and the sound of the ticking clock began to needle into him, and every pretty face he looked at on the paper crowded his mind with one much sharper image, and he longed for the ring of the bell.

At last, after flinging the pages aside, he tried to release his energies by pacing the room, as far as the walls would allow, and then he paced the hallway until he remembered his portable radio and switched that on for diversion. He listened to a bad play about soldiers in love and he turned over to some music that soothed and excited him in turn. He tried sitting on the bed and letting his hands and feet beat out the rhythm, and all the time he stared at the clock; then gradually his eyes began to roam around the room, idly, as the tempo of the dance increased and his body began to respond to it; thoughts that made him wince began pushing up through the whirl of his mind and he stood up, angrily and fast. He took the bottle and unscrewed it; he took a tumbler down from the shelf. This was no place for him to spend his last night, he muttered, in a cheap room, alone; he needed something warm in him, to drive the damp fog out of him. The drink burned with a pleasant thrill as it ran down to his stomach. He took a deep breath and poured another; his nerve began to stiffen, and he sat down at the table to write her a letter.

The words would not come easily to him, and he would stop at every sound he mistook for the bell, listen, and each time more bitterly, pour himself another drink. After several attempts his mind rebelled at composition altogether and he tore up the sheets, swept them with one stroke into the basket. He was very restless, and his mind was beginning to be released from the grip that had held and restricted it all evening. His nerves at last were responding to the fire that was blazing up inside him and he felt a tremendous surge of furious energy run through his body. He stood, flung open the window and let the fog sweep in over him; at first he shuddered from the wind that was with it but the fire in his system only blazed up with the shock, and he threw the greatcoat off his shoulders. He turned and walked quickly, firmly to the radio. The sharp throbs of the jazz rhythms, switched up full, filled the room and drove at his senses. His mind, blurred with a madstrom of memories and longings, spun with his body, and quite intoxicated now with a fever of despair and rage he swept up his coat as a dancing partner and flung himself across the tiny room with it tight in his arms, from bed to bureau, into the closet and over to the window, in a crazy drooping dance that whirled faster and faster until he knocked against the bureau, spun, and dropped in a heap laughing and choking a little.

He struggled dizzily to his feet, sobered for a moment by the fall; he looked about him, and seeing the coat on the floor he lifted it with mock ceremony, tenderly, and stepped out across the room in a slow and rhythmic sweep. He stopped at the table and poured out a stiff drink, draining the bottle, and downed it in a single gulp. And standing a little shakily, he listened a moment to the music, took in the rhythm of it and resumed the dance, but more slowly now, more easily, as it in a pleasant stupor; the alcohol was beginning to dull him, and Sergeant Peter's body was relaxing from the tension of the long vigil. His mind had ceased at last to kaleidoscope memories that had tortured him, and had focussed now finally on one single thought. An odd wistful smile played about his lips as he moved about the room, and his eyes had a stare, as though fixed on something far away, far within his memory. The eyes responded in no way, for instance, to a ring of a bell downstairs which could be heard during a pause of the music. Indeed they did not even appear to notice when the music stopped altogether and a silken voice began bringing news of the outside war to Sergeant Peter.

Mrs. Razaeki's knock was repeated three times, loudly, before she opened the door, looked in, ran to the figure crumpled over his greatcoat across the bed, and shrugged her shoulders. She was careful to close the window and shut off the radio before she pounded, muttering, down the three flights again to inform the long-distance operator that, as she put it: the party wasn't hit to take no calls from nobody nowhere tonight.

Christmas

It is a common lament to deprecate the degeneracy of the times. Since the dawn of civilization, former prototypes have been held up to succeeding generations as symbols of ineffable attainments. Year by year we grieve over the gradual disappearance of spirited wassails and lusty carols. "We can banish the feeling that something has been lost of the old delight in life, the old buoyancy and freshness that possessed men's hearts before the Puritans gained mastery," reflects A. H. Bullen at the end of the nineteenth century. A similar lack of zest is noted by G. K. Chesterton when he writes: "Every Christmas I ponder the problem of why old Christmas carols are so good when most modern Christmas hymns are so bad."

It is natural that a decline in the spirit of society should reflect itself in its music. Some students might argue on the relativity of Christmas sentiment; and it is such arguments that are detrimental to any form of holiday celebration. When the specific Christmas tradition was accepted as a series of natural events, the revellers derived a more sincere and keener enjoyment than the present generation appears to obtain. We have become too aware of Christmas and its concomitants, with the result that we are either cynical or we attempt with pathetic care to imitate former customs.

Christmas, if you will, is an excellent form of escapism, as well as a most enjoyable interlude. It should be participated in naturally rather than superficially.

Living Memorials

Recent preparations in some universities for the erection of memorials when peace is declared brings up the question of the practicability of such monuments. Undoubtedly they would enhance the campus to no small degree, but in view of post-war circumstances it would seem much more appropriate if memorials in the form of scholarships were donated. In this way the memory of those who have died would be perpetuated in the aid given to deserving students of future generations. Education lost in six or more years of war would be again planted and ensured by the recipients of such benefits.

At the University the Alumni Federation has a similar scheme in effect. In some cases the relation of the applicant to people who have served in the war is taken into consideration by the Alumnae. Such an allowance is extremely far-seeing. Many of the men who have fought in this war will feel themselves too old to attend university but will certainly desire their children to receive the education which they have lacked. The debt owing to both the living and the dead who have fought for their country is something which outweighs the single merit offered by memorial buildings. Returning men and their relatives are deserving of a symbol of appreciation somewhat more concrete than the erection of mere edifices . . . if any foundations are to be laid, let them be mental rather than material.

Literary Issue

The verdant ink of today's paper heralds the traditional Christmas Literary Issue of The Varsity, the last of the fall term. Publication of literary contributions to the issue is limited by lack of space to first and second prize winners. Save for one extra poetry item, it was found necessary to eliminate all honorable mentions, though this resulted in the elimination of a few prose contributions of outstanding merit.

We are proud to be able to present an issue of The Varsity today, and an eight page issue at that, when we hear that the downtown evening press ran into difficulties, and the Globe and Mail has decided not to publish any issue at all for this Wednesday morning. This year's Green Issue has as a background what is described in first reports as the worst snowstorm in Toronto's history. Even though all University buildings are to be closed for the day because of the depth of the snow, it gives us a feeling of satisfaction that we have been able to meet the deadline for this issue in spite of the serious difficulties the storm has caused to all those who play a part in the production of The Varsity.

ART MUSIC Drama

Prodigies Conservatory Concert

An outstanding treat was offered to music-lovers on Monday night when students of Jack Montague and Boris Berlin gave a recital at the Conservatory Concert Hall. Purcell's Dramatic Suite was well chosen as the opening piece of the program, and showed to great advantage the tonal power of the string orchestra as well as the admirable control and understanding of both conductor and orchestra.

The most outstanding and noteworthy part of the program were two pieces by the conductor, George Hurst. The Ode for String Orchestra is novel and exciting alike in style. Although as yet somewhat influenced by the work of Shostakovich, this young 19-year-old British war guest composer, gives a high promise of brilliant future career. His compositions show signs of great originality and wealth of new melodies and harmonies. So successful was his Concertino for Piano and String Orchestra, a world premiere performance for which Hurst himself played the piano, that the audience requested it as an encore. Its particular charm lies in the fast ever-changing repartee between piano and strings.

We hope for more recitals of this kind—filled with sincerity, naturalness, and enthusiasm—where we can hear and enjoy the composers and artists of tomorrow.

MARTIN OSTWALD

Romantic Massey Hall

Conventional Toronto audiences lost all their stuffy inhibitions at last night's concert of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. Nathan Milstein, who performed the Goldmark Violin Concerto with the orchestra, was given such a rousing ovation as has seldom been heard here. He displayed a depth of feeling and technical skill which kept our attention rivetted on the performer from start to finish, although, unfortunately, the orchestra seemed to drag slightly behind the soloist almost all the way through.

The popular Andante was extremely eloquent, while the difficult and brilliant cadenza of the last movement proved the real test of his technical ability. (Continued on page 7)

Scrounge's Christmas

Old Marley was dead as a door-nail.
There was no doubt whatever about that.

Door-nail

Scrounge was sure of it. Hadn't he with his own hand pounded Marley over the head with the Warden's cuspidor, and hurled his dented carcass into a yielding snowdrift, heaped high by yesterday's screaming gale?

Screaming Gael

Yet, there was Marley, clanking a long, heavy chain of grocery stores behind him. "Marley," Scrounge gasped, "in an ectoplasmic zoot suit!"

"Zounds!" he rasped. For now he knew that Marley had come to life as an inhabitant of the campus Alaskan Ghost-Town. Scrounge was a lemon-squeezing, peanut-pushing, monkey-wrenching, fingernail-parring, permit-clutching old sinner, and he gaped at the apparition in dismay.

"Scrounge," it whooshed, "tonight you will be visited by three spirits." He then took his departure, not wishing to leave it behind.

That night Scrounge saw Marley's face on the elevator-button when he went to his flat, and there in his best chairs, smoking his best cigars and Swift's hams, sat the Ghosts of Christmas Past, Christmas Present, and Christmas Subjunctive.

In the morning he was so excited he couldn't get his girdle on straight. He ran to the window, opened it, and threw out his chest of drawers, and yelled to a passing boy to retrieve it.

"What day is this, my fine fellow?" he called.

"Today?" cried the boy, "why, Christmas Day, you dull toot."

"Why, the Spirits have done it all in one night!" exclaimed Scrounge.

"You been drinking, too?" asked the boy.

"An excellent boy! A most intelligent boy!" cried Scrounge.

"Will you go down to the drug-store and get me that turkey in the window?" (Continued on page 7)

Any Time's SHOPPING TIME

THERE ARE DISTINCT ADVANTAGES to having a basic haircut which is tapered to round out the ugly angles which sometimes develop in the best managed tresses no matter how you wear your hair, waved, end-curler or straight. Such a foundation-cut gives you the free-and-easy unconsciousness which goes with the knowledge that your hair can't fall into unbecoming lines. It is on this principle that the famous "Antoine" haircuts have been developed. Available in Toronto only at Holt-Remfrew's.

AND IF THIS WEATHER has not convinced you that Christmas is more than imminent, nothing can. The Evangelical Shops as a result are packing in the customers at a greater rate than ever, which means while stocks hold out is the time to gift-shop, and that's no idle suggestion. Many a well-meaning customer has put off the compiling of gift lists until the last week in other Christmas seasons, and more than likely has got away with it, but, boys and girls, this season is another story. We don't want to panic you, but if it's top-ranking accessories you're after, for a girl with particular tastes, better snap 'em up quickly at your nearest Evangelical.

This no doubt explains why there is more Sloan's being manufactured in Canada than any other liniment.

ON THE SUBJECT of holiday ski parties, another invaluable item for your kit is a jar of Du Barry Cleansing Cream. Softly caressing after the wind has whipped your complexion into that danger zone which is close to chapping, you can count on Du Barry as beauty insurance and comfort-insurance. Its exquisite fresh fragrance will give you just the "lift" you want when you relax after a few hours' hard ski run. Remember when you sit close to an open

Warden to be Host At Yuletide Dinner

The Warden of Hart House has announced that he will again give his dinner for all who cannot go home for any part of the Christmas holidays, owing to distance or for any other reason. The dinner will take place at 6:30 on Tuesday, Dec. 19, in the Great Hall of Hart House.

Cards have been sent out to all those who live in distant parts of Canada and further afield throughout the Dominion or overseas. Any member who is eligible to attend is asked to sign the list in the Warden's office and obtain his ticket as soon as possible.

This is the nineteenth year that the dinner has been given by the Warden.

During his absence in England for the past four years, the Acting Warden, Mr. Gilley, carried on this tradition for Mr. Bickersteth. All those present are the personal guests of the Warden and receive a small gift from him.

Skater's Waltz Is Now in Season

The blades will soon begin to glitter at Varsity Stadium, especially if the cold weather keeps up.

Mr. G. Ross Workman, manager of the University Stadium Rink, has informed The Varsity that, weather permitting, students will enjoy skating privileges at Varsity Stadium every Monday, Tuesday and Thursday evening on presentation of their registration cards with the athletic portion attached. Mr. Workman said that there will be free admission also on Saturday mornings.

Last year, the student attendance reached a high of approximately one-sixth of the total attendance and it is hoped that this year the mark will be even greater, he said.

Virginia Russell, III P.H.E., is director of the Junior session for 1944-45 of the University Skating Club. The club, she said, is open for membership to all University of Toronto students and graduates on payment of a very nominal sum.

Activity really buzzes once the season gets started, she said. This year there is planned a carnival, from which numbers will be chosen to take part in the Optimist Club Carnival.

The University Skating Club arranges parties, such as one planned for St. Valentine's Day. At these parties are featured several guest artists.

Slipping into its galoshes and buttoning up its brave green-lined macintosh against the December snow-flurries, this column wends its way presswoods for the last time in 1944. The machinations of Etain ("Kuf Kool") Shridi, The Varsity's venerable and unlettered flintopist, have finally landed this newspaper into the bitline. "WHERE SHE CAN REALLY GO TO WORK."

The wind blows plenty of things away these days, including muffled words of command. A platoon was manoeuvring about the back campus one gaw and rusty day, two corporals strung out in advance and the mere recruits straggling along behind into the storm in column of route. The lead corporal was barking step in his throatiest manner the second obeying diligently; and when the officer

Cash and Carry Without Interest; S.A.C. Loan Fund Open to Needy

It was announced in Monday's Varsity that application can now be made for the S.A.C. Undergraduate Loan Fund. Loans will not be available till January as the purpose of the fund is not to finance the school year but to give emergency help to students who are only lacking some of the funds. The maximum loan is limited to one hundred dollars.

The loan fund was started in 1932 due to a surplus in the S.A.C. funds. The fund at the present time is about $8,000 ($3,800 of which is out on loan). The student can make his own terms as to how he will pay back the loan. There is no interest charged to the undergraduate.

When the loan was instigated the financial condition of the average student was much worse than it is today. In the middle thirties jobs in the summer were not as lucrative as they are today. At that time the loan was $10,000.

The S.A.C. loan is not based on scholastic merit (as our present government loans are) but on neediness of the student. The loan is open to students in their last two years only—by this time they have proven themselves hard workers.

Campus Impenetrable from Drifting Snow: All Lectures Cancelled by Assistant Registrar Laidlaw; Hart House Dining Hall and University Lecture Rooms are Almost Deserted; Residences Struggling Along with No Food Deliveries

RESORT TO SKIS AND SNOWSHOES

Snow, hurled and pounded into six-foot drifts by stinging northern blasts, smothered a barren campus Tuesday morning and transformed the University into an Alaskan ghost-town.

Encountering what is described as the fiercest snowstorm in Toronto's history, a few battered handfuls of bedraggled students, who had not heard eight o'clock radio flashes announcing the cancellation of all classes, stumbled blindly through disheartening blizzards to non-existent lectures.

Dense drifts clogged the pathways across the campus; buried long flights of steps; and were packed high against the locked doors of University buildings, filling in again almost instantaneously the footsteps of struggling students and the puny scrapings of the Superintendent's snow-shovelling staff.

All through the day the snowflakes spiraled.

In wilder moments during early morning, they spanked and lashed against roofs of the colleges; swirled white pools across the back and front camp; waltzed and tangoed around the point of University College belfry. In lighter furies during noontime they traced thin spider webs against Memorial Tower; powdered noses of statues in Queen's Park; and packed false cotton wigs on top of each campus street lamp.

University administration was paralyzed. Residences, like isolated igloos in a Jack London thriller, were shut off from food supplies. The Hart House staff, sliced in two, bravely tried to carry on. Simcoe Hall, devoid of switchboard operators, forced the campus into telephonic silence.

President Snowbound

Initial hint of action came from Assistant Registrar A. T. Laidlaw, who in the absence of President H. J. Cody and Registrar A. B. Fennell, authorized radio stations to announce cancellation of lectures in bulletins throughout the early morning.

Reason for the President's absence was that he was stuck for three hours in a train compartment just a mile out of Union Station. Returning from a trip to Ottawa, the President told The Varsity that snowed-in switches stalled his train from 7:00 a.m. to 10:40 a.m. on the outskirts of Toronto.

"As soon as the train pulled into the station I telephoned and was relieved to find that Mr. Laidlaw had cancelled classes," Pres. Cody said. "I quite approve."

He told how he and his wife had breakfasted at a downtown hotel and then piled into a packed Yonge Street trolley which took them as far as Bloor Street. From there they floundered through pillars of snow to their home at 603 Jarvis Street.

Registrar Fennell was caught with his fires out. He told The Varsity that he spent the morning nourishing his spent furnace to keep him warm. Then, leaving his Mary Street apartment, he clawed his way through snow drifts, as did others, and was pleased on arriving here to find that Mr. Laidlaw had all madder hand.

Vain attempts to clear paths were made by A. D. LePan, Superintendent of Grounds, with a crew of janitors and two recruited students, found that a shovelful of snow hoisted away was refilled a half-hour later with a drift which covered double that area.

Shovellers Recruited

Students wishing to earn pin money for the holidays are urged to report today and Thursday to the Ground Shop (across from the University Press) where shovels will be provided, Mr. LePan said. "If the students don't help us out," he said, "they'll be walking around the campus the rest of this week with snow up to the tops of their necks."

When telephoned at her Queen's Park home, Mrs. Sidney Smith reported that she had sent the President-elect off at 9:30 a.m. into the howling blizzard, gashed, muffled, and with her blessing: "I do hope he will get there safely," she added.

His arrival, intact, was later con-

CLOSED DOWN

The entire University organization, with the exception of Hart House, will be closed down all day today (Wednesday), President H. J. Cody announced Tuesday night.

Carried by CBL news flashes at 8:30 Tuesday evening, the announcement stated that all University buildings, including the Ontario College of Education, the University of Toronto Schools, and the Royal Ontario Museum, would be closed down for the day, owing to the paralysis of communications in the wake of Tuesday's snowstorm.

It was stated that a further announcement would be made Wednesday night.

Stornbound at improvised headquarters in his Strathallen Blvd. home, Lt.-Col. H. H. Madill, Officer Commanding the C.O.T.C. battalions, issued a communique revealing that Tuesday's drills were suspended, as was the C.O.T.C. mess dinner, originally slated for 7:00 p.m.

Since bus service was snarled and his garage sealed tight, the Colonel said, he had been forced to keep the telephone wires hot all morning issuing army orders to the St. George Street orderly room.

The only snag in this orders-by-proxy scheme came, he said, when a batch of papers required his signature. Rising heroically to this emergency was Sgt. Batchelor, who delivered the goods to the Colonel's house several miles north by skis.

Traditions Shattered

Two traditions were shattered yesterday. The first precedent occurred in the late morning, when Mac's, the famed campus sweetery, closed down for the first time in its history. The popular tuck shop made a feeble stand to keep going at 9:00 a.m., when only one waitress turned up to dish out food. But two hours later even she threw up the towel, and a sign appeared in the window announcing brusquely: "Shut for the day—no more food left."

The second starter occurred at noontime, when Hart House routine was so rocked to its foundations that the orthodox, chastely-typewritten menu was replaced with a pencilled scribble.

"I'm not saying we even have this stuff," warned the head table waitress. "I'll have to go and look."

The effect of this startling break with tradition was softened, however, since it was observed only by three lone Varsity staffers and the Warden, who regaled them for two and a half hours with anecdotes, and remarked that the handwritten menu was "in the style of the best French restaurants."

"It even looks like the same handwriting," commented Mr. Bickersteth as he peered at the indecipherable script.

Hart House Slowed Up

Amongst other cogs in the Hart House machine affected by the storm were the Tuck Shop which, owing to the non-appearance of the baker, had nothing to offer but a few of yesterday's sandwiches; the Dining Hall service, which served less than half the usual number of dinners with a half-strength staff; and the Barber Shop, whose quartette

Have a "Coke"= Merry Christmas

...adding refreshment to holiday cheer

The spirit of Christmas is friendliness—a time to get together with friends and family. There's a whole story of hospitality in the three words Have a "Coke"—three words that express a friendly spirit the whole year 'round. Yes, Coca-Cola and the pause that refreshes are everyday symbols of a way of living that takes friendliness for granted.

 A la mode de chez nous?"

The older children like juke-box songs, too, and sing them lustily without the remotest idea of the sense. Flocks of happy youngsters skip down the Boulevard, sweetly carolling:

"Drinka beerna cabaret, hava lossa fu . . ."

The older folk are quite as fond of music as their children, and surprisingly catholic in their tastes—opera, symphony, jazz delight them equally. Here as always the church has formed and developed their taste; many of them have sung in the choir, and know from proximity the wonder of the great organ and the magic of the liturgical music. They are ambitious, musically, for their children, and most of the children are taking lessons. Here the indulgence of parents and the cheapening of taste has combined in many cases to result in "des leçons populaires" where the child learns to read only the ukelele signs on sheet-music, and the parent realizes too late that the child cannot play anything for his pains.

There is no movie problem in the parish, for the simple reason that children are forbidden to attend until they are sixteen. It is a day to remember when occasionally this rule is lifted temporarily; the children have been living for months in the memories of "Blanche Neige et les Sept Nains." However, the young people are Hollywood addicts, and scorn the "vieux jeu" Parisian movies that have been knocking around since before 1940. Even less popular are American pictures with French dialogue; beyond the discrepancies of lip move-

City Planning

By Graham Cotter, III Trinity

I was a stranger to Toronto when I first landed in its large university, and so only gradually picked up a knowledge of the city's boundaries and its population. But even a very limited scanning of periodicals and newspapers served to give a stranger a few opinions. Torontonians generally seemed firmly convinced that it was the handsomest abode of the most blessed of created men. Visitors seemed convinced that it was dull beyond endurance. Its smugness expressed itself in the self-applied term "Queen City," but cosmopolitan Montreal, according to an anti-vice column in the Globe and Mail, seemed convinced that the proper term for it was "Prostitute City." All of which interesting views, coupled with the notorious Toronto Sunday and the city's vaunted High Toryism, seemed very extreme to this particular stranger, who actually found human beings within the limits. It was not hard to realize that, in civic issues, the right to make a Mountain out of a Molehill was not entirely reserved for Hamilton.

When we come to live in Toronto for a while, when we have taken long walks through it by night and by day, have sat in its movie palaces and put up with its jammed street-cars, we pride ourselves that we know it. So it was with me. In time I wandered through suburban mansions, vast halls in Forest Hill, bourgeois halls in North Toronto, kitchen parlors on Borden Street and shanties on Alpha Avenue. I also struck, or was struck by, the downtown area. I went to the only worthwhile theatre beside smoky railyards and walked Queen Street with circumspection. I breathed in the poisonous air of the Spadina car, walked through muddy High Park in the spring, and looked at real estate, social conglomerate and slums in East Toronto. It was during these excursions outside the skyward-pointing towers of the campus that I met some of the already mentioned human beings.

I also heard rumors of the Art Gallery, and the City Planning Board. . . .

Perhaps it would be reasonable to suppose that something other than the bricks and mortar of a municipality should be planned. The old towns of England may be clumsily laid out, but they have traditions that give their people good ground for unity. Compared with them, Toronto is well laid out; after all, it has only one Dundas Street. But very little of the city tradition represents even the cumulated tradition of the old city, and of the villages that have been swallowed up in it. Suburbs tremble now lest the leviathan engulf them also. The only solid tradition seems to be business, business centred axially on Yonge Street and the transversals Queen, College, Bloor, St. Clair and Eglinton. Business pushed residential areas out, created new residential areas; business created industry to spot the older areas and blacken our skies.

It would be foolish to dismiss business as a civic nuisance, for it is the life-blood of society in town or country. Within the realm of business relations there is ample opportunity for building community tradition of non-commercial value. But there have been towns even in Canada that have grown up in trade and through business, but also have solid municipal traditions of a more social nature. Toronto should have a communal tradition that represents the fusion of the multifold background of its component races. But no: the social, racial and religious classes have their feast days and their languages and their internal celebrations; and mix only in Business. The question arises—is Toronto one city, or a loose conglomerate who meets only to transact business; the executive and the janitor leave downtown at five o'clock and each might be in the moon until nine o'clock the next morning as far as the other is concerned. They lack common grounds of understanding outside a weekly wage.

A properly developed human community needs some pegs on which to hang its beliefs and ideas, and its communal emotions; it does not hang them on business which is reserved for the bread-basket. One peg is religion; but this community, like most in North America, disagrees within itself about what should be hung on it. Moreover, what religious holidays as celebrated by the majority of citizens are now weighted down with worldly and commercial connotations. Santa Claus guffaws in fifty places at once, because the loudest guffaws bring the most business to his employer. Christmas begins to be revered as the happy anniversary on which children run wild and adults over-eat. Easter is the occasion of more over-eating and bigger tailor's bills. The only solution to this problem that is at all workable is the gradual leavening of all groups with a spirit of fellowship that will make all men respect religious institutions of all kinds.

Happily, there is yet another peg on which to hang our hopes, and here community action can be effective without sectarian strife. This is entertainment. By this we must understand entertainment in which all take part, not negative entertainment. This in simplest form is conversation. We need to talk more; not just to friends, but to strangers. How many strangers chat to each other on the way to business in the street-car? Those who do are the rare human beings I mentioned. Some frowning half-awake citizens loll on the trailer seat and look blankly through each other, going to work as though it were the guillotine; not only should they chat and be pleasant,

There are also the more receptive forms of entertainment, sports, movies, music. For every hundred who watch a rugby game, how many as much as play ping-pong? And how many adults pay attention to athletic games at all? Fewer yet among adults or adolescents make positive use of the ability to entertain on the stage or radio—yet dramatic ability is a gift to many others besides people on Broadway and in Hollywood. It is so much easier to be entertained than to create your own amusement—especially when you have a slovenly mind. How many people develop and use amateur musical talent of any kind? How many married couples have the youthfulness to enjoy a hearty dance?

And then there is the most receptive form of entertainment—drinking. Here Torontonians are most hypocritical. They have a strong suspicion that drinking is wrong; so they invent the myth that in their drinking hours they are really different people. To confirm this, they never drink, but they get drunk.

Is anybody trying to put the pegs of positive entertainment and creative use of leisure before the business-mad public? Fortunately, some people are, but there are not so many as are needed. There are organizations working for the better good of the public mind and spirit, youth, women's, lodge, church, labor, and cultural organizations. There are individuals, journalists, teachers and professors. They work, it is true, against economic conditions that the business world must begin to eliminate; they work against the oddities of human nature and the peculiarities of Toronto nature. They work against black ignorance. They work against problems harder than those the architectural city planners meet, for it is easier to destroy a block of slums than to eradicate the ignorance that permits slums. They can accomplish nothing without response from the whole community.

Response there must be. There must be a master plan for the improvement and healing of citizens' distorted minds; for the Toronto community is not so far gone that it cannot see what is good for it, especially if the emphasis is laid on entertainment of the kind mentioned. Toronto can be a city of broad, clean streets and clear skies; it can also be a community of really united people, with free minds and broad understanding—this if Toronto will only believe in itself as Toronto, not as Forest Hill or Queen Street or the East End; if Torontonians will only hang their beliefs on a few pegs, all for one and one for all. . . .

But, whatever you do about yourself, Toronto, even if you must for generations brag about the Bank of Commerce Building and Casa Loma, don't ever call the Avenue Road declivity a mountain.

The Tiger Lady

By Phyllis Bloom, I Victoria

I
O the Tiger Lady of the Bengalee,
With the hips that swung, and the step so free—
O the glistening gem that shone at her belly,
And the look in her eye that made men jelly—
O the wickedest wight of the genus "She"
Was the Tiger Lady of Bengalee!

II
She danced for a rajah of high degree,
And her skin was as dark as the Jumbah tree,
But a tawny track, like a tiger's spoor
(And it gave fierce heat to her tigrine lure)
Made a streak through the hair of the Bengalee—
Of the lady of sensuality.

III
She would dance the dance of the Thirteen Sins,
And her dance would end when the dawn begins—
She wore golden earrings, and diamond belt,
And her tawny loins bore a tiger's pelt;
And the dance of the Veils was good to see,
Of the Tiger Lady of Bengalee.

IV
They have said: at the moment 'tween dawn and dark,
When the moon was setting, and trees stood stark,
That the tigrine dancer would kneel before
The turban'd rajah on marble floor,
And a wondrous change that was strange to see
Came over the Lady of Bengalee . . .

V
They have said—and I would not vouch it true,
But all Bengal knows it, and so do you—
That the figure crouching against the sky
Was a Bengal tiger with emerald eye—!
But when the dawn mottled through the tree,
There was only the Lady of Bengalee . . .

VI
Now, one dawn, when the roseate veils were stilled,
And the dancer knelt as the rajah willed,
And was none could see but the morning star,
He took up his great curven scimitar,
And he drove it right through the breast, did he,
Of the Tiger Lady of Bengalee.

VII
But he knelt beside her, and, with a kiss,
He whispered, "The next world, Love—not this—"
And then under the light of the morning star,
He was dead on his blood-crusted scimitar—
So perished the rajah of high degree,
And the Tiger Lady of Bengalee . . .

VIII
They have said: in the moment before the dawn,
When the night leaves clouds on the sky as spawn—
If you crouched in the dark of a pillar'd wall,
You might see two tigers creep down the hall;
And who could these but the rajah be,
And the Tiger Lady of Bengalee?

Second Prize Short Story

Home Sweet Home

By Frances Ziemann, IV Victoria

The wind, Elise, is in the leaves, and the wind, Robin, has wound around the trunk, and the wind, Marion, is chasing us home. It is eight o'clock and we must go home, go home, go home—the wind says to go home. The four children, thin raggedy-Ann ghosts, scampered hastily through the rain-heavy tree in the orchard, through the gate that seemed to lead into only greater darkness, down the long road, and finally, weary, up the narrow path that led to the house. The house was a heavy brick, covered on one side with curling ivy; the other side bare and neglected-looking. The door was a dull red, slightly to one side, but advancing towards the middle. Like a sinister claimant, a one-eyed man who arrests your sympathy only to claim your lifeblood, the house with its one lighted window under the overhanging ivy was never-the-less not entirely uninviting to the four children who approached it. They had full knowledge of the fear and horror that might lie waiting for them; but they had learned to take things philosophically, and they knew they couldn't stay out forever, for as Robin would have said, forever is a long long time and its almost dark already. So more slowly now and with not a little hesitation they crept in silent agreement up the three steps and opened the door. It grated violently and there was a resulting movement from the lighted parlor. The children waited.

"Marion!" roared a voice, heavy with drink, and the oldest child, struggling to throw an unconcerned "Yes, father" across the projecting silence of the other three, walked into the room, stopping just past the door, hoping she might yet be able to avoid further encouragement and creep upstairs with the others.

But the heavy man, whose body slung across the living-room chair, had a sodden security of possession most resembling a syrup hardened into place, and whose brows, dark, belligerent and unhappy, directed the bleared eyes upon the child, was all set for what the children had come to term 'bad nights'.

"Marion!", he roared again, pounding his fist on the table as he struggled for a lost sense of dignity and command. "Marion, come here."

ERNEST MEYER, II U.C.

"What is it, father?", the child approached one step at a time. She stopped again, about three feet from the man.

"Come here, come closer. I want to talk to you."

"But I am here" (physical and mental disgust chained her feet to the floor in terrible protest against further approach).

"Come here, Marion!"

"Father, it's time to go to bed. What do you want?"

"Come here! Marion, you know I'm not a bad sort. Don't you love your old Daddy? Get me a match." The child moved to a table about three feet distant and gave him the match. "Light it." She lit it, her body tense and frantic, her mind struggling between the unhappy disgust to which the sight of her father in this condition always moved her, and the sense of desolation and loss she experienced as she heard the other three creep unnoticed up the stairs to their room.

"Do you mind if I go now?" timidly, then explanatory, "I want to go to bed."

"Sit down; Sit down and talk to me a minute, Marion. Don't you think I sometimes want to talk to somebody? (belligerent question) You know what your mother's like, the battle-axe, you know, (we're conspirators together now). Oh she's awful, she's got an awful soul that woman, she's got an awful soul (really dramatic here), then sudden realization of the specious histrionics the child was recognizing). You know me, Marion, I've made mistakes, but I'm not like that. It's all my fault, everything's my fault, but I can't be always wrong, can I? Where is she now? Where's the battle-axe now? "Shouting upstairs, the voice, a changed voice, but perfectly aware of its late carrying power, "Ruth, Ruth, dear."

"I don't know whom you're talking about," came the child's quick answer, loyalty to her mother breaking through the diffident filial shame which would otherwise have kept her tortured and humiliated, but silent throughout his ravings. Then cunning broke through—"And I won't stay to hear you talk about her"—She ran towards the stairs, simulating determined indignation in the thin shoulders that fairly shook with desire to escape, to get away—

"Marion"—(how he could roar).

"I'm not going to listen to you. I want to go to bed."

"Ah, Marion, come here," his voice dropped into coaxing, weeding tones. He smiled self-consciously, shamefully and oh so pitifully.

"Oh Daddy, I want to go to bed. It's late."

"Come here, Marion. You know what Kipling said. And he knew—He knew what you'll never know—(dramatic brandishing of the fist—thunder on the table again—and the weak surprise of a voice that couldn't keep up with the fist's dramatic moments). "Yes, he did Marion. You know—If you can keep your head when all about you—Do you know that one Marion?"

"I'm going to bed."

"Marion!"

"I'm not listening to you."

"Marion!"

"I'm not going to answer."

"Marion!"

"I've got to go to bed. I'm not going to answer."

"Marion, come down here! Marion—that damned little bitch." The child, huddling behind the door of her room, heard him get up furiously, the lumbering move towards the hall, heavy steps on the stairs.

"Ruth, where's your little bastard, where's that child you brought up? You come down now—I'll tear the clothes off your back. I'll—Marion!"

"I can't. I'm undressing."

"What are undressing for? I told you to come down."

"It's late and I'm going to bed. I'm tired."

"That's the child you brought up, that's the little bastard. You'll see: she'll be a curse to you, damned bloody-hearted little slut. She'll turn against you someday, you'll see. They all will." He stumbled back into the living-room. They heard him with one sweep of his arm thrust the tea-things and desk scarf crashing onto the floor. A chair smashed against the wall. Then the heavy thud of a drunken body sinking into a chair. They listened for the tinkle of wine in the glass, the silence following, and four hearts sighed in relief. It wasn't going

It was no wonder that the audience demanded (by the foot method) that he play an encore.

Painting musical pictures was always effectively done by Debussy. The Spanish suite, Iberia, contained the quintessence of the spirit of Spain. The orchestra calls for all resources and obtains some extraordinary effects.

The performance of Brahms's Academic Festival Overture was quite satisfying as was the Oxford Symphony of Haydn.

The small but enthusiastic audience was richly rewarded for their gallant expedition.

was reduced to a trio, their fourth little shaver said to be lost in the snowy wastes outside.

"And if I'd been smart I wouldn't have come myself," said one of the operators, snapping his clippers angrily. "But even though there's little business, you still can't cut a man's hair by telephone."

One instance where the telephone was put to humanitarian uses, however, was Prof. Frank Hogg's call from the wilds of Richmond Hill to announce that the astronomy class, scheduled to visit—all places—the Dunlap Observatory that afternoon, would be better employed toasting by home firesides.

Undeterred himself, however, Prof. Hogg, his automobile roofed over by a drift in the driveway, set out at 8:45 for a street-car to Toronto. Telephoned at noon, Mrs. Hogg said that though she had garbed him with stout boots and helmet, she feared that since he hadn't called home he was still either half way to his office or half way back.

Bridly conscientious, Prof. A. S. P. Woodhouse, head of the U.C. English Department, struggled from his home as far as the corner grocery-store, where he telephoned a more fortunate faculty colleague. "Post a sign on my door that I won't be down," he instructed. Assured that this would be done, he heaved a sigh of relief and announced that he would now start for home—if he could make it.

More effectively conscientious were the M. & P. and Household Science Departments, whose professors gamely lectured as usual to the handful of students who actually arrived.

Typical of disrupted residence routine was the situation at Whitney Hall, where students received what was called "a negative breakfast"—no bread, no milk, no butter, no cereal.

Miss M. B. Ferguson, U.C. Dean of Women, stated that the scanty fare had not impaired the girls' energy, and gave an eyewitness account of a mammoth snowball battle on St. George Street between "my girls and their boy-friends from the fraternities," in which she made no attempt to intervene.

Determined that culture should not die despite intervention of the elements, Miss Ferguson on Tuesday evening marched a hardy snow-suited brood down College Street on an icicled safari to the symphony.

"The one as big as LaGuardia?"

"That's the one."

"It is LaGuardia," exclaimed the boy, galloping off on his postscript.

Scrounge finally got dressed and went out into the bracing morning air. It was so confounded cold that he went back and put his underwear on. Down at the office he found Bob Scratchit, late as usual, scribbling away fiercely as though to make up for lost time.

"Have you got an itch for a holiday?" smiled Scrounge.

"Indeed I have, sir," replied Scratchit, leaning forward hopefully.

"Then before you dot another 'T', Bob, scratch it!"

And he slugged poor Bob with the historic cuspidor, tonny-runned the rest of the family, and before Tiny Tim could utter his usual cliché greeting, Scrounge battered him with a crutch.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasius

CURTAIN CALL . . .

While the fall term's intramural sporting activities run on until tomorrow, this issue marks the curtailment of the sport journalism for the present semester. A cycle of eight sports is about to be completed. From late in September when ambitious golfers tore up the turf at St. Andrew's to the volleyball finals next Friday, the intramural program has issued forth under the careful guidance of Mac McCutcheon and his observant crew in the most gratifying manner.

A short fortnight after the commencement of the term, Mac Gibson, Dentistry sophomore, and former pro, copped the individual honors, while school annexed the team championship in golf.

Trinity's R. Lau won the McEachern Cup, emblematic of individual tennis supremacy. Dimock of Trinity and Young of U.C. were awarded the Victoria Tennis Trophy in the team events.

The track season was especially successful with the two extramural meets. The Blues capably disposed of any opposition thrown forth by either McGill or O.A.C.

Trinity walked off with the laurels in the Junior Harrier led by Jack Goering across the finish line. School, led by J. Moull, won the Brotherton award in the Senior edition of the local marathon.

School took down the Rowell Memorial Cup by handily outclassing the opposition in the Senior Track meet, while Meds successfully defended their honors in the Junior set-to.

The biggest upset in major sport, was in the rugby picture, where University College defeated the highly touted Senior School twelve to bring the Mulock Cup to that college for the first time since 1911.

The Arts Faculty Cup found a new resting place as Meds I emerged victorious from the ordeal with Vic soccerers.

The Dafeo Cup is to be played off this evening (weather permitting) and it is up to School to attempt to displace the defending Meds. And the volleyball finals follow on Friday.

Then we turn to hockey, basketball, baseball, swimming, water polo and the grunt and groan games.

A FEW BOUQUETS . . .

In this seasonal spirit, a number of "thank-you" notes would be in order. To the Athletic Office generally, and more especially Misses Lea, Boyd and Walter, for their cooperation with the members of this department. Also to the male section of the athletic wing . . . "Go see McCutcheon" (or Phillips, Martin, Zwygard, Rimmer, Griffiths). To T. A. Reed for his enthusiastic words of wisdom and advice. To the football managers who picked out the Annual Varsity Football All-Star teams. To George Hougham and Mike O'Brien who publicized the U.C. and School teams so well to the latter's advantage. To Cooper, Gibson and the gang down at S.P.S. To countless others . . . a heartfelt thank-you for your assistance.

There is one exception.

OPEN LETTER TO ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE . . .

Throughout the present semester, your athletic populace has been duly criticized on number of occasions by members of this department. We say "duly" because to our minds it was that, but, like all humans, we are not above reproach if it is on the constructive ladder.

Monday, a St. Michael's plenipotentiary took the law into his own hands. The smelly gauntlet was flung. The supply of mud was overbearing.

Whilst our journalistic wares are readily placed on the auction block, personalities are valued.

If, in three months, all the criticism and cooperation you tend to offer is in the form of a slapstick mud-slinging act, we are truly disappointed. We have always harbored the deepest admiration for your athletic administration, but your charge d'affaires capably shattered it.

And yet, in this season of goodwill to all mankind, we remember the saying: "To err is human; to forgive divine." We wonder why it never reached your attentive ears.

REFEREES AS PREVIOUSLY SCHEDULED

The Sportswoman

By Janice Murray

MERRY CHRISTMAS . . .

To everyone, we were heard feverishly muttering in the third hour of our three-hour vigil on the Queen car, heading Varsity-wards. We could talk of skiing, but as we are annoyed with ourselves because our skis are at a place where we store them. We could also talk about baseball, but after all, don't say that we didn't warn you girls, when we said that it might snow. We feel that at this point we are correct in saying that "it has snowed", but as a weather prophet we must admit one thing. We now do not know when it will stop! Anyway, it has been proven, when the people said that it never snowed before Christmas in this town, that they were wrong, and that we as a prophet were without honor in our own field, baseball and the weather. Again, we could say things about basketball, but as we look outside we don't know what to say, as those two semi-final games might be cancelled. In short, we are speechless, and a good thing too!

By Peggy Wallace

OH WELL, THEN. . .

As everyone said upon looking out the door this morning. Varsity studies constantly amaze us—we might even say appal us, the way they have adjusted to the SNOW. P.H.E.'s, in true athletic style, might have been observed at about 2.00 p.m. today indulging in strenuous activity. The objects of such activity were found to be Zeia Psi's, that is after the snow was dug off them. Vic's fairest we found were not far behind in their enjoyment of the weather, yes, you've guessed it—a flair for snowball fights. An enterprising U.C. athlete decided she would like to have her skis to tear around on for the next few days. Hopping up to Bloor to take a street-car, she found, lo and behold, that there were no cars. Nothing daunted, she hailed a passing milk truck, followed by a dump truck, followed by an army jeep. There-with followed a long period of silence, broken by the triumphant yell of the happy gal as she skied regally down St. George St.

However, all snowing aside (and don't we wish it was!), Christmas is a wonderful season. Here is our one chance to sleep in every morning for almost two weeks, here is our chance to do a little work, and here also is our chance to store up potential energy from our Christmas spirits so that we can give our all for College athletics.

And speaking of Christmas spirits . . . ah, well . . . Nevertheless, Jan and I wish you a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, and we promise that we will strive to do our best by Sports in the new term. Bon Voyage and best of luck in the coming year both in Sports and Other Things.

Love's Labor Lost

By John Edward Speers, IV Victoria

While people huddled homeward
And cursed the choking frost,
In converse at her corner
We stood an hour lost:
"My eyes are brown, not golden,"
She bantered. "Just between,"
Cried I, "and Love's forever!"
She laughed. "But Love wanes lean."
Impervious to weather
Were we at seventeen.

The taxi ticks its mileage
And shuts the tempest out:
"Is Love, sir, still so lasting?"
"Nay, now I share your doubt;
Fond fictions scarcely fit us
At twenty-six years old.
And yet—your brown eyes beckon—"
"That once you fancied gold?
My corner—lovely party—
Don't kiss if you've a cold."

Second Prize Serious Verse

At A Solemn Music

By John Edward Speers, IV Victoria

Moves the unhurried music, gently grave as royal children in a Velasquez—a streaming wind, but wind of measured breath, a regiment of wings, a shapen fire—urbanelly splendid, decorously gay, dancing unwearied through the delicate whorls and labyrinths of inevitable counterpoint.

What manner of man this Mozart? Can he have known the bleak cacophonies of Chance and Death, the counter-rhythms of Doubt?

Yet, gentlemen,
suffering the tyranny of the inclusive Form, subordinate to imperious laws that bind the voices, one by one, lock-stepped to the whole, forbidden by rebel cry or faltering foot to mar the multiple-patterned, cavalcading surge of the symphony's proud processional—is it not better thus to write our music, asks Mozart—and to hide the broken heart?

ment, the whole rhythm of body movement is different in another language, and Bette Davis, who depends on her myopia to dramatize a mood, beomes offensively wooden in translation. The young people like unadulterated Hollywood, and their life is shaped by it to a degree alarming to the old guard of the parish.

The young people have one other characteristic, perhaps whetted by the movies, that causes concern—a restlessness and a longing to travel. This may seem not too surprising amongst young people, but the Canadian has always professed little desire to go far from home, and there has been a remarkable contentment to his hearth. Few of the men of the parish have ever been out of the province, and those who have gone even so far as Quebec City feel that there was little point in seeing a place so inferior to their own. Yet the young men are reading about the Canadian West: here is the life, they tell themselves—riding fine horses through the great spaces of the prairie, free from the restraints of their urban life. Others determine to go to the United States, the fate most shocking of all to parents: friends have gone there, and come back with changed values, a lighter, more materialistic attitude and a frank irreligion. More attractive to most parents are the opportunities promised by South America: here is a Latin culture similar in many ways to their own, a culture that has not yet succumbed to anglicization. So Yves and Paul study Spanish and wait for their chance.

It is evening, and the men have gathered in Chez Roger to vie with each other in relating the news over a bottle of bierre d'épinette (a brackish, non-alcoholic drink tasting very like turpentine). The air is full of the coming St. Jean Baptiste parade. They tell of the color and pageantry of the costume, of the allegorical nature of the floats, of the vast numbers of paraders, the Belgian thoroughbreds that will draw the vehicles. An Englishman from Toronto is asked if there is a parade like this in his city, but all he can think of is the Santa Claus parade, and he seeks to make some generalizations to himself on the role of allegory and pageantry that his people relegate to the world of childhood. He is interested to hear that there is one float, La Petite Patrie, that represents the local loyalty of the Canadian, but that this is followed by La Grande Patrie, peopled by nine fair Canadiennes to represent the nine provinces, and a tenth as Le Canada.

The church spire throws a long shadow like a claiming hand on the little restaurant and the shops and homes beyond it. The church doors are opened now and lights shine indistinctly in the sunset haze. Within there are many people, old and young, moving noiselessly to the places of prayer. The church is vaster than ever inside, and empty by contrast with the older churches that have been crammed through time with ecclesiastic bric-a-brac; it is a chaste grey, unbroken

He was going to drink himself to sleep and he might not bother them again before four o'clock in the morning. That would be awful then, but they didn't need to think about that now.

Why shouldn't this be a movie? There was a long silence. Wide sweeping vistas of happiness opened up. The world seemed one long happy possibility.

"But it isn't," said Robin with finality.

comes from the deep hues of the Stations of the Cross, done in mosaic. Is this, we wonder, the Latin taste we have such tidy ideas about? We will find that this is another triumph of the new order over the old. The ricciards are not happy in this new, expensive church: they miss their rosy Madonna in her pontiff purple gown and the precious minutiae that filled the old church with warmth and blazonry. This is the church of the jeunes gens: they are reverently proud of its modernity, and its austere, grandly-proportioned beauty. When they march in the Baptiste parade, and renew their allegiance to the motto of their people, "Je m'en souviens" it will be this building that will focus their loyalties—and may even strengthen that unorthodox hunch of theirs that change is, after all, inevitable and wholesome, and that no country can resolutely bind itself to the past.

Night deepens over Montreal, and St. Jean Berchmans becomes one of an uneven avenue of spires silhouetted against the smoky West, where high on the mountain, like a floating jewel, shines the illuminated Cross.

C.U.P. Conference Held In Holidays 'Completely National'

Newly Devised Travel Pool Cuts Costs, Enabling Representatives From All Provinces to Attend

PRIZE OFFERED

For the first time in its history, the Canadian University Press Conference held in Montreal December 28-30, was completely national in its representation. Delegates of 15 university papers from Nova Scotia to British Columbia were able to attend the annual meeting by the inauguration of a travel pool which decreased travelling costs for distant universities.

News of national university interest is flashed to camp from coast to coast by means of the wire service set up by the C.U.P. when it was founded in 1938. The purpose of The Canadian University Press has been to facilitate an exchange of news and ideas as well as to foster better relationships among universities.

At this year's conference, two new publications, Le Quartier Latin, the University of Montreal paper, and Le Fallt-Ye-Times of MacDonald College, became members.

Over 30,000 students are served by the C.U.P. Arrangements were made at the convention to standardize this service by the resumption of two weekly columns of outside interest, Ottawa Calling, an impartial commentary on political occurrences, and Canadian Campus, a cross section of events and opinions on university camp.

The editors attending the conference favored a balanced distribution of local and national university news in each paper. The Vancouver Standard announced that it would offer a prize of $25 to the university paper with the best make-up design. The contest is open to any member of the C.U.P. who submits six average copies of his paper to the judges yet to be named.

Owing to the fact that representation at the conference was complete with one exception, C.U.P. elections for next year were held. McGill Daily was re-elected national president; the Saskatoon Sheaf is regional vice-president for the western provinces; The Toronto Varsity was elected Ontario-Quebec vice-president, and The Xaverian of St. Francis University became regional vice-president of the Maritimes.

"THE UNDERGRADUATE"

Will all contributors to The Undergraduate, the University College magazine, and all those who still wish to write items for it, please meet today in The Varsity office at 3:30 p.m.

Attention Ex-Servicemen

The Board of Governors of the University has approved of the following recommendations submitted by the Athletic Directorate:

"That, in view of the fact that many of these men are so far behind in their studies and require extra time if they are to complete the academic year satisfactorily, they be exempted from Physical Training for the session 1944-1945."

"That, at the end of the present session the whole situation will be reviewed again and further consideration given to these men for the subsequent years of their courses."

This exemption will be extended automatically and it will not be necessary for any ex-service men to petition for exemption.

The Senate of the University is prepared to extend the same exemption to women who have enrolled in the University following their discharge from active service.

Music Society Offers Prizes

The Canadian Performing Right Society of Toronto has announced a scholarship of the value of $750 to be awarded to the student of either sex, under twenty-two years of age on March 31, 1945, whose compositions show the most talent and imagination. The scholarship is tenable at the Toronto Conservatory of Music.

Two works are to be submitted by each contestant, one of which should be a song.

In addition to the scholarship, the sum of $200 will be paid in not more than three prizes, divided as the judges may decide. These prizes are offered to all entrants including juniors.

A further sum of $50 to be divided into not more than three prizes, is offered in the Junior Division of the competition.

Entry forms are available at the S.A.C. office. Entries must reach the Society's offices on or before March 31, 1945, together with the application form and the entrant's birth certificate. The scholarship and prizes will be awarded only so far as, in the opinion of the Selecting Board, the works submitted are of sufficient merit and promise.

'Flu Epidemics R.C.I. Topic

"Influenza and Other Epidemics" will be the topic of the Royal Canadian Institute lecture to be given by Dr. Ronald Hare, Research Associate, Connaught Laboratories, tomorrow evening at 8:15 in Convocation Hall.

Mild epidemics of influenza occur every two years but serious epidemics occur about once every century. The last two outstanding ones were in 1889 and 1918. The epidemic of 1918 was one of the worst epidemics ever known.

Dr. Hare, who was educated at St. Mary's Hospital, University of London, came to Canada in 1936 to study influenza. He was in charge of the organization of the penicillin plant from October, 1943, to July, 1944.

He will illustrate his lecture with slides and motion pictures.

Draft Status Review Seen

Possibility that there will soon be a meeting of Canadian university representatives to review draft status of university students "in the light of the existing situation in Europe," was announced this week by Arthur MacNamara, director of National Selective Service.

Mr. MacNamara, who is chairman of the Selective Service University Advisory Board, mentioned no specific date for the meeting.

Under present regulations, students in essential courses are called for military training if failing in any year, while students in non-essential courses are eligible for draft if they are in the bottom half of their class standing, regardless of whether that standing is a pass grade.

Literary China Is White Topic

Continuing his course of lectures on "China: Past and Present," started last term, Bishop W. C. White, Director of the School of Chinese Studies, will give the opening lecture of this term this afternoon in the Royal Ontario Museum at 4 p.m. on the subject, "Chinese Language and Literature."

The lecture will take the form of a practical teaching demonstration based on "The Thousand Chinese Foundation Characters," with selected readings from Chinese poets and prose writers, and will be illustrated by lantern slides.

Referring to the growing importance of the Chinese language, Bishop White said that at a recent conference of Indian educators changes were discussed which would introduce into the curriculum of Indian schools the compulsory study of Chinese history, geography and culture, and put Chinese language study on a par with English.

Bishop White, who has spent about 40 years in China, believes that, as it will become one of our greatest markets after the war, there will be great opportunities for those who can speak Chinese, in the diplomatic corps, missions, engineering and commerce, and in translating the

"I Just Can't Keep Them!" Is Prevailing Pessimistic View

New Year's resolutions are odd things to handle, say the students on the campus of the University of Toronto, because, as one aptly put it, they are so easy to make and easier still to break.

"My main resolve," stated Morris Stein, III Chem. Engineering, "was to try to make the majority of my 8:30 lectures, at least. This resolution, if carried out, will be a shock to my classmates as well as to most of my professors. Cold and dark in the morning these days, isn't it?"

Joan Cameron, I U.C., said: "I didn't make any resolutions this year because I find that I break them so easily. Seriously, I wish I could stop smoking so much, and it would certainly help my morale if I could get some good honest studying done. But I guess I'm natural and, besides, you know how these resolutions are."

"I have definitely resolved not to make any more New Year resolutions," replied Mae Buchanan, I Honor Science. "It all started last year when I decided that I wouldn't spend more than three dollars a week, and then I met her."

Said Mary Lee Edward, I Pass: "I have made one resolution that I intend to keep and that is to write all my essays on time. It's too great a strain on me to have to run down to Baldwin House at 5 p.m. just to hand in a history essay."

Lois Urquhart, I Moderns, stated: "I

Council Urges Book Grant

At the conference of the National Federation of Canadian University Students held recently at the University of Western Ontario, a committee report on ways and means of helping veterans adjust themselves to university life was discussed.

The report, presented by Sol Grand of the University of Manitoba, recommended a standing committee on veterans' affairs in each university.

It urged that, besides the grants given the veterans on entering college, additional grants be made to cover the cost of expensive text-books in such courses as medicine. Where advanced work in highly technical courses is not available in Canada, the report urged that students should be permitted to study in other countries, supported by the regular veterans' grants.

It was recommended that in courses leading to the professions, academic merit alone and not war service records as well, should be considered in assessing a student's standing.

Extension Dept. Starts Courses

The Department of University Extension has announced two new courses which will begin on Monday, Jan. 8, at the Ontario College of Education.

The first is a refresher course on the "Fundamentals of Human Behaviour from the Psychiatric Point of View." It will be given in collaboration with the School of Social Work under the auspices of the National Committee on Mental Hygiene. Dr. Harry Little of the Child Guidance Centre in Pittsburgh will be the lecturer.

The first of the four lectures constituting this course will be given at 10 a.m. and again at 3 p.m.

The second course, beginning Monday at 8 p.m., will be one in "Formalism" and will extend for a period of 10 weeks. It will be sponsored by the Formen's Clubs.

Both courses are open daily to those having certificates of admission.

U.A.S. Disbanded No Longer Useful As Air Needs Met

No Decision Yet Made as to Training Required This Term for the Students Affected. Says Fennell.

150 AFFECTED

The University Air Squadron has been disbanded, it was announced by Wing Commander T. R. Loudon, Officer Commanding Number 3 University Air Squadron. The reason is obvious, he pointed out. University Air Training was begun to feed the R.C.A.F. with air crew personnel, and since there is no further need of this type of recruiting the U.A.S. is no longer useful.

Wing Commander Loudon estimated that some 150 male students are affected by the new regulation. These students are not at the moment undergoing any sort of military training.

A. B. Fennell, Registrar of the University, announced that there has been no decision reached at present as to what form of military training these students will be required to undergo during the remainder of the term.

"There is no doubt, however," he added, "that they will be required to take some sort of military training in accordance with the National Selective Service whereby they are permitted to remain at the University."

A meeting of the Joint Services University Training Committee will be held on Tuesday to discuss the entire situation.

Wing Commander Loudon estimated the hope that some sort of Air Training will be offered after the war, probably similar to the system in use up until the outbreak of hostilities. Under this plan the R.C.A.F. offered to graduates in Engineering and in Mathematics and Physics certain aeronautical courses which prepared them to accept positions in the R.C.A.F. Upon graduation the students had the option of joining the R.C.A.F. permanent force or the R.C.A.F. Reserve.

Air Training was begun at the University of Toronto in 1941 when an Air Wing was organized as a branch of the Canadian Officers' Training Corps. The University Air Training Corps emerged in 1942 as a separate unit. The name was changed for convenience at the beginning of the current session to University Air Squadron.

The course was designed to instruct men in elementary Air Force training in preparation for enlistment in the R.C.A.F. Wing Commander Loudon stated yesterday that the training has been of considerable advantage to former members of the Corps in subsequent Air Force training.

King Township Fund Approved

Final arrangements for the establishment of a King Township Scholarship Fund were made at the last meeting of the Senate of the University of Toronto.

The first charge of the Fund will be a matriculation scholarship of $200 to be awarded to the student of Aurora High School resident in King Township who stands first in first-class honors in grade 13. The scholarship is tenable in any faculty or school of the University of Toronto or in certain affiliated colleges. This scholarship will be offered for the first time in June, 1945.

Provision is also made for the award of bursaries to deserving students of Aurora High School enrolled in any faculty or school of the University or in certain affiliated colleges.

The Fund has been established by a group of residents of the township who have agreed to subscribe annually to the Fund for the next five years.

President H. J. Cody said that King Township has taken the lead in a worthwhile enterprise which other townships and counties in Ontario might well be encouraged to emulate.

World Missions Meeting Begins

Move It Over

As the comparative quiet of the campus is once again broken by the return of dissolute and resolute students, it is inevitable that the proverbial grim resolutions should find their place in the books for the coming year. With determined faces and averted eyes, many potential savants plodded stolidly to all lectures yesterday, firm in their decision to "knuckle down" for the remainder of the term.

Such resolutions have always had a rather hazardous career, yet we are certain that their value lies in the very nature of their making as they do much to mitigate post-holiday depression and to compensate for pre-Christmas laxity. On the other hand, there are enough stern-minded individuals who successfully discipline themselves so that a defeatist attitude regarding New Year's resolutions is not universal. Those energetic beings who possess an infinite capacity for activity invariably pop up to show us that our conclusions regarding the essential laziness of human nature are not justifiable in the light of past history. We are often tempted to lament the standards of preceding decades without realizing that often they were misused and wrongly applied.

Of course, our resolutions of today are governed by a completely different set of circumstances than those made by the students of 318 or 317. In the past six years we have come to accept hardships and events that oftentimes constituted the main body of resolutions of pre-war years. On this campus, we have adopted a relatively more sober attitude towards our work in view of the present Selective Service regulations. Any actions on or off the University property are effected only on consideration of our acute war-conscious attitude. Generally considered, student life has taken on a tenor which was embodied in the resolutions of former years. Despite the intermittent decrying of our present state, our adjustment has shown that we are capable of self-disciplined change. And hence our New Year's resolutions should gradually lose their former use as tools of conversation and should assume the form of concrete action normally accepted.

Hey, Mister . . .

The faculty of Alfred University, Alfred, New York, have recently instructed their students to address them henceforth as "Miss, Mrs. or Mr." They announce that the use of academic titles in social contacts "is un-American and not in the best democratic tradition."

Aside from breaking with democracy, the most logical reason for such a change would seem to be the confusion in language resulting from the use of these forms of address. In the past, laymen have found it difficult to comprehend the difference between medical and Ph.D. degrees. Again, many people outside university circles are at a loss as to the proper forms of addressing a faculty member at social functions. Such embarrassment could be obviated if Alfred University's ruling were put into effect universally. As it is, many universities have been using this same legislation without being overcome by the desire to officially incorporate it into a written constitution. A number of faculties on this campus do not encourage the use of academic titles.

The practice, however, is not widespread and the use of both forms of address often leads to confusion.

Its complete acceptance would tend to abolish any misuse of titles as well as to give greater unity to our language.

ART MUSIC Drama

The Symphonic Screen

Royal Alexandra

Two motion pictures featuring music of a serious nature are being currently shown in Toronto. Walt Disney's Fantasia is running its periodic return engagement at the Royal Alexandra and, as usual, is playing to a packed house. Its perennial popularity may be considered a measure of its worth.

Fantasia is a first venture into a new form of art and as such is a cultural landmark. That the new art is one with lasting value is a moot point, but it is my opinion that it will not flourish long. The chief danger that it runs is that of distorting the ideas of certain composers. Although this distortion is acceptable with ideas on a level with that expressed in Dukas' Sorcerer's Apprentice, it is objectionable when applied to ideas of greater depth. I find the little centaurs in Fantasia particularly obnoxious and altogether out of spirit with Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony. But The Pastoral is the exception in Fantasia which is remarkably successful in avoiding the danger. The new art will not last because it is not necessary. Nothing has been added to or subtracted from the music even under Disney's accomplished handling. Watching the fascinating conceptions of the music on the screen is an experience which should not be missed; but such expression cannot become perpetuated, simply because it performs no useful function.

However dismal the future of Fantasia may seem, it is enjoying a highly interesting present. It is a work artistically conceived and executed, and since the effect of novelty is still telling, it affords thoroughly enjoyable entertainment.

Adventures in Music is a novelty of a different sort. It confines itself to picturing several artists in the process of performing standard works. Like Fantasia, it appears to be a leader doomed to have few followers. I am not at all convinced that pictures such as this are either necessary or desirable. It cannot be argued that they bring music to the masses any more effectively than radio. Nor do they simulate the conditions of the concert hall. The feeling of personal contact with the performing artists is lost on the screen, and the atmosphere is strangely two-dimensional. And the tone of the several instruments is limited by the imperfections of the theatre's sound equipment.

Even discounting these handicaps, Adventures in Music is disappointing. Emmanuel Feuermann's perfect playing does not quite atone for his camera shyness; Iturbi's stage presence does not atone for the musical inferiority of the Liszt Rhapsody. Generally, the program is lodge-podge in nature, compiled without regard to reason or balance.

But the picture does have its moments. Iturbi's demonstration of the scope of the harpsichord is both instructive and entertaining. The sequences featuring the Coolidge String Quartet are by far the best musically and photographically. And it must be remembered that the picture as a whole is novel and hence of interest. But it seems to show that music is not at home on the screen.

PHILIP FREEDMAN

Local Talent

Hart House

The exhibitions of paintings by W. R. Beny, IV Trinity, shown in the Hart House gallery during the last week of December, was of vital interest to the whole University. Somewhat of a precedent was established, and it was proven once and for all that a complete and satisfying exhibit could be presented by one undergraduate.

No matter what the media, Mr. Beny revealed a smoothness and facility of technique rarely achieved so early in life. The warm blending of his colors recalled the work of W. J. Phillips, who is, by the way, also from the West.

Western scenes and subject matter predominated the show. "Faith-Abandoned" with its rather grim philosophy, and "Passing Storm," a scene possible only in the West, are two excellent examples of this.

Another point of interest is Mr. Beny's striking use of the color red. "Man of Montserrat," generally dark in tone, received its whole character and life from a vivid splash of crimson. Again, the contrast

DISBANDED AIR SQUAD JOINS FOREIGN LEGION

Warden's Water-filled Cuspidor Saves the Day

REVEAL FALSE BEARD

Mystery and intrigue overshadowed the campus yesterday as Wing-Commander T. Ratisbane Loudon-Noissy foolishly confided to The Varsity the hush-hush policy underlying the recent disbanding of the University Air Squadron.

"Zoo not permit zees enformation to (how you say it?) get around, but a branch of La Legion Foreign Francaise (local 137) ees being substituted for zee old Air Squadron," he wheespaired, with frequent covert reference (reference fréquente covert) to his newly-acquired manual, "French Made Easy."

Although Commander Loudon-Noissy refused to elaborate, an intrepid Varsity reporter ascertained that Prof. Hypolyte de Chump, patriarch of the U.C. French Department, has been secretly appointed second-in-command, owing to the facility with which he could conceal secret codes in his beard.

When interviewed, Prof. de Chump revealed that the Squadron had become Foreign Legionnaires to a man, in a last-ditch attempt to pass themselves off as essential and thus evade anticipated trouble with Selective Service Officer Artie Backlomorra. The Legion, he said, has now slyly taken up essential duties disguised as members of Col. Less Pants' snow-shovelling crew.

Elaborating on their romantic attributes, Prof. de Chump described the Legionnaire's harrowing trek across the back campus, maddened with thirst, their water-bottles bone-dry; and the heroic exploits of the faithful St. Bernard, who bounded towards them across the barren wastes of snow with the Warden's water-filled Cuspidor around his neck.

A Women's Auxiliary (Auxiliaire Fominine) was furiously fashioning Legionnaire turbans out of Whitney Hall bedspreads, he continued; and a camel, borrowed from the Museum, its hump stealthily filled with beer by loyal Skutemen, had been stationed at a green oasis in the left-hand corner of the Hart House poolroom.

Recent despatches, forwarded to the professor by lama, llama, dog-sled, camel-train, and President Dody's bicycle, revealed that the bloodthirsty Shiek Bulbus Ab Domen and his cruel tribesmen, Fakir El Hassin Gersufson, and the Sahibs Sillias and Sillias Youssef were plotting a dastardly foray to capture the Springs of the Taddle, the University's Underground Rivulet.

The secret cry of the gang, he revealed, was a little-known war-whoop, screamed with an aigu accent and stressed on the cedilla: "Braaaaanaaack!" "But ze Legion weel teraser zees Ab Domen all hollow," screamed Prof. de Chump, snapping his garters in indignation. "Zey weel be ze (how you say?) dead pigeons. We weel have zem—POUF!"

So inflamed was the professor that he did not notice that a dog-cared, yellowed parchment had fluttered from his beard. Picking it up, the Varsity reporter exclaimed:

Trinity Leads Trophy Race

The time is Monday. Four second-term sports will swing into action from atop the athletic agenda as all faculties and colleges rejoin the intramural point race for the T. A. Reed Trophy. Trinity will be out to protect the sizeable lead, while the others are threatening to do what they failed to accomplish during the first term.

Emmanuel and Wycliffe centre off at noon to initiate the hockey schedule which will terminate with the Jennings Cup finals. U.C., the defending champions, wait until the following day, when they hook up with a strong Med I club.

The basketball line-up pits Junior U.C. against SPS III in the opener. Later games are listed for four and six o'clock.

Senior School and U.C. will slug it out in the initial baseball game. Hec Phillip's track charges will be out in full force for the three-man relays. Last season, track made a rapid advance in popularity among participants and this year should be no different from the indicating factors. All freshmen are especially welcome.

ANOTHER CHAPTER . . .

After a more than welcomed breather, the literal pen is taken up once again. This term places the athletic spotlight on intramural basketball, hockey, baseball, track, the Varsity Blues hockey and basketball groups and, of course, those rollicking Athletic Nights.

The latter carry the most spectator interest by a considerable margin. Hence a bit of enlightenment for the newcomers and also for the fuzziest-brained of the fuzzy brains.

The famous Athletic Night was the brainchild of Warren Stevens, now in the R.C.A.F. and our own amiable Mac McCutcheon and was primarily organized to displace, partially at least, the fiasco of intercollegiate competition. It was their effort to keep alive that dwindling flame—University spirit which is but too seldom evident now after four years of no McGill, no Queen's and no Western.

The idea was immediately pounced on by the student body and "A" nights became gigantic athletic and social affairs. Athletic, for four or five dozen participants and social for most everyone else. In fact, unofficial figures have it that some twenty-three hundred socialites showed their selves into Hart House on one occasion last year. The joint was really jumping, perhaps too much for a number of us.

To the uninitiated, "A" nights should be explained. On each of five successive Saturday nights during the present semester, different faculties and colleges act as hosts, not only to the visiting athletes but mainly to the inhabitants of the campus. The entire athletic wing is thrown open for the co-eds as well as regular members. The consideration is but a small fee which is donated to a worthy student charity and which entitles the student to view proceedings.

The feature attraction of the evening is the basketball game, placing the Blues in the leading role opposing a standout visiting team. Last year Detroit Tech, Assumption College of Windsor and a strong Navy quintet were but three of the cabé squads to grace the polished floor of Hart House.

In addition the junior and senior boxing, wrestling and fencing tourneys are carried on coupled with a gymnastic display. Then there are basketball, volleyball and waterpolo exhibition games with perhaps the odd swimming meet thrown in for good measure.

In previous years, faculties showed ostentatiously the work accomplished in labs, libraries and lectures. On at least two occasions, movies of pre-war intercollegiate football games were flashed before an awed public. These alone were worth more than the price of admission and so it is hoped that any difficulties encountered in securing these once more will be overcome.

When the smoke of the athletic competition has cleared away, the lights are dimmed and dancers are herded onto the floor where minutes previously, swivel-hipped basketballers had thrilled them. And for that segregated section a real hill-billy conglomeration is on display in the upper gym.

Fair warning then. The first of the five comes off on the twenty-seventh of this month with University College, Physical & Health Education and Knox acting as hosts. Opposing the Blues will be a team from O.A.C. or an Airforce team.

Other plans are still in the stagnant state but McCutcheon and his crew are bending over backwards to straighten things out. It won't be long now until students are clamoring for admittance to the popular events.

HAVING DONE OUR DUTY . . .

By listening to "A Christmas Carol", eating a rather defenceless turkey, and breaking all our one New Year's resolution already, we are back at the old grind of excuses, evasions, and wisps of news.

To start this year well, we mislaid the results of the basketball finals at too late an hour to do anything about it. Suffice it to say that P.H.E. Freshies copped the championship neatly, an honour that comes very seldom to a First Year squad. Their stars were Mickey Barnett and Fran Lee, both of whom played smooth, clean, fast games. More of basketball when we find the elusive results.

HOCKEY . . .

Rears its head again with the first day of term when both U.C. and St. Hilda's were seen to field trainees up at Varsity the other day. Albeit a bit shaky, and aren't we all, on their skates, both these Colleges put up strong teams last year, and many of the faces out at the practices were familiar ones, the same girls who made the main strength of the teams in the past. The recruits looked pretty good, too.

And while on the subject of Hockey, we'd like to remind all reps that there is a meeting today. If you don't know about it or haven't been in touch with Barb Wilson, she asks that you do so today. Call St. Hilda's at noon and arrange to be at the meeting. There are several smaller faculties who we know have not contacted Barb.

SWIMMING . . .

Joan Campbell has planned a great future for swimming this year from the plans announced by the Swimming Club yesterday. There have been practice periods set aside for anyone who wishes to come to them, and anyone who intends to enter the Intramural meet to be held late in February is urged to go. This year a minimum of three practices is required before any girl may swim in the big meet. At the U.T.S. pool there are practices Tuesday, Jan. 9, from 7.30-8.15 for diving, ornamental and style, 8.15-9.00 speed. Wednesday, Jan. 10, 7.30-8.15, speed, and 8.15-9.00 diving, ornamental, and style.

At L.M. pool, Monday, Jan. 8, 4.30-5.30, ornamental and style; Thursday, Jan. 11, 4.30-5.30, diving, starts and turns. Friday, Jan. 12, 4.30-5.30, speed.

There are rumors of an Intercollegiate Telegraphic meet, floating around the campus. The whispers state that there may be a joint meet in the Hart House pool with the men, who also hope to have a

Telegraphic meet. We think that a Telegraphic meet is a very good idea, but still a poor substitute for Intercollegiate meets, with all contestants present. hither and yon with frank risky and hugh kenner

Yes, thank you, we did have a nice new year. So, now, digging itself out from that front-campus snow-drift with the aid of Supt. LePau's snow-shovelling crew, this column breaks off its hibernation, where you left us at the jag-end of the old semester and wends Pressward again. If any of these items give off a musty odor, you'll know they got left in our Christmas stocking last year and the department store obdurately refused to make an exchange. Here you are. Maybe you'll have better luck with them . . .

Kuf-kootery bloweth where it listeth, even invading the pressroom of our Bay St. evening contemporary. For one entire day, through edition after edition, a radio program advertisement in that paper invited listeners to tune in on station XYZ for the feature of the evening—

"ONE MAN'S FANNY."

W'e blush!

A Varsity staffer who sweated among the snowdrifts at Christmas time in the service of a Toronto evening paper—not the one above—is still telling about his interview with a returning serviceman at the Union Station.

Asked for the chronicle of his toughest tour of "ops," whether over France or Germany or Belgium or what, a discharged D.F.C.'er grinned at his mother and chirped modestly, "From what I hear in letters, nothing is so gruelling as boarding a Yonge St. trolley at 5 p.m."

Ever try the three o'clock library line-up?

Toooverville Trolley Camco: Late one wintry night, as the north Yonge car swayed blindly up Summerhill, the pole slipped from the wires and plunged the passengers into darkness.

In the second's dead silence that followed, a shrill voice carried down the car, broadcasting to all the world the tail-end of a conversation: ". . . and you don't drink any beer and you don't have any children."

Master-of-my Fate Dept. A Saroyan-esque professor who tags along yearly to the annual banquet of a campus organization in a Bloor St. hushery was upset last year to find every hat-peg and nowhere to hang his fedora.

This year he straggled in to find every hat-peg occupied again. But he had come Prepared.

He delved a moment in his briefcase, produced a hammer and a nail, and proceeded to pound into the wall a hat-peg of his own.

Women, we maintain, never change, as witness this withering conversation heard at a College Street ham-and-eggers over the holidays.

"If you, my dear, save your last pair for that occasion," whispered the other babe, "by that time they'd be sure to be rotted."

Beyond a shadow of a doubt, The Varsity's kuf-kootery has brought us global recognition. Below we reprint an item which appeared in a Toronto evening newspaper—not the Star—the first part of which was clipped by The New Yorker magazine:

"What impresses one most about Mme. Kolesa's playing is her ability to get right inside the piano.—Concert report in The Varsity.

"Close association with the instrument is seldom attained, even by superior musicians. One of those who had mastered the art was the famous German bass fiddler, Doghauss. To gain certain effects, he opened a sort of trap-door in the back of the huge fiddle and climbed in. 'It looked uncanny,' said a bolder musician, 'to see the bass viol sounding away, the blow manipulated by one arm thrust from inside. But one got used to it in time'."

Among Prof. Dooleydingus' other world-acclaimed contributions to the happiness of humanity are the following: A pool-cue with fountain-pen attachment for producing abstract murals on the Hart House billiard-room wall while contemplating a difficult shot.

A combined saxophone and soup-strainer, to make practical use of visiting artists in the Great Hall and thus justify the Sunday Concerts to Selective Service.

Hidden Treasure

W'ynilwood

To criticize a Dean of Women, at least in public, is almost unheard of. Miss Jessie Macpherson of Victoria showed qualities of courage and resourcefulness when she presented a program of songs, by request, at last night's W'ynilwood concert.

One of the indispensable essentials of any musician is musicianship; fortunately Miss Macpherson possesses this quality.

Admitting that she sings strictly as an amateur, that it is simply a hobby which she indulges in early each morning, Miss Macpherson's choice of program well suited her mezzo-contralto tone range. Both diction and tone made the German Heder songs of Schumann, Strauss and Schubert very delightful. Possessing a voice of limited range and flexibility, Miss Macpherson magnificently carried off the catchy rhythms and difficult intonations of Hageman's Miranda.

Other songs of Elizabethan England, 18th century and modern France, and English folk songs completed the program.

Prof. Tatham of the Geography Department assisted Miss Macpherson with sympathetic feeling and retiring grace. Miss Macpherson must have found the enthusiastic applause of her audience extremely gratifying.

Pops

Massey Hall

A refreshing change took place at the Toronto Symphony's "Pops" concert in Massey Hall on Friday night when the guest artist, Robert Graham, played the little-known Violin Concerto in F Sharp Minor by H. W. Ernst. Graham, who is a second year medical student at Varsity, found no technical requirement too difficult in his performance of the exciting Concerto whose composer could not always play the work perfectly himself.

The music is possessed of a deeply emotional mood and even to the most untutored ear never failed to please; the young violinist showed himself to be rapidly mastering an understanding of moods and imagination. As an encore he chose to play the unaccompanied Caprice by Paganini-Kreisler in a polished manner.

The orchestral program could not have failed to please, for in a true "Pops" fashion it aimed at that goal. The gay and lilting Overture from "The Bat" by Strauss set the pace for an evening of pure musical pleasure. Another exciting musical event was the performance of Ibert's Divertissement and with its mocking, cynical sarcasm it was truly laughter-provoking. It seems to be a patchwork of Mendels-

Enthusiasm, without much expert execution, was the outstanding feature of the Russian Relief Concert Saturday Night. Marked by the glitter of but one brilliantly executed composition, Tchaikovsky's E Flat Minor Quartet, played by the Parlow ensemble, relieved the general drabness of the concert.

This chamber work by the Russian master is happily devoid of indulgence in an exaggerated display of musical effects, a practice to which Tchaikovsky often succumbed. Miss Parlow's profound musicianship, combined with her mastery of the instrument, was fully

Students Sought To Ease Emergency

Doctor's Dilemma

Double Future Looms for Varsity's Kildare-Heifetz; Scalpel or Bow is Problem

"Poised on the horns of a dilemma" That was young Robert Graham's term for it.

His problem? Which path ought his career to follow? The one that would lead to a musical degree? Or the one that would bring a medical degree?

Puzzled, the 19-year-old second year medical student who, Friday evening, made his debut with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra in Massey Hall (see "Art, Music and Drama") sat in Hart House tuck shop and pondered both his careers.

"Medicine is a swell career, so is music, but combining the two is absolute hell," said Graham in an interview with The Varsity.

Second year medicine was tough enough, without being forced, as he is, to practise the violin four hours a day. And concerts had an odd way of rearing their heads immediately before examinations.

For example, he pointed out, an exam had been set for Jan. 18. And, sure enough, who should telephone but the C.B.C. people, asking whether he could not give a recital over the air Jan. 17. "The only good thing I can say about it is that a concert is a good alibi for lower grade marks," said Robert.

Graham credits his mother with having developed his present see-saw dilemma. An organist at a Bloor Street church in her youth, she wanted her son to become a musician, so she set him playing the piano at four. The daughter of a distinguished physician, she was equally determined her son would be successful in the medical field.

Graham recalls that his first press review came when he was a 15-year-old student at U.T.S. That was when he was a soloist at a Massey Hall secondary school concert.

"Since that time," he says, "I've had one heck of a time getting people to stop calling me 'Bobby.' People expect me to wander on to the platform in short pants."

Graham, who was a soloist last year with the University Symphony Orchestra and this month will do a recital in New York, thinks the Toronto press critics, though, have done well by him. He qualifies this, however, by saying: "They seldom clamp down on anybody anyway; seldom commit themselves."

He learns more from talking about craftsmanship with established violinists, he says.

Of those he knows, he thinks most highly of Mischa Elman, Josef Szigeti, Zino Francescatti ("a good chap"), Yehudi Menuhin ("when we took him to a hockey game here and the Leafs were beaten 4-0 by the Red Wings he thought it was awful"), and Mischa Mischakoff.

UPTOWN: "CAN'T HELP SINGING" Distresses no one!

"Plot" (are the quotation marks too subtle?) of this ultra oat opus takes La Durbin cross-country on a romantic merry-go-round, too familiar to require space here. True to the title, Miss Durbin periodically pauses to make vocals for the yokels, then continues her caravan west in quest of him she loves best.

Studio make-up wizards have splashed health and beauty all over the Deanna countenance for her color debut and, while not anxious to impede the industry one little bit, we must comment that her tousle register equally well in black and white.

Someone discovered that Jerome Kern had been grinding out syncopation for the nation for, lo, these two-score years and, on the pretext of celebrating this achievement, must airwave ado has already been made about his score for the film, probably putting such things as "More and More" and a tuncful tribute to "California" on your hum parade by this time. They're nice songs; but, Mr. Kern, neither one is another "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes."

A quiet fanfare for E. Y. Harburg, though, whose lyrics do more for the Kern melodies than vice versa. Akim Tamiroff as an elfish, selfish range score. Miss Deanna we like better on Fifth Avenue. Go east!

Seek Technical Personnel in Ranks of Canadian Universities; Latest Manpower Move

Plans to comb Canadian universities in search of technical personnel were revealed on Saturday as National Selective Service moved to ease the Dominion's ever-tightening manpower situation.

Arthur MacNamara, Director of N.S.S., has announced his department's intentions to recruit university students for technical duties to fill the needs of the armed forces.

Travelling boards—representative of the technical branches of the Navy and Army with officials of the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel—will soon visit universities to interview graduates for appointments, Mr. MacNamara explained.

Similar action was taken earlier in the war when representatives of the armed forces interviewed engineers enrolled in S.P.S. with a view to selecting skilled men for special technical duties.

While no decision has yet been reached, consideration is also being given to the calling of a meeting of the University Advisory Board of Selective Service. Should such a meeting be held the regulations applying to all university students would come under general review and it is possible the number of students who now are excused from military service would be reduced.

Preference in university excursions goes to students in such essential courses as medicine, engineering, agriculture and education. This policy has been adopted to assure a supply of trained men in these fields for both military and civilian needs.

Students who make their year are allowed to continue their studies but if they fail they are subject to call.

Ex-U.A.S. Men Await Decision

Decision concerning the fate of the 150 members of the recently disbanded University Air Squadron today awaited a meeting of the Joint Services University Training Committee scheduled for tomorrow.

It had been earlier stated by A. B. Fennell, Registrar of the University, that these students would be required to undergo some form of military training to substitute for their no longer necessary aerial instruction. Complete shutdown of R.C.A.F. aircrew recruiting activities removed the need.

Whether the men of the Air Squadron will now don khaki for the remainder of the term is unknown. Possibility also exists that many N.C.O.s will have to forfeit "stripiness" in the switch, and this is reported to be causing much concern from those effected.

Horse & Buggy Civil Service Stumbles On

By NEIL MACDONALD

The average Canadian little realizes to what extent that monstrous government bureau—the Civil Service—controls his daily life. An understanding and appreciation of its important tasks can only be gained by thorough study of its not-altogether-perfect machinery.

The Civil Service of Canada functions under an Act of Parliament passed in 1919, which placed its control under the Civil Service Commission, removing appointments to the public service from the sphere of personal and political patronage. Destroying patronage, basing appointment and promotion on merit only, the Act of 1919 was a real step forward.

However, the approach to civil service problems was negative at that time, in that the Act was designed to prevent something rather than to promote something else. Thus, its regulations are restrictive rather than developing, and the state of mind developed from it negative rather than positive.

The Civil Service Commission is now the largest employer-employee agency in Canada, with some hundred and twenty-five thousand employees coming under its jurisdiction.

The salaries of the three Commissioners remain, however, at $6,000 per annum. The anomalous situation has therefore arisen where the government is willing to pay $6,000 for a job which would command up to ten times that amount in industry for comparable responsibility.

In order to keep close control of hiring and promotion, the Civil Service Commission has centralized all personnel matters within itself, making the Department's personnel offices mere channels for recording attendance and passing out pay cheques. If the Commission had been willing to accept the responsibility implied in taking on the whole management of personnel in a department, to provide sufficient staff to look after all personnel matters properly, and if it had made sincere attempts to develop good personnel relations, there could be no criticism.

The situation has been allowed to deteriorate, however, and the Commission has allowed itself to fossilize within the framework set up by the Act of 1919.

As a whole, it has a lethargic attitude, and is prepared to sit back and let the government war departments run themselves. At the same time, the "temporary" war departments have no legal

SPEAKERS DISCUSS VACCINES, VOCATIONS

EPIDEMICS

"Ka-choo!" Herald of the approach of a cold, gripe or influenza, what sound in winter time is commoner than the oft-heard sneeze or its bothersome catarrhic brother, the cough?

This common but serious affliction, which annually achieves epidemic proportions, was discussed in detail in Convocation Hall by Dr. Ronald Hare, Research Associate of Connaught Laboratories, in another of the Royal Canadian Institute Saturday Night lectures.

Influenza epidemics, he said, are very difficult to handle because the virus travels so swiftly and the scientific methods of isolation and quarantine are of no avail. To combat these epidemics, a vaccine has been prepared although it is still in the experimental stage.

Every century there is a universal epidemic which strikes every country in the world. 21 million people lost their lives in the last epidemic of this type, which took place in 1918.

Dr. Hare worked with Sir Almroth Wright and Sir Alexander Fleming.

MATHEMATICS

Widening of vocational opportunity for graduates of Mathematics and Physics was seen Friday afternoon by Dr. H. B. Speakman, Director of the Ontario Research Foundation, in an address to the M. & P. Society in the Physics Building.

"No longer are the prospects of M. & P. restricted entirely to limits of teaching," he pointed out. Development of new industries—radio, transmission, the X-ray machine and the electron microscope—have increased the number of vocations possible for students in M. & P., he said.

"Too much planning in the choice of a university course by some removed and centralized authority" was condemned by the speaker, who urged that there be more "individual thought" on the important matter.

A graduate of Manchester University, Dr. Speakman has been director of the Research Foundation since 1928. From 1919 to 1928 he was professor of Zoology at the University.

ECONOMICS

Professor Talbot Parsons of Harvard University will be the first speaker in a lecture series in Sociology to be held every Friday at 4 p.m. in the Great Hall of the Economics Building.

Professor Parsons, who visited the university on a lecture series in 1940, will lecture on "Social Structure and Ideology." He is an American sociologist who received his doctor's degree in Germany and has done research in European Sociological theory. He has published a large number of papers, articles and journals and has made a study of the medical profession. Dr. Parsons has also translated the works of Max Weber.

The lectures following Professor Parsons' will be given by Professor H. A. Innis, University of Toronto; Dr. Helen MacGill Hughes, University of Chicago; Professor R. K. Merton of Columbia University; Professor S. D. Clark of the University of Toronto; and Professor Forrest La Violette of McGill University.

Bishop White Stresses Ease Of Learning Lingo of Chinese

"People are amused when I say that Chinese is the easiest language for us to read and understand," stated Bishop W. C. White, Director of the School of Chinese Studies, speaking on "Chinese Language and Literature" at the Royal Ontario Museum last Friday.

Bishop White declared that he was convinced that Chinese culture could not be fully understood without a knowledge of the Chinese language. The latter is represented by separate characters which are known as ideographs or pictographs. While in early China pictographs, representing words by simple pictures, were predominant, today most of the written characters are ideographs.

The Chinese language, continued Bishop White, has only some 420 different sounds. There are 214 radicals under which all characters are indexed in Chinese-English dictionaries. Bishop White explained that, although different dialects are spoken, the basic written language, almost unchanged for centuries, is the same throughout all China. This has given China unity, and has enabled the educated Chinese to read something written 25 years or 25 centuries ago.

One peculiar feature inherent in the language, said Bishop White, is that the same written character represents a noun, verb, preposition or other part of speech of the same family.

Romanization, or the writing of Chinese sounds in roman type, is artificial and causes the full force of the Chinese characters to be lost, stated the Bishop. Besides, difficulty is presented by the fact that sometimes 50 or 60 characters represent the same sound but have different meanings.

Four classes of Chinese literature, the classics, the histories, the philosophers and the poets were mentioned.

In conclusion, Bishop White showed slides of Chinese poetry and read some prose translations from Chinese writings.

Enter "Blues"; Exit Cigarettes

By Mickey Michasiv

Unveiling . . .

Of late, considerable comment has been passed around as to the prospective strength of the current edition of the Varsity Blues basketball aggregation. A large number of prospects turned out for the initial practice a fortnight before that crippling snowstorm, and in the short period that ensued, Coach Mac McCutcheon whipped the aspiring basketball handers into a smaller squad which could be handled more satisfactorily so that the finer points of the game could be instilled. It was then that Mother Nature intervened.

The final line-up has not been attained as yet. However, a handful of Blues-elect looks very promising. Of course, the holdovers from last season's squad are the first to catch the eye in the persons of Gibson, Ryan, Spry, Turner, Booth and Vandemark.

To these six seasoned Varsity-ites add another two, Murray Thompson and Bill Fountain. Both were members of the Big Blue team a few years back and since being discharged from the R.C.A.F. they have been back at their old haunts. Fans will remember that Thompson was a goodly part of the Pendleton R.C.A.F. squad that took the floor to oppose the Blues of last year.

Another two performers with senior experience are Max Grossman and Ah, those last two basketball games! According to the experts who attended, they were possibly the best of the whole year which is adequate proof that the schedule is a good one. We were afraid at one time that all the good games would be over when the finals arrived, but the games that were played the last day of the series proved that we were wrong, very wrong.

In the first game, Meds-S.P.S. defeated Vic A, 15-9 in a close, well-played tussle that kept the spectators cheering to the final whistle. Mickey Barnett played her usual fine game aided and abetted by Jean McPherson and Natalie Staron. The guard-line functioned smoothly and with Hil Vierkotter and Persis Hughes as its inspiration it seemed quite able to handle Vic's attack. Vic, handicapped by the loss of two of their star players, found it a difficult task to handle. Helen Stewart played excellently at forward, and Rowena Smith accomplished the well-nigh impossible feat of effectively guarding Mickey Barnett.

The second game, featuring Vic II and P.H.E. Freshies, was the highlight of the whole series. After a tense, hard-played session, P.H.E. came out victorious by the small margin of 19-11. Dade Barnett and Fran Lee were more than outstanding for the winners and held the team together in the first three quarters when their zone defence didn't quite work. During the last period, however, the defence began to click and the Phys-Eds. played some wonderful basketball. Anne Smith, Joan Robbins, Betty Fullerton and Joan Chalk turned in fine performances for Vic II, especially Betty, who did a superb job as guard. All in all, it was some game and the spectators left the gym feeling that they had seen some real basketball.

WOMEN'S SWIM PRACTICE

Harry Mayzel. While their experience does not automatically bring them a berth on the team, their ball handling seems to ascertain this. In our estimation, both will be heard from in a big way as they are real hustlers.

From the championship Riverdale team come Colin Cranham, McReynolds and Campbell. All three are of high collegiate calibre.

To these add George Starr, Fitch, Himel and a few others whose names have eluded us and you have a fair idea of the team you will cheer through five athletic nights and a number of other exhibition games should you care to come out.

How does it compare to the squad of last year? Well, a team can't afford to lose players like Ken Tettmar, Stu Scott, and Whitey Clayton. And yet, with eight experienced men in the line-up coupled with an exceptionally good freshman crop, prospects are quite bright.

right to run their own personnel problems. The situation has offered many opportunities for clash of personalities, and has proved a definite detriment to the efficiency of the governmental war effort.

The result of the conjunction of the negative approach and the desire for complete control without the means of achieving that control efficiently has been to develop a Civil Service where too often the only requisite for promotion has been length of service in the same department, where youth and ability are discouraged by preferences granted because of age, previous overseas service, or other such irrelevant factors, and where, once an employee is safely ensconced in a position, he may continue there until the end of time, if he preserves sufficient discretion.

All of which does not react to the good of Canada as a whole.

shared by the other artists. An interpretation of extraordinary clarity and depth was the result of such admirable teamwork. Particularly the Andante funebre doloroso with its soft tonal-blending was beautifully done.

The highlights of the second part were a baritone aria from Prince Igor sung by Mr. A. Vantroff, Russian folk and army songs sung by a mixed choir, and several ballet scenes performed by students of the Boris Volkoff Ballet School.

The last numbers and the finale, including a very pretty and spirited ballet on peasant dance themes, were very charming. Our first hearing of the new Soviet anthem left us with a feeling that even from a musical point of view its substitution for the "Internationale" constituted something of a loss.

Veterans' Education

With the increasing number of discharges from the armed services, plans for the education of veterans of this war are being formulated. The program now used by the Department of Veterans' Affairs appears to have been drawn up with more wisdom than the recently passed G.I. Bill of Rights in the United States. To effect an educational policy adequate to the needs of men whose schooling has been interrupted by several years of intensive military training is indeed a difficult problem.

Primarily there are two rights which must not be impinged upon: the aims and purposes of education must not be demoralized, nor, on the other hand, advantage must not be taken of the legitimate privileges of the veterans. The first concern of any returned man will be that of getting a job. The labor market will be flooded with thousands of men when demobilization is complete. The resulting unemployment will create a demand, on the part of the veteran, for a type of training which he thinks will ensure him employment. The greater percentage of discharged men will then desire vocational training or its equivalent. It is quite feasible that some universities, in attempting to meet the requirements of these men, will append such courses to their curricula. The institution of these courses would not only lower academic standards but would also be unfair to the veteran. In most cases the type of training with which the servicemen hope to obtain jobs requires only a few weeks. To keep a man at university under the guise of learning something which is merely pure padding is not fair to either the student or the department which pays his tuition to the university. At American universities, such an attitude is gradually passing from the potential into the actual.

Again, there is the possibility that the free tuition offered to returning men might merely be used as an avenue of escape from widespread unemployment. Universities must not become houses of refuge in which the unemployed will bide their time. Some precaution for the maintenance of scholarship must be taken in order to ensure education only for those who are capable of assimilating it. It is true that there are many students in past years who have attended university without profiting from it. But the effecting of such a scholarship basis would certainly lay the foundation for the rebuilding of a university system and would diminish former laxity regarding academic work.

The solution of unemployment belongs to the realm of economics rather than education. The sphere of education in its present condition extends only to those for whom it can do something. In Canada the Department of Veterans' Affairs utilizes a certain amount of discrimination regarding the entrance of servicemen to the university. It is an evaluation which we hope will continue lest we fall into the tendencies of our southern neighbors.

Stress Christian Reconstruction At World Mission Conference

"We must have reconstruction by Christians as well as by governments," stated Dr. Douglas V. Steere in an address to The Christian World Mission Conference held last week-end in Wycliffe College and sponsored by the Student Christian Movement of Canada.

Dr. Steere, professor of Philosophy at Haverford College, Pa., stressed the urgency for Christians to put their faith into practice. "Christianity," he points out, "is not only Evangelism and personal religion, but it requires acts and deeds."

The general topic for Saturday's meeting was "The Christian Vocation." Panel presentations in the morning introduced, to students from all over Canada, Dr. E. K. Higdon, secretary of the United Christian Missionary Society; Dr. Stella Cheng, missionary from China; and Rev. Victor Santandrian, of Ceylon. Round-table discussions were led by Dr. S. M. Cavert, Dr. M. O. Williams and Dr. Stanley Rycroft.

Dr. Winburn Thomas, executive secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, told the gathering, "Any man can use Christian principles in any job. To do good in the world, no matter where we are, we must know what we are doing, know what is going on in the country, take active part in the life of that country, and put our hearts in our work."

Dr. Ruth Seabury, author of "Flight to Destiny," soon to be published, led further discussion in the evenings.

"There is no great life without a great cause," stated Dr. Jesse Wilson, missionary to Japan and secretary of the American Baptist Board of Foreign Missions.

Dr. Winburn Thomas spoke again on "Post-war Missions" on Sunday afternoon at the Royal York Hotel, where the student conference joined with the Foreign Missions Conference, also being held in Toronto this week-end.

"If Jesus found prayer necessary and desirable, who are we to preach Evangelism if we do not enter into prayer as we should?" asked Dr. John R. Mott, speaking on "Evangelism and Present Imperatives in Christian Missions."

During the week-end, Dr. F. W. Dillstone of Wycliffe College led the students in three periods of Bible study.

A supplement to the missions was held on Monday especially for students of the Church Training Schools and Theological Colleges, dealing with new methods of Evangelism for these modern times.

Dr. John A. Mackay led a discussion on whether the Church has a faith and message adequate for the new age.

Recreation each night consisted of games, folk dancing, square dancing, and singing. The week-end's activities were brought to a close by a quiet vesper service in Wycliffe Chapel.

Hart House Art Gallery

This month Hart House Art Gallery is displaying an exhibition of pictures by one of the very outstanding figures in the history of Canadian painting. F. H. Varley came to Canada from England in 1912 and together with Tom Thomson became one of the first Canadian artists.

Maturity conveyed by depth and richness in the use of color is one of the keynotes in Mr. Varley's works. He seems to be interested in a great variety of subjects both in landscape and in figure or portrait painting. Although some of the nature studies reveal a similarity to Tom Thomson in setting, they are still unique and individual in character: the Tree, for instance, contains many of the colors found out

Thomson's palette, but the way in which they are merged into one another and arranged gives quite a different yet majestic effect. Night Ferry is the most impressive picture of the exhibit. Through a subtle use of color and movement rather than by means of the subject represented the artist manages to bring into it an atmosphere of quietness and excitement at the same time.

Unlike many Canadian artists, Mr. Varley does not confine his painting to landscapes alone; his figures and portraits, though possessed of little originality in style, are convincing and characteristic. Above all, in the character study of Liouel, he succeeds very well in projecting an expression of benevolent nonchalance and amiability mingled with personal valor and even some sort of heroism.

Prof. H. S. Ellis
Speaks Tomorrow

Professor Howard S. Ellis, presently on leave to the Federal Reserve Board in Washington, D.C., will speak on "Competition and Welfare" at 5 p.m. tomorrow in the Economics Building.

Professor Ellis is noted for his economic and monetary theories, and is the author of several books, the most recent of which is "Exchange Control in Central Europe."

He attacks institutional rigidities as accounting for the stagnation in our present economic system, and suggests the need for certain elements of flexibility into the economic structure. In the American Economic Review, he recently stated:

"Inequality of wealth and income must be vastly decreased. Investment opportunities for capital and careers open to the talents must be widely distributed if a system is to be competitive."

Professor Ellis attended the Universities of Michigan and Harvard and has since taught at Michigan and California.

A 21-year-old former co-ed at the University now bears a numerical distinction all of her own. Ottawa officials of the Women's Naval Division were interested to discover who would be the 6,000th Wren to enlist. And, as you would expect, she was a Smith.

She is Wren Motor Transport Dora Louise Smith, who interrupted her third year of a commerce and finance course here last October to enlist. Having finished her elementary training at H.M.C.S. Comestoga, Galt, she is now stationed at H.M.C.S. Cornwallis, N.S.

Her father, Dr. George F. Smith, Bloor Street, says that officials did not accept her as a recruit until they learned she knew how to drive a truck and tractor—an art she picked up while working on a farm two summers ago.

The Varsity Reviews

The red-jacketed Christmas Trinity Review that has come to hand suffers throughout from lack of light and air, unless you are of the school that thinks ultra-modern poetry is just funny.

The two great divisions of this genre, the staccato and the serpentine, are here in their glory, represented most fully by Phyllis Langstaff's Memorial to a Remote Lady and O. R. Orr's The Temperate One respectively. These pieces are adequately, indeed triumphantly characteristic of the Trinity School: the former jerks willy-nilly on to a one-word finale, the latter suavely mingles flies, tarnished silver, and the adulthood of whiskey-bottles in a more than Apocalyptic obscurity; and on these two commandments hang T. S. Eliot and the Prophets.

No one but Mr. Orr has attempted to be serpentine, however, and Patricia Heighington's University in Werthine, Rose Marie Moore's Midnight, and Catherine Blist's The Infinite Soul attempt the tortuous with less success than Miss Langstaff. Midnight, indeed, errs on the side of comprehensibility, and we can only advise Miss Moore to cultivate her Muse in private until she can be obscure with the best of them.

Diana Goldsborough's On Retreating from Modern Poetry is deplorably reactionary. "The idea distends in mute mass-suffering" is well enough as a statement of modern canons, though why the writer should choose to poke fun at these is beyond us. She must learn to Move with the Times. Surely she knows that polish in verse has been dead since Tennyson?

Lynn Howard's What is the Meaning of Yonder Star, Dear Father? is frankly and anachronistically jolly, and we question the wisdom of including it in this collection. On reading it, we laughed, at first gaily, then heartily; and were consequently in the wrong frame of mind to appreciate most of the other verse offerings. For this the editors of The Review have only themselves to thank.

Mary McLachlin in Black Cat has courageously attempted a sonnet, a once-popular form of verse invented by an obscure Dago named Petrarch, but unfortunately the neatness of her phrasing is marred by so passé a form. We suppose some writers will never get up-to-date.

A. G. McKay's Capriccio stands out among the prose, with verbal adeptness and interesting psychology. R. D. Parlow's Reverie has a neat theme, but the climax fails to be clear-cut.

Dave Kirkwood in Magnum in Parvo thoughtfully grinds his accustomed axe, that the University is the microcosm of democracy. The writing is sound and unpretentious, a phrase that covers the rest of the issue's prose.

Special congratulations are due to the editor for his judicious appreciation of Provost Cosgrave.

The Review has shaped up well since the start of the University year. Its offerings display more solidity than those of any competitor; and if they run a bit turgid—well, it is better to fail boldly than to succeed safely. Or so we think.

Field Naturalists' Club
Hear Guest Speakers

At the first meeting in 1945 of the Toronto Field Naturalists' Club, held last night in the theatre of the Museum, Professor T. F. McIlwraith, the president of the club, reviewed the events of the last outing and announced the next one to Cedarvale Ravine on Saturday, January 13.

Dr. J. G. Oughton, first speaker of the evening, described his journey to Great Slave Lake this summer. Dr. Oughton was one of the expedition in the survey of the fisheries. He described his voyage, first on the train and then on the river steamer called the Beaver Lake. His task was to examine the little animals embedded in the river mud.

"Ecology means everything that we see out of doors. It can be small or large depending on how we make it," said Professor A. F. Coventry. "It covers a very large field and draws on every science, including anatomy, taxonomy, physiology, and meteorology." The food chain of nature, he continued, is quite beyond the imagination. For instance, eleven tons of grass feed sixty-five pounds of mice that feed half a pound of owl.

Dr. Norma Ford Walker showed a film taken last summer at Camp Billie Bear which fifty-two naturalists attended. The color film showed a spider with an egg in its mouth, two turtles, a snake and some candid camera shots of the members.

"I never knew that the great horned owl could whistle," said Professor R. M. Samders. "It is known to utter short two-syllable hoots, but not to whistle in different keys. I also carried on a conversation with a screeching owl."

The public is cordially invited.

Varsity Athletic Nights
Feature Fun and Frolic

By Bert Wilkes

Now that January is getting under way, thoughts are toward the Varsity Athletic Nights. These weekly social affairs, which start on January 27, have all the things necessary to make your date with a dream complete.

To start with, when you get down to the big gym about 7:30 p.m., you will be just in time to see the famed Varsity Blue Basketball Squad warming up for their game with another outstanding quintet from the province. If you have not the craze for basketball or feel that you would like to participate in other sports yourself, there are numerous games planned by the committees in charge. Ping-pong tables, croquet boards, checkers and chess for the intellectuals, and rumor has it that the odd pin-ball machine might be produced for more daring souls.

This is, however, only one half of the gigantic evening. After the basketball

No-Traveling Rule
Remains Unbroken

A step towards the revival of inter-collegiate sport was made last week when the Varsity Friday Night Hockey League was formed. Toronto Varsity's entry in the league will be our Blues, the team which was supposedly only to play exhibitions this year. The other members of the league are the H.M.C.S. York "Bulldogs," Victory Aircraft, a Watson's A.C., comprising a four-team group.

There will be no travelling involved for any of the teams so the Blues will not be breaking the C.I.A.U. ruling forbidding this. Each Friday night there will be a doubleheader at the Arena, the first game starting at 8 p.m., and the second at 9:30. Servicemen will be admitted free of charge, and students can gain entrance likewise on presentation of their admit-to-lectures cards. The price to the general public will be 35 cents.

The games will consist of three fifteen-minute periods with intermissions between, and time-outs will be called only in the last frame. This is similar to the set-up in the Mercantile League at Varsity. The games will be played each Friday night, with the exception of January 26, and start this week and continue through until the 23rd of February. Each team will thus play a total of six games. The top two at the end of the regular schedule will play home and home games on the next two Fridays.

The referees for the league will be Garney Large and Pat Patterson, both well known in the O.H.A.

Endicott to Open
Lecture Series

Prof. N. J. Endicott will open the series of lectures on Representative English Writers and the Theme of Liberty with a discussion of Sir Thomas More, at 4:30 p.m. in Room 8, U.C., on Thursday, Jan. 11.

"I believe that this is a very appropriate topic at a time like this," said Prof. R. D. C. Finch. The theme of liberty has not before been discussed in this series of lectures in University College. This year two members of the Department of Modern History have cooperated and will speak on Lord Acton and Morley.

Dr. Sidney Smith will close the series with "The Concept of Liberty in English Law," thus summing up the practical application of liberty.

The public is cordially invited.

game has reached its climax and the Blues have chalked up another victory, stalwart lads appear from nowhere and before you know it the floor is cleared for dancing. For those more hardy creatures there is always a hill-billy or mountaineer band holding forth in the upper gym. In this area no holds are barred, and the music blares forth until everyone has dropped with exhaustion. For those more sedate individuals, movies will be shown in the Debates room.

In the past these nights have been widely acclaimed by the student body as a whole because it lets them get together informally and relax.

For the first of these Athletic Nights, scheduled for the 27th of this month, University College, P.H.E. and Knox College will be hosts. The other colleges and faculties will take turns as hosts for the remaining four nights.

CHINESE NO EASE

Rising from a perusal of yesterday's Varsity, King Walleye Potboiler of the Seabiscuit Islands, currently having his shark-tooth necklace X-rayed at the Dental College, took violent exception to the statement of Bishop W. C. T. U.
Tight of the School of Chinese Studies, that "Chinese is the easiest language in the world to use."

Attesting to the veracity of his statement with the traditional Ulu invocation to the Lord High Hot Water Bottle, which runs

משה אוישער

and which may be roughly translated
"It Never Leaks but it Bursts," the King proceeded to give examples.

At first The Varsity had difficulty understanding the Chief's statement, but as soon as it became used to his custom of shutting his mouth tight and talking English through his ears (an ability resulting from the inheritance of an ear rings from each of two grandmothers accustomed to let English go in one ear and out the other) there was no difficulty at all.

"Zulu, as you know," he said, outlining his most cogent argument, "is the universal language. For instance, it is used to the exclusion of all other tongues by poets in the Trinity Review. And it must be simple," he added, in a burst of incandescent logic, "or nobody at Trinity would be able to understand it."

Warning to his hereditary subject,
Potboiler continued: "Observe the simplicity of Zulu! Three dots of it at the end of a line in the Review will express the most transcendent conceptions.
Furthermore, as every Review reader knows, capital letters are dispensed with.
This enables the poet to concentrate on the higher mysteries, and also to type with only one finger."

Opening the current issue, he pointed to a glowing example:

which can be roughly translated, ah, life . . .
epicure fragments littered the wall-dust . . .
he lay ignominious, shattered, feet kicking dust,
Humpty . . .

Dumpty . . .
from his pinnacle fall . . .
crabbling, scabbling, cementing . . . glueing . . .
sensitive to me no other . . .
equines and varlets of the monarch strove . . .
it lay beyond their powers.

*First to grasp the new idiom was
The Varsity's erudite and impeccable
Managing Editor, Pongirdle McStay, who is even more adept in being able to talk through his hat.

Face-Off . . .

This Friday night our Blues step out onto the ice up at the Arena to oppose H.M.C.S. Bulldogs in what should be one swell game of hockey. We are now in a league, along with three other teams, the Yorkers, Watson's Athletic Club, and Victory Aircraft. And a good thing, too. What with hockey
Friday night and Athletic Nights on Saturday, nobody can say that there's no chance to give out with some of the good old intercollegiate spirit.

The whole idea of getting this league together was to promote competition among the many teams who were around Toronto but could not seem to get satisfactory connections with any existing league. Maybe it will serve the added purpose of giving the Blues some incentive to go out and really play, as Navy at least have a team which has shown itself to have plenty of power in its line-up. Name players like Curry, Love, Davey, and others are not to be taken lightly at any time. They are also reputed to have a large following turning out at their games. We hope as many as possible of our fellows and gals among our student body will do as much for the Blues when you get that
"what to do" feeling of a Friday night.
After all, it won't cost you a cent even, unless you decide to patronize the refreshment booth provided for the purpose, and you'll see two swell games of hockey. If Victory Aircraft can keep crowds coming out to their games at 35 cents a head, we ought to be able to do as much or better when its for nothing!

Those of you who do come to the games will see a good representative Varsity team. Practically every faculty on the campus boasts one member of the team. These fellows have spent a lot of time practising, under the watchful eyes of Ace Bailey who, incidentally, is also devoting a lot of time to the club and really deserves your support.
We're lucky to have a guy like Ace to coach us.

By the way, there's an exhibition game of the Blues tonight at Ravina Gardens at 9 p.m. with Toronto Army of the Armed Services League, in case any of you are interested.

The team is working out every Monday and Friday night at the Arena these days and promises to be in good shape for the opening game.
It was too bad to lose Bob Murray.
He was hit in the ankle with a puck and suffered a chipped bone, the whole ankle later becoming infected. But aside from this unforeseen injury, everyone is raring to go. In goal you will likely find Davidson, Bryans or McCombe. On defence you will see a two-man combination from amongst Bain, Hart, Shand, Copp, Wade and Callahan. Up forward will be a threesome from Lawlor, Boa, Walker, Hughes, Smythe, Adam, Anderson and Lawson. That's the works, but there's enough good material there to give even that St. Mike's Junior A team a battle. And maybe they will, later on. That game we want to see.

WOMEN'S SWIM PRACTICE

Today at U.T.S. pool (Bloor and Spadina), 7:30 to 8:15 p.m., special instruction in diving, ornamental and style; 8:15 to 9 p.m., instruction in speed swimming. Women from all years, any faculty or college, who want to practise for the coming swimming meet are welcome.

Women

By Janice Murray

Although It's Snowing . . .

We think that the baseball question deserves to be raised once and for all.
The Women's Athletic Directorate has a problem on its already muchly prob-lemed hands. This year for the first time in some years, as most of us know, softball was organized as a major sport.
However, in this year's organization is missed the strictures placed upon a major sport, in that it was treated as a minor sport in so far as medical rules were concerned.

Treatment as a major sport has in the past killed baseball. Of that we are sure.
The problem which lies before the Athletic Directorate now is, Will such treatment kill it again? The consensus of opinion is that it will.

The only answer, if this is the conclusion finally reached, is to treat this growing and thriving sport as a minor sport, eliminating a University Head of Baseball and moving it back to the stage where the various Heads in the Colleges challenge other College Heads.
This would waive the medical rules concerning participation in two major sports in a term, and would allow anyone to play, whether she played basketball, the conflicting sport in question, or not.

The difficulty which will face all College Directories will then be the question of whether baseball is worth while even bothering about in the College.
To this we would emphatically answer
"Yes." We think that even if the University Directorate decides to drop baseball from its sports roster, it should be kept alive in the Colleges. We also think that if, in the future, the Directorate should see that the people who were playing softball were different from those playing basketball, it should be revived, given a shot in the arm, a Head, and the blessings of the Directorate to become a major sport.

Meanwhile, although it looks necessary either to lower its category or else see it fall altogether, we figuratively weep a few tears for the untimely death of Intramural Organized baseball.

Discharged U.A.S. Men Will Enter C.O.T.C., To Receive Parade Credits

Arrangements for Training are Under Way; Amount of Previous Training Determines C.O.T.C. Status

A WEEK'S WAIT EXPECTED

The Joint Services University Training Committee, in an effort to provide military training for the members of U.A.S., asked the officers of the C.O.T.C. at a meeting yesterday morning if it would be possible for them to furnish the necessary training.

Lieutenant-Colonel W. S. Wilson of the C.O.T.C. stated that the C.O.T.C. would endeavor to provide the training as requested. It is expected that those members of U.A.S. with sufficient previous army training will be accepted for the First Battalion. Those without previous army training will probably be accepted by the Second Battalion.

Instructions as to their transfer will be given to these men at the time of discharge from the U.A.S.

The C.O.T.C. will not be free to register any student until he is able to furnish proof of discharge from U.A.S. It is not anticipated that arrangements for training can be completed before next week at the earliest, Captain J. C. Evans, Adjutant of the Second Battalion, stated.

The University, through the Committee, is making every effort to see that the student personnel will not suffer through this decision of the Air Force, he said.

The general regulations governing the reduction of training during the year to 60 hours applies equally to all services. Men will be credited with all parades taken to date.

Retired Pastor Speaks to VCF

The University College V.C.F. group was addressed, at its first meeting of the new year yesterday, by Canon H. H. Haslam.

Canon Haslam discussed the meaning of the name, "Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship," treating the subject by dwelling on the significance of each word in it.

A graduate of University and Wy-cliffe Colleges, Canon Haslam spent fifteen years as a missionary in India. He has recently retired to Toronto after a pastorate in St. John, N.B.

Ottawa Calling

BY-ELECTION

By Neil MacDonald

The by-election in Grey North, called for February 5, is giving the political prophets of Ottawa some headaches. General McNaughton, the Minister of National Defence, is the Liberal candidate, nominated when the Liberal member resigned to open a seat for the General, who has to find himself a seat in order to remain a Cabinet Minister. McNaughton is opposed by a strong Conservative candidate, who retired from the majority of Owen Sound in order to enter the federal field. The Co-operative Commonwealth Federation has also indicated its intention of running a candidate.

One of the questions which is bothering the political prophets is how the Liberals are going to develop any campaign against Mr. Cnsé, except to say that Liberals should vote for the Liberal candidate and that General McNaughton's election is necessary for the efficient prosecution of the war. In the last two municipal elections, Garfield Case has been made mayor by acclamation, and it is conceded that, by leaving

ANNUAL CAMERA CLUB EXHIBITION

All members of Hart House who intend to contribute to the annual exhibition of photographs arranged by the Hart House Camera Club are asked to note that all entries must be handed in to the hall porter by 6 p.m. on Thursday, 11th January. The exhibition will open on Tuesday, 16th January.

Theatre Opening Said Successful

According to a report of the Board of Syndics of Hart House Theatre received by the Varsity yesterday, 9,800 persons attended performances in the theatre during its experimental re-opening this year from November 6 to December 15.

Eight campus groups used the theatre to produce 21 performances of variety shows as follows: Victoria College Dramatic Society, "She Stoops to Conquer"; University College Literary and Athletic Society, "U.C. Follies Revue"; University College Players' Guild, "Thunder Rock"; University College French Club, "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme"; University of Toronto Engineering Society, "School Nite"; St. Michael's College, "Murder in a Nursery"; Victoria College Music Club, "H.M.S. Pinafore"; Faculty of Dentistry, "Dentastics."

The theatre was staffed with an electrician, ticket taker, stage-dorman and manager. Reserved seat tickets were supplied to those groups desiring them and considerable use was made by the various societies of the theatre box office in connection with the sale of tickets.

According to W. R. Dymond, manager of the theatre, although considerable use was made of the theatre's scenery and equipment, it remains in good condition because of the care exercised by the various campus organizations.

On the left is Lieutenant-Colonel H. H. Madill, V.D., B.A.Sc., F.R.A.I.C., resigning Officer Commanding of the Toronto contingent of the C.O.T.C., and on the right is his successor, Lieutenant-Colonel W. S. Wilson, E.D., B.A.Sc., former Officer Commanding of the Second Battalion of the Toronto contingent. Lt.-Col. Madill is head of the School of Architecture and has been an officer in the C.O.T.C. since 1914, and Officer Commanding since 1935. Lt.-Col. Wilson is the Assistant Dean and Secretary of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering.

Tapeworms? Why, Yes! You May Even Have One

Do you know how many types of garbage you feed to your pigs, and change your sanitation by improving your drainage.

The tapeworm is the longest creature on earth. It can grow to a length of from 30 to 75 feet in your intestines. "But tell them that there is nothing to worry about," said Dr. J. P. Oughton, in charge of the exhibit. "We all have these animals inside us without knowing it. They don't bother us. As a matter of fact, many people have several of these worms in their intestines."

"This exhibit took several of us three to four months of hard work," added T. B. Kurata, who is in charge of the actual displaying of the exhibit. "We did not have very much trouble with getting the specimens because they are quite frequent. The plaster moulds took us longest."

Another characteristic of the beef, fish, and pork tapeworms is that they can be divided and they still live and multiply. If you take a drug that acts like a strong laxative, you can be cured of these innocent parasites.

What does one of them look like? Well, they have a toughened or thickened outer skin, sluggish motion, anchoring devices, and enlarged reproductive systems.

As Dean Swift wrote:
"So, naturalists, observe a flea
Has smaller fleas that on him prey
And these have smaller still to bite 'em
And so proceed ad infinitum."

New Letters Club Will Review Wolfe

"A symposium on a tortured soul" is Bob Weaver's statement of the theme of tomorrow night's meeting of the U.C. Modern Letters Club in the Women's Union, at which four members will present papers on the life and work of Thomas Wolfe.

A personal novelist who spent his life seeking for the clue to the meaning of existence, and in the opinion of some critics one of the few geniuses America has produced, Wolfe has been chosen as the first subject on a program that hopes to deal with subjects lying off the beaten track of the English courses.

Following the four papers, there will be an open discussion and refreshments.

Open to anyone interested in modern letters, the club was founded last December as a meeting-place and stamping-ground for U.C. students with a leaning toward creative writing and literary appreciation. Meetings are to be organized around papers delivered by the members themselves, avoiding the common policy of calling on guest speakers.

Pointing out that the attendance at Thursday night's opener would condition club activities for the remainder of the term, Weaver urged students not to stay away merely because they feared "just another lecture."

"Our style will be as far from that of the classroom as possible," he stated. "We are looking forward to spitting of skulls and a really rip-roaring discussion."

O.C. SINCE 1935

Lieutenant-Colonel H. H. Madill, O.C., University of Toronto Contingent, C.O.T.C., announced to The Varsity last night that he has resigned from command of the C.O.T.C. and that authority has been received from N.D. H.Q. for Lieutenant-Colonel W. S. Wilson, E.D., former second-in-command, to take over the newly vacated post.

Lt.-Col. Madill said: "The main reason for my resignation is not because I am dissatisfied or haven't enjoyed the work, but is due to the fact that I will require more time to perform my duties as head of the School of Architecture."

In a letter to the officers of the C.O.T.C., he stated: "It has been my honor and privilege to be commanding officer of the Contingent since 1935. The normal tenure of command would have terminated in 1939. Each year, when the command has been renewed, Lt.-Col. Wilson and the University authorities have seen fit to ask me to continue and to say that they felt that this was in the best interests of all concerned. I feel that this is no longer the case and it gives me great pleasure for Lt.-Col. Wilson to take command before the war is over."

'The Budworm' Coming.. Soon

Government entomologist Dr. C. E. Atwood will speak at the January meeting of the Foresters' Club in the Music Room in Hart House on Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

Dr. Atwood is assistant entomologist in the Dominion Department of Agriculture. He will be in Toronto at a conference and has consented to address the club on "The Spruce Budworm Menace," a menace which is considered by some to be more serious than forest fires to the nation's forests.

Dr. Atwood will come from Sault Ste. Marie, where the Dominion government is building a new $65,000 laboratory.

seems to have been evolved. As for a poem by Jean Preston, entitled (for the reader's information) Pow, it can be classed with the two articles on November's production of She Stoops to Conquer, the unnecessary Men's and Women's Sports pages, the review of Homo the Sap (yes, even now!) and the inevitable Don't-Use-Your-Telephone-in-Wartime plug as a symptom of editorial desperation.

All this time we have been postulating of Marion Cooper's Mademoiselle-Rites, which manages to deal with its subject sincerely and without histrionics while at the same time remaining eminently readable.

Howard Lacey's Parody on Horace is the cleverest contribution in the book, while the current edition of Incidentally aspires for that crown and, as usual, falls very flat. We intend to keep panning this feature until it takes life or drops out; the theme is lifted from The Varsity's "Hither," and the gags in the (Continued on page 4)

The Board of Syndics of Hart House Theatre have released a report on the activities of the recently-completed season. The opening of the Theatre to campus productions for a period of five weeks was experimental in nature, and judging by the tone of the report, the experiment was a success. Much of the success is due to the efficient management of Mr. Bill Dymond, who handled the manifold problems of re-opening the Theatre in a very capable manner.

The contribution of a campus theatre to the cultural life and spirit of the University cannot be over-estimated. It was only when the difficulties of staging off-campus productions became apparent after the original closing of the theatre, that an S.A.C. Committee headed by Rex Wilson, former editor of The Varsity, and Art Gorman, undertook to solve the problems that brought on the closing. The Board of Syndics were only too glad to co-operate with the committee and accept the makeshift solutions offered. Art Gorman drew up an estimate which paralleled the Board's estimate of costs and the committee was successful in procuring the services of Mr. Bill Dymond as part-time manager.

The co-operation of the student body was the only unknown element in the experiment and this was not found to be wanting. In many of the productions staged, the students aided the management by providing much of their own scenery and sets. Although considerable use was made of the theatre's equipment, it has, on the whole, remained in good condition because care was exercised by the students.

It is thought, that because of the success of the venture and the enthusiasm with which it was received by the student body, it will be repeated next year. And it is to be hoped that the time is not too far distant when the campus Theatre will enjoy a full season of productions and a revival of the Drama Festival.

"The Arts of Peace"

In these days of practical and budgeted living when the value of the liberal arts is so often challenged, sharp controversy has arisen over the exact meaning of the word "education". Numerous articles and books dealing with the question of whether it implies, as it did to the Greeks, ability to enjoy one's leisure, or, as the emphasis on things practical today suggests ability to earn one's living, have been written by authorities on modern education. We think, however, that the best definition of education was written three hundred years ago by John Milton who said that its primary purpose was to create character. "I call a complete and generous education," he said, "one which fits a man to perform justly, skillfully, and magnanimously all the offices both private and public of peace and war".

The purpose of education, Milton implies here, is to produce a human being capable of applying native intelligence broadened by learning. He does not distinguish between the arts and sciences; rather he stresses that they are complementary and have their place side by side in a "complete and generous education." It is of course rarely possible to achieve proficiency in both in this day of specialization. All learning, however, is wasted if it results only in an impressive fund of knowledge; it is successful only if it leads to an alertness of the brains. A degree in arts or sciences is worthless unless it carries with it what is often a somewhat rare commodity—common sense. We have, however, dearly bought proof to show that education has succeeded in at least half of what Milton considered was its aim. In every newspaper we pick up, we read of men who have performed justly, skillfully, and magnanimously the offices of war. They prove that education has helped to make them, as Milton said, "brave men, worthy patriots, dear to God, and famous to all ages."

But what of peace? "War has made great, many whom peace has made small", because, "If after being released from the toils of war, you neglect the arts of peace . . . your peace will be only a more distressing war, and that which you imagine liberty will prove the worst of slavery". Milton knew that the duties of peace are harder and more constant though perhaps less obvious than those of war. We were aware in the last war that relentless effort was needed to obtain victory, what we did not realize was the necessity of continuing the effort after hostilities had ceased. All our leaders recognize that our hopes for any sort of world security after this war are based on international understanding and co-operation, and they assure us that everything will be done to secure the goodwill of all countries. It is however easier for nations, as for individuals to work in concord together when under stress. A common fear will force agreements which self interest in normal times would never allow. Therefore the peace that we hope is approaching, if it is to be of any duration, will demand all the intelligence, learning, and understanding of which we as a people are capable.

The present conflict has demanded, and developed, men trained in the arts of war. But peace will demand, even more importantly, men trained to meet the more exacting demands of a feverish society, wallowing in the wake of war. Only if we have such men can we have unity in our midst, satisfactory relations in foreign affairs, and stability in our economics—without which liberty is indeed the worst of slaveries. It would be foolishness to assert that only by spending four years in college can one become equipped to perform these duties. But it can, and should be, forcefully advanced, that a university presents the greatest opportunity to develop the necessary qualities.

Last term, we published a letter from a former member of The Varsity staff, now serving in the forces. The theme of this letter was that while the government is prepared to send demobilized servicemen to university, the scheme still has to be sold to them. Many of these men planned to go to college before they enlisted; however, at the present time they doubt whether, after the years spent in non-constructive activity, the time required to complete a university course would make it worth while. Individual cases, of course, differ, but we feel that these years would rarely be 'wasted'.

Romanticism En Masse

Massey Hall

Nineteenth century romantic music was featured on last night's Toronto Symphony Orchestra programme with Kathleen Parlow as guest artist in the Saint-Saens Violin Concerto in B Minor.

Miss Parlow's performance was inspiring as usual and the orchestra was, as usual, too loud, continually showing a tendency to overshadow the violin. This was especially noticeable in the first movement, in which there are quite a lot of low notes on the violin. Miss Parlow's lower notes are not nearly as brilliant as her higher ones. The second movement contains an unusual passage of extremely difficult harmonic arpeggios which Miss Parlow executed with ease, where many lesser performers would fall by the wayside. The genius of the composer is caught sight of in the brilliant third movement. The spirited violinistic passages and lilting melodies inspired both soloist and orchestra to the high spot of the evening.

It is remarkable that Miss Parlow should find the time and energy to perform with the orchestra. Demands on time by teaching, quartet concerts and radio programs do not leave much extra time in which to keep up terrific memory and technical feats that solo work requires. After all this time, Miss Parlow still retains her firm technique and brilliant

Villain Shutupted As Organ Uppeded

Once upon a time Susie was browsing in the stacks when she came across a pile of loose paper with printing on it that started something like this:

"K-1, P-3, over and under and under and over and the old cow died of mummy dust. 123456789 and move the king under the shower, break open the top and sprinkle with a deft transposition into C sharp minor 987654321. Her-rings are good today."

Susie didn't know that this was a minor work by James Joyce that had lost its cover. She took it home and started to knit an angora sweater according to its instructions. She knitted and knitted and the more she knitted the more the sweater began looking like a striped tea cosy for a street-car.

Having shipped the Trolley Tea Cosy off to the T.T.C., Susie trotted back to the Library with the book. It was a blizzard day and when Susie wasn't looking a page from the top of the pile was wafted by a mischievous breeze right into the second story window of the Household Science building.

The Household Scientists were delighted to find a recipe for Haggis that they hadn't seen before, so they got out all their pots and pans and started to work. They powdered the crows' feet and mixed the poison ivy, shoe laces, onions, kumquats, typewriter ribbons, left goloshes, and super-suds mille shakes. But just at this point they reached an impasse with the Museum authorities about the mummy-dust, so, not without regret, they dumped what they had mixed so far into the furnace.

Next morning the Superintendent couldn't believe his eyes. Every radiator in the University had turned a bilious green.

On the very steps of the Library, Susie remembered that she was overdue for her music lesson, so she dashed right over to the Conservatory. Dr. Squeaky Villain was in an awful mood that day, and when Susie hit her 17th wrong note he scattered papers all over the room in a frenzy. When they picked them up, a dozen pages of the disintegrating book of Joyce got mixed with the works Dr. Villain was due to play at Convocation Hall that afternoon.

Dr. Villain started off easily enough, but when he got to the fourth page he started pulling out stop after stop, and the chaos of sound roared louder and louder, till the very building trembled and The Varsity critic got very uncomfortable. All at once the organist tramped hard on several pedals and the organ exploded with a roar, and a rush of compressed air blew fifty-three people out through the roof of Convocation Hall. One of them was picked up in mid-air by a passing Lancaster, but was turned down for flat feet.

The blast also scattered the guilty pages far and wide once more, and one of them was wafted into the Hart House chess room, where two enthusiasts seized upon it as a rare example of the tournament manoeuvre known as the Hop-scotch Gambit.

When they started working it out on the board, they got into trouble with the heroic proportions of the play and had to move off the board altogether. Half way down the stairs they even added the Warden's Cuspidor as an extra pawn. The game broke up when a passing Swimming Instructor found them playing on the checkered bottom of Hart House pool, and made them get out and remove their shoes.

The precious bit of paper seized this opportunity to dive down the drain, where it constipated the entire plumbing system until the mounting water-pressure could be restrained no longer. The entire University blew up and they picked President Dody's garters off a tree in High Park.

So we see why James Joyce is called "a powerful writer."

U.C. Upsets Meds 3-1 In Hockey Opener

A greatly underrated U.C. team knocked off a powerful Meds squad by a 3-1 score in yesterday's hockey game played at Varsity Arena. The Artsmen, last year's Jennings Cup champs, were figured to lose to the well-coached and experienced Meds team. The U.C. team was filled with new faces, especially on the forward lines where Davidson, Ferguson, and Thompson are all first-year men. Doug Davidson, one of the Varsity Blues goalies, is the Red and White net-minder and played a sparkling game. The Meds forward lines were repeatedly blocked by the U.C. defence of Wade, Hart and Bain, who all played for Varsity. Bryans, in goal, stopped most of the shots at the doctors and the 3 which did hit the twine behind him were unstopable.

Lawler notched the only Meds' goal after four minutes of the first period when he picked up Casswell's rebound and parked in behind Davidson. U.C. finally broke through when rookie Pete Ferguson grabbed Furry's rebound and shot the puck into the upper right corner. U.C.'s strong defence broke up every Meds rush and sent the rubber back up to the forwards. Davidson skated through the medical defence to retrieve Hart's rebound and banged the disc behind Bryans for U.C.'s second goal.

After the intermission, play ranged up and down the ice, with Meds seldom penetrating the U.C. end zone. Furry intercepted a Meds pass at their blue-line, held the puck for a second and then passed the rubber to Bain, who skated right in on Bryans and scored, to clinch the game.

MacIntyre, Lawler and Fyfe starred for Meds but were still unable to get

Relay Race Of Forty Teams Won by Meds

Strong entries from Medicine dominated this week's Interfaculty track meet, which consisted of a three-lap relay. There was abnormally heavy traffic on the Hart House track Monday and Tuesday nights as forty different teams, with a total of 120 men, pounded around the hardwood. The larger number of entries brought exclamations of glee from Track Coach Hec Phillips, who has put in a lot of overtime organizing the weekly meets.

A powerful, veteran crew brought top honors to Meds, as Lewis, Fielding and Wilford did the three laps in 54 seconds flat. A game but green entry of Hildechi, Hart and Kingston from Victoria led the field with a time of 54.4 right up to the last lap, only to be beaten out by the favored and more experienced Doctors.

The Meds' second team tied for third place with U.C. Both the Meds crew of Antoni, Fyfe and Cross, and the Royal College crowd of Purcell, Mathews and Myers, went around in 55.9 seconds. Yeates, Yundt and Armstrong cooped fourth spot with a time of 56.2. Competition was stiff all through the meet. All forty teams finished within 14 seconds of each other, the slowest time for the three laps—approximately 450 yards—being 68 seconds.

U.C. now leads Group I with two points while the doctors drop to the cellar with one loss. Sr. School, the third team in the group, will play their first game some time next week.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Al Cringan

DRIVELLINGS. . .

We hear that the Varsity hockey team bowed to Army 7-3 last night at Ravina Gardens. Too bad we weren't there—we really wanted to see the Blues play last night. . . . Dropped in to watch a practice of the basketball Blues yesterday afternoon. Mac McCutcheon had a nearly full squad drilling. Don Gibson, Joe Ryan and Bill Fountain, to mention a few, were going through their paces. The team should provide some top action in Toronto basketball circles this winter, from present indications. . . . Charlie Winterburn has been giving water-polo pointers in the Hart House pool daily for the past some while. If Charlie gets his pointers across, as he seems to have been doing of late, the intramural splashers will make with some exciting, close and skilful matches in the daze to come. . . . And the assault-at-arms instructors in the three little gyms on the ground floor of Hart House are very concentrative right now. Remember, boxers, wrestlers and fencers, skill in your line will give not only your faculty distinction in the intramural bouts which are coming up this month, but also will give the University distinction in the exhibition matches which will take place between Varsity and O.A.C. at one or more of the coming athletic nights. . . . We're trying out the box-score idea for hockey write-ups, as in yesterday's only intramural game. The big papers all do it, but is it what we want in The Varsity or not? . . . And then there are other popular indoor sports which don't rate anyone no P.T. credits anyhow. Such as . . .

FOUR NO-TRUMP. . .

That's the cry that's been filling the upper halls of Hart House recently. Incidentally—how long is it since a game of chess has been played in the Chess Room? This campus really has some sharp bridge players—"Nick" Nicholls, "Robbie," "Albert," Herb Stricker, George Shaw and others of note. If anyone wants to kibitz a real game—drop into the Chess Room. If you like watching slams being bid—watch over Bill Pauli's shoulder. He's the notorious slam-bidder. If you'd rather watch a consistently good, winning game, pick on Nick, or Bill Clipperton.

Actually, bridge isn't as unathletic as it's thought to be. If you're high blood-pressure or take cat-fits easily, stay away from the little square pasteboards.

MORE ABOUT PEOPLE. . .

Doug Davidson, goalkeeper for this year's edition of the cup-winning U.C. hockey sextette, played a fine game in goal yesterday when U.C. upset Meds' first team by 3-1. Then he went on and goalied some more in the Varsity game in the evening. . . . Ross Kingston of Vic did some fleet footwork earlier in the week. In one of Chesty's P.T. periods he is said to have dashed fifty yards in very little over four seconds—and that's pretty fast running. . . . To close—which college, or possibly faculty, is going to be able to enter the most runners in the intramural indoor track meet, now in progress, and thus be able to pile up a pile of points high enough to put them away up on top in the Reed Trophy standings, regardless of winners in the races, or of points obtained in other winter sports?—or is indoor track restricted to those who have been training since the fall?

will be the echo for the next few days hence, when the College swimming prelims start coming up at U.T.S. pool. The first meet to be run off will be that held by St. Hilda's the evening of the 16th, followed closely by O.T., who are holding theirs on the 17th. St. Mike's will hold their prelim some time around the end of the month, although the date hasn't been set definitely because of conflicting ideas about whether it is better to hold the meet before their big dance, and risk colds, or after the dance and ruin beautiful coiffures.

We guess you all know something about the big meet. We hope you will because we spent a bit of time explaining about it the other day, but anyhow . . . We aren't certain of the date yet but the final intramural meet will be held in Hart House pool either the 17th or 24th of February. The prelim meet for the University will be held a few days previously.

We expect to have about 9 teams, but the more the merrier. There are rules to the game, but the contestants have plenty of scope for originality. If the contestants are entering in Ornamental, they must do two back somersaults, and a porpoise and dolphin, with their two optional tricks. Style entrants are required to do a breaststroke, broad back stroke, and side stroke. Diving entries are trying for an individual cup and must do a front and back dive and three optional dives. The winners of the style are chosen, five or six ornamentalists who are outstanding, and as many divers, and these go on to the final meet, where the winners in these classes are weeded out and the speed events are run off.

The speed events are: 50 yds. free style, 50 yds. back stroke, 50 yds. breast stroke, and 100 free-style-relay. The 150 yds. medley relay will conclude the meet. One person only can go in four events, three of which may be speed events, including relays.

This year we are stipulating that each contestant has to attend at least three practices, because we found last year that people were exhausted after one race. They were just out of condition, so this year we don't want that. Also, many did not know anything about starting and turning and finishing, and because of this ignorance were disqualified.

The telegraphic meet is still hanging fire, but we'll keep hoping. It lies largely with the Directorate at this point.

Another important point is that all prospective swimmers must have a check-up at 44 Hoskin before the prelim meet and before the final. Failure to do so will mean that the young hopeful concerned will not be allowed to swim at the meet.

We know that the zero weather is not conducive to swimming, but we have heard that the L.M. pool-room is quite warm enough to be a drawing card as the only hot-spot on the campus. So we hope to see a large aggregation of girls out at the meets.

If you don't know about your College prelim meet, you can find out from Sue Oliver, vice-president of the Swimming Club, at HY 3081, or Barb Hinchliffe, secretary, at LL 8914.

tone that have made her the world's outstanding woman violinist of our day.

Unfortunately, the rest of the program did not stand in the same class as the above. An orchestration of Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue (written when he was 18 years old) by Benjamin was a particularly poor first choice. The work opens with a prolonged passage for horns, woodwinds and brass. The unfortunate part was that the instruments had not been given sufficient time to warm up and, as a consequence, were uncomfortably flat; their tone, too, was colorless and ragged. Unusual effects were obtained by massing groups of instruments. The strings came off well in this performance.

Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, No. 6 in F, sounded rather sloppy after recently hearing Stokowski's rendition in Fantasia. This work is so well known by now that further comment is unnecessary. A noisy work with a few catchy tunes, Dvorak's Scherzo Capriccioso, completed the program.

The eternal drawback to the orchestra's development and improvement is the limited number of practices that it has for each concert. How can it be expected to compete with the New York Philharmonic, or even the Cincinnati Orchestra, when the Union decrees that no more than three practices will be allowed for a performance. Often practices are cut down to one, and it is not unusual to have to play a work at sight. This condition of affairs is not the fault of the poor musician caught in the clutches of a gangster-plumber in Chicago. Suffice it to say that we hope this state of affairs will not continue for much longer, at least for the good of musical Toronto!

Inspired by the current flight of "abba" in the Trinity Review, this column today breaks into print with the current crop of cross-Canadian poetry. Also, we may add, parenthetically, it's a highly commendable way for a lazy man to fill this space.

Our first limping iambic hops in from Queen's University Journal and, naturally enough, it's entitled The Kangaroo:
I wish I were a kangaroo,
Despite his funny stances,
I'd have a place to put the junk
My girl brings to dances.

Since we are in a zoological mood, we might well turn to this touching rhapsody, found croaking in its usual habitat, The Sheaf, the journal of the University of Saskatchewan. It's called "The Frog" and runs something like this:

Some poets write of thoughts at sea,
Or of some ploughmen o'er the lea,
But my voice I raise to thee, Little Frog;
Froggie, if we can detect thee,
We are going to dissect thee,
When we're finished, we'll have wrecked thee, Little Frog.

Cruel Biology does demand it,
Our instructor doth command it,
So I hope that you can stand it, Little Frog.

First of all, we break your skin in,
Then we stick the awful pin in
And we spread you out like linen, Little Frog.

All is over; all is ended,
And you can never more be mended,
But you served the purpose splendid,

Little Frog.

With a quick twist, we turn from zoology to biology, and from The Sheaf to The Western Gazette, where we discover this refugee from Petrarch. No title.

Before I heard the doctors tell
The dangers of a kiss,
I had considered kissing you,
The nearest thing to bliss;
But now I know Biology,
And sit and sigh and moan;
Six million mad bacteria—
And I thought we were alone.

Well, women is as good a topic as any to talk about, so while we're on the subject, we might as well turn an ear (we're always turning an ear to women) to this limerick, which takes as its title, aptly enough, Ore Diggers. We found it filling a hole on the bottom of a page in The Manitoban:

When Caesar was a babe in diapers,
And chariots lacked windshield wipers;
Before Napoleon ever knew
That he could meet his Waterloo;
When Cleo was a howling brat—
Women were yelling: "Buy me that."

And for a variation on the same theme, we have this panegyric from Macdonald College's Fault-Yet-Times:

Under the moon he told his love,
The color left her cheeks;
And on the shoulder of his coat
It stayed for weeks and weeks and weeks.

All right, Trinity Review, you take it from here.

Combs, Pens, Beanies!
What Have You Lost?

President H. J. Cody knows where it is. Principal Sidney Smith knows where it is. The registrar's office knows where it is. DO YOU KNOW WHERE IT IS?

What we are speaking of is the U.C. Lost and Found Office. The janitor of the college tells us that there are so many unclaimed articles cluttering up the office that it is becoming hard to get into the place. Haven't any of you lost something this year?

The Varsity went to see just what sort of articles had been left by students, and here is a partial list of what is to be had. There are two umbrellas, eleven pens and pencils, army gloves, knitted and leather gloves, text-books ranging from Shakespeare to higher mathematics, to the number of 25, two slide-rules (not engineers'), scarves, bracelets, cosmetic bags, geometrical stencils, glasses, a wire electrical connection, combs, and knitting needles.

And to add that last touch—a lone fur mitt, several packages of McLean's Hot Chocolate, a beanie, and a bank-book.

To top it all off, the janitor says that people have even started to bring in things from other buildings.

One reason advanced by the authorities for the amount of unclaimed possessions is that there are so many students other than those registered in U.C. who take classes in the building. Why not call around to the caretaker's office to the left of the rotunda and check up on what is there, even if you aren't a U.C. student? Then maybe you'll be able to say in the words of Peggy Pugsley of 11 Pass: "I've lost millions of things, and that dear little janitor has always had them in his office for me!"

Therapy At-Home To Feature Chorus

The Occupational and Physiotherapy Undergraduate Association is holding its annual At-Home in the Crystal Ballroom of the Royal York Hotel Friday night.

Under the supervision of the Physiotherapists, the chorus line-up, following the precedent set last year, will provide the entertainment. The girls prophesy an even better line up of glamorous therapists this year. The decorations follow a winter motif of snow men and ladies.

The O.T.'s are presenting a one-act satire on both therapy courses entitled "Morning in St. Peter's Clinic."

A limited number of tickets are available to other faculties at the Hall Porter's desk in Hart House.

present instances—largely from the Readers' Digest.

Acta is bearing up well, and we wish its third issue well. We suggest its contributors try more humor à la Mr. Lacey, as a genre more nearly germane to undergraduate talents than the tortured dream-worlds that have been haunting Acta contributors since the heyday of Margaret Gould and before. Perhaps the sight of a typewriter inspires a Victorian to a gloomier view of life. Us, we'll stick to opium.

This writer's guess, for what it is worth, is that no one has yet decided what course is to be followed. The Prime Minister has a habit of surprising everyone, including his intimates, with a sudden decision, but that sudden decision is the expedient outgrowth of a number of alternative possibilities, all of which have been developed up until the final moment of decision.

Student Counsellors Analyse Positions At Group Discussion

Counsellors to Entertain With One-act Play at Y.W.C.A. Will Meet Again in March and April

COUNSELLORS NEEDED

Students at the University interested in becoming camp counsellors, and those who have served formerly in that capacity, are asked to attend a "Gala Counsellors Get-together" on Wednesday, Jan. 17, at 8:00 p.m. in the Y.W.C.A. auditorium, 21 McGill Street.

In making this announcement yesterday, Miss Dorothy Jackson, assistant professor at the University's School of Health and Physical Education, said that the purpose of the open meeting was to form a "friendly mutual exchange" between counsellors, camp directors and the Ontario Camp Directors Association.

Program for the gathering will include: a group discussion on job analysis; a talk by John Booth, who will tell of his experience at the "YM" Camp Pinecrest last summer; a talk by Helen Ricker, Humber College student, chairman of the counsellors' section; submission of application forms for would-be counsellors; a one-act play, "The Interview"; and a rendition of camp songs by a group of girl students from the University.

Miss Jackson said that the meeting was a result of the previous one held in November of last year, when representative counsellors from each Ontario camp met to form a counsellors' section of the Ontario Camping Association.

Counsellors will meet without camp directors attending, she said, at two gatherings scheduled for March and April this year.

Miss Jackson, who is also in charge of the counsellors' training course at the University's School of Health and Physical Education, says: "There is a definite need for counsellors in camps throughout Ontario, and this meeting will provide an excellent means of communication between those who desire counsellors and those who wish to hold that position."

To Hold Courses For Servicemen In University

Night courses in real estate for demobilized soldiers and for real estate businessmen will be established shortly, Dr. W. J. Dunlop, head of the University's extension department, announced yesterday.

Dr. Dunlop said that, tentatively speaking, lectures will be held one night a week for 10 weeks. More exact information will be available, he said, after he holds a meeting concerning the matter with John B. Laidlaw, executive-secretary of the Ontario Association of Realtors.

Included in the lectures will be discussion of property appraisal, town planning, municipal taxation, and salesmanship.

A similar series of courses—only three days in length, however—were held in the extension department before the war, and none have been conducted here since.

35 Laval Men Go To Mexico In Interchange

Quebec—(CUP)—Four Mexican students, Luis Amescua, Enrique Amescua, Fernando Gonzales, and Guillermo Hernandez, arrived in Quebec on Tuesday. The students left Mexico City on Nov. 26 on a goodwill trip to the United States and Canada, and on their arrival in Quebec were received by the Mexican Consul, Andre Turcot. A tour of the city was sponsored by members of the Tourist Bureau in Quebec.

Along with the announcement of the Mexican students' arrival came the news that 35 students of Quebec's Laval University will leave shortly to study courses in Spanish language and Spanish and Mexican literature, in Mexico.

WOMEN'S NATIONAL SERVICE TRAINING

Women undergraduates (other than C.R.C.C.) who were enrolled in the First Aid Course for the W.N.S.T. requirement during the fall term will report to their respective Deans of Women regarding service assignments for this term. Due to the small enrolment, no course in Home Nursing will be arranged, and 30 hours of service will be required.

Students who have enrolled for service in canteens are reminded that they must complete at least 60 hours' service during the academic year.

Students giving service in canteens, Day Nurseries, settlements, Y.W.C.A., Red Cross Blood Lab. (Bloor and Bay), etc., are required to obtain from the official in charge a signed statement of their hours of service for last term and present this to their respective Deans of Women. A similar report will be required at the end of March.

Students working at Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic and Ontario Mobile Unit Laboratory must sign sheets provided each day they are present and these will be forwarded to the University along with C.R.C.C. records.

Reveal Plans For I.S.S. Drive At Meeting

At a meeting of the International Student Service which took place at the Women's Union last night, the representatives of each faculty revealed their plans for the new I.S.S. Drive. Chairman of the I.S.S. is Gordon T. Stulberg, III Law, who, along with the rest of those participating, is trying to make the campaign a success.

Plans for the I.S.S. Drive to take place from Wednesday morning, January 24, to Friday evening, January 26, are in progress. Secret surprises are in store for all, which will be disclosed later. There are rumors about animal parades, slogans such as "Pennies for Patches," ski-night, and "Come Single, Go Double."

Mr. Stulberg said that it is evident that the helping-unfortunate fellow-students in the war-torn world should be our duty. Realizing the importance of this campaign, we as university students must get behind our representatives, he continued.

A special plea is being made for girls of various colleges and faculties to sign the lists which will be posted for tagging on Thursday, January 25. These lists will be posted on the various notice boards around the campus in the next few days.

The next meeting of the I.S.S. Committee will be held Monday, January 22. All interested are asked to attend.

Victoria S.C.M. Plans Project For Children

The Sherbourne Street Settlement House sent a plea to university students through the Victoria S.C.M., Morley Clark, president of the Vic chapter, disclosed yesterday.

Jim Beckett, curator of the group which will soon be formed to meet this demand, said that plans have been made for a visit to the settlement tonight.

"We will be meeting at Vic at 7:15 sharp and will then proceed to the Settlement at 349 Sherbourne Street," said Beckett. "Our visit will enable us to see what is needed and how we can help. There will be classes in crafts and hobbies, sports and games, special groups such as choirs, miniature orchestras, dramatic clubs and other groups for recreation and guidance."

"There is an ever-increasing need for help down there," explained Clark. "Boys and girls whose fathers are overseas and whose mothers work in war plants, need other companionship, guidance, and leadership. Students are able to provide these for youngsters who would otherwise be roaming the streets."

Men students are especially needed as leaders," Beckett said, although there will be room for girls as well.

Although this project is being sponsored by the S.C.M., it is not necessarily confined to active members of the group, he added. "This will be a good way for students to help the war effort as well as helping to reduce the juvenile delinquency problem."

For those who are unable to come this week, information may be obtained from any of the members of the Vic S.C.M.

Toronto U.A.S. Holding Dance For Ex-Members

The Training Command of the University Air Squadron will play host to members of the squadron and ex-members of the late University Air Training Corps at a farewell dance to be held in Hart House on Friday, Jan. 19.

Specially welcome are all R.C.A.F. personnel attending the University—whether discharged or not. The only proviso is that they drop into the Orderly Room in Hart House next week and pick up their complimentary tickets. If planning to attend in uniform, no tickets are required.

"There will be a Truth and Consequences show," said Gordon Stulberg of the entertainment committee. During the evening an Air Force Queen will be chosen and presented with an "appropriate prize."

Another feature is planned—a take-off on the U.A.S. Orderly Room, in which "all officers will receive their due."

Music will be provided by an 11-piece orchestra.

Shows Relation Of The Cabinet To The Crown

The development of the Canadian Cabinet was traced by Professor George W. Brown, professor of History at the University, in an address to the Salmagundi Club. He explained the relation of the Cabinet to the Crown, and also compared its functions with those of similar bodies in the United States and Great Britain.

McGill Senate Adopts Proposal Placing University on Three-term Basis for Servicemen: First Year Outlined

ENROLMENT HEAVY

Courses to meet almost every need of ex-servicemen who plan to take advantage of the educational grants provided for them after the war are being planned by most of Canada's universities, Dr. W. J. Dunlop, Director of Extension Studies of the University of Toronto, stated recently.

Speaking of this University's plans, Dr. Dunlop said that special courses were planned in addition to an all-over Canadian program. The latter intends to insert a third term into the usual two-term year, so that veterans may be given their studies in early spring, thereby studying during the usual vacation period and fitting themselves for the next year, when the fall term is opened.

This procedure provides ex-servicemen with the equivalent of a full four-year course before the degrees are granted, but saves a year in time.

He said that the enrolment of men seeking engineering courses at the University of Toronto has been particularly heavy.

The University has outlined a first-year course which will open April 2, giving six months of study before the opening of the regular term in early October. This permits them to take a summer course which, if passed, will give them entrance to second year in October. A concentrated ten months' course that covers such studies as Accounting, Economics and Statistics, opens February 5. It is planned for men wishing to enter business either because they seek early self-establishment or they lack qualifications for entry into regular courses.

Mr. Dunlop said: "The number of applications received to date for entrance to the University was well beyond two hundred."

Residential Accommodation Needed at Universities

By Roy Clark and Ray Garmy

Last summer, Professor G. B. Jeffrey, University College, University of London, England, wrote to the Campus Co-operative Residence, Toronto, requesting information on the organization of the Co-op residence on this campus.

A copious folio of information was sent to him and this was gratefully acknowledged. In correspondence with the Co-op Residence, Prof. Jeffrey stated: "There has been a great deal of interest among the students here, and we are all thinking very hard about Co-operative Residences in London."

This interest and enthusiasm has by no means been limited to Prof. Jeffrey or the University of London. It is looked upon as one of the solutions to a universal problem facing English universities. This problem is best described by an article appearing in the May, 1944 issue of the University Forward, published at Cambridge, England.

"Students of our modern universities," it states, "often seem handicapped by lack of residential experience during their undergraduate days. Many of them have attended day schools, and when they go to a local university they continue to live at home, thus missing altogether, during this formative stage of their development, the give and take, both intellectual and social, of living in a community with others of the same don, England, and interests."

"In addition their homes are often some distance from the university, and many have to spend considerable time and energy each day in travelling to and from. Their lives tend to become a crowded jumble of lectures, tutorials, buses and trains, with little time left over for the university clubs and social activities that should play a part in their education at this stage. Residential accommodation would ease many of their difficulties; but the problem is how to provide it adequately and cheaply. Usually there are some university halls of residence, but these accommodate relatively few students, and in any case the majority cannot afford the fees. It was immediately reminded of this problem when in 1942, I first visited one of the Campus Co-operative Residences at the University of Toronto."

"After the war there is certain to be an increased demand for residential accommodation at our modern universities, but it may be a long time before halls of residences can be built. On the other hand, large old houses that could be used as students' co-operative residences (Continued on page 4)

Former Sports Editor Dave McIntosh--Has DFC

F.O. D. N. McIntosh, D.F.C., 23-year-old former Sports Editor of The Varsity, has completed a tour of operations in England and is now on leave in Toronto. As a Mosquito navigator he was attached to the R.C.A.F. City of Edmonton Intruder Squadron.

F.O. McIntosh, of Stanstead, Que., made 41 operational flights over the continent. His pilot was F.O. S. Seid, of San Francisco, California. They have accounted for the destruction of nine aircraft and the damaging of seven. They obliterated three trains and were responsible for the damage of six. Over the Zuider Zee two small German ships were sighted, both of which McIntosh and Seid succeeded in damaging.

This Mosquito crew managed to blow up four flying bombs, one of which exploded so near them that they returned to the base in a plane burned and full of holes.

In November, McIntosh and Seid planned and carried out a mission over the Baltic to German airfields in Norway. In one night they shot down five planes and damaged four others.

"We were skipping between mountains, over them, through valleys, and Dave was never off track," said Seid as he described the expert navigation performed by McIntosh. The D.F.C. award was the result of this mission.

The City of Edmonton Squadron has the most famous record of any Air Force squadron, having destroyed over 150 planes in ten months. McIntosh and Seid were one of the two aircrews remaining of those who were with them when they joined the squadron.

McIntosh told about the superstitions which the airman have. He told of his pilot who always hummed the same tune while crossing the Channel. One night he forgot the tune so he insisted on circling over the Channel until he recalled it. When they hit the coast of Holland it came to him and they proceeded without further worry. These superstitions are built up in the men's minds because at some time or other they did not follow their habitual practices before and during the mission, and an accident followed, explained McIntosh.

These two airmen saw much action, but both came through unharmed. Twice they returned to their base on one engine and once they made a forced landing.

F.O. McIntosh graduated from Victoria College in 1942. In 1940-1 he was assistant Sports Editor of The Varsity, and in 1942 became the Sports Editor. He is now on leave until Jan. 16, when he will proceed to Trenton, for re-posting. Like all newly repatriated airmen he will not be returning overseas.

Adult Education

Mr. Robert Westwater, Ottawa school inspector and chairman of the Canadian Legion Educational Services, in a speech here on November 15, emphasised the necessity of an extended program of adult education in the postwar world. No one will contest the necessity of such a proposal, for implicitly contained in the notion of democracy is the item of an enlightened populace. Both political and economic self government are illusions unless there is a progressive effort to draw by adult education the masses of people into participation in the political and economic processes.

Even more important and certainly more controversial is the form this education will take. Should it be an ornate and aesthetic type of education where appreciation of the great poets and composers is stressed? Admittedly there is some need for the exercise of the speculation processes of the mind. But to place primary emphasis on them in education is putting the cart before the horse.

The wide application of any program must rest on correspondingly wide appeal. In order to induce the populace into adult learning, effective techniques must be devised to shape curricula related to the needs and interests of the masses. The Canadian people in adult life will hardly be stimulated into educational activity unless it is education applied to their daily living.

But just where the focal point of Canadian interest would be is debatable. We believe it to centre around the political and economic aspects of life. The greatest stress of humanity has been, and it would seem always will be, confined to the problem of earning bread. In this field, individuals in our society will evidence the keenest interest since it is here that his anxiety is greatest. If we are to draw a majority into a Canadian post war educational movement, it is essential to hold such a viewpoint.

The Toronto Consumer branch of The Wartime Prices and Trade Board recently invited us to a meeting of women who expressed a great desire to know more about consumer buying. Similarly we feel that a group of farmers would be interested in learning more about marketing, and that the factory worker would manifest a desire for extra work associations. There will be some of us who will believe that such a program will lead to degenerate education. But educators must concentrate on the vital needs of the masses before they can move into the more exalted field of music and art appreciation. We must also consider the fact that steps towards a greater life for the people have been made by the introduction of study clubs which have awakened latent desires for intellectual enrichment. The most striking result of the establishment of such clubs is that co-operative institutions for the attainment of cultural experiences have been created.

The Canadian people seek education for action. The so-called educational processes of the mind cannot be gained, but they must be preceded by a more virile form of education to equip the masses for the solution of pressing problems.

Vim and Vigour

There has recently arrived at our desk a copy of "Student News", the organ for the National Union of Students of the universities of England and Wales.

A perusal of its contents discloses just to what extent educational institutions in the British Isles have suffered in the past few years.

The outstanding factor about the paper is the vigorous activity and keen initiative for reconstruction revealed by reports from the various university centres. Plans for the rehabilitation of demobilised troops are under way; the National Union of Students is hard at work fostering a strong spirit of unity among all colleges; and several universities are reopening after some years of dormancy. In all, the tremendous energy of the students overseas is discovered in reports of their work for victory at home as well as abroad.

From one item we learn that nearly one hundred men and women spent the latter part of their vacation repairing University College, London, for its first occupancy in five years. "Squads of women," states the paper, "Cleaned lecture theatres, physics and chemistry laboratories, libraries and refectories, while the men set themselves to unload the lorries and carry the heavy furniture . . . departmental societies have full programmes and a N.U.S. sub committee has been formed to set up staff committees in all departments!"

Proebel Educational Institute has reported the surprising news that both second and first year students for the first time are in attendance there. Students who originally could only take a shortened wartime course are now able to remain for their third year. Such an item of news speaks of a return to the normal in War-torn Britain. But to us in Canada its news value lies in the comprehension of how British universities continued education without falling into the extreme of complete military control.

Civil Engineering students at Loughborough College have designed a new union building, while at Leicester, girls from the Domestic Science course have become cooks for the workers who are repairing London's bomb damage. Students in every part of Britain are realising capacities heretofore unthought of. They are meeting the exigencies of the times with ideas, and the energy to actualise them. Such a spirit is indeed commendable and worthwhile. It would be to our advantage to acquire some of their initiative in order to achieve concrete action from the innumerable and diverse theories scattered about.

Dear Madam:—

I was sitting in the arena this afternoon watching hockey practice, and the thought came to me, why doesn't The University put on an ice show? I don't know what skating talent there is in the U. of T., but I'm sure that enough could be found in the whole university to make it worth while.

I have heard the feeling expressed many times that University spirit has degenerated to faculty spirit, and sometime interfaculty war since intercollegiate sport has been discontinued. More things of this type might help The University to pull together once more.

When I see the seven and eight year olds doing fancy skating, I feel certain that The University could produce enough talent from its midst to fill a first rate show.

Lubka Kolessa

Lubka Kolessa gave the fourth in the series of Chamber Music Concerts of the Toronto Conservatory of Music yesterday afternoon. This particular program was done in memory of the late Norman Wilks, former principal of the Conservatory. It included the great Sonata in B Flat Minor of Chopin, the most memorable portion of which is the famed Funeral March. Mme. Kolessa played the work with utmost sympathy, eliciting the agitation and power of the doppio movimento, the lucidity and polish of the scherzo, the throbbing tragedy of the marcia funebre, and the wild mystery of the Presto.

SOLVE SEAT SHORTAGE AT MAC'S

Actually 41 Students Served at One Time. While Pres-elect Kidney Myth Commits Blatant Crime: Investigate Seat of Trouble

HAMBURGER SUSPECTED

Throng of exuberant students milled in front of Mac's, famed Harbord Street Sweetery, yesterday noon, to witness the grand inaugural of the new device perfected by Prof. J. Pierpoint Dooley-dingus of the Department of Applied Shoplifting and Ashtray-Polishing.

Designed to relieve the noon-time congestion for hurried diners, Prof. Dooley-dingus' innovation features an elongated booth containing forty-two seats, which spiral from the floor to the distant ceiling.

Promptly at 12:03, President-elect Kidney Myth, late of Manitoba U. and Snaf U, formally snipped the spaghetti ribbon across the doors and declared the joint open.

Following hard on the heels of President-elect, forty-two eager students piled onto the treadmill inside the door and were whisked to their places high in the super-booth.

Peering from the uppermost receptacle, Dr. Myth clapped his hands gleefully and shouted, "Wheeeel! Look at me! I haven't had so much fun since I used to run up and down the escalators at the Hudson Bay Trading Post in Winnipeg."

Business boomed immediately as enthusiastic students dropped their scribbled orders to the main floor by handkerchief parachutes, which were caught in mid-air by a blast from a wind-machine and whirled to Miss Mac's office in the back-room kitchen.

The soup ready, giggling waitresses, clutching their billowing skirts, were then blown by the machine back to the booths, waving their trays as rudders in the blast. Screaming delightedly, students on the upper levels shook their bowls over the side to catch sprays of soup gushed aloft by a serpentine fire-hose.

When Dr. Myth yelled for salt and pepper, a two-foot dwarf, produced by careful inbreeding, sprinkled these ingredients on the nose of a thirteen-foot waitress called Tiny Egghead. Tiny's convulsive sneeze catapulted the dwarf to the ceiling, where he shook the pepper into Dr. Myth's soup before dropping back into Tiny's ample lap.

Loud guzzling noises rent the air as Miss Marryin' Bee Gufuson in the forty-first booth sipped her Fudge Milkshake up from the floor through a giant straw. Regret was expressed, however, when she grew black in the face, trying to drag up every drop of the turgid liquid in one gulp.

"Manners! manners!" waggishly reproved Dr. Myth, wiggling his finger over the parapet of the booth immediately above.

"I trust you're not talking to me," blushed Warden Likkerbreth, from a vantage-point in the fortieth booth, where he had been covertly pinching the straw with his fingers, in hopes of later draining the remainder of the milkshake into his famed portable Cuspidor.

As 1:30 sounded on the clock, the diners leaped onto the brass pole for a quick descent to their lectures. Disaster resulted, however, when the entire forty-two piled up in a crumpled heap at the bottom, and forty-one screams shook the Sweetery as Dr. Myth crashed down like a pile-driver on top of the whole caboodle.

Dr. Dooleydingus reports that nothing has been heard of these diners since, but investigators are painstakingly watching the contents of the MacDonald hamburgers.

Victoria College Pucksters Tie Favoured St. Mike's In Thrilling Hockey Tilt

Gerald Haden Played Outstanding Game for St. Mike's; O'Malley and Wheeler Star for Victoria

ENDS IN CONFUSION

A light hit-and-run squad from Victoria College struck at the most opportune moments to tie the St. Michael's "A" hockey team in a scheduled game played at the Arena yesterday afternoon. The Irish came up with the equalizer late in the last period to skate off with the scoreboard reading 4-4.

The favored St. Michael's team started with a bang and literally skated circles around the Scarlet and Gold. This attack drew blood early in the game in the form of a counter by Gerald Haden on a pass from Hurley.

From this point on Vic were never headed and held the lead throughout the game. Goals by Hamilton and Tyson gave them a lead which was relinquished in the dying minutes of the first period when Haden rapped in his second goal, this time on a pass from Gregoire.

Vic kept on with their onslaught in the second period and scored again, only to have the goal disallowed. Seconds later Summers picked up Barron's pass, to net the rubber disc. The pressure was kept up and resulted in another goal. Butch O'Malley picked up a loose puck in his own end and stickhandled his way through the entire St. Mike's team, only to shoot wide of the goal. Wheeler was Johnny-on-the-spot to ram the puck home.

Leading 4-2, the Scarlet and Gold hockeyists let their temperatures rise with the excitement and played with seven men. Summers was the unlucky fellow to catch the referee's eye. While he was off Haden combined with Adams to narrow the margin.

With two minutes to go, Haden and Adams got together again, with Adams blinking the light on this attempt.

The game ended in confusion around the timekeeper's box. Threats of protests flew around, the reason for which was mystifying.

Gerald Haden was the outstanding performer on the ice by a wide margin. His smooth skating and puck-carrying stood out like a sore thumb all through the game. Gaston Adams was a fit running mate as the two combined to give the Irish a smooth combo.

O'Malley was the pick from Vic players. Defensively, his play was on the terrific side and his length of the ice rushes were a feature to watch.

St. Michael's—Hurley, Doran, Haden, Weber, Odette, Dugan, Ricci, Gregoire, Adam, Fyfe, and Hinds.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasiw

INTO THE PAST

During one of our philanthropic expeditions we came across a number of memoirs written by a former member of the sporting fraternity. The portion of the record to catch the eye was that which mentioned the attempts of the basketball Blues to stop the sustained rush of the cage stars from Wayne some five years ago. Perhaps it was the fact that Wayne is to appear here next month for the first time in two years that heightened our interest.

The Green, coached by the diminutive Newmie Ertel, swamped the local stars by an overwhelming 73-37 shellacking. The charges of Warren Stevens went all-out to avenge this defeat three years ago but again to little avail as the Green swept through to an unimpressive 50-35 victory.

The lone member of that team still with the Blues is Don Gibson, who ran up six points that evening. Oh, yes, Murray Thompson is back. The stars of the game for the home team were none other than Hal Axon and one of the all-time greats, Jack LaVarnway.

Two years ago Ertel's cage quintet were again on hand, and again the Blues were forced to take a back seat. The score was: Wayne 62, Blues 44.

From these facts alone we would venture to say that the Blues are jinxed. Mac McCutcheon will have to prove different.

SUNDY

As many students have found out by practical experience, that registration card gives you the privilege of entertainment for free. This so-called Annie Oakley entitles an undergraduate (you) to participate in free skating three nights a week and every afternoon. Add to this the fancy skating lessons.

Now comes news that the newly-organized Friday Night Hockey League is to be added to the list. All students will be admitted free on presentation of a registration card at the Pass Gate. This Friday puts the Blues against the Navy Bulldogs and in the other half of the double-header are Victory Aircraft and Watson's A.C. Remember, admittance only at the Pass Gate.

Our special agent—secret—at the Toronto Army-Varsity game on Tuesday last informs us that had Ace Bailey's players been in tip-top condition, Army would have bit the dust. We find it hard to question this as the former is none other than a physical instructor who performed in the other game. He also questioned Bailey's strategy in removing Davidson from the nets in favor of McCombe. Oh, well, good thing we weren't there.

Doug Davidson, Bill Wade, Ian Hart, and Bain played themselves a lot of hockey yesterday. They played a large part in defeating Meds and then moved over. Lawlor and Hughes were on the losing medico squad. And yet Bain picked up two points while Hughes garnered a single. Little wonder if these six felt a bit weary come bedtime.

Now for that Friday evening fixture.

GAY JERSEY PRINTS at this time of year are popular because they are a preview of Spring. Northway's Fashionland on the Third Floor has a new collection of flowered prints which are as brilliant and gay and Springlike as a morning in May. They come in garden patterns and bright new design-ideas, some have the new cape sleeves, some have full skirts and side drapes and penguins, some designed to be slimming and some with lines which are frankly intended to lend curves to a boyish size twelve figure.

IN DRESSING IT'S the little things that count. Gloves, the right choice in a scarf, the clever combining of color in separate wearables or the exact match which proves you have a subtle eye... those are the items you can shop for at your leisure at the Evangeline Shops, whose business it is to bring the best of the accessory market at prices you like to pay. There's an Evangeline Shop in many of Ontario's home towns as in most Toronto districts. Being Canada's largest chain of women's specialty shops, they go into the matter of merchandising accessories with considerable experience and purchasing power.

CHARMING... Gomey perfume by Richard Hudnut is as subtle as snuggling jewels; highlighting the romance of your personality with a breath of hidden excitement. There's a reason for Gomey's exquisite delicacy. Scientists have worked for a long time to perfect a fragrance which would remain sweet indefinitely, never cheapen itself by going rancid by long exposure to the air. The fine oils in Gomey perfume have been so treated that they cannot develop the treacherous "stale perfume" odor which is the price-mark of careless shopping.

dences are already available near the university in many of our provincial towns. These old Victorian houses are very similar to the type of house rented by the Toronto students, and might with advantage be used as students' co-operative residences. Would it not be sound policy on the part of our modern universities to buy a number of such houses in their neighbourhood and let them at reasonable rentals to groups of students wishing to start co-operative residences of their own? Membership in a co-operative residence provides at a formative stage of development the invaluable experience of community life common to all residential colleges and university halls. But it provides something more. The four hours of work that a student gives each week to the running of his co-operative residence constitutes excellent training in a variety of skills and a useful haven to hours spent in lecture halls, libraries, and laboratories.

We in Canada have generally viewed England as being much more advanced in co-operative enterprises, but it appears that in one aspect at least, that is student residences, Canada has taken the lead.

Despite the hurried exertions of The Varsity's night staff, items in your favorite Toronto morning tabloid have a sly way of appearing where they ought not. One misplacement that got the go-by occurred in our Jan. 5 edition, when the two following paragraphs were set up, one on top of the other:

"3. EXTRA PARADES
"Make-up parades will be held at University Avenue Armouries until further notice. Personnel warned for these parades will report to Maj. G. R. Lane on the main floor."

"USE THREE FLOWERS FACE POWDER, and you'll never need to worry about a shiny nose. It goes perfectly with Three Flowers lipstick and matching rouge..."

Speaking of Lilywhiters, the S.A.C. Office branch of that estimable organization gasped in dismay recently when an advertiser dictated over the phone the specification of a gent's apartment for rent, ending up blandly, "It has a girl in it too."

The Beethoven sonata, opus 110, received authoritative treatment. The wide variety of movement and sudden changes of key, so characteristic of the master's later works, were clearly demonstrated in this performance. The fugue in the last movement is an example of Beethoven's later polyphonic tendencies.

The opening work on the program was appropriately Bach. From the Organ Toccata and Fugue in C Major Mme. Koleska chose the Intermezzo, cut out the big sonorous chords near the end, and titled the remaining portion Adagio in A Minor. The finished product was a quiet, serene composition played with classical reserve, but with undercurrents of poignancy.

Mme. Koleska showed her innate comprehension of mood and purpose in the three works she chose for this program, and evinced her usual coherence and disciplined technique at the keyboard.

ENDICOTT IS LECTURER

"Sir Thomas More judged all problems of liberty by the principles of Christian unity, of hierarchy, and of law," Professor N. J. Endicott explained in his lecture given in University College yesterday afternoon.

The theories of the medieval society in terms of microcosm and macrocosm were still strong in More's time, and he was strongly influenced by them. He was a man who lived fully in his own time with wide historical interests.

"As an ambassador, More saw the conditions prevalent in Europe, and as a lawyer he saw the uses and abuses of the law at home," continued Prof. Endicott in discussing More's life.

A man of serenity and courage, More made the first recorded plea for free speech in parliament and upon one occasion refused to permit open debate while Cardinal Wolsey remained in the House. The Utopia itself is climaxed with a few impassioned sentences pleading for economic justice.

Prof. Endicott went on to outline the influences which inspired Utopia, and the sort of society which is envisioned in it. The form of religious toleration expressed in this work is political rather than what we would term complete toleration.

"More, at times, had the most gloomy sense of the disruption of Christendom and a feeling that his side would soon be craving toleration." But when this time came, Prof. Endicott added, "almost all More demanded for himself was freedom of silence."

This lecture was the first in the current series dealing with Representative English Writers and the Theme of Liberty. The lecture next Thursday will be given by Professor A. S. P. Woodhouse, who will follow out this theme of Liberty in the work of Milton.

Announce Point System For 'Varsity' Reporters

Commencing on Monday, Jan. 15, the Varsity reporter staff will be operating on a new competitive basis.

According to Barbara Jones, News Editor of The Varsity, a point system similar to ones used in former years will be inaugurated. Under the new system each member of the news staff is to be credited with a reserve of ten points, to which he may add a maximum of five more for each day's work on the paper.

One point is awarded for each assignment accepted by a reporter. Additional points are given depending on the merit of the article submitted, judged by the managing and news departments, on a basis of news value, excellence of composition, readability and ingenuity displayed by the writer in "tracking down" the story.

Should a reporter fail to put in an appearance on any day for which he has signed to work, points are subtracted from his original ten.

At the close of The Varsity's publishing term prizes will be awarded to the reporters with the highest scores, and these scores will be one of the determining factors in appointing next year's editorial staff.

Prof. Plumptre To be Speaker

Professor A. F. W. Plumptre, now Financial Attaché at the Canadian Embassy at Washington, is to speak at the next meeting of the Political Science Club, Dave Goldberg, president, announced yesterday. The meeting will be held next Friday evening at 8:15 in Wynmwood.

An article on Professor Plumptre appeared in a recent issue of Saturday Night, which described him as one of the half-dozen best economists in Canada. Since 1941 he has been working for the Canadian government, his present position being Financial Attaché and representative of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board in Washington.

In this capacity he was sent to the UNRRA Conference at Atlantic City and was present as one of a team of experts included on the Canadian delegation at the Bretton Woods monetary conference.

Now 37 years old, Mr. Plumptre was on the staff of the University from 1930 to 1941. While on the staff he wrote two books, "Central Banking in the British Dominions," and "Mobilizing Canada's Resources for War."

Graduating from the University of Toronto in 1928, Mr. Plumptre studied economics at Cambridge under Lord Keynes and Professor Pigou. He is regarded as one of the foremost exponents of Keynesian economics.

We Can Blame It On Ancestors! New World Influenced By Old

That a professor of History has been engaged by commercial interests to give Sunday afternoon broadcasts may sound, at first, indicative of a trend toward educating the radio audiences rather than satisfying a demand for better radio programs. However, judging from the flow of correspondence from an encouraging and responsive public, Canadian listeners feel that this lecturer is filling a need in bringing to light facts that are an integral part of our economic, cultural and political development.

"Stories from the Background of Canadian History" are related by Prof. B. Wilkinson, M.A., Ph.D., of the University of Toronto. In an interview with The Varsity, he suggested that the purpose of his lectures was to drive the fact home that Canadian history did actually begin before 1534 when Jacques Cartier sailed into the Bay of Chaleur.

Prof. Wilkinson has dealt with the background of Canadians from both English and French stock. It is upon the assumption that men and women famous in the pages of history of the Old World have made their influence felt in the New World that Prof. Wilkinson bases his case for a closer scrutiny of European history in relation to what is, in its narrowest sense, Canadian history. The ideas, the aims, the struggles, the victories and, yes, even the defeats of the Old World, have colored the picture of the New World as it has come to be painted.

U.C. Debaters Seek Award New Sprays Control Bugs

"The Robinnette Trophy Debates will commence on Monday, January 22nd, with the Preliminary Round of Debates," announced Ben Orenstein, literary director of the U.C. Literary and Athletic Society in an interview yesterday.

"The Robinnette Debates began farther back in the history of U.C. than anyone can recall or determine by research into records at our command. However, it seems that the Robinnette Trophy was presented to the University College Literary and Athletic Society by John J. Robinnette, K.C., to be put up as an award for the encouragement of competition among undergraduate debaters. The Robinnette Debates are a memorial to the late T. C. Robinnette, K.C., who had taken a very great interest in the promotion of undergraduate public speaking in the College.

"At the present time the Debates find the aspiring demagogues of the College competing enthusiastically for the honor of winning the Robinnette Debate. The names of the victorious team members are engraved on a shield which is added to those of former years attached to the plaque. This year the Lit. has decided to reward the winners with the presentation of some prize in addition to the desirable but somewhat intangible honor involved in the inscription of the names on the shields.

"The Debates begin with elimination contests in each year on a sudden-death basis until one team has been selected for each year. The semi-finalists of First and Second Years and Second and Fourth Years then compete for the coveted finalist positions. The finalists will debate for the Robinnette Award at one of the newly-innovated "Red and White Nights" late in January or early in February.

"These elimination debates will begin on or about Monday, Jan. 22, and apply (Continued on page 4)

Double Header Hockey Tilt To Launch Extra Mural Series

'Thomas Wolfe' Is Club Topic

A symposium on Thomas Wolfe was held at the second meeting of the U.C. Modern Letters Club, at which Jean Douglas-Mann discussed Wolfe's life. "The son of a North Carolina stone-cutter whose great gifts were at first unappreciated... finally justified with the triumph of his first novel, 'Look Homeward, Angel'."

Martin Clemen and Rosenfeld discussed his four major novels. "These early novels," said Clemen, referring to "Look Homeward Angel" and "Of Time and the River," "show how often Wolfe's logical prose can melt into expressionism; his very faults, however, are also his glory."

Max Rosenfeld sketched the advance shown in his two later novels, "Web and the Rock" and "You Can't Go Home Again," towards a more objective and complex characterization. The president of the society, Bob Weaver, spoke on "The Hills Beyond" and several others of Thomas Wolfe's posthumously published works. In closing, Mr. Weaver quoted Wolfe's famous phrase: "This earth, this time, this life, are stranger than a dream."

With a discussion about the writer, in which all those present participated, the meeting closed. Early in February, T. S. Eliot will be discussed.

C.R.C.C. Girls Hold Inspection

The annual inspection and cap badge ceremony of the University Detachment of the C.R.C.C. took place yesterday afternoon at O.C.E. Mrs. J. G. Schiller, St. Catharines, National Section Commandant, Food Administration, inspected the detachment.

After the presentation of the cap badges to the recruits, Mrs. Schiller delivered a brief address on the work of the Canadian Red Cross. She said that the work was just beginning, and would increase as the war progressed.

Mrs. Schiller described the work of the Motor Transport members overseas, in England, France and Belgium, driving trucks and ambulances. She said that the V.A.D.'s were doing excellent service in the civilian hospitals in England and in teaching Braille in the hospitals for the blind.

The Food Administration overseas takes charge of the Maple Leaf Canteens and provides a place of relaxation for Canadian service men and women in England. All the activities of the Canadian Red Cross overseas are directed by the Office Administration which organizes the different branches of the service so that they function smoothly.

Mrs. Schiller stressed the importance of Red Cross here in Canada in its various branches. With more and more men returning from the front, their work is becoming increasingly interesting, demanding an increase in the membership. The Commandant expressed the hope that the members of the University Detachment would join other companies after graduation.

Rehabilitation will provide work for the Red Cross after the war has ended, as it is already occupying the efforts of most of the branches, in military hospitals, convalescent homes, and in supplying returned men with accommodation upon their arrival in Canada.

Mrs. Schiller praised the members of the University Detachment for their work in the Blood Clinic, the Motor Transport, and the other departments.

O.H.A. REFEREES

Varsity Blues play their first scheduled game at the Arena tonight at eight o'clock, when the first half of a double-header gets under way in the Varsity Friday Night Hockey League.

They will meet a strong sextet from H.M.C.S. York of Toronto, called the Navy Bulldogs. The second game of the evening starts at 9:30 p.m. and sees a Victory Aircraft squad coached by Mr. Blackwell hook up with a team from Watson's Athletic Club.

Admission to the double-header is free to all students on presentation of their admit-to-lecture cards at the Pass Gate at the south end of the Arena. The price to the general public is thirty-five cents.

This league will play twin bills at Varsity every Friday night from today to February the 23rd, with the exception of Friday, January the 26th, which is reserved for the Toronto Skating Club. After the regular schedule is completed, the top two teams will engage in a home-and-home two-game series on the two succeeding Fridays for the championship of the group.

Two Senior O.H.A. referees have been secured to handle the games for the season. These will be Garney Large and Pat Patterson.

The refreshment booth under the west side of the Arena will be open for business during the evening.

Professor Hay of Knox Will Open SCM Series

Under the auspices of the Student Christian Movement, the first University Service of the new year will take place on Sunday evening at 7:30 in Trinity College Chapel, when Professor David W. Hay of Knox College will speak on the theme "For God Who Has Spoken."

During the spring term there will be five such services sponsored by the S.C.M., each service centered in one of the "Five Basic Decisions" set forth by the late Archbishop of Canterbury.

"The series has been planned in order to provide a straightforward presentation of the central convictions of Christianity," said the Rev. E. T. Lute, secretary of the S.C.M. in Toronto. Speakers from various denominations will take part in the series.

Through Italy and Africa C.O.T.C Badges Flourish on War Artist

Major C. F. Comfort, of the Fine Art Department, has returned to Toronto for a short while on compassionate leave. Major Comfort has been overseas for two years, one year of which he spent in Italy and North Africa.

An interesting observation of Major Comfort was the fact that all through the campaign he wore the University of Toronto C.O.T.C. badges—this being the first time in history, as far as The Varsity can discover, that these badges have been carried in a theatre of active operations.

An Official War Artist is appointed and works in conjunction with a Historical Officer. "Rather interesting," said Major Comfort, "is the fact that in Italy I was associated with Historical Officer Captain Raef Currelly." Captain Currelly is the son of Dr. C. T. Currelly of the Royal Ontario Museum—and both the Captain and Major Comfort are connected with the same department.

Major Comfort explained the function of a Canadian War Artist, saying that the artist's duty is to record the achievement of Canadian soldiers on active operations. The artist shares the same environment and risks as the combative troops. The Major confessed that in Italy last year, from December to April, he did not see the inside of a house, that is, live in one. In the field the artist makes notes and sketches in pencil or watercolor which he later develops and paints in a more durable medium such as tempera or oils.

The Italians, says Major Comfort, have taken scrupulous care of their priceless art treasures. They have hidden their most portable statues, archives and paintings in monasteries and caves. The larger, monumental works have been bricked up with protective masonry. Rome, however, is entirely untouched and unprotected, having been declared an open city. "It is a most uncanny feeling," said Dr. Comfort, "to walk into St. Peter's in the midst of war and to see Michelangelo's Pieta unprotected and in its full splendor."

The paintings the ten appointed artists are working at in the different theatres of war should form invaluable source material for the pictorial history of Canada's participation in the war, he said. Major Comfort went on to say that these paintings have been exhibited in Rome, Brussels and at the National Gallery in London. They were widely acclaimed at these exhibitions; more than 11,000 people crowded to see them in Rome. It is to be hoped that these works will be exhibited in Canada.

An interesting sketch of Major Comfort's is one that he made of the High Mass held in St. Peter's for the Royal 22nd Regiment of Montreal. Immediately after the High Mass Major Comfort was privileged to attend the Audience given by His Holiness, the Pope.

Hart House Debates

If students are allowed to forget what they have once lost, they are unlikely ever to want it back. That is our main excuse for unfurling yet again the banner of the Hart House Debates.

Next to the flamboyant hysteria of intercollegiate sport, the Hart House Debates must be reckoned the University's most lamentable war-time casualty. With nothing but the present-day crop of sporadic and purely parochial discussions on which to base his judgment, the War-baby student of today can hardly form the remotest conception of the interest these impressive displays of syllogism and invective created month after month both on and off campus. The Debates Room on the second floor of Hart House, nowadays a reading-nook for lonely Schoolmen, was regularly jammed to the doors; The Varsity flaunted the Debates assignment before the eyes of by-line hungry cubs as the term's most coveted assignment; pronouncements by visiting speakers on the most heated topics of the day were regularly granted full page displays by the downtown press and subjected to such international scrutiny as now-adays befalls the most momentous utterances in the House of Commons.

While the letter of Parliamentary procedure was adhered to, even in such matters as the layout of the Debates Room, there was none of the suspicion of play-acting that emasculates the ceremonial of the various College Parliaments today. A team of four speakers hotly assailed the affirmative and negative of such burning topics as Communism, Unemployment and Union with the United States; the visiting speaker, on several occasions the Prime Minister of Canada, defended government policy, and after speeches from the floor, the vote was taken. Many a hardened politician has regarded the swaying of a hostile undergraduate audience among his proudest feats, and few would consent to leave before the divisions had been tallied and announced. A principal duty of Warden Bickersteth was regularly to entertain visiting speakers before the Debate, and subtly disabuse them of the notion that any punches would be pulled.

The value of such an institution as a training-ground for young speakers anxious to cut and flush their teeth is unquestionable. Valuable too was the realistic approach to public questions. The opponent on whom the parlor pink poured his invective was a real parliamentarian armed with real arguments; opinions were formed not on secondhand interpretations of issues, but on the basis of pros and cons, presented by expert protagonists. The questions debated were for the most part the headline topics of the day.

It was the very realism of the debates that has brought about their wartime suspension. On several occasions the press of the outside world was incensed; notably on the occasion when Tim Buck contributed to a debate on communism, and the time when a debate on U.S. Union was marred by a solemn procession of hoodlums who ceremoniously hurled an American flag from the debates-room window. As the incarnation of Hart House policies, the Warden became the butt for torrents of abuse, and his resignation was several times hotly demanded.

In view of the impossibility of keeping controversial issues quiet with acute international questions arising daily, and the near-hysterical sensitivity of wartime public, the Debates Committee regretfully suspended its activities soon after the declaration of War. From this distance, the decision appears plainly a wise one. It would have been unfortunate to say the least, had the anomalous position of wartime students been jeopardized by the trumpeted remarks of some unfortunate speaker. Since the War began, the University has had all it could do to maintain its status as an essential institution. It would have raised impossible difficulties for its administrators to have been forced to fight out with the public such minor issues as the upshot of an undergraduate debate.

The touchiness of almost all serious subjects is attested to by the almost unanimous adherence of such debating societies as have survived to topics like Saddle-shoes and Belief in Santa Claus. As far as we know, for example, the question of British intervention in Greece has not been debated anywhere on the campus, nor is it likely to be. It is too much to expect that radical remarks that would almost certainly be heard at such a debate could be confined to the campus; and to permit a leak would be to court disaster.

Just recently, however, the increasing acceptance by the public mind of the University's status, coupled with an atmosphere of discussion that would have seemed treasonable a few years ago (the prevalent Churchill-baiting, for example) has encouraged the free discussion of fundamental topics. The C.C.F. and the Dismemberment of Germany are recent subjects, and unusual daring attaches to a recently-mooted plan to debate the place of Military Training in the University.

Under these circumstances, it would seem feasible to attempt a cautious re-introduction of the Hart House extravaganzas. For our own taste, it cannot come too soon.

A Link In Cultures

Many words have been expended on the subjects of international good-will and co-operation, but men and women, willing to donate time and energy in furthering this important ingredient in human relations, are few. An essential factor is trust in the co-operation that will greet overtures towards this end, as only the rare person will risk his time and talent if he so much as suspects that his efforts will not be recognized. Events like the recent exhibitions by French-Canadian artists at one of the downtown stores, or the showing of paintings by Jacques de Tonnancour at Hart House occurred entirely too infrequently. Such a gesture will, this week-end, make available to the students of this University the fine musicianship of one of the ablest string quartets in the United States when, through the good offices of the president of the University of Rochester, the Gordon String Quartet will play at the Sunday Evening Concert in Hart House on 14th January. Dr. Valentine visited our University during the fall at a conference of administrative heads of various American universities, became interested in student activities in Hart House, and made the unusual offer of the services of the quartet which has for some years been associated with the Eastman School of Music. During wartime it is difficult for students in both countries to participate in gestures as generous of time as Dr. Valentine's, but it is mainly through the personal contact made in this way that real tolerance is to be found. The visit of the Gordon Quartet deserves the full support of all students and members of Hart House, and hearty thanks from all members of the University.

Dear Madam Editor:

Though I agree with most of your editorial on adult education I think you leave an essential aspect out. People want, and democracy needs, education which will meet the economic problem of the getting of bread and of enjoyment. But education is, or should be, more than these material and ornamental factors. History, Literature, Philosophy, e.g., are not vocational training, yet they are not, either, merely decorative or enjoyable frosting.

Such courses have also, and I would say primarily, the function of helping their students to clarify values, purposes, methods, by presenting the suggestions historically made and providing the exercise of thinking such suggestions out consistently.

If they can do this they should, for with the enormous productive power that we already have within our grasp, the difficult problem is not how to make a machine work—training will handle that—but why to operate it and how to secure that its operation will fulfil our democratic purposes and

You're A Fool If Ya Don't Play Pool

Cheers and catcalls rocked the Hart House poolroom yesterday as spectators flocked around to witness a breath-taking benefit exhibition match staged to finance the purchase of new holes to fill the side pockets.

"The old holes are absolutely worn out," stated Warden J. Burblin Lickerbreth, holding one disgustedly at arm's length and indicating the imaginary red and green patches with which it was embellished. "But we have secured a permit from the Hole Controller at Ottawa and all we need now is the dough."

The first protagonist was Mr. I. M. Bizzy, famed Tuck-shop doughnut dispenser, who entered the contest equipped with his own five-dimensional eight-ball, with a hole in the middle modelled after one of his doughnuts to facilitate speedy dunks in the corner pocket.

His opponent, Y. Bleedialack Clippenn, equally famed Operator in the Hart House Barbershop, claimed he would be an easy winner with his specially-designed shaving-brush-tipped cue. "These gleaming little ivory are nothing new to me," he said modestly to the press gallery. "Look at the years of practice I've put in giving a quick brush-off to the President's shining dome."

While the players sharpened their cues the Warden assembled the opening parade, featuring brass bands, a gigantic trumpeting elephant borrowed from the Whitney Hall Elephant's Graveyard, the Music Room's Steam Roller Piano, and a cage on wheels containing Comp-troller Gilhooly. The parade wound among the tables in the poolroom three times, while concessionaire Bobby Gotrox, III C. & F., did a thriving trade in periscopes for the convenience of pint-sized spectators in back rows.

Their cues needle-sharp by now, the contestants faced off in approved fencing attitudes and awaited the opening gun, the bullet from which pierced the ceiling, and penetrating a cane-bottomed seat, brought down the Warden's stenographer through the roof with a crash.

With commendable Hart House decorum, she landed on her feet with her notebook at the alert, inquiring "Dictation, sir?"

Brushing off the plaster-littered table with his whisk, the Warden signalled for the game to begin, and began passing his famed portable Cuspidor like a collection plate among the audience, waggingly scolding Schoolmen for tossing in silver-plated Dewey buttons.

"Now, now, boys," he reprimanded them, "this isn't Sunday."

Clippenn's opening shot caromed from cushion to cushion amid screams of "No Fair! No Fair!" as its complexity faced the onlookers completely; and the giggling opponent, his eyes hopelessly crossed, sank to the floor with a groan. Clippenn was awarded the match by default.

The game ended with happiness everywhere when the ball leaped from the table and bounced on the spring of the cash register drawer, which sprang open, showering a profusion of small change into the waiting Cuspidor.

"Jackpot!" exulted the Warden.....

Meds Lace Jr. School In Group II Opener

The Meds II hockey squad assumed complete authority over the Junior School team at Varsity Arena yesterday afternoon, taking them 4-1 in the Group II opener. Loughheed in goal, Coons and Pearson sparked the Meds' game, and Houston and Mosher were the pick of the plumpers.

The first period opened with a superior brand of shifny. For about ten minutes the puck ranged back and forth over centre ice, rarely getting played into the end-zone, let alone being shot on goal. But on one of the early plays Paul passed to Butt in the School end-zone and Butt parked the pill beside Robinson, to put Meds ahead 1-0. In the last half of the first, the Meds attack was very well organized, and in the course of the play Pearson and Coons came up with unassisted goals to make the score 3-0 for the Meds as the period ended.

In the second period, the teams played to a 1-1 tie. Meds held the edge on the attack, but School's defence tightened up and were able to break up most threatening plays. A third of the way through the stanza Houston lit the light behind Loughheed for School's single goal on a smooth shot after a fair rush from centre ice. Meds countered with some fast goalward plays, but their shots were off. Minutes later, Pearson scored again while actually skating away from the School goal. Smith passed to him as he was skating away after a shot at goal, and Pearson managed to flick the puck back to make it 4-1 for Meds. The game was called on account of ice reservations with four minutes to play.

ALL GAMES WILL BE PLAYED AT VARSITY

Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerry Ewins

TONIGHT'S THE NIGHT

Well, our Hockey Blues take on a tough chore tonight when they hook up with Navy Bulldogs in their first game of the season. Due to consistent practice and good coaching on the part of Ace Bailey, the team is in first-class shape for the affair, and will give this highly-favored Sailor outfit a close run for its money. But don't take it from us. Go on up there this evening at eight o'clock and see yourself a good game of hockey. Remember, it's all for free.

Ace had to cut his Blues squad to thirteen players to come in under the wire for the player limit. This limit restricts each team to two forward lines and one utility forward, two defence combinations and a goalie and a sub-goalie. Thus some of the big team Ace was working with had to go. The starting line-up printed for tonight's game is authentic but not necessarily final, as Ace still intends to make some changes in the squad for future games. Here's what we got from the co-managers, George Ferguson and Bob Marshall, at a conference yesterday.

Goal—Doug Davidson. Alternate: Bob McCombe.

Defence—"Red" Shand, Harvey Bain, Bill Wade, Ian Hart. Forwards—Cy Hughes, Bob Murray, Bill Lawler, Hugh Smythe, Murray Walker, Gus Adam.

"Red" Shannon was chosen as team captain by the fellows on the team the other day and initiates his formal title tonight for the first time on the ice.

The Athletic Directorate came through with quite a pleasant surprise for the boys on the team when they voted them some funds to enable the players to have a good training meal before each practice and after each game. The team eats at Burwash Hall tonight and then, after a pep talk by Ace Bailey, they go over to the Arena for the game. That should bolster up the fellows quite considerably, and with a little oral support from a few of you students at the game they might really go places. Again, with risk of repeating ourselves, we say: "How about it?"

NEWS OF THE BASKETBALL BLUES

Mac McCutcheon posted a list in the big gym yesterday of the players who are still considered as being on the squad. It consisted of Mayzel, Fitch, Vandemark, Founain, Thompson, Starr, McReynolds, Swan, Gibson, Ryan, Spry, Booth, Himmel, Cranham, Grossman and Turner. Mac says that he hasn't decided as yet whether it is necessary to cut the team any further. He claims he has so many good subs that he doesn't know how he's going to juggle them around when a game comes along. And one has been announced, by the way, next Thursday night in the big gym at eight o'clock with West End Y.M.C.A. Mac elaborated further that he looks for this year's team to be a big improvement on that of last because of these first-class replacements. He also said he had telegraphed Uplands Air Force in Ottawa as to whether they can come down for the first Athletic Night. Gee, and remember that it's only two weeks from tomorrow!

* The Sportswoman *

By Juilee Murray

IN ABSENTIA

Of our assistant last night there was no sportswoman, or did you notice? So at least the Varsity readers were spared a lot of extra reading. This allowed the poor overworked night editor, the first guy moreover who will tell you that he is a poor overworked night editor, to pull a beautiful Newsfront, to the effect that at 3.30 there was still no sportswoman.

TODAY, THEREFORE.

We are talking of the beneficial effects of exercise, of the type to be gained around the campus. If you are of the conventional breed, you can play such mundane and over-rated games as hockey, volleyball, et al. However there are forms of exercise which, while retaining these campus character, are indulged in a healthful atmosphere of smoke and small-talk. For instance Bridge, whether of the one-horse, or Horse-sense variety.

Bridge, we claim the Game of the Year. Bridge is the game which allows of all sorts of exercise. It is to the Dummy that most benefit occurs. She has a brilliant future. For the space of fifteen minutes she has time to do healthful setting-up exercises, play a fast game of crap, if more than one table is involved, go out for a quick canter around the block, or play handball against the wall.

The Dummy may indulge in knitting if she has no more originality, and we largely suspect that one may judge a Bridge fiend by the number of sweaters, or pair of socks which she wears.

Then there is the game, muchly over-rated by our boss last year, Gin Rummy. This game had the campus by its ears last year. This year we are forced to report a decline in the interest displayed in this thrilling game. We admit that we have done nothing to prevent this sorry state of affairs coming to pass.

Crap is also a very uplifting form of amusement for the more blasé and sophisticated people around the campus. To the sober student of Economics it will be seen and joyfully hailed as one of the best means of keeping the coin of the realm in steady circulation. Next to Bridge, at a cent a point (as played by ourselves), this is the one stable thing in our economic system, and the one axiom which may be followed blindly—You can't fail to end up in a different state financially than that in which you started.

And now we have completed our dissertation on the Otlter Sports. If anyone can think of a better way to spend about eight inches of copy than saying this drivle they are welcome to write a guest column at any time.

with frank rasky

Again inspired—this time by the current edition of Acta Victoriana—we provide for the edification of our readers what our distinguished colleague calls rhyming gourd that is "staccato and serpentine." Also, we might add, parenthetically again, what's a lazy man to do when he's got to fill this space?

First, from the pages of the Argosy, we steal a lyric which expresses for all ages the wail of students attending 8.30 lectures. With perhaps a slight undertone of Shelley, it runs:

Daybreak, daybreak,
And I am soft awake
I hear the little birdies peep,
Damn it why can't I go back to sleep?

Culled from the pages of the McGill Daily comes this whispering hymn. All right, ladies, whisper it to yourself. Without these assets found at school Our life would be a bore. So, as we said, dear Lord, Don't let the draft take any more. Ah-men.

And from that same journal, noted throughout the land for its pretensions to literary acclaim, comes this eulogism. All right, men, it's your turn to whisper:

Mary had a little dress,
Lovely chic and airy;
It didn't show the dirt a bit,
But gosh how it showed Mary.

Everybody likes nursery rhymes, and so does the Queen's Journal, which recently enchanted its readers with this flimsy whimsy:

Jack and Jill went for a thrill
A-drinking rum and porter;
They got so drunk they did some things
They hadn't really order.

Flipping a page of the Western Gazette, we find pressed there this botanical specimen:

I used to love my garden
But now my love is dead
For I found a bachelor button
In black-eyed Susan's bed.

To prove that it is a tabloid of no mean artistic bent, the Gazette also presents this bent old Ogdenshery. It's entitled Mice and squawks something like this:

I wonder if mices
have any vices?
Do you think they drink and shoot dices?

Do they overindulge
In their favorite cheeses?
Do they carry a hanky to throttle a sneeze?
Do they cheat at gin rummy, play poker
for money, and forget to say thank you and please?

I wonder if mices have got any vices like these?

Reminiscence

Eaton Auditorium

At her first Toronto concert appearance, Miliza Korjus sang her way into the hearts of an audience who were wishing again to hear the brilliant coloratura voice which thrilled people some years ago in "The Great Waltz."

Miss Korjus has a rounded and perfect technique of coloratura singing. Her breathing, diction and voice were under control such as is seldom found in concert appearances. Despite a coming cold, she managed the highest notes with a lack of effort that was inspiring.

Although encountering a group which had technical stumbling blocks difficult to surmount by even the most finished artists, such as Mozart's Alleluia and Casta Diva from Norma, she managed it, warming to singing in the later groups.

In those pieces requiring a flute obbligato Miss Korjus showed her mastery of florid singing. She occasionally fell into the great sin of coloraturas—that of sliding up to a note instead of hitting it squarely.

Aided by the sympathetic accompaniment of Giuseppe Bamboschek, a finished pianist, and Henry Bove, butist, Miss Korjus' outstanding group of the evening was in English. David's Charming Bird, and Benedict's The Gypsy and the Bird, were reminiscent of Galli-Curci.

Expecting the vivacious actress of the picture which made her famous, in this country, the audience were rather disappointed when she seemed stiff and stilted during her singing. Between numbers, however, she was the scintillating prima donna, flowers, jewels, et al.

As the audience hoped, she concluded her concert with two selections from "The Great Waltz." Sentimental people may have liked it. JANICE MURRAY

We'd Rather be Wrong

Contributors to this column periodically receive notes chastizing them for being "prejudiced." Although the word is used in a derogatory sense, it has the effect of encouraging the A.M. & D. editors for the simple reason that this space is devoted to the expression of opinions. Although we welcome letters from those who disagree with us, we take exception to those who would deny us our opinions.

The personal element always enters into the appreciation of a piece of music or a play. From our point of view, strong likes and dislikes are essential to a keen interest in any art. We feel that to be carried away occasionally by a mediocre work or to remain impervious at times to a great performance of music we dislike is much better than to be sure that our opinion is always founded on an unimpeachable basis. Such detached listening seems too cold to be desirable.

The essential feature of opinions printed in this column is that they are honest, and hence right, in the only sense that the word can be applied to criticism of the arts. Further, they usually can stand up to counter-criticism. Those who urge us to return to a mere reporting of facts must do so because their thinking is so muddled that they do not realize that these are the criterions of sound criticism.

gress which has already been made, which includes the conduction of a Forest Insect Survey annually, and experimental spraying and dusting of infected areas. The survey provides a means of determining what forest insects are present in an area and in what proportions, from which information and eradication measures may be taken. Spraying and dusting were mentioned as two possible means of mechanical control. The speaker said that dusting with the famed D.D.T. was tried out in Algonquin Park this spring, with great success. A pound or two of the chemical to an acre of bush killed all of its insects, including harmless and useful species.

A further proof of D.D.T.'s power is that it resulted in a marked decrease in the speckled trout population of immediately surrounding waters, a condition definitely not favorable interests, instead of leading to frustration, depression, war.

If liberal arts courses do not fulfil this need, it is not because they cannot or should not. It is because they are badly taught or, more importantly, because the student does not accept the responsibility of himself making such judgments as I mentioned, and reasoning them out. Hence he "learns" them, instead of critically demanding of the ideas and events presented, that they make real contributions to these real problems, through his thinking.

The Canadian people do want bread. They do need training. But I believe that they also—and not separately or afterwards only—want and badly need the suggestion and help that liberal arts can and should give.

Respectively,

W. JARVIS McCURDY

(Editor's Note—We agree with Professor McCurdy that the Canadian people need the suggestion and help provided by the liberal arts. But the majority of people who comprise our society will not be interested in striving towards the attainment of all that is offered by a liberal education unless they can begin learning something completely within their frame of reference. Primarily their attention must be attracted towards education before they can be stimulated into an interest for its more complex forms. Generally speaking, people outside of the University are not interested in and cannot swallow History, Literature or Philosophy without having been first conditioned by training in subjects with which they are daily concerned, i.e. economics and politics. Once their attention has been awakened it can then be directed to more composite courses.)

Two debaters constitute a team and the only qualifications are that the debate is open to U.C. men only, and that both team members must be registered in the same Year. There are absolutely no limitations on the number of teams entered by each Year. As a matter of fact, we hope to secure a large number of entrants from the various Years in order that the greatest number of students may participate in the Debates and thus fulfil the wish of the founder, namely, that the undergraduates secure public speaking experience.

"The topics are to be selected by the Year presidents in co-operation with the debaters, thus enabling an almost unlimited scope in the choice of subject matter."

Power Politics

Recent discussions on the campus centering around international politics have resulted in the condemnation of settlements concerning liberated countries as "power politics." In a speech some weeks ago, Dr. Ralph Barton Perry, Harvard University, offered an argument in favor of the diplomatic negotiations of the past few months.

Primarily, he points out, "the resistance groups in conquered or Axis-conquered countries are our allies and if they are accepted as our allies they must be given assurances now regarding their future. Territorial and other settlements must be made promptly in order to avoid prolongation of anarchy and destructive civil wars. Until an international organization is firmly established we must work with the instruments we already possess—namely, the instruments of diplomacy. An international organization must start somewhere, with a status quo, not to be perpetuated, but to be taken as a point of departure... the great victor Powers which will barely have escaped subjection to the Axis aggressors, and will have achieved security only by enormous sacrifices, are not going at once to entrust that hard-won security to an organization in which they may be outvoted. Finally, Americans must not forget that when the Far East takes the place of Europe as the main theatre of war, they will feel about the islands of the Pacific, the coast of China, and the countries of southeastern Asia, as Russia now feels about Finland, the Baltic States and the Balkans. Does anyone suppose that, when Japan is finally forced to surrender, the Americans are going, at once and without further ado, to refer the future of these liberated regions, saturated with the blood of our fighting men, to the decisions of a new-born international organization in which they may be outvoted by 40 or 50 scattered nations or overruled by the decision of an international court? Then we shall be less squeamish about power politics; and it is to be hoped that we shall not lend ourselves in the ridiculous position of advocating abstract justice at a distance while quite prepared to throw our weight about when things get nearer home."

Dr. Perry goes on to argue that his position is not moral defeatism provided that we take it for what it is—a step forward in an ideal direction. His curious thesis of idealism and realism may be summed up in his claim that we should do what we can in order that some day we may do better.

We wonder whether or not such a half-faith can be placed in human nature with effective results. If we are to push forward to the attainment of international co-operation and eventually unity, we must have as a basis something more than a record of past events. If we were made of sterner, disciplined stuff, perhaps we could build to great heights upon what we have. But to justify power politics as leading to improvement seems far more impractical than primarily to assume a goal which seems beyond our grasp. Ravaged countries after the war will be embittered and swept by integral fanaticism. The only way to overcome intense hatred (which itself will culminate in excessive nationalism) is not by placing power politics at their disposal but by a steady re-arrangement of the educational system towards international co-operation.

Bishop Lauds Chinese Arts

"We all recognize how much we owe to China for the invention of paper and printing and what they mean to us," stated Bishop W. C. White, Director of the School of Chinese Studies, speaking on "The Development of Printing in China" in the theatre of the Royal Ontario Museum last Friday.

The germ of printing was established about 34 centuries ago in the castings of bronzes and inscription in clay which show fully sophisticated ideas, explained Bishop White.

About 175 A.D., declared the Bishop, a memorial was sent to the emperor asking him to have the classics cut on stone and thus preserved, in order that they might be available for paper "rubblings." This was done, continued Bishop White, since in Honan province a piece of stone was found on which was inscribed part of the Classic on Music. In commenting on this stone, Bishop White said it was remarkable that the script used on it is almost exactly similar to that which is used today.

The speaker went on to explain that in the making of books both sides of pear-wood blocks were used. Movable type probably went from China to Korea and then to Japan, where it was used for a long time. Pride in their lovely script, together with their fear that written characters would become stylized prevented the Chinese from using movable type.

The earliest printed book, completed in 868 A.D., was discovered in 1907, stated the Bishop. Made up of seven sheets, it was 16 feet long and one foot wide and was printed from wooden blocks. The oldest examples of block printing in existence are contained in small, hollow pagodas made under the direction of a Japanese empress, who distributed them to various temples.

In conclusion, Bishop White exhibited a book printed in 1245 A.D., almost exactly 200 years before Gutenberg's Bible.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

Men of Good Will

Hart House

University students were treated to a concert of chamber music played with rare co-ordination and finesse last night by the Gordon String Quartet with Jacques Gordon and Walter Hagen, violins; Kras, viola; Gabor Rejto, cello. The program was offered as a gesture of goodwill by the University of Rochester. Fortunately, the quality of the playing was such as to create nothing but goodwill.

The most notably performed portion of the concert was the second movement of the Mozart C Major Quartet in which the gentlemen from Rochester achieved a unity of purpose too often lacking in quartet work. Of interest was the Quartet in One Movement by Howard Hanson, Director of the Eastman School of Music. The work utilizes many unusual effects, some of them better suited to the orchestra than to concerted strings. It was performed with understanding and probably won some new admirers for Dr. Hanson, who has hitherto been represented in Toronto chiefly by his Romantic Symphony. The program concluded with the Quartet in A Minor (op. 41) by Schumann, a quartet typical of Romanticism in its heyday. It is a tribute to the players that they could play three works so completely different in mood with equal comprehension and sympathy.

Hearing the Gordon Quartet has been an important musical event for this University. It certainly makes clear the advantages of having a highly developed school of music connected with the university. If the playing of the Gordon Quartet is an indication of the standards maintained there, Toronto students can look to Rochester with envy.

Re-establish Friday Recitals

Viggo Kihl will play at the first Friday Recital in four years in the Music Room, Hart House, this Friday at 4:45 p.m. This recital has been arranged by the Music Committee of Hart House to be the first in the series of Friday Recitals since they were discontinued at the end of the 1940-1941 season owing to the pressure of accelerated courses and military drill.

These recitals were first established during the academic year 1923-24 when the Music Committee arranged a series of chamber music concerts at 5 o'clock in the Music Room. They became very popular and before the war were one of the outstanding musical activities in Hart House. The Music Room was designed originally for chamber music.

The Friday Recitals served two purposes. They gave an opportunity for the younger musicians to play before an audience, and contributed to their establishment. A good many of those now widely known in musical circles gained early concert experience in this way.

Whether or not the committee decides to arrange one or two more of these musical occasions will depend upon the degree of interest shown. "The Music Committee are to be congratulated upon their initiative in arranging this recital for Friday," said W. B. Burwell, secretary of Hart House.

Rosenberg Guest At J.S.F. Meeting

The Jewish Student Fellowship will hold a meeting at 8 p.m. tomorrow at the Women's Union, at which Mr. Henry Rosenberg, the guest speaker, will discuss the growth of the Toronto Jewish community and the Jewish Welfare Services.

"This meeting will be of value, not only from the educational and cultural standpoint, but also in that it will be an opportunity to meet other students of the campus," said Ben Ornstein, president of the J.S.F. Refreshments and dancing will follow Mr. Rosenberg's discussion.

Anonymous Letter Brings Exposure Six 'Acta' Poets Are All Gould

Bearing on the slam-bang reviews and burlesques of Acta Victoriana and the Trinity Review in recent issues of The Varsity, the following anonymous letter was mailed to the Editorial Department over the week-end:

"Margaret R. Gould, alias Ann Gareth, Elizabeth Gawwin, Mary John, J.R.S., A. G. Ravaine, Madeline Gaheris.

"For the edification of Mr. Hugh Kenner, if he again attempts to review Acta Victoriana, that he may know that the Gouldian influence is still present, though moribund."

While investigation has failed to unearth the author of the above terse indictment, it bore out the opinion of our reviewer that many Acta contributions were so similar in tone that the writers might have been reading each other's minds.

Since it is not The Varsity's policy to give publicity to unsubstantiated anonymous charges, a reporter, attempt-

War Service Debate Topic

The question of compulsory war service in the University will be debated next Friday at 4:00 p.m., when U.C. will play host to the Interfaculty Debating Union in the Junior Common Room.

Supporting the motion, U.C. and Vic will be represented by Ralph Shepherd, IV U.C., and Dorothy Speers, II Vic. The negative will be upheld by Don Mulholland, III S.P.S., and Joan McGoe, III Loretto.

"We want the discussion to be influenced by patriotism not self-interest," said Gyneth Stencil, vice-president of the Loretto Debating Club. She pointed out that the I.D.U. was formed to replace the pre-war Hart House Debates, and that in discussing a topic of such urgency as this, they are attempting to carry out the same function.

She added that although all those thinking about the urgency of the situation would probably support the government, the opposition will emphasize the fact that without war service more time would be allowed for study.

The debate will follow the procedure of the U.C. parliament as has been the custom in the previous Interfaculty Debating Union debates. It is expected that the discussion from the floor will be lively, but Miss Stencil expressed the hope that it will be sane and motivated by a serious attitude to the subject. Students from all faculties are invited to take part.

Give Courses For Veterans

As a part of the program of providing educational opportunities for returned men, Dr. W. J. Dunlop, director of extension studies at Toronto, has announced a first-year course in engineering which will open April 12. After six months' study, students will enter second year in the fall.

Plans have also been made for an intensive ten-month course in business including lectures in statistics, accounting and other related subjects. It has been announced that this course will commence on February 5.

At all major universities throughout Canada, courses have been established for the returning veterans. The preferred program for this educational scheme is that of McGill University, which establishes courses on a three-year period.

CORRECTION

Professor A. F. W. Plumptre will address the Political Science Club tonight at 8:15 in Wymilwood. His subject will be: "How Canada Fits into Wartime Washington."

Call-up Policy Is Altered

A change in the policy regarding military call-up of discharged men, announced Saturday by Labor Minister Mitchell, may affect R.C.A.F. and R.C.N.V.R. men now attending university who are awaiting their discharge.

The rule, which will not be retroactive, provides that all men discharged from the armed forces after Jan. 15 who have not seen active service outside Canada will be subject to military call-up. Formerly, men with three or more years' service in Canada have not been subject to call-up after discharge, but from now on this exemption will be limited to men with overseas records.

Similar exemption is granted graduate aircrew personnel of the R.C.A.F. who have been transferred to the special aircrew reserve, R.C.A.F. men who have carried out operational duties on either coast, and men of the R.C.N.V.R. who have seen service in international waters. However, ground-crew personnel, including officers, will be subject to call-up.

If a discharged man is not callable, either because of being in a low medical category or being beyond the army age group, he will be liable to direction into essential civilian employment.

Meds to Hear Talk On French Canada

"French Canada and Canadian Unity" is to be the topic discussed by Stanley Ryerson at the Medical Arts and Letters Club, Monday, Jan. 15, at Wymilwood.

Mr. Ryerson, son of Dr. E. S. Ryerson, Assistant Dean and Secretary of the Faculty of Medicine, is Education Director of the Labor Progressive Party. Mr. Ryerson was an active member of the Communist movement and holds strongly to the Marxian System of social organization. His topic will be centered not on the religion of Quebec but on what he sees as the economic domination of its people by monopoly interests allied with the rich, landed clerical body closely knit with the political fabric of the province.

Scores Five Goals Without Opposition

Varsity Improved After Long Rest. Plays Better Hockey in Closing Session: Last Minute Drive Fails

FINAL SCORE 7-1

Navy Bulldogs drove home two points in their argument for possession of first place with a 7-1 win over Ace Bailey's Varsity Blues in their Friday Night Hockey League encounter over the week-end. An attendance of 618 viewed the proceedings at Varsity Arena.

After Navy walked away in scoring five goals during the first two periods, the Blues pulled a typical hopeless last period drive, to little avail. Bailey's charges were an entirely different team after their second long rest period, and for once they gave their followers a glimpse of hockey form that can cause much havoc for opposing teams in forthcoming games.

A former St. Mike and Oshawa junior, Bob Love, opened the scoring midway through the initial stanza on a short pass from Slattery. He added another in the second, while Slattery came in for two and Morrisette counting a single.

For two periods the hockey dished out verged from fair to poor but the closing session provided a classy exhibition.

A debatable penalty was handed Heffering for boarding Wade early in the period, giving Bailey the opportunity to play five forwards. The pressure was effective but the shooting and play around the net was loose. Curry's back-checking was the feature of the penalty.

Slattery accomplished his hat trick for the evening by plugging in Navy's sixth goal. Love was credited with the assist. Eaton added another, 3 minutes later.

Adam netted Varsity's lone marker at the nine-minute mark on a pass from Boa. Baile was through seconds later, only to have Parubick smother the shot.

Shand, Murray, Smythe and Davidson were outstanding for the Blues, while Slattery, Love, Schmitt and Tonn carried the burden for the Tars.

Navy—Parubick, Heffering, Tonn, Porter, Eaton, Love, Curry, Slattery, Schmitt, McCloskey, Morrisette and Lukasik.

Blues—Davidson, Shand, Hart, Boa, Murray, Lawlor, Bain, Wade, Hughes, Walker, Adam and Smythe.

Need Philosophy Says Rev. Phelan

Reverend Father Gerald B. Phelan, president of the Pontifical Institute of Medieval Studies, was the guest speaker at the inaugural meeting of the Saint Michael's College Thomistic Society held yesterday afternoon in Brennan Hall.

Father Phelan's topic was "The Place of Philosophy in the Life of a Layman."

Second only to theology in its importance in the life of any man, Christian philosophy is not a pious study but a rational secular science which admits of no authority, said Father Phelan.

Theology which accepts the authority of the word of God is used by the philosopher in much the same way as mathematical principles are accepted by the physicist. The philosopher investigates and finds a rational justification for the truths which he borrows from the theologian.

True education and the cultivation of the science of philosophy by laymen builds up in their minds a spontaneous tendency to think clearly, concluded the speaker.

Vic Music Group To Hear Ridout

Mr. Godfrey Ridout, of the C.B.C., will address a meeting, open to the public and sponsored by the Women's Lit. of Victoria College, on the subject "Gilbert and Sullivan" at 8:00 o'clock on Monday, Jan. 15, in the Blue Room of Wymilwood.

Mr. Ridout proposes to treat his topic in the manner of a general understanding and appreciation of the works of these masters including personal anecdotes of their lives. The lecture will be illustrated by records from their works.

Mr. Ridout, who has directed various performances of the Gilbert and Sullivan operettas in this city, was also musical director of the Vic Music Club's presentation of "H.M.S. Pinafore."

The speaker is a teacher and lecturer on the staff of the Toronto Conservatory of Music in orchestration and composition. Several of Mr. Ridout's compositions have been publicly performed and his symphony was presented last year by the Toronto Symphony under Sir Ernest MacMillan.

At present Mr. Ridout is concentrating his efforts on composing incidental music for small studio orchestra on the C.B.C. network.

Exit Femininity . . . or Is Still a Man's World?

The Sportsman has graciously turned over this space to the male of the species to mourn the passage of a stage of feminine evolution. The Gibson Girl is gone! With nostalgic regret we realize that the modest, retiring, unassuming wide-eyed girl we used to know has been relegated to the tin-type prints in the attic trunk. We scarcely had time to get to know her, and now she's gone!

In her stead we have thrust upon us the monster, "Modern Girl." Wearing men's pants, entering men's professions, playing men's games, modern woman has lost her greatest asset—helplessness. Imagine Sir Walter Raleigh spreading his cloak to accommodate the size (twelve of a feminine basketball player). The modern girl would probably cross the puddle with a prodigious bound, casting the abashed Raleigh an indulgent smile. The myth of masculine superiority has been the weapon with which Woman throughout the ages has actually dominated Man. The bubble has burst. Woman is standing up for her rights . . . in the street-car.

The time has come when Woman must choose between a sexless equality with Man and a lucrative, respected, ego-building dominance over him.

ACTA EXPOSED

Confusion and invective filled Victoria College yesterday when The Varsity, in an exclusive exposé, disclosed that all poetic contributions to the college magazine, Acta Victorianna, had been written under pseudonyms by President Hank Dody.

At first the president refused to admit to authorship of this literary skull-duggery, but when an intrepid Varsity reporter discovered him standing on his head in his office, balancing a tea-kettle on his nose, and tapping on his typewriter with his eyes shut, it was irrevocably plain that Pres. Dody was composing modernistic poetry, and he admitted all.

"The cat is out of the bag!" sobbed Pres. Dody, sheepishly placing the kettle back on the tea cosy. "The poems, I confess, are all mine."

Tearfully, he then admitted that he had been secretly writing Acta's verse for the last 40 years as a release from making speeches.

"What will my wife say now?" he moaned.

He explained that the more tired he was after delivering addresses the more artistic were his free verses.

"But why the kettle?" he was asked. "Ah, that," he replied slyly. "That's to get me all steamed up."

Further enquiry by Bilge McPlaster, Victorianna editor, disclosed that the exposé had been incited as a result of original investigation by The Varsity's Catitors and literary cryptogram experts, Messrs. Woo and Razby.

"It was a cinch," said the Catitors, in a statement to the press. "We merely examined the magazine's verse closely, and found that the words in the 1st, 13th, 21st, and 80th lines began with the letters D-O-D-Y, all followed by four dots instead of the usual three."

"But," continued the two internationally-known cypher analysts, "our suspicions were confirmed when we discovered one damning word that made everything plain. That was when we discovered in one poem the word 'and.' We carefully went through back-files of speeches made by the president and we ferreted out his first public statement back in July, 1818, when as a boy he delivered a speech after winning the local pie-eating contest. And, as we fully expected, there was that exact implicating word—'and.'"

Hockey Sidelights . . .

It doesn't take much to get attention when you're a winning team, but after you drop a game or two then the descent down the ladder of fame seems to be the lone alternative. We hope there is an exception to that rule for the Blues.

The Friday game showed that the Blues are capable of playing good hockey if, and when, their mental attitude is up to it. That last period displayed a scrappy and fighting quality in the team and just how it was aroused by Coach Bailey is a question.

On paper and on the ice, Navy aren't six goals better than the Blues, and the next encounter between the two should prove this. The defence of the Blues is tops—Davidson, Shand, Hart, Bain and Wade would do credit to a much higher bracketed club. The seven goals reflect little against their ability. The forwards, with a couple of exceptions, failed to back-check. More competition is a certain cure for this.

Much to our delight and the consternation of the pallid-poolroom pugs, Hugh Smythe played a standout game, going hard both ways. Bob Murray was the only other forward who showed up well.

Freshman Doug Davidson seems well on his way to establishing himself as a regular on the return of intercollegiate. Whilst he has a tendency to adopt Frank McCool's trick of leaving the net, he has shown enough to stamp him as a comer.

All in all, the opening of the venture was a decided success. More and better support will weigh heavily in the debate for the return of the Intercollegiate Big Four. The next doubleheader is Friday.

Canada Granted Position On U.S. Board---Plumptre

Political Science Club Learns That Canada Accepted as Economic Equal of United States

CANADA PRIVILEGED

Canada is in the unique position of being the only outside country to occupy a position on the United States War Production Board's Requirements Committee, said Professor A. F. W. Plumptre, in discussing Canada's position at Washington, at a meeting of the Political Science Club last night at Wymwood. Mr. Plumptre now represents the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, the Finance Department, and the Department of External Affairs at Washington.

Professor Plumptre pointed out the contrast between the treatment of Canada and the treatment of the Latin American republics by the United States. Towards the latter the United States adopts a paternalistic attitude, which is accepted by both sides. Dealings with Canada, on the other hand, are made on a basis of equality. "They pay us," he said, "the doubtful compliment of saying we are indistinguishable from them."

Canada's privileged position in Washington dates back to the time of the Hyde Park Agreement of 1941, the speaker said. At that time was achieved the economic integration of the two countries.

"At that time," he said, "we had to get a free flow of machine tools without any delay at all." The result was that Canada was granted equal priority rights with American industry.

Canadian contacts, Mr. Plumptre continued, are maintained with the Office of Price Administration, which handles the price ceiling, and with the War Production Board, which is concerned with supply problems.

As often as not, he said, the officials controlling prices have no connections whatever with those controlling supply, and both have no contact with the firms of their particular industry. Hence it happens that the two agencies may try simultaneously to maintain prices at the old level while at the same time they attempt to cut down the production of the industry. "Sometimes the agencies are in actual competition with one another," he pointed out.

One significant difference between the price control policies of Canada and the United States, Mr. Plumptre said, is that Canada puts a ceiling on domestic prices but allows export prices to find their own level, partially paying for the increasingly difficult retention of price ceilings by spreading equally by licensees the higher profits of the export trade.

The United States places ceilings on both domestic and export prices, he said, one of the reasons for this policy being an increased sense of responsibility felt by Americans for the avoidance of world-wide inflation.

Americans Discuss College and War

The war and its impact upon the American colleges was the chief feature of the Association of American Colleges meeting in Atlantic City on January 12. According to Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, American colleges should prepare to enroll at least 660,000 veterans on their return to the United States.

He said that his figures were derived from surveys and represented exactly 50 per cent more than the highest peak ever before handled by the colleges.

The meeting discussed proposals for nationwide military training during peacetime and differences of opinion developed. The association declared that the adoption now by the United States of a program of peacetime universal military training would imply a lack of trust in the effectiveness of the plans now being formulated to prevent agitation by international co-operation.

The association went on record for Selective Service being continued and amended to cover all emergencies for the duration and pledged full co-operation in maintaining a program of adequate (Continued on page 2)

Script-Writers Compete Workshop Rewards Best

Montreal—(CUP)—A script-writing contest has been announced by the executive of the McGill Radio Workshop. Original radio scripts of 15-minute or half-hour length are asked for, and all students are eligible for the contest, regardless of membership in the Radio Workshop.

With no limit set on the number of entries submitted by a contestant, the scripts may be of any type—drama, comedy, or war stories. Starting this week, the contest will be open for one month, closing February 14.

A prize will be awarded for the best three scripts submitted. An examining board consisting of the director and producers of the workshop as well as the president and the secretary will act as judges, their decision to be announced in the McGill Daily one week after the close of the contest.

EDITORIAL Towards Better Understanding

On Thursday of this week the second group of Quebec students will leave Canada, bound for Mexico, to take cultural courses at the University of Mexico. At the same time a similar group of Mexican students will arrive in Canada and spend the remainder of the term in Canadian universities. Most of the Canadian students are enrolled in Laval University in Quebec City, with a few from McGill and the University of Montreal. The students will attempt to establish a link in the cultures of their respective countries and to promote goodwill and friendship.

One of the commonest causes of misunderstanding and hostility between countries, and indeed even between provinces, is the lack of first-hand knowledge of the social and economic conditions of the other country. All knowledge is gained from newspaper articles, which may or may not be biased, and the accounts of persons, possibly prejudiced, who have travelled in those countries. The misunderstanding that exists between the sister provinces of Ontario and Quebec is a very prominent example of this. We, buried in the heart of Ontario, know very little of the actual conditions in the Province of Quebec, but we do hear a great deal of the activities of the Jacques Cartier League. Similarly, to the people of Quebec, the zeal and movements of the Orange Lodge assume an undue prominence.

The exchanging of students, men who are trained in viewing cause and effect objectively, provides a very simple and easy method of promoting a better understanding of conditions and a mutual appreciation. This international exchange indicates the idea is wholly feasible. The idea could be extended to include the exchange of students between the various outlying parts of Canada, between Canada and the United States, especially the parts of the U.S.A. remote from Canada, and even the South American countries.

Sullivan's Originality Described by Ridout

"The rebirth of English music started with Sullivan, and because this music is comic opera does not mean it is not great," said Godfrey Ridout, speaking to the Music Group of the Victoria Women's Lit. at Wymwood last evening.

Mr. Ridout said that at the time of Sullivan's birth in 1842, England was going through a dark age, for although there were many brilliant men, not one showed any originality. Then Sullivan, at the age of nine, had a song published. At the age of twelve he could play every instrument in the military band.

At the age of twenty-six, shortly after the death of his father, Sullivan composed "In Memoriam," practically overnight. Some of it was bad, written only to satisfy the taste of the people, but the orchestra handled it well.

Mr. Ridout continued his lecture by saying that Sullivan, who was quite a gad-about, met Gilbert at a party. Although these two were never very friendly, "Trial by Jury" and "The Sorcerer," two of their earlier plays, were very successful despite their relationship. However, the first night of "Ruddy Gore" was a complete flop. Sullivan rearranged the score and rehearsed the actors so that the next night a much different version greeted the audience. Even so, the critics still did not accept it favorably. But the success of "The Golden Legend" and "Ivanhoe" soon overshadowed this failure. "Ivanhoe," which was produced with elaborate settings, had the remarkable record of having a full house for a hundred and sixty nights.

When writing "The Yeoman of the Guard," Sullivan no longer catered to the Victorian public, and produced a much better opera. In concluding his lecture, Mr. Ridout confirmed this by playing recorded selections from "Yeoman of the Guard" and "Iolanthe."

Hart House Art Gallery

The twenty-second annual exhibition of photographs—the magna opera of the Hart House Camera Club—is now on view in Hart House Art Gallery.

This year the members strove valiantly and spent many borrowed hours in preparing an exhibition which compares favorably with some of the best of past years. Last night Captain Leonard Hutchison reviewed the show with many interesting, amusing and constructive comments on each print.

To many diehards of the old school, photography is not an art; but to have the pleasure of analyzing the present collection of photographs only serves to confirm the opinion of the moderns who believe it is an art which reflects the lives and feelings of a people, as well as records a faithful picture of our environment.

Over all the viewer is much like the jurist in a trial who looks for the motive behind the crime—except good photography is not a crime, even though it has a clearly discernible motive. Attitudes change and—as a result judgments change. Thus we are loathe to criticize—let's appreciate.

The F. H. Jackson cupwinner of Brother and Sister, top print for the exhibit, is a charming, informal picture of two Negro children. It is an honest Mart Kenny will provide music from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. for the School At-Home on Thursday night at the Royal York.

The dance this year will feature a floor show. Among the entertainers will be Peggy and Larry Lester, a European dance team who played with George Formby and Gracie Fields in moving pictures; Hugh O'Donnell, "The Frozen-Faced Comedian," formerly featured with the Star and Garter production in New York; and the three Stanleys, who performed with Rigley and Barnum shows.

Eight albums of classical and five music will be presented as prizes for a ticket draw. Two books containing a musical cross-section from Bach to Harry James will be awarded to each winning couple.

Present at the dance will be the delegates from McGill, Queen's, Western, McMaster, and O.A.C. The mission of the delegates is unknown.

All scenery was constructed by men from the faculty of Architectural Engineering. The nature of the scenery is unknown and is "shrouded in mystery." Tickets are on sale daily at noon hour in the Engineering Society Store.

Hart House Photos Win Much Praise

The award of the F. H. Jackson Memorial Trophy to Harold Sumberg clinched a photograph display in the Hart House Art Gallery that was considered superior to that of the preceding year. Prof. A. F. Coventry, chairman of the Photographic Committee, explained that although there were many more prints this year than last, it is "not the multitude which makes the display" but the quality. He apologized for having to restrict greatly the number of colored prints, which were especially plentiful.

The judge was Captain Leonard Hutchison, war correspondent and professional artist. In summing up the contest, he pointed out that the junior members were more original, less bound by tradition, than the senior members. The Jackson Trophy is awarded to junior members of Hart House who are those camera enthusiasts who have not won awards in the past Hart House contests. Captain Hutchison believed that these neophytes had "a more adventurous approach and a spirit behind the lens" that outdid anything of the senior members. Captain Hutchison explained: "One should judge not by textbook standards, but by getting the viewpoint of the sincerely inspired photographer, enjoying a complete freedom." (Continued on page 2)

UBC Loses 60 Students Draft Takes Lower Half

Vancouver, B.C.—(CUP)—60 undergraduates have been asked to leave the University of British Columbia because of failure to meet Christmas examination standards, according to a statement issued by registrar C. B. Wood.

Names of those subject to army call have been submitted to the Wartime Mobilization Board. No figures have been released.

Last year only 48 students were required to leave, but an additional 82 were called by National Selective Service.

The calling of the lower fifty per cent of non-science students after last year's final exams makes it necessary for students not meeting the university requirements this Christmas to be called.

Democratic Duty in Ontario is to Dispel Misconceptions, Avoid Prejudice and Acquire Knowledge of Problem

UNFAIR TO FRENCH

At the meeting of the Medical Arts and Letters Club held at Wymwood last night, Mr. Stanley Ryerson, the guest speaker, spoke on "French Canada and Canadian Unity." Mr. Ryerson is the son of Dr. E. S. Ryerson, Assistant Dean and Secretary of the Faculty of Medicine, and is Education Director of the Labor Progressive Party.

"One of the democratic duties in Ontario is to try to grapple with the problem of French Canadian unity and dispel some of the misconceptions," said Mr. Ryerson. "In order to do this, we must think of French Canada in a highly objective way, and fight our emotions, prejudices, sentiments, and acquire sufficient knowledge to see what is at the root of the problem. In this way we will have a basis of mutual understanding and a unified way of approaching international problems," he continued.

Mr. Ryerson gave some of the basic factors making up the French-Canadian problem. Although they comprise one-third of the total population, with their own language and culture, he pointed out that they were looked down upon as an inferior, conquered group. He gave examples to show that their economic, social and cultural well-being is at a definite disadvantage as compared with the English Canadians. Further, to demonstrate the poor living conditions, Mr. Ryerson mentioned that the per capita purchasing power in Quebec is one-half of that in Ontario. The French-Canadian problem is heavily bolstered by the English industrialists, he said.

In the French-Canadian regiments fighting overseas, where the men realize the purpose of the war, the bad feeling with other Canadians is absent, he pointed out. Also, the unions in Quebec are helping to bring about a friendly feeling, he added.

Mr. Ryerson concluded with two suggestions for the furtherance of improved relations within divided Canada: first, that the French Canadians must not be reminded that they are a conquered nation; secondly, that there must be leadership explaining what is going on in the outside world, so that they will not feel that the English are forcing any policies upon them.

Mr. Ryerson graduated from the University of Toronto, in Modern Languages, in 1933. As a scholarship student he attended the Sorbonne, in France. Here he became interested in the Labor Progressive Party. When he returned to Canada, he continued his work with this party and taught French at the Sir George Williams College.

Lecture Students On Child Study

A four-month course in Child Study and Nursery Education, given by the Ontario Wartime Day Nurseries, in association with the University's Institute of Child Psychology, will begin today in Toronto.

This course consists of Psychology, Child Study, Child Development, principles of Nursery Education, Nursery School Practice, Health and Nutrition Supervision, Day-Nursery Administration, with a special interest in wartime training. Lecturers are from the Institute staff and from the organized provincial staff.

Twenty-four students are enrolled in this course. It is possible for ex-service women to enter it for rehabilitation training, and the expenses of these will be paid.

General Hines said the chances were that demobilization will extend over a period of about two years, and that the rush by veterans to college for training could be expected within one and a half years after victory over the last of the aggressive powers. His estimate was based on the supposition that the older men and men with dependents and those who have been in the longest will be demobilized first. The younger men with fewer dependents, that is, the potential college group, will remain in the armed forces longest.

He warned that the colleges must develop an adult type of program for veterans and proposed that the accelerated courses developed during the war be retained for the returned students.

General Hines said that the Veterans' administration would in no way limit the freedom of individuals to take any course they desire. He urged the colleges to place increased emphasis upon citizenship courses.

Surprise . . .

This U.C. team is proving itself to be a very scrappy outfit again this year in the Jennings' Cup race. So far they have two wins, no losses, and a very commanding grip on the top rung of their group. Yesterday's 3-2 victory over S.P.S. was just as surprising as their previous 3-1 effort against Meds to most of the hockey people around the campus, and probably the most surprising of all to themselves.

Most of the credit for all this goes to the defence. With Wade, Hart and Bain out there in front of Doug Davidson in goal they have one of the strongest seen here in years. Where everyone thought they would fall down in spite of this formidable array was in the forward lines, as they had only one hold-over, Furry, from last year's championship team. But the crop of newcomers are showing a lot of fight to offset their lack of experience, and the whole team is shaping up into a very well balanced outfit. Ferguson, Davidson, and Purcell are showing especially good ability.

We've Got Hockey Blues . . .

Friday night's game was one to learn the required lessons from and then forget about. Navy didn't even bring along the strongest team possible when they came up from H.M.C.S. York. They let men like Davies, Barker and a few others take advantage of a week-end pass and brought subs along in their places. But how about that man Slattery for a sub? Three goals and two assists he got.

We must have better hockey players around here than a couple of those who were on the ice Friday night. The rear-guard played well but up forward we can only put in a good word for Murray, Lawlor, Smythe and Adam. Ace Bailey didn't express any dissatisfaction but he put it this way: "Any man who can come out and show me that he is better than someone else on my squad will get a place on the team." Could someone please light a fire under Callahan, Crassweller, Lawson, or anyone else who happens to be showing some ability and spirit in the Intramural league?

U.C. Edge School For Hockey Win

U.C. notched their second hockey victory of the season as they dispatched Sr. S.P.S. by a 3-2 score. U.C. jumped into an early first period lead when Wade scored on a pass from Davidson but the Engineers soon equalized this when Upper tallied on Anderson's pass-out. School jumped into the lead on Walker's goal at the nine-minute mark. The game started to roughen up toward the end of the period and Bain was sent off as the session closed.

The Artsmen tied up the score early in the second period when Ferguson parked the rubber in behind McCombe after Furry's shot bounced out in front of the net. Furry tallied the game-winning goal.

U.C. is now leading Group One with two victories, and have almost clinched a play-off spot in the Jennings Cup contests. More penalties were handed out in yesterday's game than in any other. At different times each team played two men short.

The second major sport of the year got under way today with two games played in Varsity Arena. In the first, St. Hilda's defeated St. Mike's, 4-0, a most one-sided score. The most outstanding player on the St. Mike's squad was their extremely overworked goalie, Connie De Marco. Patsy Dewan and Babs Smith, Double-Blue forwards, put forth a gallant battle against the smoothly-working St. Hilda girls. The game was fairly fast and a good encounter to watch, but the Saints, whose goal was threatened only once, were in the lead all the way. In the second game of the day P.H.E. lost to Vic I, 4-0. The Phys. Eds., led by Kay McMillan, Marg Pellow and Joan Christie, played a fine type of hockey but couldn't hold the experienced Vic goalie, Helen Stewart. The Scarlet and Gold aggregate showed excellent passing and defence, and their stars Leone Eunson and Joan Chalk, worked very well together. From today's games it looks like St. Hilda's and Vic, those perennial hockeyites, will be the teams to beat. Come up to the Arena when your faculty is playing and cheer the gals along—they'll appreciate a little noise and enthusiasm.

The minor sports are in full swing also for those who don't care to be so violently energetic. Volleyball practices have at long last got under way for the enthusiasts of the sport, and times, places, etc., will be posted by the individual college representatives. The University Women's Badminton Club has arranged playing times on St. Paul's Church courts on Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays. During the week the courts are available from 7:30 to 10:30 p.m., and on Saturdays from 2 to 5 p.m. This year the expenses of the courts are being defrayed by the Athletic Association and admission is therefore covered by your Athletic fee. So, if you are a badminton enthusiast, this should provide added inducement for you to come along and get in a few good games.

Swimming preliminaries will be held this week and next to select the college teams. St. Hilda's hold theirs this evening at the O.C.E. pool from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. All Saints who want to try out for the team, please be on hand at 7:30 sharp. All other faculties, watch this column for the rest of the Preliminary Meet dates. The 17th and the 22nd have been set aside as general meets and practice periods for those who haven't yet attended a sufficient number of practices.

Beginning his appraisal, Capt. Hutchison explained that he deplored the idea of "not liking this or that picture" for any small reason, because of the many different ways of appreciating a picture.

The following awards were made in the different groups:

Mr. Rosenberg Stresses Contributions Made by Minority Groups in Aiding Escape of Jews from Conquered Lands

ENDANGER LIVES

A meeting of the Jewish Student Fellowship was held last night in the Women's Union. The speaker, Mr. Henry Rosenberg, addressed the meeting on the Growth of the Jewish Community.

Mr. Rosenberg pointed out that at this time small minority groups were making great contributions. As an example of this, he cited the case of the Jewish youths who had escaped from Germany, but were "stealing the border" to help their enslaved fellow-men. These heroic youths, although safe in free countries, are secretly entering enemy territory and endangering their lives in an attempt to move Jews from dangerous countries to those that are relatively safer. By means of this underground work, and against great odds, they have managed to save thousands of lives.

"The questions in my mind," said Mr. Rosenberg, "are: What are we doing for the privileges we have? Do we feel that kinship with those Jews who are suffering on the continent? What are we doing to keep our fellow Jews alive? What are we doing to cement the Jewish community?"

"The Jews have been in the war since 1933; since that time Hitler has been trying to exterminate us, along with others," he continued. "We are under pressure at all times, and hence are very politically conscious, since everything that happens to us may at any time be determined by Churchill or Roosevelt. Hence we must decide what suggestions we make to the powers as to the decisions they will make concerning us in their conferences."

"At the present time," he went on, "we have entirely too many factions. Although all these groups are working toward the same end, unless there is a unified outlook, we will not be able to solve our common problems. That this can be done is demonstrated by the Jewish Welfare Fund which has successfully taken care of the financial problems of many of our growing institutions as The Hebrew University in Palestine. A student group can think of this problem and can help to bring unity to the community."

In conclusion, the speaker suggested that we associate ourselves with other minority groups to see that they, as well as we, are not discriminated against. This association is being achieved in Canada by the Canadian Jewish Congress.

Mr. Rosenberg graduated from McMaster University in Political Science. He then went to Osgoode Hall, and was called to the Bar. At present he is practicing law.

Forum Club To Discuss Free Europe

"Liberated Europe—What Now?" will be the topic of tonight's meeting of the Forum on Current Affairs at Wynmwood at 8:15 p.m. Professor Leopold Infeld, Mr. Edward Yardash, and Mr. Spero Bassel will address the meeting.

The subject of liberated Poland will be dealt with by Dr. Infeld, who was born and educated in that country, and was on the staff of the University of Cracow. Since leaving Poland, Dr. Infeld has taught at British, American and Canadian universities, being at present on the staff of the Applied Mathematics department of the University.

Mr. Spero Bassel is going to speak on the Greek situation. He is the national secretary of the Macedonian War Relief Committee and a writer in the Greek press in this country.

The third talker, Mr. Edward Yardash, will take Yugoslavia as his subject. A native of Yugoslavia, he served in that country's army, and was a company commander in the International Brigade in the Spanish Civil War, where he became acquainted with Tito.

At present he is the editor of the Croatian language weekly "Novosti," secretary of the league of Canadian Croats, and on the executive of the Council of Canadian South Slavs to Aid Free Yugoslavia.

A period of open discussion will follow the introductory speeches, and vivid participation is expected.

Airwoman Back Takes Arts Course

Montreal—(CUP)—Myran Rippel, 22, formerly a member of the Woman's Division of the R.C.A.F., is believed to be the first woman of Canada to begin her studies under government rehabilitation plans for ex-service personnel.

After graduation from Montreal High School, she took a secretarial course and in September, 1942, she joined the Air Force with the first group of women to be recruited for the purpose of training as wireless operators.

From Montreal she was sent to Winnipeg as an instructor, and then to Centralia.

Myran is enrolled in Arts, in preparation for a degree in Physiotherapy. She says that she hopes to be appointed to a military hospital in order to be of help in restoring the health and usefulness of wounded men.

She became acquainted with the need for skilled workers in this field through observation of the activities of her father, George Rippel, past president of the Ypres branch, Canadian Legion, who is now a patient at St. Agathe Sanatorium.

Invite MacMillan To Visit Australia

Sir Ernest MacMillan, Dean of the Faculty of Music, will go to Australia between April and July of this year to conduct a series of sixteen regular concerts and five young people's concerts in four Australian cities, it was announced recently by Mrs. Edmund Boyd, president of the women's committee of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra Association.

Mrs. Boyd said that Sir Ernest had won the intense admiration of prominent musicians for his erudition and musicianship; and that the latest mark of this widespread recognition was the invitation from the Australian Broadcasting Commission.

Pares Lectures On Revolution

Sir Bernard Pares will deliver his first lecture in a series on Contemporary Russia in Convocation Hall at 4:30 p.m. today.

"This term I shall cover from the start up to date the whole Soviet period of Russian history," he said in an interview yesterday. "In this lecture I take the first violent period of civil war and world revolution and the complete failure to put into action the principles of unadulterated Marxism."

"The last lecture on March 21 will bring things up to date and deal with the questions of the peace settlement as far as they concern Russia," stated Sir Bernard Pares.

E. S. Forsey Speaks To C.C.F. Club

Eugene S. Forsey, Ph.D., one-time professor of Political Science and Economics at McGill, will discuss the subject, "Control from the bottom; will it work?" before the C.C.F. Club tomorrow night at 8:30 in Wynmwood.

Professor Forsey, an authority on the Canadian constitution, is currently research director for the Canadian Congress of Labour. This work utilizes his knowledge of law, economics and political science, for it involves the accumulation of data to be used by unions in industrial disputes.

Toronto students of economics and political science are acquainted with the books that Professor Forsey has written, for their courses refer to his works for source material.

His representative at the Union headquarters stated that the academician's views towards socialism should interest not only active party members, but also any student who has any recourse to politics in his course of study.

University C.C.F. Club representatives urge a large turnout to hear a subject that is, they point out, of controversial import in these days when an election is impending.

R. D. Barron Decorated

Captain Robert D. Barron, R.C.A. M.C., a graduate of the University of Toronto, has been awarded the Military Cross for distinguished conduct in the course of duty, it was announced recently.

On two separate occasions Captain Barron attended wounded personnel and evacuated all wounded under severe fire, thus saving valuable lives at the risk of his own.

MacDonald Is Honored

By Janice Murray

At the meeting of the Senate last Friday evening, the president announced that the Rt. Hon. Malcolm MacDonald, British High Commissioner, would be present at the next meeting of the Senate, for the purpose of receiving the degree of LL.D. honoris causa. Mr. MacDonald would have received the degree at the last meeting had he been able to be present at the Convocation on November 21, 1944.

Dr. Cody also announced a Special Convocation for the purpose of presenting the graduating class in Medicine the degree of Doctor of Medicine. This Convocation will be held Friday afternoon, February 16. The reason that such a Convocation is necessary is because of the wartime acceleration in the course.

At the same meeting the Forestry Alumni Scholarship was awarded to John W. Giles.

B.A. degrees were awarded to three students on active service, R. J. Fitzpatrick of the United States Army, V. G. H. Johnson, and W. R. Jones.

A similar degree was awarded posthumously to P/O G. H. Warren-Darley, who was killed on active service overseas on November 24, 1944. This posthumous degree is seldom awarded, the Senate report stated.

Milton Works Show Liberty

Professor A. S. P. Woodhouse will speak in the second of the present series of public lectures in Room 8 of U.C. at 4:30 tomorrow afternoon. The series treats of Representative English Writers and the Theme of Liberty. He will discuss Milton as one of the greatest exponents of liberty in English letters.

Professor Woodhouse specializes in the works of Milton, and is considered by some to be the greatest living authority on the subject.

A passage from Milton's "Areopagitica" in defence of freedom of the press is inscribed round the moulding of the walls in the Great Hall in Hart House.

McGill Ban on Japanese Still Under Discussion

Montreal—(CUP)—No decision has been reached by McGill's Senate on the question of the ban of wise Canadian-Japanese students from the university. The ban was discussed at the Senate's pre-Christmas meeting but the matter was left undecided.

A decision may or may not be reached on whether the ban will be reversed at one of the coming monthly meetings of the Senate. No promise that such a decision will be definitely made was forthcoming from McGill's principal, P. C. James.

"This is Your Investment in Humanity" is the Sentiment Expressed in I.S.S. Campaign. Appealing for Student Aid

PASS YOUR BUCK

At last it can be told. Convinced that a continued suspense over its true meaning would only serve to unhinge the mental balance of the campus, the originators of that puzzling numeral 55-66 have now divulged what it really stands for.

Here it is: 55-66 signifies the objective which the International Student Service has set for its great drive at the end of January. This means that the I.S.S. expects to raise $5566 dollars to be sent in aid of students all around the world.

"We have set this objective because it would correspond to about one dollar per student," Alan Foster, I.S.S. publicity manager, said last night, and added: "Naturally, this figure is a purely formal minimum amount and we expect that the campus will do much better, especially in view of the simple logic that any dollar we ourselves can part with leisurely is an absolute essential for its recipient—some destitute fellow-student in Europe or Asia."

The widely circulated new poster, "This is your investment in humanity," was meant to express exactly what it says. The Varsity learned from I.S.S. committee members, who reflected that students could make no finer contribution to the improvement of mankind than by insuring the growth of a healthy student-life wherever it has been uprooted.

"It is your investment because only you, that is, every student on the campus, can help in our work," explained Jackie Monaghan, corresponding secretary.

This year's drive will extend over half a week filled with numerous kinds of entertainment, one of which is an auction sale which is said to include a cross-section of the wardrobes of all famous living Americans.

Although most of the coming attractions are still being kept a secret in order to hold the suspense, I.S.S. committee members say that the drive will be sufficiently sweetened up to make students forget entirely the more bitter aspect, that of donating dollars.

Classics Club Hears Brieger

Professor P. H. Brieger of the Fine Art Department will address the U.C. Trinity Classics Club on Thursday, Jan. 18, at 8:15 p.m. in the Women's Union. The talk, which had to be postponed on account of the blizzard last month, will be on "Medieval Bestiary."

Illustrating his talk with lantern-slides, Professor Brieger will discuss the influence of animal descriptions and representations in antiquity on animal pictures in medieval manuscripts. Everybody is cordially welcome.

"Why Won't Someone Tell Me?"

By Ernst R. Deutsch

"What does it stand for, anyhow?" This must have been the puzzled exclamation of many a student who attempted to lift the veil of secrecy from that number of numbers, 55-66. Students, graduates and, so we hear, even professors in every college, faculty, poolroom and knitting-circle of the University had quite suddenly grown serious, trying to read some metaphysical, philosophical or epistemological truth into the cryptograph.

And so, whilst the final revelation of 55-66 will be found on the opposite corner of this page, here are a few last-minute deductions on the subject by average students:

This is the arithmetical angle advanced by Dave Silverstein, II pass Arts, who says: "55-66 is your lucky number. Just tract them. Now one result is the square root of the other."

"I am quite convinced that the number in question is an indication that the war will end somewhere between 1955 and 1966," said Doug Small of II Vic, and he should know because he is a Modern History student.

Some people we met were more sceptical: "I think it's just a mean publicity stunt," was the opinion of Kay Palmer, II Pass U.C., whilst ex-editor-in-chief of The Varsity, Rex Wilson, burst out in confusion: "Who can tell me what these crazy license-plates are for, anyway?"

Mathematics was still the favorite field of speculators, apparently, because every M. and P. student had a different interpretation of the bewildering numeral.

The most concise and elementary one of these was explained to us in a rather innocent way by Martin Shubik, II Math. and Phys., who confined himself to the laconical statement:

"55-66 means the integral of dx between limits of 66 to 55." That says it.

Finally we ventured into the Law library, where Gordon Stuber, III Law, was extremely busy over some fat tomes. On being interrupted and asked the crucial question, he just looked up and said, grimly:

"Listen, brother, I happen to know what it's all about. But if I didn't, I would say it reminds me of the number of a law-case where a guy was acquitted who had strangled another one who had tried to interrupt him in his studies. See?"

G.I. Joe or Civics

The American Council on Education has finally commented on the recent controversies regarding postwar compulsory military training in the United States. They urge that no action be taken to enact such a law under wartime emotional pressure.

Their decision shows much wisdom in view of the present tendency in the States to turn universities and colleges over completely to military authorities. One suggestion that arose from the controversy was that of one year compulsory education for high school graduates. Milton Eisenhower, President of Kansas State College, remarked that "It is self-evident that far fewer American boys would go to college" if such a plan were put into action. "This change would come at a time when we desperately need more education, not less." President Eisenhower's statement adequately posits the essential danger involved in postwar military training. A necessary step to be taken after the war is that of education for peace, and the warning sounded by Dr. Parker of Hanover College, Indiana, that "peace-time conscription is a step towards regimentation" is indicative of a desire in that direction. Such a plan as is advocated in the United States would inevitably lead to a shortage of professionally trained men. Those men who are now enlisted in the services will not be immediately dismissed after the war. Even at the present time the need for lawyers, doctors and other specialists is great. If boys who have just graduated from secondary schools are forced to take one year's military service before entering university, the chances are slight that they will be stimulated to further their education. The present war has effected a very definite gap in education in the States. With staggered production in industry and gradual demobilization, trained men will be required more than ever before. The faculties of American colleges have completely fallen in with governmental war demands to the present time. But they are fundamentally sound in stating their objection to governmental interference in university administration after the war has been won. Even to the present date, faculties in the States have made concessions of dubious value. The time is fast approaching when they must assert the basic right of the University in relation to the government.

The Association of American Colleges is to be commended in their recent refusal of Federal grants. Although universities are faced with critical financial difficulties, the conference decided that the time was not ripe for Federal help. As a result of turning their educational institutions over completely to army and navy training, the colleges will find civilian enrolment at a low ebb when these service programmes are discontinued. We in Canada have successfully foreseen the crisis in higher education which threatens to undermine its whole structure and have effected a balance of civilian and military instruction.

Thus with the full comprehension of the present structure of education in the United States, we appreciate the wisdom behind the stand now taken by the Association.

Weather Jag?

The epic storm which descended upon Toronto and district in December has almost been relegated to the regions of the forgotten. There is, however, one slight factor which should be remedied before we are brought back to the good old pre-storm days. On many a grey morning when we were turning our steps homeward after an all night session of editing, we used to watch with interest the rather formal procedure of raising the flag beside the observatory. But now we are faced merely with the stark and unadorned flagpole. We feel no intense kinship with Kipling or the sentiments of his age, but it strikes us that a new flag would be in order. It is a detail which must meet with demands incurred not only by the standards of The University, but also those who visit it from without.

Ottawa Calling

By Neil MacDonald

SELECTIVE SERVICE

Right now, there's a good deal of activity in Selective Service Headquarters here and rumours are floating around about a revision in the call-up regulations as they affect university students. No one in authority will do more than say that the regulations are subject to continual review, that they are therefore under consideration now, that the manpower situation is growing more critical, and that it is possible a revision may be necessary.

It is obvious, of course, that if the regulations of Selective Service are changed, they will be revised to make it more, not less, difficult for students to remain at university. Our armies need reinforcements and it is probable that, before this war is finished successfully, we will require even a lot of those who are now "low category" men. The United States has moved to use its "low categories" in combat areas, and it is quite possible that we may yet follow suit.

There is, however, nothing more to report than that, with so much smoke—part of which is a screen, there is probably some fire and that, before many weeks, we may see an announcement of new student regulations.

The Department of Veterans Affairs, and its divorced wife, the Department of National Health and Welfare, are coming in for a good share of criticism around Ottawa. The former, it is said, in specific cases has not furnished the veterans with the assistance to which he is entitled in rehabilitation. There are cases of men discharged last May who are still trying to retain and re-establish themselves, with their own money because the government's rehabilitation cheques have not been forthcoming. Several of these cases are attending Canadian universities, on their own funds, rather than on the rehabilitation grant they should be receiving.

National Health and Welfare has about twenty Civil Servants working for it, out of the 5000 or 6000 who will be needed to implement the rather complicated system of Family Allowances. It is going to take time to train these people (to say nothing of the time it takes to find an employee these days) and to design and set up the intricate tabulating machines which the operation requires.

Guessing is going on as to when the first cheques will appear, and very few authorities on the Civil Service think it can be done by July, 1945. The job is too big to be done in that time, and the time passages of the bill and the first of the New Year was almost entirely spent without practical profit.

Verve With Vitality

Eaton Auditorium

Witold Malczewski is one of those rare pianists with the ability to reveal something new in every work he plays. His greatness lies in the fact that he can do this without distorting the ideas of the composers. Rather, he probes the very depths of the composer's thoughts, illuminating them for his audience. Everything he touches becomes a revelation. Aided by a technique which enables him to meet all pianistic difficulties with equanimity, he concentrates on conveying the meaning of the music as he interprets it to his listeners. "Horror," breathed the Warden, kicking his jewel-studded cuspidor about the carpet in an agony of exasperation. "First the pool cues. Then the Great Hall Cash Register. And now . . . this!"

The Hall Porter grovelled deeper into the rug. "As you say, sir. THIS . . .!" "But it doesn't make sense!" stormed the Warden, biting off a corner of the Visitors' Book. "It's insane. Why on earth should anyone enter in the dead of night and filch the chapter on buzz-bombs from the manuscript of my forthcoming memoirs?"

"Why, indeed, sir?" agreed the Hall Porter, salaaming thrice.

"It isn't as if anyone would want to read the internal thing," the Warden pursued, gulping down a bottle of red ink.

"No, sir."

"Don't agree with me, dammit," stormed the Warden, belaboring the hapless flunkie with the Knitting Committee Minute-book.

"Yes, sir. No, sir."

"It's all insane!" the Warden raved on, hurling an inkwell at a passing stenographer in crinolines. "First somebody saw all the pool cues in half, absconded with the butt-ends, and leaves us the truncated tips!"

"Then the Great Hall Cash Register is filched in the dead of night. Not for money, mind you. At that time of night it contains nothing but Miss Featherbed's knitting. And now this horror—this outrage—is perpetrated on my manuscript. The chapter on buzz-bombs is bodily ripped out and pilfered."

"Some prankster," suggested the Porter. "Some moron. Some School-man."

"How many times must I tell you not to use three phrases where one will do?"

"Yes, sir. No, sir."

"Don't stand there gibbering, you idiot," screamed the Warden, breaking the telephone in two. "Do something."

"Begin by answering that door. Somebody has been knocking for fifteen minutes."

At the door stood Comptroller Gilhooly, ashen, dishevelled, blubbering. The Warden's comforting arms were

St. Mike's 'A' and Meds II Tie 2-2 at Varsity Arena In Intra-Mural Hockey Tilt

St. Mike's and Meds II fought to a two-all tie in the University Intramural League yesterday afternoon in Varsity Arena.

St. Mike's drew first blood after four minutes in the first period, Adam scoring on a beautiful pass from Fyfe. But, of Meds, put the rubber in the nets on a pass from Paul near the end of the first period to knot the count.

In the second period, Meds went ahead on Pearson's score at the seven-minute mark. St. Mike's failed to score in the second period and finally were able to tie it up on a goal by Weber with only two minutes left to play in the game.

The game was one of the best of the season to date. Loughheed was a standout in goal for Meds, and Adams, a Varsity Blue star, played the best individual game for St. Mike's.

St. Mike's "A"—Goal, Bennett; defence, Odette, Weber; centre, Foran; wings, Hayden, Hurley. Alternates: Adam, Gregoire, Ricci, Hinds, and Fyfe. Meds II—Goal, Loughheed; defence, Stock, Hill; centre, Foran; wings, Coon, Paul. Alternates: Pearson, Sanders, Davies, Smith, Blastorah.

CONGRATULATIONS

To Hec Phillips for the excellent spirit which he has been able to build up among the track-minded and track-conditioned men students of all faculties and colleges who have participated in the two relay events which have taken place so far this year. The first two weeks' events have already been run off in a schedule that is to continue for eight more weeks. Hec explained that the three-men relay races—one of one and two laps for each man—were instituted since the war began as a means of warming the tracksters up to the pace for the more standard races which follow. A further development in track training began this month, when it was decided to hold instruction as part of every P.T. class. In the past, the classes usually wound up with some long distance, untimed, haphazard treads around the ring. Now each student is timed, and each week successively longer distances are run by the students. From the times, which are recorded, promising trackmen are persuaded to turn out after school and take special training. In this way many men who would not have entered the meet ordinarily are turning out and will continue to turn out, and so far some of them have shown very favorably.

The track instruction in the P.T. classes has not only proved a useful activity to the men themselves, but since last week it has substantially increased the turnout for the meet, and the calibre of the racing is an improvement over that in the past.

MEDS REPEAT

In this week's event, the three-men relay, 2 laps each, a Meds' team of Lewis, Fielding and Wiford, last year's winners, just walked

This little communique is to inform the male readers of this column, who undoubtedly are numbered by the thousands (yes, we know you all slyly cast an eye over here after reading the Speaking On Sports column), that the noble art of playing noughts and crosses is not a thing of the past.

Yesterday afternoon we carefully dived into our pink-toned muffs, our goloshes with the holes on the base of each heel, and donned other soiled accoutrements which we won't mention here (so that we won't cause blushes for the odd woman they say reads this column) and we sallied forth (on our model-T sally with its worn-down tires) down to the Varsity rink to witness a hot game of the aforesaid noughts and aforesaid crosses played by Vic and Meds teams.

Well, we must say that the game has changed since we last noughted and crossed. Nowadays it's done on skates. But you know how women are—they just can't leave well enough alone. (As a matter of fact, we once heard of a woman who did leave well enough alone. But you know what happened to her? Heh, heh! She became an old maid. So, ladies, watch that you keep on not leaving well enough alone, or you, too, will wind up with that fate.)

Well, as we were saying, we watched these two teams play noughts and crosses on the ice. And, to be frank, this oldtimer must admit that the game has been speeded up considerably from the old days. (As a matter of fact, we once heard of a woman who did not play a speedy game. . . . okay, okay, we'll leave it at that.) So there they were on the ice, cutting an "x" here, circling a nought there, here an "x," there a nought, everywhere an "x"—nought.

Well, old Macdonald didn't win, but Vic did—by 2-1, the umpire or referee, or whatever that gent on the sidelines said.

As a matter of fact, he was a very fine gent, and we'd tell you more about him except that maybe we ought to throw in a couple of names here. (You know quite well, ladies, you only glance here to see if your name appears here.) Best babe for Vic was Ruth Hutcheson, while Jean Duncan flashes a mean pair of skates, too. Beryl Rutherford looked very good on defence, as, indeed, did Mickey Barnett of Meds. They would look good anywhere.

Style—Pat Paterson, Carol Manning and Mary Cockeram. Diving—Pat Paterson and Carl Manning. Ornamental—Pat Paterson.

These are the winners but not all the prospective swimming Saints who will enter the Preliminary Meets.

away with first place in a field of 49 teams. The medicos whipped the race off in 11.52.8, more than 4 seconds in front of a Vic team of Hart, Kikichi and Kingdon, whose time was 1.57.4. The only other team to clock less than two minutes was Forestry's, of Chidley, Groome and Johnston, whose time was 1.59.7.

Meds figured again, with Nichols, Antoni and Rutherford, which team was tied for fourth place with P.H.E. at 2.1.1. Myers, Matthews and Lane ran for the Physical Eds.

It is significant to note that the two top teams, Meds and Vic, ran against each other. This probably accounts for the fast speeds of each. But the members of the Meds' team are track veterans—all have been prominent in interfaculty track circles in years past. And the three Vic men were freshmen. Keep it up, boys, we'll be looking for some track champs up Vic way in the next few years.

The turnout of runners from the smaller factors in the intramural set-up has been especially encouraging. Forestry, St. Mike's and Vic have each had a more enthusiastic representation for their size than some of the larger units.

Maybe it's the entry points that are getting the big turnout. Many people have voiced an opinion that this is so, but a few minutes spent spectating is enough to change their minds. Those fellows are really running—yesterday afternoon some of them ran themselves into exhaustion, over the 2-lap distance. After all, 300 yards is a long way, especially to the short-distance sprinter and to the inexperienced trackster.

TRACK AND THE WAR . . .

The track situation on the Toronto campus, in wartime, especially now, is not what it would be in peacetime. There are two major factors which cast dark shadows over the picture. These are a reduction in the number of star collegiate tracksters who would ordinarily begin courses here every year, and the absence of the stimulus of real intercollegiate meets. That these factors have their effect is not doubted, but that greater efforts to overcome this are being conducted is just as true. A peep into the future reveals that if the present track methods are applied after the war is over, with a greater reserve of experienced men and a greater urge to them, the possibilities are nearly unlimited. So what—if there is already a guy named Gunder Haag!

"There, there, old boy," soothed the Warden in one of those lightning changes of mood that have made him for years the wonder and the despair of Hart House. "Don't take it to heart, Gilhooley, of' gossing. Tell Papa Likkerebreth all."

Gilhooley's breath came in short pants, a garb outlawed everywhere but in the Athletic Wing. Overlooking this breach of decorum, the Warden patted the head of his faithful retainer.

"Please, sir," blubbered the gasping Gilhooley at last, "it's the clock."

"Naughty, naughty," twinkled the Warden. "It's not lunch-time yet. Must watch that waistline, you know!"

"It isn't that," sobbed the Comptroller. "It's the Tower Clock. The minute-hand is gone."

"Gone? The minute-hand?"

"Gone!"

The Warden's fist came down with a slam on the table. "That settles it!" he thundered. "There is only one recourse. We must call Dr. McGeech."

"But McGeech is dead since last June," the Hall Porter reminded him.

"No matter. We shall hold a seance. Summon my medium!"

"What number, sir?"

"Lotus 5566." And the Hall Porter picked up the phone.

What is at the bottom of these insane disappearances? Will Dr. McGeech return from the spirit-world? Is Sweden-burg a dialectic materialist? Don't miss next week's thrilling chapter!

RELATED NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTION:

Oyez! Oyez! Be it hereafter known that the party of the first part, namely this column, henceforth solemnly promises that this space no longer shall mention either the Trinity Review or Acta Victoriana.

Anything can happen in Montreal. As a matter of fact, it did. A friend tells us it happened not long ago to a returned veteran, now attending a certain Montreal college.

One day, while this vet was walking down the street, books under his arms, he was accosted by an old woman who asked him, bitingly, "Why aren't you fighting overseas?"

Promptly the vet put his fingers up to his ears, twiddled them about, and burred: "Because I'm crazy, see?"

When last seen, the woman was running down the street, screaming her lungs out.

A certain woman editor we know was leafing through back copies of a staid old Royal Academy publication the other day when she came across an anti-liquor article written by one of the Academicians.

A septuagenarian, the Academician was writing learnedly about his complete abstention from liquor, and he credited his longevity to his lifetime consumption of a pint of water after every meal.

Well, she turned to the next story of the publication, awe-stricken to see on the front page a black-bordered obituary of the same septuagenarian.

LIPS THAT TOUCH WATER WILL NEVER TOUCH MINE.

Toonerville Trolley Cameo:

Some conductors are ornery critters. While a crammed Queen Street car crawled along the other bleary morning, this disgruntled puncher of transfers bawled:

There's a certain frankness we like about the headline which appeared in The Ubyesey, the University of British Columbia publication, when it announced that 60 of its students had failed to meet Christmas examination requirements.

musicianship and a deep understanding of the music, he succeeds in this as no other pianist does.

To one raised on a diet of Beethoven as played by Schnabel, Malcuzyński's rendition of the Appassionata Sonata was a pleasant surprise. Differences in phrasing were noticeable even to the layman. But there was no doubt about which interpretation was the more effective. Malcuzyński's performance of the Theme and Variations of the second movement was transcendental in its beauty.

Other works played were Cesar Franck's monumental Prelude, Chorale and Fugue, which received masterful performance, Debussy's Cathedral of England, somewhat less engulged than usual, and Theme Varié Op. 3 by Szymanowski. As far as the last mentioned composition is concerned, it may be said that Mr. Malcuzyński certainly earned the right to play one work solely for purposes of display.

The climax of the evening came in the concluding Chopin group, nine pieces in all, counting the four encores. The playing of Chopin is undoubtedly Mr. Malcuzyński's forte. All the varied moods for which the composer calls are within his scope. Malcuzyński was persuasive in the Nocturnes, determined and sure in the Etudes. The rhythms of both the Mazurkas and Waltzes were distinguishable, a feat not too often accomplished. No wonder, then, that the audience asked Mr. Malcuzyński to return again and again with performances of Chopin which were distinctive in their authenticity. The works of the Poet of the Piano received readings which will long be remembered.

There is something about the Secondary Concerts given by the Toronto Symphony Orchestra that infects both audience and orchestra with enthusiasm. It must be quite inspiring for Sir Ernest MacMillan to have the old stand-bys received so enthusiastically. The naive and wholehearted like or dislike of the students is quite refreshing, in fact much more so than the regular concert.

The perennial favorite, Mendelssohn's Concerto in E Minor for violin and orchestra, was performed last night with Beanna Somerville as soloist. Looking particularly stunning in a gorgeous dark velvet gown, Miss Somerville played with extreme verve and accent. The orchestra, of which Miss Somerville is a member, supported her unusually well, although they occasionally fell into their eternal trap of overshadowing the soloist. They were unable to keep up with her terrific pace which even Heifetz would not attempt. Miss Somerville's style smacks of the Parlow punch, but she unfortunately lacked the polished subtlety that this work demands.

Her attack, which is dramatic rather than romantic, was almost brutal in spots. This criticism, however, comes from one who knows the work intimately and is perhaps prejudiced by the soloist's own interpretation.

The orchestra is always at its best in the lighter classics, Greig's Peer Gynt Suite for example. The orchestra achieved great delicacy of tone and feeling in the tragic second movement, Asa's Death. Beethoven's Seventh Symphony in A, however, suffered from the lack of sustained variety and color. The work itself is extremely colorful; in fact, Weber declared that Beethoven was ready for the madhouse after he first heard the symphony in 1813. The work improved on further hearings and Weber was forced to eat his own words in 1826 when he performed it as the principal number of his debut performance in London.

Each of Beethoven's nine symphonies have an individuality all their own—the Fifth depicts triumph over struggle; the Sixth, repose; and the Seventh, the triumph of power over difficulties. The style differs from the Fifth in its excellent enthusiasm, reaching almost savage exuberance in the last movement. Based on a simple rhythmic figure that occurs throughout, Beethoven conveys a tremendous outburst of energy by placing the strong accent on the weak beat of the bar. The orchestra managed to achieve most of the desired effects fairly comfortably.

Mozart's Overture, Così Fan Tutte, and Waltzes from The Rose Cavalier completed the program and appealed satisfyingly to the collegiate crowd.

Gargantuan I.S.S. Week Will Keep Students Busy; Includes Skits And Concert

I.S.S. Aids Needing Students on All War Fronts; Works Together with Similar Relief Bodies

MILE OF PENNIES

The veil of secrecy has been lifted from the sign-plates bearing 55-66, and an expectant hum is heard over the campus concerning what I.S.S. Week will bring in the way of diversion, but while getting ready for the fun, let us remember the story behind I.S.S. which is intimately bound up with student-life in Canada. The International Student Service is world-wide, and entirely kept up by voluntary contributions of students. It has national offices in a number of countries, the Canadian headquarters being at Montreal.

Founded a number of years ago with the aim of helping students in need and fostering a closer spirit of co-operation among all universities, the I.S.S. has borne a major share in keeping the lamp of learning lit among both free students and student-prisoners in Europe and Asia. In this it co-operates with the Y.M.C.A. and similar relief bodies, but with the exception that its work is carried on entirely by students.

America, Canada, England and Australia contribute a major part, but smaller neutral nations like Sweden and Switzerland are also helping their fellow-students in prison-camps in Germany, in Norway, and in Swiss refugee centres.

Allied prisoners in Europe, Polish, Russian and other escaped prisoners and refugees in Switzerland, are one group benefiting from our contributions. Chinese students, who migrated hundreds of miles afoot into the west of China, form another large group. Both they and prisoners and refugees in Europe are in need of books and of medical aid and food, the latter especially in the case of the Chinese students.

With the end of the war, I.S.S. will bear its share in rebuilding the shattered university life of Europe and China.

The drive, which promises to be the biggest on this campus so far, will open Wednesday with a "Mile of Pennies." The mile will traverse the whole campus and competition between the colleges and faculties will be stimulated by marking.

Farewell Dance Given for U.A.S.

The farewell dance for the University Air Squadron is to be held tomorrow night at Hart House, with Jack Evans providing the music. Dancing will be from 9 to 11.

This dance is sponsored by the Air Force Command and is entirely free to all past and present members of the U.A.S. or U.A.T.C. and to all R.C.A.F. personnel, discharged or otherwise, at the University. The invitations may be procured at the U.A.S. Orderly Room.

The big event of the evening is the closing of the Airforce Queen of the Ball. Last year the Queen was presented with a small golden air-force pin. This year???

Gord Stulberg, who is on the entertainment committee, has a great weakness for take-offs on popular radio programs. "The Truth and Consequences" Show which is to be featured will be quite a hit, especially with the frivolous consequences planned to put the guests through their paces. Another attraction is to be a parody on the orderly room.

Wing Commander Loudon is to be the patron and many distinguished guests from other branches of the services will be present.

Debating Union Guest of U.C.

The first session of the University College Parliament of the new year, to be held on Friday at 3:45 p.m. in the Junior Common Room, will be the occasion of the conferring of the Lieutenant-Governor's New Year's Awards. Twenty-four undergraduates of the college will be honoured with the title, "Knight of the Order of the Garter."

The list includes The Rt. Hon. Paul Reeko, former Prime Minister of the Parliament of the Realm of University College, The Hon. Betsy Mosbaugh, Leader of the Opposition, The Hon. Ralph Shepherd, an outstanding parliamentarian. For their contributions to the literary reputation of the college, the Lieutenant-Governor, Robert Bell, has seen fit to confer knighthood on Frank Rasky, Charmien King, Alec Seigel, Peggie Miller, Joan Ebbels, Liz Anderson, Rose Rabkin, and a number of other men and women who have been prominent in the dramatic presentations of the "Realm," are to be similarly rewarded. Miss Joan Cameron "will be formally recognized for her distinction in being chosen Miss Typical Co-ed."

The session will be opened in the customary manner by the ringing of the old "LH" bell. The awarding of honorary titles is traditional in University College, corresponding to the tradition of the New Year's Honours List. Lieutenant-Governor Robert Bell will be present as the representative of the Governor-General, Dr. Sidney Smith, to confer the awards.

University College Parliament is to be host to the Interfaculty Debating Union. The subject to be debated is: "That this House approves compulsory undergraduate war training." The affirmative is to be upheld by representatives of University College and Victoria College, opposed by S.P.S. and a representative from Loretto College.

Transportation Workers Resuming Work Friday; End U.B.C. Absenteeism

Vancouver—(CUB)—The students of the University of British Columbia have had to resign to walking, cycling, skating and thumbing rides to lectures while the Vancouver first street-railway strike in 25 years continues unabated. The tie-up came at 4 a.m. Jan. 9, when 2700 street-car and motor-bus operators in Vancouver, Victoria and New Westminster walked off the job.

A considerable depletion in attendance has been experienced at U.B.C., for few students live closer than two miles from the university and most depend on buses that connect the campus to Vancouver city.

Many labs and lectures have not been held, but the only official action has been the cancellation of some of the English lectures. A U.B.C. estimate places the attendance at between 25 and 40 per cent. It is expected that transportation will be resumed on Friday.

Record Hour

The record program, held daily from 3:45 to 5:00 in the Women's Common Room at U.C., is open to the men and women of every college and faculty. Today's program:

Russia in 1918 Topic of Pares

Sir Bernard Pares commenced his spring term of lectures in Convocation Hall yesterday with a general survey of conditions in Russia towards the end of World War I.

He described how the Bolshevik leaders dealt with Russian internal and external affairs, particularly in relation to Germany.

Sir Bernard stated that Communism has great chances of success in wartime. During this war, he said, we are all living collectively, and we shall continue to do so for some time after the war.

The speaker described the influence of Lenin and Trotsky on the people. "Lenin," he stated, "won success with the common people by means of two watchwords, 'Peace at all price,' and 'Bread.'"

Sir Bernard discussed the question of the Ukraine territory, the ownership of which has always been disputed because of its rich black soil, which is coveted by Russians, Poles, and Germans alike.

Fennell Heads Trustees In Museum Election

At yesterday's annual meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Royal Ontario Museum, Robert Fennell, K.C., was elected chairman. He succeeds Dr. Bruce MacDonald, whose retirement became effective yesterday.

Other members elected are: Mrs. H. D. Warren, first vice-chairman, and Dr. Sigmund Samuel, second vice-chairman. Dr. MacDonald remains a trustee.

Frankie's Bow-Tie Goes At I.S.S. Auction Sale

Each year, since the Victory Club initiated the plan in 1941 of a campus-wide campaign for funds to aid students in war-torn areas, the campaign has broadened. This year the International Student Service drive will extend over several days. It first took the form of a March of Dimes, then a typical co-ed contest drew the crowd, followed the next year by a Skit Night; this year an auction sale is planned to loosen the purse strings of Varsity students.

The International Student Service was originally the brain-child of the Victory Club, who organized the first campaign in 1941 in the form of a March of Dimes, which lasted eight hours. Contributors placed their dimes along a whitewashed line drawn from Hart House to Simcoe Hall. President H. J. Cody opened the drive with a fourteen-foot length of dimes. Those donors with large pieces of silver or bills were assisted by co-ed change-bearers who appeared with the requisite dimes. The objective, $1,000, was topped by 126 dimes.

The next year found the I.S.S. drive even more of a gala occasion. This drive was officially opened when Dr. Cody donated a cheque towards the $8,000

Hold Drive Soon For New Donors

A blood donor drive will be held from Monday, Jan. 29, to Saturday, Feb. 3, Peter H. Aykroyd, chairman of the Blood Donors' Service Committee, told The Varsity yesterday.

"We are starting out after new donors and will contact all those in the University who have not previously signed up. This will probably be done by telephone. The objective is to contact, by the end of the year, everyone in the University concerning blood donations. According to reports to the S.A.C., one thousand students donated blood last year from this University. The work going on between now and Jan. 29 consists of the Blood Donor Committee contacting all who failed to keep appointments last fall."

"Information Please" For Science Students

A scientific "Information, Please" will be presented at 8 p.m. this evening by the University Chemical Club in the large lecture room of the Chemistry Building.

The speakers—Dr. F. E. W. Wetmore, Department of Chemistry; Dr. C. Barnes, Department of Physics; and Dr. L. Young, Department of Biochemistry—will answer questions prepared by the executive pertaining to all three departments.

Since the professors are from different departments, the executive felt that this meeting will be of general scientific interest, and everyone is therefore invited to attend.

U.C.'s Talent To be Displayed

The combined Lit. and W.U.A. of University College are presenting an art exhibit and concert, using the talent of the college, on Sunday evening, Feb. 4. The concert will start at 9 p.m., following an hour during which the Women's Union will be open for viewing the exhibit.

The exhibit and concert have been in the minds of the Lit. executives for over a year, The Varsity was told.

"It has been felt that the Red and White nights have only allowed the less serious talent of the members of the college to be displayed," said Rose Rabkin, president of the Women's Undergraduate Association. "Both men and women students of U.C. are contributing."

The art exhibit committee are urging all artists of the college to contribute, and to mount their efforts for display. Frames are desired but not urged specially, said Miss Rabkin.

Besides Rose Rabkin, the persons arranging for the exhibit are Jeanne Wormith and Evelyn Swartz. They will arrange the display, and most of the works submitted are to be put in the Women's Union dining hall. The display will be put up at the end of next week and will remain there until the week following the concert, so that all students may have a chance to see it.

The concert for Sunday evening will feature some of the talented students of U.C.

"There are many students in U.C. who hold the A.T.C.M. or L.T.C.M. degrees of the Conservatory," said Miss Rabkin. "Miss Ferguson has helped plan the program for the evening, and if this exhibit and concert is as successful as expected, we hope that it will become a yearly feature of the Lit."

Taking part in the concert will be the "73 trio," and Claire Smith, Nancy Wyatt and Elaine Fricker of First Year. Juliette Paperny of Second Year will give a violin solo, and James Macdonald will present a piano solo.

S.A.C. Needs Students To Deliver Varsities To Various Faculties

The S.A.C. office is looking for students to deliver your favorite morning daily to its various distribution points.

"The Varsity used to be delivered by an office boy," said Mrs. F. Ireland of the S.A.C. "When the genius office boy vanished for the duration, we used to have each college pick up its own quota."

"That worked all right during the fall, when freshmen were amenable to discipline," she added, "but when the snow came efficiency fell off."

The next year, the present system of paying students to deliver the papers was started. There are six routes with, at the most, six calls to be made on each. Mrs. Ireland said that there were routes available for every day of the week, except Friday. Substitutes for students who had signed up but are occasionally unable to come are also needed.

"One student," she said, "who has been dubbed 'Red Riding Hood' by the men at the Press, took fourteen routes for us last week. She carries The Varsities around on a sleigh. At one time she did her route, went and gave a blood donation, and then turned up to deliver some more."

Anyone interested in seeing The Varsity reach its readers, and in supplementing their pocket-money, is asked to apply at the S.A.C. office.

Messrs. Infeld, Bassel and Yardash Discuss Poland, Greece and Yugoslavia Situations Respectively

AT WYMLWOOD

The Balkan and Polish problem composed the agenda of the formal Current Affairs Forum at Wymilwood last night.

Professor L. Infeld discussed the entanglements existing between the Lublin and London Polish governments. "These problems could be settled by friendly negotiations with the Soviet Union," he said.

The Lublin government will attain an historic stand by its manner of dividing the estates of the wealthy land owners amongst the unspeakably impoverished Polish peasantry, he continued. Furthermore, by stressing education it will succeed in destroying racial differences, he added.

However, Mr. Infeld does not wholly approve of either of the Polish governments. "It is the people's fight for freedom and not the fight of a political faction that starts revolutions," concluded Prof. Infeld.

Mr. S. Bassel, national secretary of the Macedonian War Relief Committee, who served in the Greek army in 1925 spoke of the Balkan nations.

"The Turks dominated the Balkans from the fifteenth to the nineteenth centuries," he said. Although politically liberated, he observed that the Balkans were still under foreign economic pressure and owed sums to Britain which could never be repaid. He proceeded to describe the underhand method of voting and ended on a note of praise for American opposition to British support of anti-Communists in Greece.

Yugoslavia was discussed by a member of the Committee to Free Yugoslavia, Mr. E. Yardash, editor of the Croatian language weekly, "Novosti."

"Yugoslavia is struggling for national liberation and democracy without regard to political affiliation or race," he emphasized.

He also related that eighty per cent of Yugoslavia is agricultural but that ninety per cent was possessed by the Catholic Church and German landowners.

"Yugoslavia consists of 14 nationalities, the outstanding ones being the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes," he stated. Mr. Yardash believes that Yugoslavia can form a bridge for the east and west and that it will strive to re-establish itself and help other countries, such as India and China.

Federation

At the conference held at the University of Western Ontario in London during the Christmas vacation, definite steps were taken to revive and re-activate the National Federation of Canadian University Students, which has for the last four years been lying dormant due to wartime conditions. Sixteen universities, spread all across the Dominion, were represented at the conference, by both English-speaking and French-speaking delegates. A wartime executive was elected and charged with the responsibility of re-establishing the Federation and putting the new program into practice.

Due to the fact that many of the delegates arrived at the conference without a clear conception of the functions of the N.F.C.U.S., and without extensive preparation, it was difficult for the conference to arrive at details. It is hoped that the newly-elected executive will be able to complete the arrangements under the existing difficult conditions.

As soon as the central office is re-opened and the machinery is provided on each campus for carrying out each college's share of the financing and the work, the pre-war activities of the Federation will be re-instituted. These activities included inter-collegiate debating, radio debates in both French and English, radio open forums, exchange scholarships, and the provision of services and information of interest to students through the central office.

In addition, the conference discussed and made certain nebulous proposals regarding topics which have arisen during the Federation's dormant period. The rehabilitation of returned service men was considered and some changes in allowances as they now exist were proposed. One such change that aroused particular interest was that of urging the authorities concerned to grant students permission to leave the country to take courses not available in Canada, and which would be in the nation's interest. Extra grants for books were also urged.

The problem of the assimilation of veterans into the normal life of the university was discussed, and to this end it was proposed that a committee be set up on each campus to deal with this problem. This latter is an example of the indistinct and hazy nature of some of the schemes offered.

The committees on military affairs, educational problems, and Selective Service regulations as they apply to students, stated that they had found their fields too large and complex to allow for the drafting of a report in the short time at their disposal.

The committee on National Unity strongly encouraged bilingualism in normal and high schools, and a compulsory one-year course in Canadian history in the liberal arts courses of all Canadian universities.

From the foregoing it can be seen that the recent conference was very haphazard in its organization, and that little of a practical nature was accomplished beyond the resuscitation of the Federation; before the present lapse, the N.F.C.U.S. was a strong organization and more than adequately filled the all-important function of binding together the widely separated Canadian universities. It is true that the present organization is working under difficulties never experienced by its predecessor. However, while we feel that its efforts are commendable, we are doubtful whether it will be able to overcome the difficulties that caused the original cessation of activities.

Memory Hold The Door

By the time the average man has gone through the normal educational processes of this country and has added to that four years of a university course, he has accumulated in his mind a large and varied collection of facts that supposedly equip him for life in this Dominion. Indeed, too much stress is laid on this accumulation and the memorization of facts and too little on the art and processes of thinking. Most university courses claim to teach students how to think, yet when the annual examinations roll around, it is invariably the student who is able to cram the greatest amount of knowledge—facts—into his head who achieves the highest honors. It is true that there are courses which are exceptions to this, but generally speaking, at the completion of his formal education a student's mind is cluttered up with many meaningless, unrelated facts and data which impede rather than help his thinking.

In everyday life we load our minds with telephone numbers, timetables, and other supposedly valuable scraps of information which there is no actual need to remember since we could look them up in books when really required.

And, worse than this, we stuff our minds with many outworn saws and adages which cripple our minds when they try to do their real work, which is not remembering, but reasoning.

The present need is for forgetting rather than remembering, for unlearning rather than learning. If we could unlearn our native tongues, then a universal language would be practical; if we could unlearn our system of weights and measures based on the foot and pound, we could accept the metric system and all calculations would be infinitely simplified.

An example of where the process of unlearning and re-inventing has achieved practical results is the invention of the Dvorak typewriter keyboard. On the standard keyboard, the left hand does most of the work. Experts in the U.S. Navy Department have re-arranged the keyboard so as to give the right hand most of the work, and now an average typist can type at the rate of 149 words a minute—the former world's record!

University students should prove that they are not wholly incapable of independent reasoning by forgetting the impractical knowledge that is handed down to them, and establish new truths and a more enjoyable and efficient world.

ART MUSIC Drama

Epicurean's Delight

Conservatory Concert Hall

Chamber music, we admit, is an acquired taste, but no one, layman or musician, could have failed to experience a significant thrill from yesterday's 5 o'clock concert given by the Parlow String Quartet. The concert consisted of two Schubert compositions, the Quartet Movement in C Minor and the Quintet in C Major for two violins, viola and two celli, with Cornelius Ysselstyn as assisting cellist.

Composed in 1820, the Quartet Movement was designed as the first movement of a quartet that Schubert never completed. It shows a distinct change in style from the almost saccharine quality of the earlier quartets, opening with mysterious and restless harmonies which slowly work up to a lyrical melody so characteristic of Schubert. The simple but exquisitely effective part-writing was significantly brought out by the Parlow Quartet. It is a great pity that Schubert never completed this work which, if judged by the fragment left behind, would have left a glorious heritage to quartet music.

Chamber music demands, as perhaps no other form of composition does, all the resources of logic, variety and wealth of melody of which the composer is capable. It takes ingenuity for a composer to weave a rich tapestry of sound without the basis of an instrument such as the piano. Schubert's talents were peculiarly suited to this intimate form of expression.

The Quintet is, lyrically and dramatically, the most perfect work ever composed for strings. Written in 1828, it is the last work of Schubert and shows his complete mastery of instrumental writing. Although the work is long, we are held spellbound by the kaleidoscope rhythms, chameleon-like modulations and soaring melodies. The extra cello, instead of upsetting the delicate balance, fits perfectly into the ensemble. One of the most magnificent effects in the whole quartet is achieved when the deeply religious quality of the adagio movement abruptly changes into the crude, almost brutal, scherso, and then resignedly slips back to the adagio theme, this time in the major key. The interpretation through-

Whitney Hall Vanishes!

Dormitory Gone as Cows Whisk Tails Over Bleak Site; Dean Gersufson's Hair-dryer Only Trace

KIDNEY TELLS ALL

J. Mophead Buttswepser, University Night Watchman, was astonished on his nightly rounds at 3 a.m. this morning to discover cows grazing on an empty field at Hoskin and St. George Streets, mooing loudly at a lonely hair-dryer, later discovered to be the property of Miss Maryrin B. Gersufson.

"M'gawd!" rasped Buttswepser, rubbing his eyes unbelievably, "Whitney Hall has vanished."

After searching for a moment among the cows to make sure his eyes were trustworthy, Buttswepser escaped with minor injuries from a flying tail and rushed to telephone Dean Gersufson.

Roused from her annual beauty-sleep at the Women's Union, Miss Gersufson gurgled brokenly, "What? What has happened to my girls? What has happened to my hair-dryer?"

Assured that the latter was safe, she threw on a horse-blanket and a shovelful of coal and joined the search-party.

J. Doberman Pincher, University Police Force, at first proved difficult to locate, but was eventually discovered near Wynmildwood with his slingshot, covertly taking potshots at bedroom windows so he could while away the next day hunting for suspects.

"Horrors!" he exclaimed when informed of Whitney Hall's disappearance. "I'll be fired if this gets around." After an hour's thought, Doberman decided to telephone Big Chief Myth for orders.

As the telephone jangled at her Queen's Park home, Mrs. Kidney Myth dropped her volume of light reading (a copy of her husband's collected Manitoba speeches to local Haymaker's Boards) and picked up the receiver to hear the astounding news.

"Kidney, dear," she shrieked suspiciously up the spiralling stairs, "what were you doing at midnight?"

"Nothing, m'luv. Merely taking Mackenzie, our talking dog, out for a walk."

"Hi!" hiccupped Mackenzie, the talking St. Bernard, indignantly, "he wash not. We had our usual in the Binge Hole Room at the Partly Plastered Hotel."

"Shaddap!" hissed the President-elect, slapping Mackenzie on the jaws and ducking Mrs. Myth's well-aimed book. "I'll talk to those people, m'luv," he said, reaching for the extension telephone.

The University Police Station—7 a.m.: "All right, all right, fellas," moaned the blood-sodden hulk of Kidney Myth, the strain of a third degree at the hands of the Dentistry Dept.'s Head Torturer breaking down his iron reserve, "I'll talk."

As the search-party drew around, goggle-eyed, to listen, Dr. Myth brokenly disclosed that Whitney Hall was to be found down in the Law Library hidden behind a large volume of Blackstone.

"I was merely getting architectural details for my forthcoming novel, Murder in the Dormitory, and darned if I didn't forget to put it back. I was too ashamed to tell you I have a bad memory."

Pressed for further details, he explained that while he had several times asked permission to inspect the building by night, Miss Gersufson had never allowed him above the first floor.

"Kidney! The very idea!" gasped Mrs. Myth. "You just put that building right back where you found it!"

And now it can be told—why Dr. Myth missed his 9:30 lecture this morning. He was too exhausted from putting Whitney Hall back where it belonged, brick by brick, and co-ed by co-ed.

Varsity Blues Play Tip Top Tonight as a Tune-up for Forthcoming Athletic Nights; Postponed by Storm

McUTCHEON IS COACH

The Varsity Blues Basketball Club take to the polished floor at Hart House tonight at 8:30 in an attempt to gain their initial victory of the season. Their opponents will be none other than that much vaunted team from the city league, Tip Tops.

The Blues for the second consecutive season are coached by Mac McCutcheon. Under his tutelage last season the Blues emerged with but a lone setback, and that at the hands of the only American cage quintet to grace the local court, Detroit Tech. Some nine victories were chalked up against the top teams on this side of the border.

The present edition of the team took its first form early in December, but further development was halted by the snowstorm and the holidays. Since the commencement of the present term, five hours have been spent on practices weekly.

Tonight's game has been arranged as a tune-up tilt for the forthcoming Athletic Nights when the Blues hook up with some of the top cage teams on hand.

The Toppers, led by Max Samuely and Harry Eckler, are at present riding the crest of a six-game winning streak. In their last outing they ran up a total of 56 points, proving they are one of the top teams in the district. Other names for the visitors are: Nisker, Kline, and Kistenberg.

McCutcheon's line-up for tonight includes: Fountain, Thompson, Gibson, Ryan, Spry, Booth, Turner, Mayzel, Fitch, Vandemark, Starr, McReynolds, Swan, Himmel, Cranham, and Grossman.

Speaking OF SPORT

EDITOR'S NOTE: The torch held so highly by the writer of the following column is held so by none other than a former Varsity undergraduate and a Vic student at that! While here, Gord established himself as a writer of no little ability. Sports editor of Torontonensis and Acta Victoriana and a reporter on The Varsity, were but a few of his activities. Since then, however, he has isolated himself to study medicine. But, so as not to sever his connections with the journalistic world, Gord is sported of the Queen's Journal.

By Gord Mack

OIL-THIGH NA BAN-RIG-HINN A' BAN-RIG-HINN GU BRATH'

Which probably means as much to the war-time Varsity undergraduate as a Bach fugue to a Schoolman. Back in the Golden Age of Intercollegiate sport however, even the conscientious characters who invade the Library more than two weeks before exams would have recognized the college yell of Queen's University.

Athletically the Tricolor (not to be confused with any Free French underground publications) of the pre-war era, participated in nearly all sports on the intercollegiate calendar, but excelled in rugby. In 10 of the last eighteen years of Yates Trophy competition, the Galloping Gaels paid freight home on the hauble more often than Varsity. McGill and Western combined. The last Tricolor crown was in 1937 under the tutelage of Teddy Reeve (the Tely's "Old Moaner"), with a team which included such stars as Bernie Thornton, Art Stollery and George Sprague. Reference to any recognized sports encyclopedia will also reveal that Queen's University holds the unique distinction of participating in the first game of organized hockey in Canada. This historic game was contested back in 1885 on the frozen ice of Kingston Harbour, with the Tricolor team emerging a 1-0 victor over the local Royal Military College "seven". There was a bandstand for pleasure skating in the middle of the rink, and the puck was a lacrosse ball whittled down to a hexagonal disc by some early Engineer (Sc. '86).

Since the war has temporarily suspended intercollegiate competition, Queen's has entered teams in local service leagues with considerable success. This fall the powerful Ottawa Trojans were guests at a big rugby week-end which commenced with a Friday Night Pep Rally complete with a freshman pajama parade and 10 foot Trojan Horse effigy sacrificed on a bonfire. After piling up an 80-13 for and against total during the league season, the Gaels dropped a narrow 12-5 decision to the Trojans for their first loss in three years. In hockey they are at present standing second in an eight team league containing (or contained) such established stars as Adam Brown and Syd Abel (ex-Red Wings), Gus Marker and Nick Knott (Toronto) and Ernie Laprade (Port Arthur Bear Cat immortal).

Intramurally "omnia Queen's est divisa in partes tres" (viz. Arts, Science and Medicine). Competition for the Bews Trophy (counterpart of the T. A. Reed) is inter-year instead of interfaculty. Besides the conventional events such as swimming, basketball, track and hockey, the Queen's muscle-men also garner points for their respective years in such events as five-pins, skiing and ping-pong.

Just as an introduction to possibly the hit parade of the coming fall season—try the tune of "John Brown's Body":
Varsity's not invincible, they tremble at the news
Of Queen's College Colors, and they're shaking in their shoes,
Yet another victory, the chance we dare not lose,
So, boys, go in and win!

*Gaelic for "The house of learning of the queen forever" or translated literally "Queen's College Forever!"

WE DONNED OUR OWN

pink-toned ear muffs today just to go out in the nippy outside, to find when we reached the News Office that there were notices from people about all sorts of interesting things. For instance, Helen Halliday, Head of University Volleyball, has left us a brief, numbered and pointed very neatly, having sub-sections even.

1. she says . . . is that Volleyball is a Major Sport this year, (b) there were only 7 teams entered last year as compared with 10 this year already! . . . (The italics are hers.)

2. The club hopes (see comment re italics above) to have a Round Robin Tournament so that each team will play every other team once. 3. etc. etc. . . . Anyway if you wish to play, see your college rep. Volleyball practice started Monday, and they will go until Friday, Jan. 26th, when the mayhem really begins. By this we mean the Round Robin. In the interval there will be two practices a week. The games themselves go on until Feb. 2nd, with 2 games a week, per team.

DESPITE THE NEED, HOWEVER

For such undignified things as pink-toned ear muffs, we are urged to persuade the gullible-r, naive-r, or hardier femmes that swimming won't be too cold for them. We feel that we have an obligation to our public (italics ours) to warn them that we haven't thawed so to the extent that we are courting rheumatiz by going swimming. However, because our public isn't going to catch us as fast as Joan Campbell, Susie Oliver and Co., we heartily urge you to turn out not only to your college preliminary meets, but to the practice periods arranged for by the Swimming Club.

Herewith we're going to print a list of Coming Events in the world of prelim. meets. P.H.E. is holding theirs on the 23rd of this month, followed by St. Mike's, on the 24th, Meds on the 29th, Vic on the 30th and U.C. on the 31st.

The BIG reason for a good number of entrants from each college is that if all turns out well there will be an intercollegiate telegraphic meet. As anyone can see this does not entail even the spending of a car-ticket in unessential travel. Therefore after a casual glance at the set-up, the doddering, trembling, halt and blind CIAU can turn over and go to sleep again, oblivious to demands of common-sense and students.

U.C. AND P.H.E. GIRLS

Wear red and white checked ear muffs, we have it on the best authority, during their hockey games. They do not get mixed up however, because we have it from the same incontrovertible authority that the U.C. girls have red checks on a white background to make

INTRAMURAL RULES

Postponements—No request for a postponement will be considered after Saturday noon of the week previous to that in which the contest is scheduled.

Transfers—To allow a player to move to a stronger team as his ability increases, regulations permit certain transfers of players. Managers should be thoroughly conversant with transfer regulations and shall notify the Athletic Office of any transfers to or from his team.

(a) Any team may transfer from other teams (in the same College or Faculty) a maximum of four players in the same sport in the same year, provided such players qualify under Section 7, "Division of Teams."

(b) Having once transferred to a team, no player shall be permitted further transfers.

(c) A player shall not be eligible for an extra team if he has played with a regular team but may be moved to a regular team at any time up to and including the final game in the regular schedule, provided that the team with which he has signed or is transferring to, has not exceeded the limit of four transfers.

them readily distinguishable from the P.H.E. girls who wear theirs with white checks on a red background.

Thus, wearing these badges of honor they retired to the privacy of Varsity Arena to battle out the great question of the week. Which is better at the game of hockey? Maybe it is they had so few spectators that neither side could pull anything decisive on this vital question. The final result, filtering out from the closely guarded precincts of Whitney Hall, was that the score stood at 2-2, at the closing whistle. Maybe the ear muff colors should be revamped!

THE WINTERY BLASTS

Of our little credited displeasure falls upon those who decreed that Volleyball was too strenuous to be played at the same time as hockey.

Any time's SHOPPING TIME!

WE WERE TOLD not many days ago by a friend from Denver, Colorado, that for once in history it's possible to get better accessories and handbags in Canada than in the United States, at prices which are actually saving. So we dropped into Fairweather's, whose handbag department is celebrated, and looked 'em over. Stock smoothies in endearing contours, designed to smuggle under your arm or be displayed, upon occasion, with a flip of self-confidence. Those bags are personality build-ups, every one of them, mostly in black rayon-silk or leather, illustrating new treatment of plastic closings.

IT'S CLOTHES-WISE to choose durable clothes. The Evangeline Shops believe in promoting the sort of wearables that look well today, tomorrow, and next year. If you have no specific new additions to your wardrobe in mind, only a vague desire toward improving the entire picture, drop in to the nearest Evangeline Shop and tell the girl at the counter what's on your mind. She'll help you look over the assortment of easy-to-purchase "separates" which can be the basis of a new costume, while you build up new ideas around it as cash comes to hand.

BE AS YOUNG AS YOU ARE! Don't go limping around with an aged expression just because you've been unwise enough to collect a stiff shoulder or a whammed shin at a hockey game. Invest in a bottle of Sloan's and rub it where the pain gets you. Sloan's Liniment stimulates, brings the circulation to the hurt area, soothes the pain at the same time; its effects are quick-acting, and the results are long-acting. Slip a bottle of Sloan's into your next parcel overseas. There's many a soldier happier as a result of some pal thinking of Sloan's at parcel-packing time.

YOUR DUTY TO YOUR PUBLIC. Three Flowers Face Powder is to brighten the eye. For social occasions Northway's have corralled a group of eye-brighteners in printed rayon jersey, gaily designed to pilot the winter-embittered mind from snow-flurries to a roborative anticipation of springtime and petal-flurries. These dresses have various new surprises in design, the new cape sleeves for instance, or full skirts or peplum or side drapes which make you ladylike instead of hoydenish. Northway's Fashionland, Third Floor, assembles fashions for the youthful figure.

Monetary Policy Is James' Topic

Montreal—(CUP)—Dr. F. Cyril James, principal of McGill University, was the first speaker at the Institute on Money and Law held in New York City, at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel last week.

At this opening session, Dr. James advised an immediate adoption of the monetary plans discussed at Bretton Woods. This would mean the establishment of an international monetary fund and a bank for reconstruction and development.

Dr. James stated that after the passage of the Federal Reserve Act the entire framework of the gold standard disappeared. We must either use full-bodied metallic coins or adopt some monetary principle and decide upon an accredited authority which will be strong enough to see that this principle is carried into effect, continued Dr. James.

These sessions are being sponsored by the New York University School of Law and the Economists' National Committee of Monetary Policy.

SHAPELY... a hair-cut by the Antoine experts is less a "cut" than a "shaping." It is intended to give that soft rounded look to your head which is important no matter whether you wear your hair long or short. Antoine experts are highly trained in the art of coiffure; silhouettes, this particular art being the talent which first made the name of Antoine celebrated when he decided to cease his career as a sculptor in stone and concentrate instead on the more interesting art of making pretty heads still more alluring. THREE FLOWERS FACE POWDER is color blended to harmonize with your complexion. It goes exquisitely with Three Flowers lipstick and matching rouge. In addition it is so fine and light that it clings for hours without re-touching... and here is a suggestion regarding the application of powder that you ought to know. Do not fluff on your powder in the good old way, but press it on gently, taking care to use a clean puff or piece of cotton. This method makes those tell-tale streaks impossible, assures you of a smooth, velvety surface.

GIRDLE SHORTAGE, NO DOUBT?

Some pedagogues keep their students in late! One long-winded Socrates orated on and on and on, despite ostentatious fawning of students' watches, and even the surly warning of the janitor that the building was about to be locked up.

At 5:30 the key turned in the front door of the building with a warning rattle, but still the lecture went on.

The next rattle came from an opening window. Observers, raising their heads, were shocked to see a procession of students slowly emerging unlike from the office and tiptoeing to the ground via step-ladder.

HOPE THE PROF WAS THIN ENOUGH TO GET THROUGH LATER.

We promised we wouldn't mention those magazines again (you know), BUT—we have since been informed that, following last Monday's sensational exposé, students from the one college (and you know which we mean) have been greeting students from the other college (you know which one that is, too) with a laconic "You've heard?" "I've heard."

And mastheaders of the magazine most directly concerned, we've heard, have been afraid as yet to take copies of the Monday issue home.

SISSIES!

A Certain Woman-Editor-We-Know Dept.: A certain woman editor we know arrived back in town after a dissolute week-end in the sticks, too completely pooped to carry her bags through the station. So she tapped a little gold-braided man on the shoulder and wearily said: "Take my bags, boy."

In the stony silence that followed the little uniformed man in question turned around and the woman editor's hair turned several shades grayer as she recognized the be-medalled chest of a Rear-Admiral.

KEEL-HAUL THIS CRINGING RUM-GEZZLER, YOU LUBBERS.

And here's another Professors-are-abominable item. This nose mortar-carrier was prying into the diligence of his students. "And how much do you study, my little man?" he asked one shy pupil.

The unexpected question so bewildered the freshman that instead of the weekly quota he gave his daily average: "About four hours, sir."

"What four hours a week?" boomed the prof. "Why, not even a genius could pass on that much."

Reflecting for a minute, he mused on: "As a matter of fact, not even I could."

WHAT WE LIKE ABOUT PROFESSORS IS THEIR MODESTY.

Our guess is that this stems from the days of the latter years of Bishop Strachan's life, circa 1860. It bears all the earmarks of such age and we aren't going to blame the middy-bloused co-eds of the past generation even for such a hoary rule. Based on some hypothesis formulated by someone whose nearest contact with Volleyball was when she read the word somewhere, and thought it was bad, this rule prevents those who have broader interests in the sporting world from indulging such interests.

We have played the game in question. Although it does not seriously rival Bridge as an exerciser, we feel that it is a shame to deprive hockey players from the edifying practice of donning sneakers and shorts, and watching a girl serve a ball 5 times, for 17 times, and occasionally taking a whack at it herself.

If this rule is something to cheer about, then loud and lusty huzzahs should be heard emanating from the haunt of the Head of Volleyball, but if anyone feels the way we do, they are sorry it became a Major Sport. Why can't the punishment fit the crime! Volleyball hard?

New McGill Governor Is John D. Johnson

Montreal—(CUP)—John D. Johnson, president and general manager of the Canada Cement Company, has been appointed a member of the Royal Institution for the Advancement of Learning, and a governor of McGill University, and of the Royal Victoria College, it was announced this week by Dr. F. Cyril James.

Mr. Johnson's appointment fills the last vacancy on the governing body, bringing the total number up to 24.

A native of Malaga, N.S., Mr. Johnson received his education in Nova Scotia, and in 1909 came to the Canada Cement Company as sales manager, becoming president in 1931.

For the past four years he has been a member of the Advisory Council of the McGill School of Commerce. He will begin his new duties as a governor by becoming head of the Board's building committee.

Milton's Ideas On Liberty Discussed By Woodhouse

"Theme of Liberty" as Shown in Milton's Writings Was Topic of Representative English Writers Series

HELD IN U.C.

A mingling of Puritanism and Humanism, a union of views on God's intention and man's good, formed Milton's ideas on Liberty, said Professor A. S. P. Woodhouse, third speaker in the lecture series on Representative English Writers yesterday in University College.

Discussing the "Theme of Liberty," as shown in Milton's writings, the speaker went on to say that Milton failed to add equality in the development of his conception of freedom.

This occasional failure in his prose to distinguish liberty from the will to power is not so evident in his poetry. Here his feeling for both liberty and order, often irreconcilable in his prose writings on the political and social matters of his day, finds adequate expression in poetry, where freedom of thought could be coupled with the rhythm and order of verse.

Thus, the speaker asserted, his poetry is much greater than his prose, and can reveal Milton and his doctrine to us.

Milton's views on liberty were not essentially political or social, Prof. Woodhouse went on to explain. He had no share in the democratic ideals of the Puritan revolution, believing as he did, in justice and righteousness against the rule of the majority.

Neither did he ally himself with any underprivileged class; religion, rather, was the mainspring of his thought on freedom, its basic principles being that "the service of God is perfect freedom." "He was the heir of the Renaissance as well as the Reformation," said the speaker, stating that he tried to reconcile faith and reason, Christian ethics and the claims of human spirit, order and freedom, Christianity and Humanism, with often paradoxical results.

Thus he advocates forcing freedom on others, or his policy of "might might be right" is ready, that is, that one can establish justice later by one more unjust now. His political thinking, therefore, was no longer applicable to his time, when democratic ideals were emerging.

This alliance between Puritan radicalism and Humanistic insistence on the good of man as the ultimate criterion may have obscured his prose at times, his poetry still shows his spirit unhampered by these conflicting feelings.

Ahuja Speaks About India

Mr. M. R. Ahuja, trades commissioner of the government of India, will address the International Affairs Society on "India—Past, Present, and Future," at the next meeting on Monday at 4:30 p.m. in the Women's Union.

The Society was founded some time ago to enable students of all faculties, especially those of the non-Arts faculties, to get together and discuss current affairs.

The Society has received a grant from the Carnegie Foundation, who also send them, four times a year, books of current interest. These books are kept in a library in Baldwin House especially for the Society.

There will be four meetings this term, beginning on Monday, and occurring every second Monday at the same time and place.

All students interested are invited to attend.

VARSITY DELIVERY

Students with any spare time between 10:30 and 12:30 Mondays who would like to earn some money, please inquire at S.A.C. Office, Hart House.

McLaughlin Announces St. Mike's Casualties

Rev. T. P. McLaughlin, Superior of St. Michael's College, has announced several war casualties among former students of the college.

John T. Hill of Rochester, New York, was in the third year of the Physical Health and Education course when he left in 1942. Lieutenant Hill, a member of the U.S.A.A.F., was killed on active service Nov. 26, 1944.

Pte. James I. Conheady of the U.S. Army was killed in France on Nov. 30, 1944. He left Varsity in 1943, and received his B.A. in 1944.

On Jan. 12, 1945, F.O. Duncan J. MacKinnon was reported killed in the India theatre. He was a member of the first all-Canadian squadron to fly over the Burma route in December, 1944. Born in Copper Cliff, he attended public and high school in Copper Cliff and Sudbury, and came to Varsity in 1938-1939. He took an active interest in sports, especially hockey and football. He left Varsity in 1939 for the R.C.A.F., with which he served on the east and west coast before going overseas.

Classics Club Hears Brieger

"Medieval Bestiary" was the topic discussed by Professor P. H. Brieger of the Fine Arts Department at a meeting of the U.C.-Trinity Classics Club in the Women's Union last night.

Bestiary, he said, forms one relation between medieval manuscripts and those of classical source. Biblical and liturgical works were illustrated with animals, birds and fish.

The purpose of the bestiary, he continued, was to instruct the illiterate. Pictures were used to give information to minds incapable of absorbing the philosophy of medieval concepts.

The habits of animals were seized upon to present a lesson to man. It was believed that man could learn from the brutes what to imitate and what to reject.

Prof. Brieger, while presenting lantern slides, outlined the significance of each of the animals, birds and fish. Slides illustrating Aesop's Fables showed the closest link to the present of a form of art which reached its height in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. Prof. Brieger mentioned the break or missing link in bestiary from the second century to the eighth and ninth centuries.

As each slide was presented, Prof. Brieger answered questions from the group present and discussed their merits with Mrs. Homer Thomson, Miss M. E. White, Prof. E. A. Dale, and Prof. M. D. C. Tait.

Van Stockum Dead

W. J. Van Stockum, who was a Fellow in Mathematics in 1934-5 and obtained the degree of M.A. in 1935, joined the R.C.A.F. in 1941. He transferred to the Dutch branch of the R.A.F. and is now reported killed over France while piloting a bomber.

Montreal Gazette Asks For Revision Of Military Status

Montreal—(CUP)—In a lengthy editorial recently the Montreal Gazette asked for immediate revision of the status of students eligible for military service.

The article read, in part: "Considering the drastic way in which the normal course of so many lives have been disturbed in Canada, there is, perhaps a certain anomaly in the fact that a very considerable number of young men of military age and fitness should be continuing their way of life upon what is substantially a peacetime basis. Nor is the fairness of this arrangement increased by the fact that university students are mainly drawn from that class of society which enjoys sufficient income to meet at least a great part of their expenses."

"The system existing in Canada has been defended on the ground that the life of the country would suffer in the long view if too large a number of young Canadians were deprived for too long a time of the advantages of a university training."

"But . . . the loss of a few years or months of university study may be regarded as a less serious national consideration than the lack of sufficient manpower to help bring the war to a swift and definite conclusion."

Planning From Bottom Up Will Work Says Forsey

Maintains That the C.C.F. is the Only Completely Democratic Party in Canada by Virtue of its National Conventions

A reply to the question: "Planning from the bottom; will it work?" was made by Dr. Eugene A. Forsey in Wynmildwood last night to the C.C.F. Club. He outlined his opinions, in the capacity of an active party member, a one-time professor of Political Science at McGill and present research director for the Canadian Congress of Labor.

He gave one particular example of how planning from the bottom might work, and showed how the particular might apply to the general. "In an industrial plant the union representatives and the managers sketch out plans for reform. Then there meets a larger council of the entire industry, at which all of the particular plant reforms are synthesized, and satisfactorily modified. The resultant general plan is then submitted to the Parliament for further modification, and out of this there results a dynamic, yet flexible, program for reform."

This is administered, he said, not by some out-of-contact governmental body but rather by the actual unions, associations, and groups which are affected by the reform. The whole is based on co-operation between worker, union, industry, and government, each of which is a part of the other."

Dr. Forsey sketched the way in which a C.C.F. government would reform the present situation if elected. Included in these reforms, he said, were the absolute abolition of such antiquated, undemocratic hangovers as the Senate, whose main function was, he said, to obstruct rather than to aid legislation.

As an example of just how undemocratic is the Senate, Dr. Forsey remarked that even though a party be elected on a platform of Senate abolition, the latter could block the issue by upholding their archaic privilege of being able to veto changes in the B.N.A. Act.

A further reform by the C.C.F. would be to strengthen and maintain democracy; other parties would not be abolished, nor would the C.C.F. refuse to step out of power if beaten. The party is, and would be, a people's party, and follow

Watkin to Discuss Steep Rock Mines At Convocation Hall

"The Story of Steep Rock Iron Mines" will be told by Mr. Watkin Samuel, chief engineer of Steep Rock Iron Mines Limited, at the meeting of the Royal Canadian Institute tomorrow evening at 8:15 in Convocation Hall.

Mr. Samuel graduated from the Camborne School of Mines, Camborne, England, and came to Canada in 1924. He spent four years on general mining engineering in Ontario and in Quebec. For five years he was with the Falconbridge Nickel Mines and Ventures Limited as engineer, following which he supervised the exploration at McLeod Cocksbutt Gold Mines and Little Long Lac Gold Mines. He has supervised the engineering work for Steep Rock Iron Mines for the past six years and is at present the general manager and consulting engineer for the mines.

The speaker will describe the history of iron ore in the Lake Superior district and searches for ore at Steep Rock Lake, and will show the methods used in the exploration by which the ore was discovered.

In addition to lantern slides, a moving picture film will illustrate the lecture, showing views of the operations from the start of the diversion of the river and the draining of Steep Rock Lake.

Hart House Concerts Reopened With Kihl

The Hart House Friday Afternoon Recitals are to be revived for a trial this afternoon when Viggo Kihl, pianist, will play the first Recital since 1941 in the Music Room at 4:45 p.m. The decision of the Hart House Music Committee to revive these recitals was made conditional to the presence of a sufficiently large audience at the first to justify their continuance.

The recitals were discontinued in 1941 when the pressure of military training and other student activities connected with the war effort caused a sharp reduction in the size of the average audience.

Mr. Kihl received his training in Europe and lived in London, England, for 10 years before coming to Canada 30 years ago. Since then he has become one of the most widely known pianists of this country, playing in cities from coast to coast both here and in the United States.

Mr. Kihl's program today will be: "Jesu Joy of Man's Desiring" . . . Bach
Three Etudes . . . Chopin
Sonata in C Major, Opus 53 . . . Beethoven dedicated to Count Waldstein
False Caprice No. 6 . . . Schubert-Liszt

Mrs. Whitfield Speaks To U.C. French Club

"Our Adventures in Escaping from German-held France," was the topic of Mrs. Ernest Whitfield, guest-speaker at the first meeting of the year of the U.C. French Club, held last evening in the Women's Union.

Mrs. Whitfield explained that she, her husband, and their two children had lived in Cavalaire on the southern coast of France. It was at Cavalaire that the Americans first invaded southern France last year. During the first few months of the war, said Mrs. Whitfield, their lives were very tranquil. Then they learned of the invasion of Holland, then of Belgium, and finally of France.

Italy's "stab in the back" stupefied Frenchmen, declared Mrs. Whitfield, because it was so unexpected.

The air-raid system in Cavalaire, said the speaker, was not very efficient. Usually the alarm was given after the raid was over. This was in accord with the general attitude of the people there, for their motto was "Ca ne presse pas."

Finally, continued Mrs. Whitfield, after Pétain had asked for an armistice, she and her family tried to get to Marseilles, but this was impossible because of German advance forces. After working furiously for five months, they managed to get to Portugal, where they went to great lengths to obtain passes and visas, but without success. Finally, "by a miracle," she said, they managed to get on a clipper and arrived in New York.

After her talk, Mrs. Whitfield sang some French songs, which were followed by a performance of "Les Deux Timides." Refreshments concluded the program.

ONE-SIDED CONTEST

By Mickey Michasiv

The optimist would say that Mac McCutcheon's Varsity basketballers are in the throes of a winning streak. The pessimist would merely say that the Blues won a game this year. The reason for this discussion is the basketball game played last night at Hart House, when Varsity defeated Tip Tops by the score of 61-33.

In the initial outing of the season, the Blues thoroughly out-played, out-shot and out-maneuvred the team which is, at present, leading the Toronto and District Senior Basketball League. After spotting the visitors the first play of the game, the Blues, led by Harry Mayzel, came right back to count their first basket within the 30 second mark. From that point on they were never headed.

For the first six minutes of the opening quarter, the winners were in entire command of the game as their short-handed rivals could do little with the fast moving and fast passing Blues. Thompson, Mayzel and Ryan counted successive baskets with but a lone reply from the Toppers. The score was 16-3 when this first time-out was taken by the disillusioned visitors.

Tip Tops changed their strategy from a man-to-man to a zone defence game, but this checked the scoring spree of the Blues in a very small way. Eleven more points were run up by the end of the quarter, making the score 27-5.

The tailors found their bearings in the second quarter but their erratic shooting led to their being out-scored 8-6. At half-time the scoreboard read: Varsity 35, Tip Tops 11.

The blue-clad club broke away fast in the second half to send the ball skidding through the hoop four times without a reply. Thompson, Gibson, Ryan with two were the markers. The winners were again in complete control of the game.

Changes came rapidly for McCutcheon's crew in this half as all possible combinations were experimented with to the dismay of Eckler's chargers.

Reconstruction

If the average student were to express an opinion about the present war, he should probably find himself unreservedly expressing opinions ranging from anger to repulsion and culminating in a wealth of idealism unheard of for twenty years. But it is doubtful if he could immediately penetrate the social effects of the crisis through which we are passing.

It has been truly said that the most interesting era of a nation's psychology is that found during war, or the moral equivalent for war. William James once stated that the martial type of character could be bred without war. He suggested that the desire for fighting could be sublimated into carrying out of coercive duties for the state and set up by the state. For example, the doctors or the clergy already have their life work mapped out for the theoretical good of the state. In the present world, however, we realize that war is being waged to achieve an end. The ultimate goal may be expressed in the words of Grotius who wrote "War is waged for the sake of peace". So that any pacifist policies would be just as destructive as the principles which they defy.

Any scheme of reconstruction must first be pre-acted by a thorough study of the effects of the war. Greater relaxation and abandonment of inhibitions on the part of both civilian and servicemen has been obvious. When a soldier is taught how to kill, he is being educated in reverting to full indulgence of a primitive instinct. Once this has been accomplished, it is possible that other natural impulses will spring up. It is probable that the instinct for self preservation will become almost uncontrollable. When such an impulse clashes with the duties incumbent on a citizen, the mental conflict which results, will have an extremely demoralising effect on the serviceman. To which urge will he succumb, a primitive impulse or an environmental duty? Whatever the decision may be, the fact remains that the mental state of the individual will have undergone an intense collision, possibly resulting in instability.

In such an event, the best remedy that can be given on the part of civilians is the sincere expression of confidence, not pity or sympathy which would almost demand introspective wallowing on the part of the soldier.

Another effect that war has brought about is that promising a greater degree of equality. Lower income brackets have risen; rationing has been imposed upon all; former luxuries have been dispensed with; and the majority has been united in one common purpose. Such a state of society cannot automatically revert to pre-war conditions upon the declaration of peace. It is doubtful that returning men will let us return to our previous laissez-faire attitude. But whether it be planned economy or free enterprise, we must be prepared to accept without battle whichever plan will contribute to the greatest happiness.

In some cases the tendency will be to rationalise happiness into the realisation of individual instincts and impulses. If we were living in Rousseau's ideal state of native innocence such desires would constitute a means to a happy life. But we are living in a complex society where long evolutionary process have diminished our primitive wants and we have achieved a state we are wont to call civilised. So that if we face the problem of reconstruction realistically, we find that we must plan according to the traditions and attitudes of our present society. We will be forced to control the inevitable reaction of the elations concomitant with peace and direct our energies towards concrete action of re-construction. Concrete action seems to be the only healthy solution to suppression of the wild desires for relaxation which will rise up on us.

Another aspect of reconstruction that is of prime importance, is that of education. Our future society will be relative to what our own generation has learned and will learn. There has been a gap in education of our generation. We and our succeeding generations must fill it without falling prey to declining standards found in the tendency to turn universities into vocational or technical institutions. A sound mental discipline is essential for post-war improvement. Plans made during the stress of wartime are not always applicable to peacetime conditions. An outstanding example of impractical planning is found at present in the States, where compulsory peacetime military training has been suggested for a period when education will be needed to bridge the gulf of the past five years.

This reconstruction will require concentrated probing of the tenets of psychology, sociology and philosophy of the past and present, before we can adequately prepare for the future.

Eaton Auditorium

It is no trick to write a review of this kind. The hard part of it is to dam the flow of superlatives that inevitably accompany such a recital as was given by Kenneth Spencer, negro basso, at Eaton Auditorium last night. This is not a new kind of singing, but it is indubitably the best of its kind that has come our way in a longish time.

Beginning with Handel and Beethoven of noble proportion and elegiac nuance, Mr. Spencer did a Lied group which included Schumann's enchanting Ich grolle nicht and the "piquant memorabilia" of Beau Soir by Debussy. A rewarding accompaniment was provided by his compatriot Jonathan Brice, who also did a couple of sketches by Coleridge-Taylor in spirited fashion.

The finest singing of the evening was reserved for the simplest air, the old folk song Annie Laurie. Mr. Spencer avoided the pitfalls of familiarity with an aptness and originality unexcelled. An episode of peculiar power was Meadowlands, the Red Army marching song, with its plaint piano background.

Of necessity, the climax of the program was attained in the group of spirituals and folk songs in the subtle and stimulating arrangements by Brown, Burleigh and Johnson. Nor would the audience go happy homeward till they had elicited the last tribute of Jerome Kern's "Ol' Man River." It was worth waiting for.

Long View

Toronto Art Gallery

There are two kinds of pictures at the present exhibition in the Toronto Art Gallery, purporting to show the development of Canadian art. First, there is the kind around which a bevy of bedizened biddies are wont to hover and hiss: "Oh, isn't that sweet-e-e-e?" And there is the kind before which the pained, bespectacled intellectual gennects with non-objective grunts. And in between, of course, there are many others.

You may see the historical and genre canvases of Krieghoff, Jacoby, Peel and Cane, early Canadian masters. There are a number of the intermediary school, with strong Dutch and Barbizon influences. The revolutionary Group of Seven is well represented: the frigid and glaring abstractions of Harris, the rugged hill rhythms of Jackson, the lyrical patterns of MacDonald, and the crisp sincerity of Johnston before he started grinding out pot-boilers. Interesting examples of Tom Thomson's early work are shown, as well as the memorable "Northern River" and the too-familiar "West Wind."

Illuminating watercolors by the younger moderns, Schaeffer, Comfort, Housser and Brandtner supply needed gum to the show. The inimitable Emily Carr has three of her stirring and vigorous canvases on view. The Quebec school is gently suggested by Fortin, Masson and others. It is a pity that the primitive Lemieux and the expressionist Borenstein were not included.

Some of the provocative and epochal work being produced by contemporary war artists should have been shown. Perhaps this will be remedied. It is a good show.

Two Glum Chums Overhear Slick Chicks Give With the Gah, What's the Diff, Squiff?

AIN'T KEATS TERRIF?

The two internationally-known literary cryptograph experts, Messrs. Woo and Razby of Toronto U. and Snaf U., announced today the substance of the eleventh chapter of their forthcoming publication "Modern Campi Slangage, or The Life and Loves of Poet Prattfall" (Pieman and Wooster, 8 vo., 798 pp.; $3.98 Etalon College St. Basement; Knock twice and ask for Joe).

The two experts report that they have toured Canadian campi disguised as Rotundas and cavedropped on current co-ed colloquialisms. Escaping with only a minor slap or two, the two martyrs to science spent 17 weeks deciphering one another's shorthand and found that campus girls can claim to employ a new system of abbreviated English.

For instance, one bulbous babe was heard to reply "It's terrific," probably instead of "It's terrific."

The jargon of other bobby-soxed neophytes laid bare such significant addenda to the language as "That's soup," "What's the diff?" and "Wonderfl!", interpreted by these great philological experts as "That's super," "What's the difference?" and "Wonderful!"

In their chapter, "Helicon Refurnished, or The Adolescent Period of Poet Prattfall," the erudite scholars have undertaken to go far in advance of their age in translating classical poetry into what seems destined to be the language of the future.

"Any fool can plainly see," they remark in their preface, "that the English language has throughout its career tended to greater and greater absurdity; e.g. the classical example, cited by Dr. Dagwood Umlauf Bumphaideidil, 'No kiddin, honey!' in place of the classical circumlocution, 'Surely, O light of my life, it cannot be that you intend in any shape, manner, or form to deceive me?'"

"We have merely carried this process to its logical extreme; and we defy any such pedant at Editor Bilge McPlaster in his miserable tuppenny organ, Ac Pie, to deny our momentous service to the language and to coeds of generations yet unborn.

"As an illustration we cite in its modern dress that hallmark of the traditional style, the verbose 'Ode to Autumn' by John Keats, which we have shorn and sharpened:

any of their rights, such as striking, nor would the state interfere with their function in any other way than to demarcate wage minima and work-hour maxima, and beyond that leave all employee-employer bargaining on a collective basis.

"The job of building a co-operative commonwealth," Mr. Forsey concluded, "is a job to be done by participating and co-operating people. The C.C.F. offers a completely tangible alternative to a system that is subject to periodic break-downs, and will achieve its goal of a fully democratic Canada, if given the necessary help, understanding and co-operation of the people."

Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerry Edwin

A SWELL START . . .

Last night's practice game showed all those who were interested enough to come out that this year's edition of the Varsity Blues is a real basketball team. They very decisively nuzzled the team which is currently leading the field in Toronto circles without exerting themselves too greatly, and displayed plenty of class in doing it. Have we, perhaps, a hope of defeating Wayne when they come?

The Blues started off very fast against Tip Tops, running up 16 points in six minutes, and extending this to 27 at the quarter. The Toppers soon saw that they couldn't hope to match them with their man-to-man game and promptly adopted a zone defence, something which the Blues hadn't done too much work with. This only resulted in slowing down the fast-scoring pace and the game, but Mac claimed that it had the desired effect on his players, that of teaching them plenty of know-how in zone combat. The rest of the game was used mainly to experiment with different combinations of players in order to ascertain which men worked the best together, as Mac ceased to worry about how the score went.

The Blues have many very smooth operators in their line-up and their ball-handling in particular was a treat to watch, especially early in the game when they had Tip Tops so disorganized by their tactics that they were almost scoring at will. They showed a great deal of ability in breaking very fast with their men, and were very aggressive in the close checking they displayed. Tip Tops were surprisingly poor in their shooting, while the Blues clicked on everything but their set shots, even picking up in this department towards the end of the game. It certainly was hard to see where the team opposing the Blues in the big gym last night had ever run up any of the large scores that they actually have amassed in their recent games.

To make the lopsided victory seem even more so, we might mention the fact that Doug Spry, a last year's Varsity regular, was out of the game with a twisted ankle. Another man from last year, Doug Turner, was home studying for exams. Can we even expect still better things?

AND THEN THERE'S HOCKEY TONIGHT . . .

The Hockey Blues tackle Watson's Athletic Club this evening at the Arena in the second game of a double bill. The first game brings together "that Navy team" and Victory Aircraft. It begins to appear that every third Friday we are going to get a really good hockey game when our boys and the tars do battle, but the rest of the time we will see two very ordinary teams playing two good teams, with the results inevitable. Possibly this was foreseen, but was just about the only set-up available.

However, Watson's promise to put on a much better show than they did at their first outing. One of their first string forward lines was out of town last week-end, and they blame their loss largely on this and their further lack of substitutes. Tonight will certainly tell. There are a couple of line-up changes on our team also. Bob McCombe will be playing in goal instead of Doug Davidson, who will be given a rest, and Ken Anderson will sub for Jim Boa up forward. Boa has been troubled with a leg injury lately and can well use the opportunity to rest his ailing limb.

Well, we'll see you at the Arena tonight. It's your team, so come out and support it.

The Sportswoman

By Janice Murray

OHI WELL THEN . . .

We still think that we are right in our rather caustic comments on the antiquated rules comprising the Women's Athletic Association Rules. We have not yet been taken to task by any distraught and bloodthirsty member of the Women's Directorate, but we have only been made to conclude that the time is not yet. Der Tag has not yet come.

We are tempted to ask in a small whisper if it might be because those members of the Directorate who should rightly be angry are afraid to state their case, if they have one. We have so far been unsuccessful in getting any member of the Directorate to say what happened on one of their seemingly hush-hush meetings. Perhaps, and we believe that this is so, it is because the said members are ashamed to admit that they actually said "Aye," if only a weak and watery one, to the things to which they have assented.

Anyway, we would, as we intimated last night, like the punishment to fit the crime. Anyone who willingly sits there and lets someone push a motion through to the effect that baseball and volleyball be major sports, knowing that these weak sports would thus be put on a par with basketball and hockey, needs her head reed.

Why didn't they do something? This question lies not solely with the present Directorate but with those in the past. We presume that it lies with the Directorate to change the old ruling that any team sport, when recognized, is necessarily a major sport and that no two such major sports might be played in one term.

This ruling rests of necessity on the idea that a team sport must be strenuous. Anyone who can say with a straight face, excluding all who have never played the game or taken their pulse after the two, that baseball or volleyball is harder on a person than badminton, is either a person to whom we should apply a certain nasty epithet or else a moron.

Because the two real major sports, hockey and basketball, occur in different terms, we feel that the arbitrary grouping of the games should be dropped.

We are not meaning to insinuate that any member of the Health Service is being deliberately wrong about this thing, but we do believe that someone knows very little whereof she speaks. That the Directorate knows better should be supposed in that the Directorate is chosen from the girls who are outstanding in organization and games ability in the several colleges.

About the arrangements made for the elections of these girls and the girls chosen to head the various sports, we will later take exception. We have strong feelings on the matter, having seen this election take place twice in the past. And we have certainly not been used badly in such elections.

AND IN PASSING . . .

It so happened that we were in the S.A.C. office when someone

Forestry Downs Vic II Squad 7-1

All through the first period the play was in the Vic end, with only occasional offensive splurges by the Vic forwards. At 1:40 Carr opened the scoring on a pass from Lawson. From then on Goal-keeper Elliott was the target for a constant series of shots. Jenkins, unassisted, Lawson from Clarke, Lawson from Kasturik, and Hayes from Jenkins notched the next four in quick succession. Vic took advantage of Forestry's five-men-up tactics, and when the time came Pearce broke, beat the defenceless Carr and parked the puck behind Vetter, goal-keeper for the 'jacks.

Whether it was a pep-talk or not, the Vic team played a lot better hockey in the second period. Their defence system was on, and their forwards showed better judgment in their passing and rushing. Early in the period Lawson filled his hat-trick, netting the puck on a pass from Clarke. Carr finished the scoring late in the period, again on a pass from Clarke.

The Forestry hockey sextet showed their last year's form yesterday when they laced the Vic II squad 7-1 at noon in Varsity Arena. Vic were outplayed from the very first drop, and in the first thirteen minutes of the game the foresters ran up a lead of 5-0. Vic then countered with their only goal, scored on a solo rush by Pearson, to Vic I Fights Back To Beat Jr. S.P.S.

A fighting Vic I hockey team came from behind yesterday to down Jr. S.P.S. by a 6-4 score and thus boosted themselves into a first place tie in their group. The loss shoved Jr. School down another notch further in the cellar position.

School started off with a rush, scoring two goals within the first five minutes of play. Tranner and Stephanowsky were the marksmen. Vic started to press after this and Scott and O'Malley banged home a goal apiece to make the score 2-2 at the end of the first period.

The artsmen added three more to their total early in the second stanza. School kept trying, however, and were rewarded with two goals towards the end of the game, but O'Malley sewed it up for Vic with a neat goal in the last minute of play.

Hamilton and O'Malley played well throughout for the winners, while Copp and Stephanowsky tried hard for School.

finish the scoring for the first period. In the second stanza Forestry increased their lead by two goals, while Vic remained scoreless. The game was cleanly played, no penalties being handed out by either of the referees.

There's nothing very funny about a hither crops up even then. Frinstance, the other day a fresbie was waiting for a bus at this hour when up zoomed a car and offered her a lift.

"Why," said she, very brilliantly for the time of the day, "you ought to get the Croix de Guerre!"

"Heck," said the drive who must obviously have been up for hours, "I'd rather have the L'oeu de Vie."

S.P.S. man, maybe?

This flow of the linguistic reminds us of a freshmen who went to a Greek class, we imagine, by mistake. He sat there and watched the professor write rows and rows of Greek letters on the board. He looked impressed. "Gosh," he said, "that's just the way my head feels the MORNING AFTER!"

All repair places are slow these days, but according to the advertising in their window the record belongs to a certain cleaning establishment on Yonge St.

OUR OLD CLOTHES WILL

Of course they probably turn out a very superior job.

This one happened in Hart House—where girls really aren't allowed. It seems, though, that one wandered in to collect something from the Lost and Found department of the S.A.C. On her way to the office she passed through a group of people who had just attended a meeting held by the Warden to discuss the correct attire for college men.

"Hey," yelled a voice. "where's your lie!"

The age of chivalry maybe isn't dead, but it isn't very well. This was brought forcefully home to us the other day when we listened in by means of secret microphones and other devices known to the press, to a conversation in Macs.

"You have quite a large appetite," remarked an amazed escort as he watched a co-ed consume quantities of food.

"Why, I eat like a bird," said the co-ed.

"Yeah!" replied the escort gloomily, "like a VULTURE."

Remember 'way back last year when we had the great snow? It was pretty exciting in a way. Two Trinity co-eds had to go to the Fire Hall to get some milk and, being bright girls, of course they went on skis. They were ploughing their way over an enormous bank of snow when all of a sudden there was a loud yell. They looked around and found themselves facing a very annoyed man. "Hey!" he shouted. "Get off my CAR!"

The dornest things happen.

Sometimes, as you may have suspected from reading this one, it's pretty hard to find things to put in a Hither. In fact, most Varsity staffers succumb to something called Hither Hysteria.

Frinstance, the other day we heard one asking plaintively: "Can't anybody lend me a hither till Monday?"

representing a certain faculty called last week, wishing to know if it was then too late to enter a hockey team in the schedule. We referred the person to the Head of Hockey. That night the necessary preliminaries to entering a team were discussed between Barbara Wilson, the said Head, and the faculty rep. Barbara stayed up late that night drawing up a new schedule, to include the new team; went down the next morning early to Varsity Arena to arrange for the new times; and generally went to a lot of trouble. That night the rep called again. It wasn't her fault. It is a small faculty, and everyone knows it. Anyway, she had to withdraw her team as the "girls" had changed their minds and they didn't want a team after all.

We will go all out with Barbara Wilson and anyone else who has gone through the same performance to recommend that a system of fines be introduced. Whenever a team defaults at the last minute after it has been entered, apparently in good faith, and a place scheduled for it, a good stiff fine should be levied on the Athletic Association concerned by the Directorate. This might help defray the cost of the Directorate's activities and, who knows, we might get enough for a party! Good idea!

HARVARD PROF. DISCUSSES SOCIAL SYSTEM

Stress and Strain of Modern World on Social Structure Outlined by Professor Talcott
Parsons

In any social system there is always conflict and strain, stated Professor Talcott Parsons of Harvard University, discussing "Social Structure and Ideology" in the Economics Building last Friday afternoon in the first of a series of sociology lectures.

As we act under strain, he continued, we give expression either to romantic idealization and hero worship or to anxiety and hostility. One source of strain is the process of rationalization, which is inherent in western civilization.

Others, he said, are our competitive and kinship system, in the latter of which the strain focuses on the position of youth and women in society. Although we romanticize women and youth, we also make scapegoats out of them.

Our class system, too, continued Professor Parsons, with its rigid prestige scale, causes strain. Finally, he said, there are powerful vested interest groups, including the Catholic Church. The speaker also mentioned two more general sources of strain: disillusionment when confronted with realities and indignation at the outraging of legitimate traditional institutions.

One type of ideology, asserted the professor, tends to have integrative functions and to emphasize the solidarity of a group. A very conspicuous example of this, the speaker continued, is the reluctance in the United States even to mention ethnic and religious differences in the population.

In spite of capitalism's great importance as an ideological system in the western world, stated Professor Parsons, it is not the central structural key to the whole structural system.

There is no doubt, declared the speaker, that the United States and her sister nations have a central official ideology. In competition with this we can distinguish two major tendencies to deviate: one is the "leftist revolt" with communism as its extreme form, the other the "fundamentalist revolt," having fascism as its extreme form.

"When the United States is continually subjected to suspicion and attack, it is probable that certain of these tensions will mount," said Professor Parsons in conclusion.

According to Professor C. W. M. Hart, of the University of Toronto, Professor Parsons is the most outstanding social theorist on the continent, and his book "The Structure of Social Action" is already a classic.

C.O.T.C. TO SELECT INFANTRY OFFICERS

U.C. Parliament Favors Training

The first session of the University College Parliament of the new year was officially opened Friday afternoon as Lieutenant-Governor Robert Bell gave out New Year Awards to a number of University College undergraduates for their contribution to the college.

The debate, of which the topic was "Resolved: that this House approves compulsory undergraduate war training," got under way and the leader of the Government, Ralph Shepherd, U.C., attempted to clarify the resolution, saying that it applied only to the immediate war situation.

The C.O.T.C. takes unskilled immature high school graduates, he said, affording to his own pacifistic high school training as an example, helps them to attain a more realistic view of life, and adjusts them to the army life they will be leading on graduation.

Leader of the Opposition, Don Mulholland, said that the only justification for the existence of the C.O.T.C. lies in the fact that it informs the outside public that the University is doing something in the war and that is not sufficient reason for its continuation. He described the women's war services as being ineffectual, but conceded that "the time that the women waste with their war work would probably be wasted elsewhere."

Speaker for the Government, Dorothy Speers of Victoria College, stated that the University war training serves to satisfy patriotic and humanitarian impulses of boys who would like to be in the Army but realize the importance of education.

Joan McGee of St. Mike's spoke for the Opposition, saying that the compulsory aspect of the women's military services is entirely unnecessary, undemocratic and harmful in that it stifles any patriotic impulses university women may have. At the same time it isolates them from the national aspect of the war, twelve of these services having only a very remote connection with the war.

The Government won the debate by a close decision.

EDITORIAL

Compulsory Peacetime Training

We have been criticizing President Roosevelt's proposed bill legislating for one or more years of compulsory military training. Now we find a similar suggestion has been made in our own country. Admiral Percy Nelles, former chief of the Canadian Naval Mission overseas, advocated lately that a system of national service in peacetime be set up so that all youths might spend a year or more "on the coasts, in the air and in the pioneer areas of the country."

Three debatable points arise from his suggestion. Would the actual value of such a plan be of sufficient benefit to balance its defects? Is it practical and compatible with the form of government we desire? And is it designed with an eye to effective improvement in the post-war world?

Obviously the expense involved in the scheme would be momentous in a peacetime economy. If youth is to receive one or more years of military training, it is more than probable that such training will come in the midst of some stage of their education. Men whose education has been interrupted for a year or more will not have their former enthusiasm to complete it. Yet if we hold any hope for improvement, education will be our most valuable instrument. A plan based on the thesis of Admiral Nelles hardly evidences much thought for the future. It is true that from a preventative point of view he is concerned with the future. But can a year or two of military training provide such intensive martial mindedness that we will be permanently equipped with an effective standing army? Such training cannot remain vividly in the mind of a man whose essential interest will be in earning a living. Unless there is complete regimentation in our country, peacetime training can never leave the same mark on a man as the actual experience of war. There is also the tendency for such training to slide into half measures during peaceful conditions unless it constitutes the foremost legislation of our government. Once the prime interest of the government is that of effectively turning our youth into soldiers in order to maintain a standing army, the stage is set for a technocratic and ultimately fascist system of administration.

There are some of us who realize that the only solution to our post-war problems is that of a planned economy, co-operative living and adult education. There are others of us who believe that we should revert to pre-war economy with free enterprise. But the number of us who believe in the unchecked and unbalanced rule of an elite class is negligible. The only way to ensure efficient compulsory training is by submerging all activities into a regimented youth movement. Many countries in Europe fell into that very line of reasoning after the last war. For militarism, the only remedy for war is the maintenance of a standing army as a forceful prevention. Yet in utilizing such a means, he is converting his ultimate purpose. War is inevitable as long as we are devoting all energies towards increasing and improving an army in peacetime. We are prone to praise such theories as "hard headed" and "clearsighted" and "realistic." Rather they appear as the most unrealistic solution we have.

It is not realism to aggravate an abnormal state by using that very abnormality as a corrective. Merely because there have always been wars is no reason to suppose that there always will be. Men so far have failed to establish the social organism identical with total peace. We have been successful in establishing local peace in the microcosm. It is just as feasible that we can similarly make the structure of international society conform to the conditions of peace.

The tendency which will continue to crop up in the formulation of peace plans will be that of making judgments based on the emotions induced by wartime conditions. If we are content to be mere instruments in the political machinations of a war every twenty years, then by all means let us start by compulsory peacetime military training, whether it be valueless or potent. If we want to attempt to ensure a decent future for ourselves and the following generations, then let us begin planning with fundamentals other than those of the traditional past.

Despite Odds

The Varsity Blue hockeyists had small difficulty gaining their first win of the schedule as they downed Watson A.C. by an 8-2 score in the second game of the doubleheader played at the Arena Friday evening.

Earlier, Victory Aircraft moved into first place by upsetting the highly favored Navy Bulldogs. The score was 6-2.

The Varsity-Watson team produced the better hockey as the smooth skating and passing of the Blues slightly overshadowed their outlived rivals. Bill Lawler and Bob Murray were the big runs, picking up three and four points respectively. Gus Adam, while picking up two goals, displayed an abundance of spirit. Harve Bain was the pick of the defence.

For the visitors, Goalie Mortimer was a standout despite the eight goals that beat him. Between fits of temperament, Tony Wolfe stood out defensively and offensively.

Engineering Courses May Be Five Years

The increasing importance of liberal and cultural as well as administrative and economic studies in the training of an engineer will force the adoption of a five year course in engineering, stated Dean C. R. Young, of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering at the annual meeting of the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario held in the Royal York Hotel last Saturday.

He said that a survey of servicemen revealed that more wanted engineering as a career than anything else and the majority of these hoped to attain administrative positions. Thus, with Toronto expecting the largest undergraduate bodies in its engineering history, this phase of training, with much less emphasis on practice and skills, will be essential.

Additions of new courses could not help but add to the undergraduate years he said, so that "we must resign ourselves to a five instead of a four-year course from now on." He added that the plans were not practicable in wartime, but would be inevitable in the post-war period.

Mile of Pennies, Taggers, Auction, To Signal Opening of I.S.S. Drive

After weeks of planning, the International Student Service has now mapped out in detail its three-day entertainment program starting next Wednesday.

The grand opening of the drive will be a mile of pennies, which goes across the entire campus, halting in front of all major buildings. Each college is to be responsible for filling its stretch of colored serpent paper and sectional competition has been encouraged for the highest amount of blue patches sold to any faculty or college.

The penny drive, which will go on from 8:45 a.m. till 2 p.m., under the slogan "Pennies for Patches," has been put on by the School of P.H.E.

"The campus will find out that we of the 'baby college' can not only stand on our heads but really pitch in when it counts," said Vee Gilchrist, of II P.H.E.

Thursday morning a crew of co-ed taggers will sell tickets, admitting the buyer to the auction sale for 25 cents and to the Skit Nite and dance for 75 cents. As the per capita quota for the University has been put at one dollar, a purchase of both these tickets would just fill the need, the tagging committee pointed out.

At the Skit Nite on Thursday evening casts from previous U.C., S.P.S., Vic and Dents productions, as well as any other colleges which may still decide to contribute their talent, will go on the boards in Convocation Hall. After the Skit Nite the audience will flock over to Hart House for the dance, held under the slogan "Come Single, Go Home Double!"

The auction sale on Friday afternoon will include a variety of interesting items, among them Frankie's bow tie, autographed pictures of Superman and one of Miliza Korjus, a copy of "Good Night, Sweet Prince," autographed by Diana Barrymore, and a key to Whitney Hall.

On Friday night the regular Pops Concert in Massey Hall will be conducted entirely for I.S.S. by Sir Ernest MacMillan, who himself was a prisoner of war in the last war. Of the three guest artists to be heard at the program, Leo Barkin will play Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue, and Maude Craig and Gordon Day will render the Mozart Concerto for flute and harp. Other selections have been chosen from Smetana, Rinsky-Korsakov, Richard Strauss, Sullivan and Jarnett.

Although this concert officially concludes the drive, there is a prospect of bringing a well-known personality from the United States to the campus to speak on behalf of I.S.S. some time in February.

art, music and drama

Inauguration

Hart House

A gratified audience heard the first Hart House Informal Afternoon Recital in almost four years last Friday. The veteran pianist, Viggo Kihl, who has performed so willingly in these concerts since their beginning, appropriately inaugurated the new series.

In a program built around Beethoven's "Waldstein" Sonata, Mr. Kihl showed that he has lost little of his power and agility. It is not hard to see why he has gained a special reputation as an interpreter of Beethoven. With a quick change of mood, Mr. Kihl followed the sonata with the Schubert Waltzes arranged by Liszt. These delightful tunes were sympathetically and lyrically played.

Mr. Kihl's little introductory talks should be mentioned. His wide knowledge of music in general held the interest of the audience, and his enthusiasm for it increased the informality and intimacy of the atmosphere.

Singing Tone

Eaton Auditorium

Debuts are always difficult things and Toronto has always been a particularly hard nut to crack. It augurs well for Miss Freda Trepel, 26-year-old Winnipeg-born pianist who gave a brilliant performance last Saturday night, that she was given such a rousing reception.

Possessing a brilliant technique and a sympathetic, artistic understanding, Miss Trepel sustained our interest throughout her entire program Saturday night by the beautiful singing quality of her tone and the variety of her interpretations.

She made a good first beginning with the Bach, Fantasy in C minor. Then followed Caavotte en Roucand, by Lully, in a lighter, gayer mood, and a triumphant La Victoire, by Duphly. Her Beethoven selection, Sonata, Op. 78, F sharp major, showed off her technical brilliance, but it was not musically satisfying. One criticism that might be made of Miss Trepel's playing is that it is lacking in power and depth in her big tones.

LILIAN DONSON

Golden Age

Trinity Concert

At last night's Trinity concert, Greta Kraus, harpsichordist, brought back through her playing of several "Golden Age" compositions, a glimpse of a gracious, vanished past. The Scarlatti sonata was played vivacissimo indeed; Bach's Italian Concerto, nobly and earnestly. The quaint grace and finish of her other selections were admirable. As for George Lambert, baritone, humorous songs such as Hume's "Tobacco" seem to be his forte.

Altogether, the originality and worth of the pieces performed at this concert were excellently realized, especially those by the harpsichordist. Miss Kraus gave all the clearness in touch and refinement in interpretation that such composers as Bach and Scarlatti demand.

It was announced late last night that Chas. E. Wigglebottom, Bursar of the University of Toronto, has been asked for his resignation. Confoozin. Ain't It? . . .

Busy days and nights, too, are ahead of Ace Bailey's puck-chasers as they prepare for their coming tussle with the league-leading Victory Aircraft Bombarriers come the turn of the month.

As the Victory aggregation gained a four-goal margin over Navy who, in turn, potted six markers more than the Blues in their encounter, it would appear that the Blues will have their backs to that proverbial wall.

However, by using Jim Coleman's "Beachers-are-champs" football logic, the picture is reversed. Because Victory defeated Navy and Watsons and because Varsity have defeated Victory (exhibition game back in November) the Blues are, theoretically, the top team. But, Navy supporters pipe up with their theory: because their team has beaten the theoretical top team, the Navy are, according to Navy theory, the best team.

On thinking it over, it seems to follow the Leaf-Canadian-Red Wing pattern. The player of players is still Bub Murray. He picked up four points and made his presence felt defensively as well. Bill Lawler is a very effective running mate. The picture play goes to Harve Bain. He picked up a loose puck in his own end, Stanowskied his way through the entire Watson squad, and fed Hugh Smythe the set-up.

The league standing looks something like this:

	P	W	L	F	A	Pts
Victory Air	2	2	0	18	4	4
Navy	2	1	1	9	7	2
Varsity	2	1	1	9	9	2

Spirit, we love it! (when it's there)

It has been pointed out to us with the wrong end of a hockey stick that something is missing. Up at one of the hockey games the other day there were about 25 people. There were the two teams, two coaches, and three timers and scorers. Something was wrong. How was it that there were 25 instead of the usual 22 or 26? Usually it takes an extra person to get out the three extra people. This extra person's duty in full is to stand over by the said timers and scorers to make certain that they do not escape. Often it is impossible to get such an extra person.

Anyway, that's all, just a measly 25 people, all directly participating. Now, how can any team, good or bad, turn in its best performance when they have no support? Admittedly one never sees the action in the seats, when one is playing, but there is a nice warm comfortable feeling of having support. And although we know that the game is played for the fun of it, still after that Herculean effort to get down to the goal in a rush, and that amazing shot which slipped in and SCORED, it is a nice feeling to get some sort of recognition.

Vic teams have the most followers to cheer their triumphs and mourn their defeats. They are lucky, in this respect, and we bet that a good share of the reason for more cheers and less mourning in the Vic ranks comes for this reason. St. Mike's had a few (anything more than 2 can be classed as a few) supporters out to see them play.

So that the few can come up again to see some good girls' hockey, we will give the games for this week. There are two. Today, at 12 noon, St. Hilda's plays P.H.E. II, while tomorrow at the same time Vic I meets U.C. I. These are both top games, we can assure you. It's not a waste of time!

CLUB HEARS COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN GOVT.

Indians Proud of Country's Past: Change in Nation's Present Condition Rests on Indian Youth

"We Indians are very proud of our past, both the ancient and intermediate past, of our country," said Mr. K. Ahuja, Trade Commissioner of the Indian government in Canada, at yesterday's meeting of the International Affairs Club.

The romantic notion of India as a country of snake-charmers, ascetics, and princes living in medieval splendor, was only true to a certain extent, he pointed out, and it is rapidly realized that India has world-famous scientists and all modern amenities in her big cities, side by side with squalor and poverty everywhere.

The cradle of an ancient and flourishing civilization 5000 years ago, rivalling those of Egypt and China, Mr. Ahuja continued while, contrary to usual opinion, there has always been a democratic element in Indian life in the village assemblies which have been incorporated into the 1937 constitution.

In pre-colonial times, India had an agricultural economy, with thriving handicrafts, but in the last two centuries her industries declined, and today she is an importer of finished articles, the speaker said.

In the last decades, India's industries have become of major importance, and today she is the world's greatest producer of mica, sugar, and jute, and ranks second in cotton, manganese, and in iron ore deposits, Mr. Ahuja explained, which make the Indian war effort one of the greatest assets to the Allies.

A great educational program for the post-war years is being mapped out, he said, and plans are being worked on for the doubling of Indian farming output by modern methods. To eliminate India's poverty, her industries must be increased after the war, the speaker continued, along with the extension of means of transportation, and technical personnel and teachers will be supplied by granting scholarships sending Indian students abroad on a wide scale.

"We are looking to the youth of our country to bring about India's transformation into a prosperous, modern country," Mr. Ahuja stressed. The meeting was concluded with a question period.

'Canadian War Artist In Italy' Topic Of Former COTC Member

By Reg Herman

Major C. F. Comfort gave an informal talk on "A Canadian War Artist in Italy" in Hart House yesterday. He explained he was drawn into the army from the Toronto contingent of the C.O.T.C., and overseas as a combat war artist. An artist and a war historian are assigned to each of the six or seven Canadian divisions as personnel.

The artist explained that he circulated in his own jeep and trailer, with a driver equipped with a commygun to act as personal bodyguard. He stated: "Warfare is no longer the spectacle it used to be. An infantry advance, if seen through the dust from the tanks and anti-tank guns and the bursts of shell-fire, is an occasional running soldier seeking another vantage point."

"The artists very rarely go in with the front line troops," he continued, re-

TECHNICAL BOARDS COMING NEXT WEEK

Beit Fellowships To Promote Science

The Registrar's office has announced that the election of Fellows to the Beit Fellowship will take place on July 7. These fellowships, of the value of £300, were founded and endowed by Otto Beit, Esq., of London, England, in September, 1913, "to promote the advancement of Science by means of Research."

The fellowships are tenable at the Imperial College of Science and Technology, S. Kensington, London, S.W. The tenure of each fellowship will be for two years if the trustees receive a favorable report at the end of the first year.

Although each Fellow must be of European descent by both parents, any nationality is eligible. The candidates must have taken a degree by the time of the election at any university in the British Empire, or be in possession of a diploma or associate's degree of any college approved by the trustees.

Applicants are disqualified if they hold any other scholarship or fellowship at the same time, but cannot be disqualified on account of religious or political opinions. The candidates must be under 25 years of age at the date of the election.

Fellows will have their work defined by the trustees, who will specify the research work to be followed and will be attached to a department at the Imperial College under a professor. They will be required to give full time to their work.

The applications for this fellowship must be received on or before April 6. Application forms and all information may be obtained from the Registrar at Simcoe Hall, or by letter only from the Registrar, Imperial College, South Kensington, London, S.W. 7, England.

Service Technical Personnel Selection Boards and representatives of the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel will visit the University and will hold their meetings in the Music Room, Hart House, on January 29, 30 and 31.

All final year Science and Engineering students are required to appear before these Boards and also to attend a preliminary meeting in the Debates Room, Hart House, at 1640 hrs. (4.40 p.m.) on Thursday, January 25. At this meeting full instructions will be given and lists of appointments issued.

All third year Science and Engineering students in the U.N.T.D. and C.O.T.C. who wish to be considered respectively for active service summer training with the Navy, or for summer training in the R.C.E., R.C. Sigs., or R.C.E.M.E., will also attend this meeting and receive their appointments.

Science and Engineering students graduating in 1945 who are not applying for Technical appointments or who may be medically unfit for such appointments, will be addressed on the subject of civilian employment by a representative of the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel on Wednesday, January 31, at 1640 hrs. (4.40 p.m.) in the Debates Room, Hart House.

EDITORIAL

The Gazette On Student Regulations

The Montreal Gazette, one of Canada's more highly regarded newspapers, recently made a bitter attack on the existing Selective Service regulations as applied to university students. The lengthy editorial asked for immediate revision of the status of students eligible for military service.

Herewith we quote: "Considering the drastic way in which the normal course of so many lives have been disturbed in Canada, there is, perhaps, a certain anomaly in the fact that a very considerable number of young men of military age and physical fitness should be continuing their way of life upon what is substantially a peacetime basis. Nor is the fairness of the arrangement increased by the fact that university students are mainly drawn from that class of society which enjoys sufficient income to meet at least a great part of their expenses."

We accuse the Gazette of exaggerating in the public eye the exact number of students that would be affected by such a revision. Their phrase "a very considerable number" when boiled down to precise numerical terms, and excluding those men below acceptable military category, and returned service men who have already experienced several years of battle, would probably not number more than two or three thousand; this would be a very negligible increment to the hundreds of thousands of men now on active service. Also, we accuse the Gazette of reviving an old and incorrect stereotype of university students as wealthy, parasitic young playboys. A very large percentage of the male students now studying at Canadian universities are not supported by their families but by their own efforts, and by Government bursaries and subsidies.

The Gazette goes on to say: "The system existing in Canada has been defended on the ground that the life of the country would suffer in the long view if too large a number of young Canadians were deprived for too long a time of the advantages of a university training..."

"But... the loss of a few years or months of university study may be regarded as a less serious national consideration than the lack of sufficient manpower to help bring the war to a swift and definite conclusion."

The foregoing statement is in direct antithesis to the statement made at the University of Toronto last fall by Dr. W. E. Wickenden, President of the Case School of Applied Science and one of America's foremost educators, who denounced the shortsighted policy of the United States government in sweeping the universities to the south clear of men training in the Arts and Sciences. The importance of the above-mentioned increment to the post-war world that the men now studying will be called upon to fill is greatly overrated by Montreal's foremost morning newspaper. And each spring these men fill the ever-growing need for technical officers in our war effort.

However, the most important point of all is that students have been proceeding to university during the past four years somewhat hesitatingly and with vacillation, and have continued to do so only because the Government has stressed the need for more adequately trained men, and has provided Students' Aid Funds to this end. They have often been embarrassed by local public opinion and have remained at the university when they would rather have been fighting with their fellows only because they were told by official sources that they were doing the right thing. Gradually public opinion subsided; but now the Gazette has thrown fresh fuel into the fire of public sentiment.

BRITISH POLICY DENOUNCED AT VIC DEBATE

House Defeated Motion to Approve of Policy in Liberated Countries as in the Case of Italy and Greece.

The motion, "Resolved that this house approves British policy in liberated countries," was defeated by the Victoria College Debating Parliament last night.

The opening speaker for the affirmative, Bob Sampkins, 11 Physics and Chemistry, defined British policy as a policy to restore democracy to Europe. He stated that in North Africa, Belgium and France policy has been formulated because of military necessity. There was not this necessity in Greece, but the British went in because they had pledged to aid in rehabilitation.

The leader of the negative, Dorothy Clarke, 111 Sociology, held that British policy consisted of intervention in favor of rightists and royalists. This policy was partly dictated because of her traditional fear of Russia and by the fact that she did not want to lose her influence in Italy and Greece. She added that this policy was likely to result either in the continuous use of British force or in a revolt when this force was removed. Such a policy would lead to misunderstandings with Russia, Greece, other Allies, and the British people.

In answering the question why they did not leave the Greeks to their own devices, David Parsons, 1 Pass, stated that this policy was part of a grand scheme for Germany to win allies, or to intimidate the smaller nations.

Speaking for the negative, John Meisel, 1 Soc. and Phil., said that Churchill was not following the clauses of the Atlantic Charter in supporting Badoglio and refusing Sforza in Italy. He added that the British were sowing further distrust in a nation already with distrust, and that this policy cast an ugly light on Britain's post-war aims.

A special speaker, Mrs. Homer Thompson, lecturer in Archaeology, said that it was difficult to obtain unbiased information concerning the situation in Greece. "This people's attitude it not ours, and it is only by infinite sympathy and understanding that we can help them. We must remember that if we leave them, there will be anarchy."

Mrs. Thompson lived for some time in Greece.

Drive For I.S.S. Opens Tomorrow

A mile of pennies will open the I.S.S. drive tomorrow, when students of every college on the campus will start the money rolling from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

I.S.S. work is effective in China, Europe, North America and wherever there are prisoners of war and needy students.

Student internees, student refugees, student prisoners of war, students in the U.S.S.R., and students in the occupied territories are all aided by the money which is raised by the I.S.S.

The I.S.S. provides for food, clothing, lodgings, and general laboratory supplies, wherever they are needed. In addition to giving scholarships and paying tuition fees for poorer students, the I.S.S. undertook to publish democratic Chinese newspapers with the view of affording the Chinese the opportunities for free expression.

Emergency aid is also provided to students who are victims of air-raids, fires or accidents. German prisoners of war derive benefit from the I.S.S., as it recognizes no race, creed or religion.

EXEMPTION OF EX-SERVICE MEN FROM PHYSICAL TRAINING

The Board of Governors of the University has approved of the following recommendations submitted by the Athletic Directorate:

"That, in view of the fact that many of these men are so far behind in their studies and require extra time if they are to complete the academic year satisfactorily, they be exempted from Physical Training for the session 1944-1945."

"That, at the end of the present session the whole situation will be reviewed again and further consideration given to these men for the subsequent years of their courses."

This exemption will be extended automatically and it will not be necessary for any ex-service men to petition for exemption.

The Senate of the University is prepared to extend the same exemption to women who have enrolled in the University following their discharge from active service.

Expansion In Personnel Needed States New Social Work Director

Dr. Harry M. Cassidy, newly appointed Director of the School of Social Work, told The Varsity yesterday of the need for expansion in the training of personnel for social service.

Dr. Cassidy, who received a B.A. at the University of British Columbia and a Ph.D. at the Brookings Graduate School of Economics and Government, Washington, D.C., explained that he was returning to the University of Toronto staff after an absence of ten years. From 1929 to 1934 Dr. Cassidy was assistant professor of Social Science, here, lecturing on "Labor Problems" and social economics. Then the province of British Columbia appointed him Director of Social Welfare, in which capacity he built up the province's health services, till 1939.

On the staff of the University of California from 1939, he was given leave of absence to serve as a director for UNRRA in Washington, in May, 1944. Last August he accepted the position of professor of Social Welfare and director of the School of Social Work of the U. of T., beginning this January.

The author of many books and papers, Dr. Cassidy has written "Unemployment and Relief in Ontario, 1929-33," "Social Security and Reconstruction in Canada," published in 1943, and a book to be published in February, "Public Health and Welfare Reorganization—the Postwar Problem in the Canadian Provinces."

Among the many positions held by Dr. Cassidy was that of Rockefeller fellow in 1939 to study education for social work in the U.S.A., and he was the recipient of research grants from the Carnegie Corporation in 1942. At present he is a member of the executive committee of the National Conference of Social Work.

Dr. Cassidy outlined the purpose of the school. "This is a professional school of graduate studies distinct from sociology. The school trains personnel for professional and social services required in the fast developing and very broad fields of social insurance, public aid and relief, child welfare, and private services like the Y's."

He went on to explain some problems, stating: "There is at present an extreme shortage of personnel. The university, called by Dr. Smith a 'National University,' has over 60 students enrolled in the school, a number inadequate even for Toronto, let alone the Dominion."

He advocates "the development of the curriculum to allow for a greatly enlarged enrolment, seeking people with a B.A. background from such courses as sociology, political science, and psychology, and making available to them a course leading to a Master's degree."

"Graduates of the school number over 600 and are to be found in important positions in practically every province in Canada," he said. "Everything possible is done to assist graduates in finding suitable opportunities for work. For the past several years the demand for graduates has exceeded the supply."

The Astral Bigamist

Royal Alexandra Theatre

Champagne with a dash of pepper and salt (no doubt Madame Arcati's) would be a suitable simile for the utterly fascinating and refreshing comedy Blithe Spirit which could have been written by nobody but Noel Coward. Fantastic in the extreme, its subtlety and humor surpass anything that even Orson Welles might have conceived. Whipped up in three days, it was designed as a campy entertainment for the over-bombed, nerve-shattered London public of 1940. No wonder it caught the Englishman's funny bone and has continued to pack theatres this side of the Atlantic as well as that.

The cast, headed by the oomph girl, Elissa Landi, was surprisingly good. Vivian Miss Lacey, as the dead wife embodied spirit of Charles' dead wife Elvira was very good and the general impression a pleasing one, the orchids must be given to Vicki Cummings' portrayal of Ruth, the ultra-modern, sophisticated but bewildered second wife of Charles. Madame Arcati as played by Hildegard Halliday completely delighted the audience as she energetically went in and out of trances and, on the whole, kept the action humming. It is unusual that all the women in the play should be so extremely graceful. In the words of the old ballad, "Every little movement has a meaning." Charles Alexander Kirkland played the irascible Charles with rare finesse and true feeling for humor. The maid Edith (Marie Paxton) literally ran away with her scenes.

It would spoil half the fun to tell you the story, so we will simply say that it's the most thoroughly enjoyable performance, stage or screen, that we have seen for quite some time. The suspense is killing, the repartee delightful and spicy, to say the least.

This Is The Navy

Avon Room, Simpson's

In 1942, Hedley Raimie, O.S.A., exhibited his first naval painting, and since that time has done a number of oils and charcoal-drawn scenes from life and action in the Canadian Navy. These are now sufficient in number, interest and technical efficiency to guarantee a successful exhibit in the Avon Room, Simpson's Fifth Floor art gallery.

The Canadian Naval War Paintings, as they are called, are part of a wide interest in war art, and many well-known Canadian painters are at work in many parts of the world doing their best to record a vital part of this age. The artist exhibiting was for some time on a Canadian frigate, and most of the scenes are taken of parts of the ships or members of the ship's company at rest or in action.

Ash Can Wednesday is representative of action as the sea comes with its elemental power. Along with this, Dirty Weather gives the viewer a feeling of the artist's idea of the sea. Grey tonal qualities merging on slate predominate and while not giving complete loneliness, capture an encompassing loneliness.

of the sea. In contrast, Boiler Room takes us to the cheery coffee time for the ship's engineers—this is natural and not too intricate for appreciation; a mass of technical apparatus would have suffered a better fate in the hand of the photographer, had that been the object of the scene. The romantic and inspiring picture was Flashing and would have warmed the cockles of the hardest naval recruiting officer. Very simply, it is a signal being flashed from one ship to another, with a rugged sailor obviously doing his job.

When it comes to individuals, Rainie turns to charcoal combined with chalk. These are quick sketches and catch something of the individuality of the sailor which is so often lost in his bell-bottoms. However, the action poses are somewhat stalled. For instance, in several pictures large shells are being handled, and there is a lack of movement as though the men had been asked to pose in mid-air while they were sketched. As a record of naval life, Mr. Rainie's contributions will become of increasing value and should prove important corner-stones in the house of war art.

SPORT POURRI

MEN

By Jerry Ewins

At The Arena...

Last night's hockey game between Sr. Meds and Sr. S.P.S. showed the doctors into the cellar position in Group I when they bowed before School by a 2-1 count. This leaves U.C. I in first place, undefeated, and Sr. S.P.S. second in the race for the two play-off spots resulting from this group.

Meds went down to defeat through lack of back defence. They seemed to exhibit a better brand of stick-handling and general class in passing plays but were very weak around the net. Well wager that School outshot them about 2-1 and so won by just the right count. As a result, S.P.S.'s defence was a stone wall in front of McCombe, while Bryans was tossing shots aside from all angles, receiving very scant protection from his rear guard.

There was a good crop of hockey players on that ice yesterday. Some were Blues men but a few more have the ability and yet aren't; why, we don't quite understand. For School, Anderson played a very aggressive game, cashing in a pass from Davis for their second goal. Walker got the other, also from Davis. Ross Clare was very effective in the rushes he led, Bryans robbing him of the finishing touch necessary for goals several times. Big Red Shand used his weight to good advantage on defence. Aside from Bryans' good effort, Callahan turned in the best game for Meds, with his close checking and steady work on defence. Groat carried the rubber well on many Meds' rushes, ably assisted by Bill Lawler, who picked up Meds' lone tally on a pass from Synthe.

Jim Boa and Pete Callahan got into a mix-up early in the game and Boa came out of it with a gash on the side of his face that required three stitches to close. The two of them roughed it up a bit in the corner and as Callahan went to skate away Boa grabbed his stick and held on to it with a gasp on the side of his face that required three stitches to close.

The only other game played yesterday saw U.C. II wallpopped by another 9-0 score, this time by Dents. The one feature of the game that is worthy of comment is Bob Murray's chore of six goals and two assists. Good thing he plays for the Blues!

I.S.S. Frantic;
Auction Fizzles
As Sinatra Stolen

So sensational was last week's announcement of the I.S.S. Sinatra Bowtie Auction that an emergency committee decided to hold it secretly Monday afternoon, for fear four days' mounting hysteria should precipitate a riot amongst the nation's Booby-sock crew.

Although on such short notice only 11,000 throbbing females showed up, including campus co-eds and 9,000 downtown stenographers disguised as Hart House waitresses, a riot occurred anyway.

Informal sources attributed this to the fact that Sinatra's marmalade, fearing lest the loosely-constructed crooner drop apart from the strain of having his bow-tie disentangled, popped The Voice, rock, stock, and goo-goo eye into an empty Castoria bottle and expressed him by two storks to Toronto for auction intact.

The thunder of carpenter's hammers aroused the campus at dawn as an auctioneer's platform made out of lumber borrowed from Jambering C.O.C. vehicles was erected on the front campus.

A shriek of joyous anguish rose from 11,000 throats when it was announced, shortly after 2 p.m., that the bottled crooner had been reverently moved from the Great Hall refrigerator, where he had been preserved for the night, by the fortunate hands of the Warden's prettiest secretary.

At the request of the I.S.S. grand Panjandrum, the procession to the platform was led by the traditional Hart House parade, including the C.O.C. pipe band, a trumpeting Whitney Elephant, and Panjandrum Gilhovey, flashing his teeth and growling in a cage. Triumphantly bringing up the rear were 24 benighted blood donors, whose combined serum had kept Sinatra alive for the night.

The first discordant note was introduced when a loudspeaker wailed over the crowds Mr. Sinatra's opening number, relayed via a microphone introduced into the bottle by means of an oil funnel. Immediately, with a sigh that shook passing bombers, the audience swooned to a woman, crashing to the ground with a CRUMPH that jarred the City Hall clock into striking thirteen.

In the dead hush that followed, a passing Borden's milkman, mistaking the crooner's receptacle for an unwashed empty, stepped over the bodies, picked it up, and clamped it into his wagon.

At press time, J. Doberman Pincher, Campus Police Force, was inspecting Toronto doorsteps for a suspicious quart bottle.

WOMEN

"It's Crowded..."

They told us about today's issue as we walked into the office. "Not so crowded that I can't tell them about the hockey game at Varsity today, or about the need for I.S.S. taggers for Thursday, or anything else vital," we pleaded.

"Oh, well, if you think that anyone reads that 'Woman' of yours, go ahead—but only two (2) pages."

"Only two?"

We know when we are beaten, so this will be exactly two pages of copy paper as closely packed as possible. Well, up at Varsity St. Hilda's met and, incidentally, defeated a very scrappy P.H.E. J1 team yesterday. The score, which sea-sawed back and forth all through, ended up 4-3 for the Saints.

The most spectacular spot in the game occurred when one of the Physedders was removed for a clumsily executed trip. This lessened the P.H.E. strength considerably, but also made them fight harder, so much so that they nearly potted one in the Saints' goal. The edge was really with the Saints all the way, and although the Physedettes were as fast, they lacked the polish. The P.H.E. girls on this team were all freshies. If they hang together they should do well in their next two years.

Least anyone forget, they are the ones who galloped home with the basketball championship in the face of bigish odds. The same stars crop up again with Gwen Earle, Sally Fox and Fran Lee.

On the Saints' credit side there is the whole team and Mardie Fletcher. Both are good; together, well it looks bright!

To make certain that all people are contacted for their share, we urge all who possibly can do so to sign up to tag on Thursday, or if the lists are not going to call Mary Strickland, M1 8451, or Blanche Stanley, M1 2037.

It's only a little bit of money, a little part of a day, but it means a great deal. Support I.S.S. and tag!

MILE OF PENNIES

Colored serpent paper will wind across the entire campus, past your college to mark the mile that is to be covered with pennies. Each college is responsible for filling its stretch of colored serpent paper and sectional competition has been encouraged for the highest amount of blue patches sold to any faculty or college. When you wear a blue patch, "Pennies for Patches", your penny and silver will help fill your college's quota and make your faculty the outstanding donor.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 25th—All day
GENERAL TAGGING

Tags sell for 25c and 75c. The 75c tag will admit you to the Skit Nite and Dance, the purchase of the 25c tag will admit you to the Auction Sale on Friday afternoon. As the per capita quota for the University has been put at one dollar, a purchase of both these tags would just fill the need. "This is your investment in humanity."

THURSDAY NIGHT SKIT NITE AND DANCE

Gigantic Skit Nite with music, gags and skits. There will be gals a'gle, featuring the U.C. Folies 'Middle Five' chorus of lovelies. Also, at this Convocation shindig, will be production numbers by U.C., School, Vic and Dents. Music will be supplied by the School Band, Jim MacDonald, and that sultry lady of song, Gwenn Innis. After the Skit Nite, the audience will flock over to Hart House for the "Come Single, Go Home Double" dance in the gym.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON AUCTION SALE

Besides Frankie's bow-tie, there will be auctioned an autographed photo of Militza Korjus; 2 original Superman drawings by artist Joe Shuster; the book "Good Night, Sweet Prince"; the biography of John Barrymore, autographed by his daughter Diana; most important—the KEY TO WHITNEY HALL. A rollicking Master of Ceremonies will make this auction sale a fun and kitzzy affair.

FRIDAY NIGHT SYMPHONY "POPS" CONCERT

The regular "Pops" concert in Massey Hall will be under the auspices of I.S.S. and conducted by Sir Ernest MacMillan. The three guest stars will include Leo Barkin, popular pianist playing Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue"; Maude Craig and Gordon Day, rendering Mozart's "Concerto for Flute and Harp". Other selections have been chosen from Smetana, Rimsky-Korsakov, Richard Strauss, Sullivan and Jarnfield. Tickets are now on sale in Hart House box office from 11:30 a.m. till 2 p.m.

Social Workers' Delegates Hold Conference In Toronto

Dr. Harry M. Cassidy Represents University of Toronto. Conference to Discuss Shortage of Social Workers

A MAN'S PROFESSION

"The representatives of seven Canadian Schools of Social Work are meeting here today and tomorrow to discuss problems of common interest," stated Dr. Harry M. Cassidy in an interview yesterday. "The major problems of the conference are the tremendous shortage of social workers in Canada and how the schools can serve men coming out of the forces."

The representatives are: Dr. S. H. Prince of the Maritimes school at Dalhousie University; Miss D. King of the Montreal school; Father Desmarais from Montreal University; Dr. Cassidy of the University of Toronto; Dr. C. E. Smith from the University of Manitoba;

Miss M. Smith from the University of British Columbia; and Professor Marier from Laval University.

"The schools represented at the conference have a registration of only 400 students," Dr. Cassidy said, "a number totally inadequate to serve the requirements of the Dominion's billion dollar public expenditures program."

"You can quote me," he continued, "as saying that this is not a woman's profession. This is a profession for both men and women, and in the post-war period promises to rank with medicine, law, nursing and teaching as a major field in the professional service."

After the meeting, Miss King and Dr. Cassidy are going to Cleveland to the annual meeting of the American Association of Schools of Social Work, of which Toronto and Montreal are members.

"Basically, the United States' problem is the same as ours, although they offer

Co-eds Will Sell Tags Which Admit Purchaser to Auction Sale and Skit Nite. Date With U.C.'s Joan Cameron. Key to Whitney Hall. and Frankie's Bow-tie to be Auctioned; Alex Siegel Will be Auctioneer

POPS CONCERT FOR I.S.S.

The three-day campaign of the International Student Service, starting today, has been officially endorsed in a proclamation by President H. J. Cody of the University, which appears in this issue.

From 9 a.m. till 2 p.m. today, every student will get an opportunity to rid himself or herself of undesired coppers under the slogan of "Pennies for Patches." The Mile of Pennies, which will bring out competition between different colleges, has been sponsored by the School of P.H.E. entirely. It will start at Victoria College and Burwash Hall and then pass Emmanuel College and St. Michael's College, with a second line beginning in front of Wycliffe College, then passing south and west of Hart House, U.C., Knox College and Convocation Hall. From there it will branch off, one line spreading past the Physics, S.P.S., and Chemical Buildings to the Mining Building, and the other past the Medical, Biological, Mechanical, and Electrical Buildings.

All day Thursday a crew of co-eds, placed at strategic points on the campus, will sell two types of tags. Beyond their humanitarian purpose, these will admit any student to the Auction Sale or to the Skit Nite.

At 8 p.m. the Skit Nite will open in Convocation Hall. In addition to sparkling skits selected from previous student shows by Dents, Vic, School and U.C. casts, there will be music by the School Band, Jim MacDonald, and the songstress Gwen Innis, as well as the "Middle Five" Chorus from the U.C. Follies. Bill Tamblin, IV S.P.S., will be master of ceremonies. After the Skit Nite the audience will flock over to Hart House for the "Come Single, Go Home Double" dance in the gym.

Some new items have been added to the Auction Sale scheduled for 2 o'clock Friday afternoon in Convocation Hall. Apart from Frank Sinatra's bow-tie, two original Superman drawings, one autographed photo of Miliza Korjus, the book "Good Night, Sweet Prince" autographed by Diana Barrymore, and the key to Whitney Hall, there will be a Petty drawing signed by Franchot Tone, some original cuts from Disney's "Fantasia," and a date with the 1944 Miss Typical Co-ed, Joan Cameron. Alec Siegel, III U.C., as auctioneer, will facilitate the spending of dollars with fun in the U.C. Follies Tradition.

The great musical event of the I.S.S. drive will be the Pops concert on Friday in Massey Hall, which is to be conducted by Sir Ernest MacMillan. Leo Barkin, Maude Craig and Gordon Day will be the guest stars, to be heard in "Rhapsody in Blue" and Mozart's "Concerto for Flute and Harp." Other selections have been chosen from Smetana, Rimsky-Korsakov, Richard Strauss, Sullivan and Jarnfield. Tickets are still obtainable in Hart House box office between 11:30 a.m. and 2 p.m.

The following letter received from a Belgian prisoner of war in Germany is one of many expressing the universal need for assistance to uprooted students:

"The packages you have been sending to the officers of Oflag IIA during the past months have been received with the greatest pleasure. The high standard of these books have made it possible for work of post-graduate level to be accomplished. All the receivers of these books send you their most sincere thanks."

Trampoline Exhibition, Water Polo and Basketball To be Features of Season's First Athletic Night

By Jerry Ewins

The first of a series of five weekly Athletic Nights will be held this Saturday in Hart House. Hosts for the evening will be U.C., P.H.E., and Knox, and they promise to make this week's affair the best of the whole winter season.

Various committees have been set up to co-operate with Hart House officials and staff in putting on a really colossal evening's fun. Each of the fencing, boxing, and wrestling rooms, the big and upper gymnasiums, and the pool will have its own complete activities for the night.

In the big gym a combined team from the three host faculties will play an exhibition game with a picked squad from S.P.S., starting at 7:30 p.m. This game should stir up a good deal of interest because of the old Arts-Engineering rivalry which it typifies.

Then at 8:30 the main attraction of the night begins as the students get their first glimpse of this year's edition of their Basketball Blues in a game with the Uplands R.C.A.F. team from Ottawa. The full Varsity squad will be on hand but the starting line-up is still in doubt.

At half-time the crowd is in for a real treat. Through the courtesy of Alf Phillips, a trampoline exhibition will be staged, featuring Stu Hefferman, Ken Burton and Ken Tulley. For the benefit of the uninitiated, a trampoline is a bouncing net similar to the kind of thing which has probably kept you wide-eyed at every circus. This is the first time anything like it has been viewed within the portals of Hart House.

After the basketball game, dancing will start as soon as the benches have been cleared from the floor. The P.A. system will be the same one which was used so successfully last year, abetted by all the modern records acquired by the proprietors, Duncan and Thompson, during the year. The dancing will continue till 12 p.m.

In the upper gym proceedings will get under way at 8 o'clock. Messrs. Martin, Daly and Glionna will present the preliminaries of the Junior boxing and wrestling championships. This should be a very good show as keen spirit is always displayed by the eager contestants each year. The finals in this interfaculty competition will take place the following Saturday. Then, at 10 o'clock, the floor will be cleared for square-dancing. Jack Paterson of Emmanuel will do the calling, assisted by an orchestra of student musicians for the hoe-down.

In the swimming pool there will be three water-polo games, one every half-hour. These will be regular scheduled games in the Intramural League, Varsity meeting St. Mike's A in the first game, Jr. Meds B playing Knox in the second, and Sr. S.P.S. and U.C. hooking up in the third. At the conclusion of the water-polo Ken Tulley, Junior Canadian diving champion, will put on an exhibition on the springboard to augment his trampoline display in the big gym. This will conclude the activities in the pool.

The hosts have planned an interesting show of war movies in the fencing room. They will run throughout the whole evening and should provide some first-class entertainment.

The boxing room will be reserved for the active games which were so popular last year. Ping pong, table hockey, croquet, bagatelle, and other games of skill will be there for all those who desire to play them. Here is the place for Betty Co-ed and Joe College to vie for top honors without bloodshed. This room will also be open all evening.

Something new will be tried in the wrestling room. It will be used as a sitting-out lounge during the dancing, and the hosts promise that they will have some new and enterprising ideas to amaze you.

The Athletic Association are glad to be able to present these popular Saturday night affairs to the students. Tickets for the whole night's fun are two bits again this year. Athletic Nights are felt to be well worth while in the entertainment they provide alone, but they also net a sum upwards of $1200 which is always contributed to war and home charities. Here is certainly a good wholesome evening's entertainment at a very nominal cost. If the host faculties give the Hart House staff the fine co-operation they did in other years, some real shows are promised this winter.

NEW YEAR'S HONORS

"For loyal and distinguished service" to University College, Paul Reecke, IV Pol. Sci., is knighted in the traditional New Year's honor list of University College parliament. Speaker of the House, Ben Orenstein, attends as Lieutenant-Governor. Bob Bell bestows his blessings on Lord Reecke. Many others were knighted at the fourth session of parliament.

SPEAKING OF SWING Gillis Purcell New CUP Head

By Stuart Barton

Fletcher Henderson does not occupy a very prominent position in the modern jazz scene, but as any swing addict can tell you, this was not always so. Recordings made by his 1920-1930 band have become collectors' items, for during that era he featured such men as Louis Armstrong, Coleman Hawkins, and Rex Stewart.

Henderson is but a mediocre pianist; his main talent lying in the arranging end of the business. You all know that Benny Goodman's men had Henderson manuscripts in front of them when they made swing history in the middle '30s.

Henderson does little or no writing for his present-day outfit. In fact, at the Queensway last Saturday he used the stock of Jump Town on his CJBC broadcast. Which ain't good now. The fact is indicative of what happened during the rest of the evening.

Mr. Gillis Purcell, assistant general manager of the Canadian Press, has accepted the honorary presidency of the Canadian University Press, it was announced yesterday by Betsy Mosbaugh, editor of The Varsity, regional president of the C.U.P. Miss Mosbaugh approached Mr. Purcell as a result of a motion made at the last National Conference of the C.U.P. held in Montreal early this year, which delegated The Varsity to represent the C.U.P. in this request.

The son of a newspaperman, Mr. Purcell has had many years of newspaper experience, beginning his career as a cub reporter on weeklies, joining the Winnipeg branch of the Canadian Press in 1927, covering assignments

Passing The Buck

So the tagger smiles her winningest and tries not to shuffle her tired feet as she flaunts her box of tags under the passing Joe's nose.

"A dime, hey, babe?"

"No, Joe, a dollar. Haven't you heard about $5566?"

"But look here, babe, I can't afford to give them a buck."

"G'wan, Joe, you can't fool me. Every student's got a stray buck."

"Yeah, but mine's got strings attached. I gotta take in a movie with my girl tonight."

Or maybe it's a coke date at Mac's, or the Supper Dance down town, or maybe he just wants to pass an afternoon playing pool; she's heard it all before. But she smiles again and starts the familiar patter.

"Take in a movie, eh, Joe? Eighty cents and a snack afterwards; another fifty. You know women. And then she'll be out of cigarettes and you'll have to buy her some. That's a dollar sixty-six with a package of matches thrown in."

"Well, so what? I can't be a cheapskate, can I?"

"Well, what do you think you're being now?"

"Economic, that's what I'm being. Gotta save before you spend. Besides, this is a real heavy date. I can't break it now."

"But you don't have to break it, Joe. C'mon, pass your buck to the I.S.S. and have your date too."

"I can't afford to, I tell you. Look. You made the evenings damages a dollar sixty-six. Okay. And a buck for the I.S.S. makes two sixty-six. And what do I have left to eat with all day?"

"Don't be silly. You don't need to spend the $1.66."

"So what do you expect my girl and me to do tonight? Sit by the fire and knit?"

"Of course not. Pass your buck now and we'll fix it so you can go out twice."

"Twice? On a buck?"

Aha! Hope at last! Her feet don't feel nearly so tired now. She waves two tickets under his nose and goes into her punch-line.

"Sure you can go out twice on a buck. This 75c tag takes you to the I.S.S. Skit Nite and Dance to-night, and the 25c one takes you to the Auction Sale tomorrow."

"Skit Nite, phooey. What's the Skit Nite got to offer that a good movie hasn't got?"

"Lots and lots. Gals agree, with the U.C. Folies 'Middle Five' chorus of lovelies. Production numbers by U.C., School, Vic and Dents. Music by the School Band and Jim MacDonald's Gentlemen of Jive, not to mention that sultry lady of song, Gwenn Innis. And we all flock over to Hart House for the shindig in the gym."

"Hmmm. Sounds good. But look here. This I.S.S.—it buys books for students all over the world, doesn't it? French, German, Jewish, Greek, and what have you—right?"

"Quite right. Besides providing food, clothing, lab supplies, scholarships, and necessary tuition fees for all internees and prisoners of war everywhere."

"Everywhere—that's just the point. So maybe my buck goes to some Jap, maybe? Or even a German? Not on your life."

The tired look comes back into her face. It looks pretty hopeless to have University students thinking this queer, twisted way. But she carries on.

"Look, Joe, the moral equivalent of war is education. If we don't feed democratic ideas to these Nazis how can we ever expect to make democrats out of them? Maybe lots of them won't absorb it. So what? Isn't the chance worth taking? Would it not be worth a dollar to you to make one Nazi less?"

"By making one democrat more? I get it. Okay, babe. You win. I'll pass my buck to the I.S.S. and go with my girl to the Skit Nite and Auction Sale . . . Tell you what. I'm no cheapskate, see? I'll make it two bucks!"

Well, it worked again. It always works. Varsity students always dig down deep if they once know the facts . . . Here comes another one . . . Golly, her feet are hurting.

Ottawa Calling

By Neil MacDonald

OVER THE FENCE IS OUT

It may now be fairly assumed that N.R.M.A. troops in large numbers are not behind the government policy of sending up to 16,000 of them overseas as reinforcements. Yesterday, the figure of soldiers A.W.O.L. was estimated at up to 700; today—Saturday the 20th—the number has climbed to 2,000 or more.

It is quite probable that the attitude of the soldiers is the result of too many announcements in the past by the government that compulsory service overseas was unnecessary, coupled with an inept introduction of what must have seemed, to many soldiers affected by the order, discrimination in sending 16,000 soldiers overseas out of 65,000 eligible men.

The government was experiencing, in the resentment which it stirred up, the inevitable reaction to its policy of intimidation, carried on over several years, to get the soldiers overseas. Military spokesmen have acknowledged that such a policy was carried out in the past, and I have heard eye-witness accounts of just how, by ostracism and "Joe-jobs," draftees were persuaded to "Go Active."

Is it any wonder that, after years of pressure, and years of negative propaganda, the men affected by the order to send 16,000 N.R.M.A. troops overseas resented it enough to go A.W.O.L.? You cannot build esprit de corps overnight, and you cannot blame a man for distrusting the "kindness" technique introduced by General McNaughton when he has been exposed to something else for such a long time.

Just as important as the absenteeism among the soldiers has been the holding up of the news about it for a month after it happened. Security is the reason—the fact that the enemy must not be allowed to know that the soldiers were being moved east to embarkment centres and that the soldiers were absenting themselves along the way.

However, General McNaughton has been telling Canadians, and the enemy also, that troops were proceeding overseas, and it has been known by hundreds of thousands of Canadians that there was disaffection among the N.R.M.A. troops. Perhaps the real point is that General McNaughton has been creating an impression in all his recent speeches that reinforcements were proceeding overseas in an orderly fashion, when the facts were that thousands of troops were going A.W.O.L.

Both opposition parties have now some powerful ammunition to use against the General. They can say that his limited conscription policy has not worked, and they will probably use their opportunity to the fullest advantage in campaigning against him in Grey North.

It is events and facts such as this that have a habit of deciding the fate of elections, and Grey North is in the state of flux where anything may happen between now and February 5.

ARCADE MUSIC

Toronto Premiere

Massey Hall

Last night, in Massey Hall, Mahler's Song of the Earth was given its Toronto premiere by the Toronto Symphony under Sir Ernest MacMillan, with Eileen Law, contralto, and Joseph Victor Laderoute, tenor.

A capacity audience warmed to the novelty of this cycle of six songs which Mahler describes as "a symphony for tenor and contralto (or baritone) and orchestra," with words taken from old Chinese poems, chosen to express one predominating idea—withdrawal from the world. However, even upon

ELMER ATTENDS VARSITY

Not Enough Trees on St. George Street, Anyway

Once upon a time there was a little dog named Elmer, who lived all alone in a little shack on the outskirts of Toronto.

This doggie led an extraordinary life for he was the only living dog who had the ability to be allowed entrance to the university.

On the first day of school he went up to the Registrar's office for an admission-lecture card and shocked everybody because he had no clothes on. One Whitney Hall girl took pity on him and offered to give him an outfit of clothes. After finding out that his name was Elmer, she immediately despatched him off to 73 St. George.

The residents at 73 were mildly surprised, but after a while they realized that this was a civilized world and if Elmer wanted to get a college education they would help him to get it.

Due to the complaints of several itchy students, Elmer promised that he would get rid of his fleas before he used the bathtub again. Now Elmer was very happy for wasn't he going to school with all these nice people?

But as a man is a man, so a dog is a dog, and he soon began to lead a dog's life for everybody was taking advantage of him.

It wasn't so bad when he was asked to chase stray cats away, or to take out a blind date for a student who had just found out what the blind date looked like, but when the fellows had him giving wolf calls for them on the campus, then he thought that that was too much.

"I won't stand for it," said Elmer, and the students laughed at him. He raged and he fumed, but to no avail.

Then he decided on a plan. "I will get all my friends from their dog-houses and they will help me in my time of need." He began tutoring his dog-friends until they also had the qualifications to enter the university, and then they descended on the campus.

Everybody said that the campus was going to the dogs but Elmer just leered for everything was working out just like he expected it would.

Soon the dogs were dating up every pretty girl in U.C., Whitney, Vic, Hutton House, and every place where there were pretty co-eds; and the boys of 73 didn't have a chance.

You're my kind... Have a Coca-Cola

... or allies enjoy a friendly pause

Friendliness enters the picture at the words Have a Coke. It's a happy custom, everywhere, for people to meet together over frosty bottles of ice-cold Coca-Cola. In many lands around the globe, Coca-Cola stands for the pause that refreshes — has become an everyday high-sign of friendliness among people of good will.

It's natural for popular names to acquire friendly abbreviations. That's why you hear Coca-Cola called Coke.

MILE OF PENNIES

Colored serpent paper will wind across the entire campus, past your college to mark the mile that is to be covered with pennies. Each college is responsible for filling its stretch of colored serpent paper and sectional competition has been encouraged for the highest amount of blue patches sold to any faculty or college. When you wear a blue patch, "Pennies for Patches", your penny and silver will help fill your college's quota and make your faculty the outstanding donor. Your silver will not only be appreciated but will help fill your college's goal that much faster. Dr. Cody will officially close the Mile of Pennies by inspecting each college's donations, and in case they are incomplete, he will personally complete the mile.

Speaking OF SPORT

BASEBALL

... and play for the Spalding Cup, now in the hands of U.C., is well under way. The season started off a couple of weeks back with 46 teams, divided into fourteen groups. The engineers dominated the entry field, with twenty teams, followed by Meds with nine, U.C. and Dents with three each, Vic and St. Mike's with two each, and Trinity, Knox, Emmanuel, Wycliffe, Forestry, P.H.E., and Pharmacy with one apiece.

With records complete up until last Thursday, in the top group we find Senior School, U.C. I, Senior Meds, and Vic I U.C. seems to be out to retain the baseball mug, for in three encounters on the diamond, have come up with two wins and a tie. Junior School and Dents A present serious rivalry in Group Two, with two wins each, over Vic II and Jr. Meds. S.P.S. III are away ahead in the third group with three wins in three games, and Forestry tops the fourth and last of the four team groups with two wins in two games.

The way things look now, the 1945 baseball play-offs will feature a similar line-up to last year's. Any of the two S.P.S. teams, Senior Meds, U.C. I, and Dents A may be headed for the favored play-off spots, but there are always the underdogs from the minor groupings who often provide upsets, in the early rounds of the play-offs.

AND DEFAULTS

There were 46 teams starting the season, but there are now only 45. No group is nearly finished its schedule, and the forced withdrawal of any team, from any group, in any of our intramural sports, because they used up their quota of defaults, as the Meds' freshman team did, is truly lamentable. In the top several groups, all scheduled games have been played, or else proper arrangements were made to have scheduled games postponed, if legitimate reasons were proffered.

And among the teams in the lower part of the grouping, that is, in groups seven to fourteen, out of eleven games which have been slated so far, no less than five included defaults. Four resulted in a credited win to the non-defaulting team, but in the fifth, both teams defaulted.

Group ten wins the booby-prize, as far as defaulting is concerned. It only had three teams—I Civil, II Chemical, and I Meds, and so far none of them has had to play a game. The Meds team defaulted out in two straight scheduled matches, sharing, in one of them, the double default with the Civils.

Really, fellows, there's no excuse for defaulting, even once, when you may have a game postponed, if you take action well enough in advance, and you'll save your faculties a lot of points and prestige if you manage your sports that way—and defaulting right out is another matter still.

was our reaction to the score run up by Vic in their game against U.C. yesterday at noon. We are wondering what the Royal College girls thought when they saw the Vic I aggregation pop those seven goals in their net with the neat precision characteristic of the Vic girls each year. And to have to watch all but one shot on the Vic goal be stopped must have been extremely painful. We echo—"Ouch!!"

CAUGHT AT LAST

By Helen Halliday! The enthusiastic and efficient Head of Volleyball has given us a schedule for this week, to be printed herein, or so we understand. This is not going to be a practice constantly because it takes up too much of this space, rationed as it is, but we will print it here today. After this it will appear in the Athletic Association Bulletin Board, as does the hockey weekly schedule.

So, if there are schedules, they will have to be left in the S.A.C. office, within the sacrosanct precincts of Hart House.

Anyway, here it is. Monday, the 29th—4:30 at L.M. gym, P.H.E. A vs. U.C.; 5:30, P.H.E. B vs. Pharmacy. Tuesday—4:30, Vic vs. Meds; 5:30, Dent. Nurses vs. P.H.E. B. Wednesday—4:30, Trinity (hereinafter known as St. Hilda's) vs. O.T.; 5:30, Pharmacy vs. P.H.E. A. Thursday, Feb. 1—4:30, St. Hilda's vs. Vic; 5:30, U.C. vs. Dent. Nurses. Friday—4:30, St. Hilda's A vs. St. Hilda's B; 5:30, Meds vs. O.T.

And that, kiddies, is your bedtime story for the week. There is nothing we hate doing more than typing those lists of figures; we keep making mistakes. A martyr to volleyball!

THERE IS ONE THING . . .

about which we must caution you who will take the above bedtime story seriously—you MUST have a medical before you play even the first game. You may make an appointment at 44 Hoskin anytime.

TONIGHT . . .

Arranged so that the St. Mike coiffures aforementioned would be fully recovered by Friday, the night of the St. Mike's dance (plug), the Double Blue gals are holding their swimming prelin. It should be pretty good and we hope that lots of the girls will be there to try out for the St. Mike's swimming team. Rosemarie Cunningham is going to write the "Woman" tonight for tomorrow's issue. In case anyone has forgotten—but we don't know how they really could—she's the girl who played such a sterling game on the Double Blue basketball team, and who last year made the Varsity All Stars. And, speaking of a Varsity Star Team, isn't it about time we had another, say, for an Athletic Night?

BADMINTON . . .

is free, we were told to tell you. It can be played by anyone possessing a bird, a racquet, and the energy to wend her way up to St. Paul's Church on certain designated evenings from 7 p.m. until 9:30. The evenings are, we think, Monday and Wednesday. On Saturday the invitation is from 2:30 until 5:30 p.m. So we done our duty; we tote ya!

Medsman Establishes New Record In Indoor Novice Half-Mile Event

VISITORS' DAY AT HART HOUSE

Next Sunday, January 28, will be Visitors' Day at Hart House, when members may introduce their friends, including ladies, to the House between 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. The House will be open for inspection. Members will be asked to show their membership cards at the door. The annual exhibition of photographs arranged by the Camera Committee will be on view in the art gallery.

Three more events were run off in the indoor interfaculty track meet this week, the 50 yard dash, the novice half-mile, and the senior half-mile, with record or near record number of entrants in each event.

129 men entered the 50-yard dash, which field was led by Hildechi of Vic, with a time of 5.6 seconds. The running was exceptionally keen in this race, Hildechi being followed by Lewis of Meds, Matthews of U.C., Kingdon of Vic, Hart of St. Mike's, and Booth of School, all within a very narrow time range.

Maths & Physics Club Hears Dr. L. Gilchrist

At the M. & P. Society meeting held yesterday afternoon Dr. Gilchrist, honorary president of the Society, traced the development of the application of physics and mathematics to industrial problems.

In the days of J. J. Thomson, who found the masses of the negative and positive charges generated from hydrogen, students of the M. & P. course rarely found jobs in industry upon graduation. However, he said, the development of the radio valve, the photoelectric cell, television, and the use of high-speed electrons, discoveries, formerly of purely academic interest, are now used in utilitarian ways.

Dr. Gilchrist, who has been working on the application of physics to geology, stressed the need for men who can apply pure mathematics and physics to industrial uses. This need is shown by the present demand for graduates of the M. & P. course, and of the Engineering Physics course in S.P.S.

repeated hearing, this attempt at a marriage of words and music tends to remain an incomprehensible mélange, failing to leave a clear unified impression or to give a deep musical experience. Admittedly there is a wealth of musical ideas, but they are not all of equal significance. The work suffers from verbosity; and the song parts appeared too difficult to allow freedom of expression.

The work opens with a pungent tenor solo which demanded much from Mr. Laderoute. Alternate songs are given to the contralto, and Miss Law's lyric and dramatic powers were tested to the utmost in the poignant song Autumn Loneliness, in the bird-notes and contrasting themes of Beauty, and finally in the eccentric intervals of the effective Farewell. Mr. Laderoute's singing, fusing with the sympathetic orchestral backdrop, caught all the frivolity of the third song, Youth, and imbued it with a true carnival spirit.

Wagner's Prelude to Lohengrin, Prelude and Love-death from Tristan and Isolde, and The Ride of the Valkyries, comprised the first half of the program and combined well with Mahler work in which one catches many Wagnerian echoes. From the first bars of Lohengrin, with its broad vibrant lines, its fine horn parts, and sublime orchestration, to the last splash of fire-notes in the Valkyries, with its difficult trombone passages, the orchestra played as a splendid unified whole.

Then 73 sent a peace offering and asked for a truce, for they could stand it no longer. Elmer finally decided to call off his canine wolves if the fellows would treat him with proper respect.

They all agreed to this and everything turned out all right again, which all goes to show that even if a dog has his worries, every tree has a silver lining.

TIGGER

Extension Of Engineering Courses Plan For Post War Period---Young

Although a five-year Engineering course is inevitable, it will not come until the rehabilitation period after the war has passed, Dean C. R. Young of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering told The Varsity yesterday. Amplifying the speech he gave on Saturday, Dean Young said that although the need was steadily growing for a longer course to allow for a better grounding in essential subjects and a better coverage of the liberal subjects in S.P.S., the demand could be ignored for a few years yet.

"It would be impracticable to introduce a five-year course leading to a first degree during the war or until service men have graduated. It would be unfair, when these men have missed some years of their educational lives, and are in a hurry to graduate," said Dean Young.

"There is also the problem of the general attitude of all the Engineering colleges in Canada. Although the need is generally felt in all colleges, some might not increase their degree courses as soon and in the interval we might lose students. Conferences are necessary between the principals of the several Engineering colleges, at which all implications must be considered. In general, however, every engineer feels that to keep the standard high such a move is necessary."

There would be a better grounding offered in mathematics and in the basic sciences than is possible in four years, he said, in order to treat the applied work satisfactorily. The business and administrative duties of engineering graduates must be stressed also, continued Dean Young. A picked group of men with intelligence and personality should be taught administration with a view to business life, he stated.

There is even now a need for a small group of men to pursue a more rigorous and lengthy course stressing the basic fundamentals, so that they might undertake creative work. Research is necessary as well as production, he pointed out.

With the great advances being made in science and applied sciences it necessarily takes longer to train a competent engineer than it did in the past.

The pressure brought to bear by these conditions have forced us all to re-examine our positions in the light of the trend for increased length of engineering courses," Dean Young said.

"What has happened to Dentistry and Medicine is happening to us. But in any case all the students here now will have graduated before such a move is made."

Debaters Defeat Motion 'Tolerance to Germany'

"Vancouver—(CUP)—"That a Tolerant Attitude be Adopted Toward Germany" was the resolution in an Inter-Provincial Debating meet held last Friday between the Universities of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia.

Debating in Vancouver, Ubysses's Don Holmes and Jim Clement, upholding the affirmative, were defeated two to one by the team of Joseph Shoeter and Hugh Harries from the University of Alberta.

The same topic was debated at Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Edmonton, but CUP flashes have not yet come in on their results.

This was the first time in two years that the McGoun Debates have taken place, in competition for the McGoun Trophy.

In two debates held on the Toronto campus last fall, with similar resolutions at the Newman Club Debating Society and at the U.C. Parliament, the affirmative side won in both cases.

This column seems to be the centre of strange happenings—and peculiar things are always taking place in the lives of Physios. The Mecca of "Hithers" is Christie Street hospital, where almost anything can, and does, happen. Par example, last week one of the boys acquired a shiny new cast which was unfortunately a tight squeeze, and he was airing his views of the war, hospitals, doctors, et al. in no uncertain terms. So the man in the next bed turned to the blushing Physio and said, apologetically, "He speaks profanity well, doesn't he?"

One patient volunteered to donate his can of talcum powder to a Physio's massage work. "Oh, but don't you use it?" she inquired sweetly. "Oh, no," came the equally sweet reply. "Don't you know that powder dries you up?—and I wanta stay fresh!"

Still another of the chaps made his Physio blush when he remarked to her: "Y'know, I really like girls that steal and lie and swear." Startled, she gasped, "You do?" "Yes'm," he drawled, "I like girls who steal into your arms and lie there and swear that they love you."

Well, fellows, there are some examples of the approach technique of the boys at Christie. Here's one that was used by one of our own Skulemen (bless their black hearts) when one of our brave company refused to be kissed good-night. In true Skule fashion, the man was undaunted, for he came back with: "Well, in view of the fact that exams are so close, can't I even spit on you for luck?"

The end of a lovely romance. . .

Not so long ago the girls had their At-Home, and one of them wrote to her dear, departed serviceman asking him if he couldn't please arrange with his C.O. to have the important night off. Pas de réponse for several days, and then came a letter from which we quote: "Thank you for the invitation to your class dance. I'd really like to come, but, you see, I'm married now and I don't think my wife will let me."

One of our lecturers was holding forth on alopecia (falling hair, to you!) and to illustrate the fact that worrying can cause this sad, bald state she told how prone her sister was to said condition. The emphasis of the story came at the end—"We had a terrible time with her when she was running two boy-friends!"

And this we borrowed from a professor at Skule by one of his students. Seems the professor was asked about his family, and he mournfully replied that his children numbered "two living and one in Arts."

We'll end with the story of the short-lived bliss of a man who was made very happy when his lady friend remarked that she thought he was a combination of Johnny ("Tarzan") Weismuller and Frank Sinatra. But as we earlier said, his bliss was short-lived for she completed her thought thus: "You have Weismuller's voice and Sinatra's physique!"

President Cody Visits Queen's Evening Course In Marketing

Kingston—(CUP)—Dr. H. J. Cody spoke to the students of Queen's University in Grant Hall last week as a guest of the Alma Mater Society.

He challenged the students to show what they can do to promote the welfare of their university, their community, their native land, and of the entire world.

He illustrated his point by relating the story of the life of the late chancellor of the University of Toronto, Sir William Mulock.

Dr. Cody was introduced by Irvin Collins, vice-president of the A.M.S., and a vote of thanks was tendered by Frank Lee, president of the Engineering Society.

Museum Attendance Is Highest in History

The highest attendance figure in the history of the Royal Ontario Museum, representing an average of over 1,000 visitors for each day the building was open, is announced in the 1944 report. It is predicted that by March of this year attendance at the Museum, which was opened in March, 1914, will pass the 5,000,000 mark.

To introduce the Museum to distant parts of Ontario, Miss R. M. Home, superintendent of the Public Instruction Department, continued a series of trips begun in 1942. The Museum hopes to develop this service after the war to include a specially fitted railroad coach.

Athletic Night Series Commences Saturday; Charities Will Benefit

Warren Stevens' Brainchild of 1938 is Now Full-fledged Campus Feature: Ticket Sales Limited

U.C. KNOX P.H.E.

A bloodless invasion is expected to occur on Saturday night when pleasure-seekers will swamp Hart House for the first Athletic Night of the season. The series was inaugurated in 1938 by Athletic Director Warren Stevens in order to boost attendance at week-end sports events. Attendance at first was very disappointing, and the sports columnist of The Varsity pleaded for more student support:

"This Saturday night, with activities going on simultaneously at several places, there shouldn't be any difficulty in finding a place to observe with comfort. Usually the crowd that turns up does not merit the price of an orchestra, but now, with Lorne Williamson's music provided for dancing after the games, we have wagered that there will be at least 500 in attendance."

The first Athletic Night program included intramural swimming and gymnastic championships, and fencing and wrestling matches, with representatives from Wayne and St. Lawrence Universities.

The big addition to Athletic Nights in 1939 was a P.A. system by which records were broadcast to the gyms. Dancing had become a very important part of the program by 1940, and the sports-ed of that year assured his readers: "In answer to the thousands of inquiries we have received, there will be dancing after the basketball game." The entrance fee of twenty-five cents brought in quite a tidy sum for war charities, and gave the students a chance to spend an inexpensive Saturday night.

The Saturday Nights of 1944 were a far cry from the first ones, with entertainment ranging from Varsity-Navy basketball and swim meets to table tennis and Chinese checkers. Dancing, both square and round, to the strains of a "juke box," drew in the crowds, with the result that over $1200 was contributed to war and home charities.

This year's series begins on Saturday, hosted by U.C., P.H.E., and Knox. The main event of the evening will feature a basketball tussle between a Varsity squad and a team from Uplands R.C.A.F. at Ottawa.

Let's Go Places

The producers of "The Phantom of the Opera," enthused by the picture's success, have followed up with another technicolor extravaganza of MIDTOWN song and beauty (Susanna Foster), spine-chilling horror (Boris Karloff), suspense and true love (Turhan Bey). Suffering not in the least from a slight lack of story, "The Climax" will delight any movie-goer who does not expect to see an Academy Award winner every time he steps into a theatre.

The high spot of the picture is the singing of Susanna Foster, whose beautiful voice is enhanced immeasurably by her technicolor loveliness. The mad hypnotist, Dr. Karloff, brought forth many grey hairs in the audience as he trapped the young songbird in his fiendish meshes. Bey is a convincing actor until he begins to make love.

Request Books For Services

At the first Athletic Night of the year to be held at Hart House this Saturday evening, a drive for magazines, books, and decks of playing cards for the armed forces will be held. Last year, when this collection was first attempted in connection with the Athletic Nights, it took two nights to catch on. This year, with the full support of the student body, the drive should start at a high level.

Seven or eight thousand magazines, two hundred books, and over one hundred decks of playing cards were collected last year. These were distributed between the I.O.D.E. and the Navy League; both organizations were very appreciative of the effort.

"While magazines do not form part of the admission fee, every student is expected to contribute something to this," said Mr. McCutcheon, secretary of the University Athletic Association. "As an added incentive," he added, "girls from the chorus of the U.C. Folies will collect the magazines at the door."

"We hope that not the cast-off books will be offered but rather good books that men in the services will want to read and will appreciate," he continued. "We must keep in mind the Navy League slogan: 'Not your cellar's best but your best sellers.'"

Open House Held by S.C.M.

At the third S.C.M. Open House Party at Alumni Hall, Victoria College last night a panel discussion was held of the last Missionary conference.

Under the direction of Mac Ramsome, the secretary of the National Missionary Society, four students disclosed the main points of the meeting.

"There is a job for each of us to do. We must help others at once because never before was suffering so great and so acute, and the need so large," said Alan Milne. "We must grasp our opportunity now while the world is looking towards the church for relief."

Service Selection Boards

Service Technical Personnel Selection Boards and representatives of the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel will visit the University and will hold their meetings in the Music Room, Hart House, on January 29, 30 and 31.

All final year Science and Engineering students are required to appear before these Boards and also to attend a preliminary meeting in the Debates Room, Hart House, at 1640 hrs. (4.40 p.m.) on Thursday, January 25. At this meeting full instructions will be given and lists of appointments issued.

All third year Science and Engineering students in the U.N.T.D. and C.O.T.C. who wish to be considered respectively for active service summer training with the Navy, or for summer training in the R.C.E., R.C. Sigs., or R.C.E.M.E., will also attend this meeting and receive their appointments.

Science and Engineering students graduating in 1945 who are not applying for Technical appointments or who may be medically unfit for such appointments, will be addressed on the subject of civilian employment by a representative of the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel on Wednesday, January 31, at 1640 hrs. (4.40 p.m.) in the Debates Room, Hart House.

Social Workers' Draft Outlined By Directress

Miss Dorothy King, chairlady, and directress of the Montreal School of Social Work, outlined a few of the proposals that had been agreed upon at the conference of Social Workers held yesterday.

"In order to meet the problem of an inadequate supply of trained social workers," stated Miss King, "a central committee is going to be formed. This committee will launch an educational campaign that will simultaneously explain to the public where and why social workers are needed, and will greatly facilitate recruiting of new workers."

"The great trouble lies in the fact that too few people know what it is that social workers do, and too few so-called 'social workers' ever take the time to become fully trained," Miss King cited examples where group leaders at such recreational organizations as the Y.W.C.A. have taken the jobs purely out of interest. "The interest in group work that they possess goes to waste if they have not had sufficient training to keep abreast of innovations."

The proposed central committee, she stated, would keep the schools of social work across the country well informed regarding research advances and teaching techniques, and on the whole would render more efficient the entire system.

Dr. Cassidy of the Toronto School of Social Work stated, too, that not only would lectures be held to stimulate student interest in his field, but also films would be circulated. In this way the various schools hope to get adequate enrolment to meet a need for social workers.

Tagging, Skit Nite and Dance to be Held Today to Swell I.S.S. Total; Auction Odds-ments Pouring In

TAGS ARE TICKETS

The latest Toronto snowstorm yesterday forced International Student Service change-collectors to change plans and duck into college rotundas, but the weather failed to hinder the indoor version of the Mile of Pennies from netting about $250.

Blue patches were worn by students and professors alike on the opening of the giant three-day drive as more than 90 change-collectors from the School of Health and Physical Education turned out en masse to receive contributions ranging in value from a brass collar button and individual pennies to amounts as high as $200.

Busiest lady was Miss Vee Gilchrist, I.S.S. tagging organizer, II P.H.E., who was responsible for reorganizing the Mile of Pennies into an indoor affair.

This morning, students will be met with new crews of co-eds, recruited from all colleges, who will sell blue and red tags. Blue tags, selling at 75 cents will provide admission to Skit Nite at Convocation Hall tonight at 8 p.m. and to the dance following the skits in Hart House gym. Red tags, at 25 cents, will admit you to the Auction Sale at 1 p.m. Friday afternoon at Convocation Hall.

Featured at the Skit Nite tonight, according to the I.S.S. officials, will be burlesque skits, selected from former student shows staged by Dents, Meds, Vic, School, and U.C. casts. Music will be provided by the School Band, led by Whitey Belshaw and his Anthropoloid Antics; songstresses Gwen Innis and Shirley Schipper; the Folies' "Middle Five," short and tall choruses; School King Cole Room, Trinity Conversat and Vic Bob Quartets.

Most striking example of the cosmopolitan breadth of the International organization occurred when collectors at the School of Practical and Applied Science were pleasantly surprised to receive a dollar apiece from two professors from Laval University, Quebec, who were visiting the campus for the day.

From University College information came from collectors Sue Gray, Marg Fellow, Ivy Baxter and Kay MacMillan proving that professors are as deficient

Dr. Russell A. He will speak this Friday evening at Knox Presbyterian Church, Harbord and Spadina, on the topic "Missionary Motive and Method: the Use and Abuse of Social Reconstruction."

Saturday afternoon, at 5:30 p.m., Dr. Graham will again speak at a special supper meeting of the conference, when his subject will be: "The Dynamic of the Cross in Missionary Service." He maintains that we must learn the meaning of total war.

Ex-Service Men

The Board of Governors of the University has approved of the following recommendations submitted by the Athletic Directorate:

"That, in view of the fact that many of these men are so far behind in their studies and require extra time if they are to complete the academic year satisfactorily, they be exempted from Physical Training for the session 1944-1945."

"That, at the end of the present session the whole situation will be reviewed again and further consideration given to these men for the subsequent years of their courses."

This exemption will be extended automatically and it will not be necessary for any ex-service men to petition for exemption.

The Senate of the University is prepared to extend the same exemption to women who have enrolled in the University following their discharge from active service.

Male Sanctum Yields To Chintz And That Feminine Touch

A co-educational Common Room, the official opening of which is to take place in the near future, is now being prepared in University College.

University College's first co-ed Common Room was suggested last year as a means of developing solidarity of college spirit. The logical place for it was the Junior Common Room which had previously been used by men only. The Junior Common Room was originally the dining hall of the men's residence at U.C., and was the men's meeting place and the centre of all their functions. After the building of "73" it still remained the headquarters of the men's executive.

Not until four years ago were women allowed inside, and at this time they were allowed to take part in parliamentary debates. Gradually, with Folies rehearsals, contests and meetings, the old inner sanctum was invaded by women. Last year an official vote was taken amongst the male students which proved to be in favor of turning the Common Room into a co-ed meeting place. A proposition was set forth to have this centre and plans were laid to make the Common Room attractive to both men and women students. The literature was enlarged to include magazines such as "Glamour," "Charm," "Good Housekeeping," etc.

The inner offices are all newly decorated, the main feature being green chintz curtains. The Common Room contains a newly upholstered Chesterfield suite and a radio. The furnishings are not quite complete and will be added to over a number of years. The Common Room proper, with the aid of Colonel A. D. LePan, will be redecorated in the summer and new radiators will be installed.

Ben Ornstein, literary director of U.C., stated: "I hope that the girls will make it their hang-out as well as the men, to add a bit of color and make it the centre of co-educational life in U.C.," adding, "I think it will be more darn fun!"

Rose Rabkin, president of the Women's Undergraduate Association, stated that it was wonderful that the women's executive office now has a permanent place in the Junior Common Room, never having had one before. She, in conjunction with other W.U.A. representatives, has provided most of the furnishings, having been given the office on that condition. She hopes that in the future, when the Common Room will be in popular use by men and women of University College, there will always be present a representative of the W.U.A. to provide information for the undergraduates on all phases of university life.

Pessimism

A pessimistic outlook seems to have permeated public opinion. Perhaps it is the fact that people are weary after five long years of war; perhaps it is that the original impetus and the feverish excitement have abated and been superseded by a static resignation. Whatever it is, it does not presage a very hopeful attitude for the way in which we shall attack post-war reconstruction.

We seem to take for granted the fact that the Russians are only 135 miles from Berlin or that the Yanks are in the Philippines once more. Setbacks are regarded almost as annoyances. The war is so far away from us that we sometimes forget how very vital each day is to the future, and how tremendous will be the consequences. But the widespread attitude as to what the fate of the world will be after victory is achieved is almost ominous.

Recently, the Gallup Poll conducted a survey among young people in the 15-24 year age group, with the query as to whether they believed that this will be the last war or whether they believed that there would be another one within 25 years. Almost fifty per cent accepted the latter pessimistic view.

Perhaps the reason for this is our mistaken outlook. One often hears, somewhat confidently asserted, "There will always be wars; it is human nature." This is a very pessimistic and almost fatal view. Why must there always be war? It is almost incredible to think that the world at large is going to sit back and witness thousands of young men being killed, countries devastated, and all the energies of the nations being driven primarily into the production of instruments of slaughter. It cannot be that we have reached such a pessimistic state that we are not willing to fight tooth and nail after victory is achieved to see to it that the world is never again plunged into such an orgy of chaos. Modern war is becoming more and more deadly. The inevitable result will be that we shall finally degenerate into a state of permanent warfare. Such a future may be fitting for savages, but not for supposedly civilized human beings.

The theory is constantly being put forward that we are in this war because we lulled ourselves into a lethargic state for 20 years prior to it. Are we willing to allow the same thing to happen again? Has the present struggle not been sufficient as an object-lesson? It is a truism that the energies of the nation are more keenly aroused during war than in peacetime. This means that when we are faced with post-war problems we shall have to give ourselves some extra stimulant in order to attack adequately the enormous difficulties that will confront us. Milton warned Cromwell that "... the cares and dangers of peace are exertions compared with which the labour of war is mere pastime." Are we going to give up before we ever set to work? The decision is up to us.

A Five-Year Plan

In a recent address to the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario, Dean C. R. Young of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering expressed the inevitability of the adoption of a five-year course in engineering at Canadian universities. He further stated, however, that this would not come about until after the period of rehabilitation after the war had passed.

The reasons underlying this plan for the extension of post-war engineering are the increasing importance of liberal and cultural as well as administrative and economic studies to the engineer of today, and the great advances being made in the pure sciences and in applied science. Dean Young made a comparison of the situation which now faces engineering educators to the situation that caused the extension of the university courses in medicine and dentistry.

A five-year course in engineering is the inevitable result of the gradual rise in the standard of engineering schools and their development from mere technical schools into highly-respected professional schools. In the past, engineering has always been considered by the public at large on a somewhat lower plane than the other professions, and many graduates in applied science, while they understood the intricacies of complex machines and were able to design most magnificent structures, were rarely regarded as highly educated men in the broad sense of the term.

And indeed this recognition and acceptance was not sought by a great many of the graduates, who regarded the engineering school merely as an instrument of increasing their earning power in life. This attitude has given rise to a widely-accepted stereotype of a Skuleman which is so prevalent on this campus.

When the five-year course finally becomes a reality there will be manifold objections from many quarters. Some will object that higher education is being placed still further out of the reach of the broad mass of the population. Others will object that while they wish to become engineers in the narrow sense of the word, they consider the time spent in the study of liberal and cultural subjects wasted. This latter objection is being heard even now as a result of the integration of a few of the subjects into the present curriculum.

In spite of these objections, the trend is in the right direction. Even without additional cultural subjects, it is becoming increasingly difficult to train engineers adequately; to accommodate recent advances in the various fields in the present courses, the time spent on the basic fundamentals of physics and mathematics has had to be curtailed. It is to be hoped that the time is not too far distant when the extension plan as outlined by Dean Young will become a reality.

"We Make You Think"

Pool cues broken and the business halves absconded with; the Great Hall cash register stolen with Miss Featherbed's knitting; the chapter on buzz-bombs torn bodily from the Warden's memoirs; the very minute-hand of the Tower clock wrenched from its pivots by night. It was natural that the harassed Warden should turn to McGeech.

McGeech! Dr. Aloisius P. Q. R. McGeech, Head of the Department of Sanskrit and Window-washing, Terror of the Underworld! For a year no foot had disturbed the mounting dust in his recondite office deep in the vaulted U.C. basement, a location so obscure that visiting janitors dropped behind them a trail of cigarette butts to follow on their groping return to the outer air.

No foot had disturbed that dust since the death of McGeech; for McGeech was dead, buried deep in the ruins of a collapsed tunnel beneath the Biology Building; in a common grave with his arch-enemy, the King-Spy, "Q."

The lightning brain of Comptroller Gilhooley surveyed all these facts in a flash. "But, Warden," he protested, "you can't call in McGeech... he's dead!"

"Fiddle, Gilhooley!" chirped the Warden affectionately, throwing an inkstand in his collaborator's face. "You are the very type of the sceptical Schoolman. My philosophy transcends the physical. The death of McGeech poses (you follow me, my dear Gilhooley?)—poses, I am saying, no difficulty at all. I have arranged for a seance."

"A seance?" breathed the startled Comptroller.

"A seance," asserted the last of the Likkerbreths. "A space has been cleared in the Barber Shop, the blood of nine rabbits loams on the floor, a white cock's entrails festoon the hair-dryer, and the janitor (I overlook no detail, Gilhooley)—the janitor has seen to it that the very lights burn blue. And if I mistake not, that is the Medium now."

"My thingummy!" gasped a hairy, unshaven man bursting in the door. "They have stolen my thingummy. It is impossible to proceed without a thingummy!"

"Fish tust!" said the unruined Warden, recognizing his Medium. "I have just been explaining to Mr. Gilhooley that all things are possible. Let us proceed to the Barber Shop."

"But, Mr. Likkerbreth," wheedled the agonized sage, "my thingummy is essential. It is some two feet long, four wide, an eighth of an inch thick, and is made

AUSPICES OF I.S.S.

Meds Scupper Victoria Break Winning Streak

Meds II took over top place in Group II hockey by defeating Vic 3-1 at the Arena yesterday. The loss was Vic's first of the season. The artsmen had a wide edge in the play and in the number of shots on the goal, but Loughed, Meds' goalie, kept getting in the way of the puck. In fact, most of the credit for the victory goes to the doctors' net-minder whose work bordered on the sensational at times. Vic gave him plenty of work to do, and he thrived on it. On the other hand, Morris in the Vic nets had little to do and this lack of practice showed up when he allowed two soft long shots to drift by him late in the game.

Wheeler of Vic started the scoring at the seven-minute mark when he banged home a pass from Hamilton. Later in the same period, Paul broke away for Meds and went in on Morris by himself to tie it up. The second period was scoreless until the fifteen-minute mark, when Pearson let one go from outside the Vic defence for Meds' second goal. Hill scored their third and the final counter with another long shot about thirty seconds later. Besides Loughed, Pearson and Paul played well for the Meds. The whole Vic team played sound hockey, with O'Malley a standout. Hamilton of Vic was the bad man of the day with two trips to the sin bin.

What's on 'n Where Department

To start with, those who like negro singers, especially the lush voice of Dorothy Maynor, can hear her at Eaton Auditorium tonight or Saturday night. For those who prefer orchestra concerts, especially Pops, the Toronto Symphony Orchestra is performing a long list of favorites tomorrow (Friday) night, including Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue. This concert is of particular interest (or should be) to students because it is being sponsored by the I.S.S. Committee of this University. An easy way to contribute your money.

Blithe Spirit, Noel Coward's latest and funniest comedy, is being held over at the Royal Alexandra for another week. Don't miss it!

The Art Gallery is showing some very worthwhile work at present—The Story of Painting in Canada.

Getting closer to home, the fortnightly Organ Recitals are being switched from Mondays to Tuesdays at 4:30, commencing on Jan. 30 with Eric Rollinson, Mus.Bae, F.R.C.O., continuing Feb. 13 with John J. Weatherhead, F.R.C.O., Feb. 27 with George Courts, concluding March 13 with Healey Willan.

And of course there is always the Record Club—on Monday to Friday in the U.C. Women's Common Room. Come and join the fun.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasius

WE'VE GOT IT—THEY NEED IT . . .

*The world stands on one either side
No wider than the heart is wide.*

The International Student Service campaign launched yesterday and continuing through today and tomorrow deserves more than your fullest support. At the risk of monotonous repetition, we suggest that any charitable organization which supports students in some seventeen countries on four continents deserves more than the odd passing comment.

The funds for this student relief are raised primarily by students. Last winter well over $15,000 were raised from the comparatively small number of universities in this country. Since that time the need has risen rather than diminished. Other camps are simply soliciting donations. Here while passing the buck, you receive something for it. Its quite an unusual procedure to say the least. So give a buck, come out to Skit Nite, "Come Single, Go Home Double", come out to the auction tomorrow and go home with the satisfied feeling that somewhere in this war-torn world a fellow student will be on the receiving end. Let your imagination wander and change places with a Chinese student. Your dollar will provide him with soya bean milk for a month. Think it over!

BASKETBALL NOTES . . .

Seven-thirty tonight will find Mac McCutcheon's basketball Blues in action for the second time this semester, when they hook up with Number 4 Release Centre. This R.C.A.F. station performed on the Hart House floor a year ago under the Manning Depot label and bowed to the locals by a decisive score.

The present edition of the airman will be led by Gord Wallace, who starred for Varsity two seasons back. A rumor from a very reliable source states that Stu Scott will oppose his mates of last year. Apparently Stu is on leave from the Navy and will be given a game. Quite a game, in fact. The Blues are out to make it two straight, and why not?

A week tomorrow places Wayne University on the schedule of the Blues. On their way here, Wayne will stop over in London for a tune-up tilt with the Mustangs of the University of Western Ontario. That's next Thursday.

More puzzling is the fact that the Mustangs are due for a return game at Detroit on the seventeenth. This is very difficult to believe, as we were always under the impression that the no-travelling rule was still in effect for all universities that were formerly members of the Intercollegiate Big Four. Just how Western expects to get from London to Detroit without travelling is mystifying. Perhaps they stretch their route marches a bit. Or maybe Yehudi's magic carpet is put to practical use?

Whatever Western's secret is, it is certainly a pleasant one. And just how long it has been going on we'd rather not say. Envious would hardly describe our feelings.

Oh, well, there's still that "A" Night tomorrow isn't there?

TAKE IT OR LEAVE IT . . .

It is with much fear and trepidation that I begin this "Woman." The reasons are that it is my first attempt, and the activity which I am trying to promote is a sleepy issue. This issue is a Varsity All-Star team for girls. There are so many pros and cons to it. But if only everyone interested would help overcome the cons, either by "helpful" suggestions or actions, surely we can get one. It means a great deal to girls' sports as well as to the girls themselves. If you will remember, last year's Varsity All-Star was coached, selected and practised by Helen Guernsey in a space of not more than two weeks. Varsity played the Wrens from Ottawa at an Athletic Night, and came out on top.

The first requisite is an invitation to play from one of the hosts of the Athletic Nights. Are men so hard to get that some sweet thing can't get this from them?

But, according to the basketball head, the real thing that we lack is a coach—one who has an idea of the girls, and how they play. You must admit that it would be hard for a coach to meet for the first time a group of about thirty-five girls and cut that group down to a chosen eight or nine. Three girls chosen by the basketball representative could be sent from each college or faculty. The number of practices would necessarily be few, but any girl interested enough in basketball to want to make the team has had enough interest in other sports to keep herself in fit condition. (It's exercise enough trying to get to and from lectures in the city conveyances.) Also, much strife would be avoided if everyone concerned would accept the decision of the coach as to who the nine should be, without comment. Guernsey got her nine last year and although she did have the advantage of being around, it can be done again.

After we get a team, we have to worry about whom to play. Colleges don't want to send out teams that they know are definitely inferior to their pre-war standards. In addition, travelling facilities are not greatly improved. As a matter of fact, due to the much publicized and deplored C.I.A.U. ruling banning such travelling, it can't be considered. There are still, however, servicewomen's teams. Why can't we play one of them? Judging from some of the games played during the basketball schedule, Varsity should lose none of its reputation.

In a final plea, I urge all you interested, and all you not as yet interested, to get into this thing and help it. All that is required is some thinking on the part of the organizers and work on the part of the "nine." Think what it could do for an Athletic Night!

Come on, girls—let's get a Varsity All-Star team!

Music Society Presents Recital

The Society of Contemporary Music, which was founded a few years ago with the purpose of performing good new chamber and solo music, will have its first recital of this season this Saturday night at 8:30 p.m. in the Conservatory Concert Hall.

The program will consist of works by three Canadian composers. A Quartet in F minor by Oscar Morawetz will open the performance, to be followed by a Quartet by Harry Somers, and Songs for Voice and Oboe by Godfrey Ridout.

Because of the importance of cultivating modern Canadian music, everybody is urged to attend. Student tickets are now available at the Conservatory.

They have the new cape sleeves, or peplums or tricky side drapes, and they come in paint-bright colors which declare their newness, the bright Springtime shades which are good as gold for wearing on a date right now but which will crop up again as bright as a May day when you leave off your coat. Northway's Fashionland is the place to find them and Fashionland is the place to shop for fashions right now and later.

ALWAYS DAINTY . . . Three Flowers Face Powder is color blended to harmonize with your own particular type of complexion. It is designed to tie up with Three Flowers Lip Stick and Matching Rouge, with shades which come in Carmeen, Crimson, and Regal Red. Wear the powder shade of Honey Beige with the Royal Red Rouge and Lip Stick, the Champagne Powder Beige with the Carmeen, and the Rose Cerise and the Crimson shades of Rouge and Lip Stick. Ask for these shades by name and team 'em for a perfect blending job.

WARM HOUSES AND COLD DRAFTS cause grief. If you happen to study near a drafty window and find a stiff neck or shoulder developing as a result, remember to keep a bottle of Sloan's Liniment handy. Sloan's is quick acting, pleasant to use, stimulates surface circulation and relieves the painful condition at the time it first needs attention. Keep a supply in your locker, ready to rub on after a work-out in the gym. It's a thoughtful act, incidentally, to tuck Sloan's into an overseas parcel.

ON THE STREET LEVEL and easy to shop, is Fairweather's collection of wearables for the college or office girl, where gay wool dresses, bright new prints and crepes, classic campus coats, blouses . . . are all on display and ready for the picking. You can match them up with one of the town's most fascinating collections of costume jewellery, handbags, or other important accessory items. Probably no name in the city has come to mean more to the smartly dressed woman than Fairweather's, which means that your choice of a Fairweather dress has been approved by Toronto's best dressed women these many years.

THERE'S NO SINGLE item of the feminine daytime wardrobe which can make or mar the general effect of a costume more completely than a blouse. Which is why the Evangeline Shops concentrate very thoroughly on their shirtwaist department and are prepared to show you the "top of the market" in those good classic numbers which are standard equipment for any educated tailored suit. WE VIEW WITH ALARM DEPT.:

There they were, gambolling along St. George Street the other day, a bevy of little girls, about 8 to 10 years of age, all holding hands and singing. The song, we observed, was "I've Got Sixpence," and there was a certain feindish delight they took in carolling the obligato, "Rolling Home Dead Drunk."

AH, THE YOUNGER DEGENERATION!

Professors, as we have pontificated so profoundly before, are abominable. This ornery pedagogue in the University's School of Law, as is his custom, took the roll call. So he called out the name of a student we'll designate here as Binks.

Immediately, five over-anxious voices rose and bawled: "We're sorry to report, sir, that Binks's medical category has been reconsidered and he's now been drafted."

The prof turned to his four legal informants, witheringly. "What do you all expect me to do?" he rasped, "Whistle 'Lord of Hope and Glory'?"

SHYSTERS ARE THE DWED-FULLEST PEOPLE.

A certain C.W.A.C. now returned to the University took exception to this column's recent loose use of the word "Limerick." So now she's contributed some bona-fide examples of the genre. We have, however, done some selecting from her anonymous works. The Varsity, after all, is a family journal. Here they are:

There once was a farmer of Towyn
Who said to his better-half: "How in
The world can I wear
My new hat to the fair
When you've used it for milking the cow in?"

This one she's dedicated to the Navy—
There was a young man of Ostend
Who swore he'd hold out to the end,
But alas, half-way over,
'T'wixt Calais and Dover,
He did what he didn't intend.

There was a pious young priest
Who lived almost wholly on yeast,
"For," he said, "it is plain,
We must all rise again,
And I wish to get started at least."

Finally, this one didn't come from the above-mentioned C.W.A.C., but from a certain source which we wouldn't even dare hint at (though the Champus Cat is said to have had a hand in the matter):

The morning after
The night before
Our cat came home
At the hour of four.
The innocent look
In her eyes had went,
But the smile on her face
Was a smile of content.

of calico. A group of yelling hoydens waylaid me outside the door and secured it after a brief scuffle. They said that in defect of the genuine article they were going to auction it off tomorrow as Sinatra's bow-tie.

"Proceed with the seance," said the adamant Ward.

"But I cannot vouch for the results. Without my thumgummy I have no control. I may, as you hope, raise McGeech. Or I may raise little green soy-beans. I may even raise the devil."

"Little green soybeans would add piquancy to the Great Hall soup," returned the Warden, "and the devil has often been raised within these walls. I am quite competent to deal with the devil. Fear not, boo-by. Do as I say. The Seance!"

It thundered. It rained blood. The Medium spun round and round in the end barber-chair. Awful shapes grimaced amid the shadows. A lurid red polka-dotted light lit up the awe-struck faces of the Warden and the Comptroller as they assisted the wizard by intoning "The Walrus and the Carpenter" in chorus. Then a grey cloud emerged from the largest hair-dryer.

The cloud went blue, then pink. It thickened. It took on form. Arms, legs, features appeared. Then, with a little pop! it split in two.

"Heavens!" breathed Likkerbreth. "Two of them!"

"One is McGeech," gasped Gilhooley. "But who is the other?" they queried in chorus.

Then the second figure grimaced evilly, and they knew. It was the arch-enemy—"Q." McGeech and his principal antagonist returned to earth, as they had left it, together!

"Don't blame me, please!" cried the Medium, flinging himself at ikerbreth's feet. "I did the best I could. But the Other would come . . . he would come."

"Get rid of him, then," said the Warden, not turning a tie-pin.

"I can't get rid of him. If he goes, McGeech goes too. I told you, without my thumgummy I had no control."

And as they talked, the evil figure of "Q" whisked through the door and vanished up the stairs.

Horror! The arch-fiend is loose in the world again! What devilish happenings does this misfortune presage? Don't miss chapter three!

comedy finally comes to its Happy End. offence to insult coffee. Soon, however, he won the love of the waitress, in the Austrian way, namely, by making her some better coffee. The Hofrat meanwhile attempted to get rid of his wife and the ten daughters.

In spite of (or shall we say because of) its age, the film was well done and truly humorous. One cannot call it sophisticated; on the contrary, action was thoroughly naive. But the period of bearded gentlemen riding those monstrous bicycles, and the horse-drawn street-cars is amusing, while the colloquial speech of the Herr Ober and the Hofrat made the audience roar with laughter. Not a masterpiece, still its antediluvian qualities appeal to a public sated with streamlined Hollywood productions.

We left, feeling that the "Merry Wives of Vienna" of the '20's is as amusing as are most recent comedies.

"Missionaries are people who spread and share the belief in God. They are of no particular culture and their aim is to help others strengthen their beliefs," said Jane Bone.

"Our brothers, sisters and chums are fighting in many lands and meeting many races and religions. After this war there will be less jealousy and a great opportunity for the missionary," said Bill Burgess.

"We do not have to wait to be useful," added Florence Wilkinson, "we can all do our bit this summer. There are eight hundred positions open with only 170 students to fill them. We can work in settlement houses, in nurseries, in frontier camps. If you feel like helping this sick world, take one of these jobs."

"Truly the missionaries discovered the church," said Mac Ransome, "and the meetings that are held bind all races and creeds together in a common belief."

Surrounded by a bevy of blue patch taggers, a student is shown adding a few inches to the Mile of Pennies, which was organized by P.H.E. as the opening gambit of the I.S.S. Drive.

Sociology Series Continued Friday

The second in the lecture series in Sociology will be given this Friday by Professor H. A. Innis of the University of Toronto in the Great Hall of the Economics Building at 4 p.m.

Dr. Innis' topic will be: "A Sociological Approach to English Literature in the Nineteenth Century."

Dr. Innis received his M.A. degree from McMaster University, and his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago. His association with the University of Toronto began with a lectureship in 1920. He was made head of the department of Political Economy in 1937.

Since 1923 he has written numerous books and articles on Canadian economics and industries.

Ancient Movie Feature Attraction

The feature attraction of the fourth regular meeting of the German Club yesterday was a full length Austrian movie, dating back an estimated 16 or 18 years. It served as an educational feature, making the students more familiar with the Austrian derivation of the German language.

The film was a comedy, the setting being that of imperial Austria, giving impressions of the social aspects, traffic problems and jokes of the period. The film, a critical evaluation of which is given elsewhere in this issue, lasted almost an hour.

Following the meeting, the Commerce Club joined in for refreshments and dancing.

representatives from Canadian and American universities, including Christy Wilson II, Princeton; Bill Steeper, McMaster; Pete Aykroyd, U. of T.; and Paul Beckwith, Chicago.

The concluding session of the conference, in the School of Missions, 97 St. George Street, will be addressed by American Staff Member Beckwith on the theme "The Place of Missions in the Task of the Church, in the Life of the Christian."

Varsity Blues Edge No. 4 Release Centre On Last-Minute Foul

Air Force Team Gives Students a Real Battle Before Succumbing by a One Point Margin

GIBSON STARS

By good luck rather than ability, Varsity Blues managed to edge No. 4 Release Centre of Manning Depot by a 41-40 score in an exhibition basketball game played last night. The one point margin came from a foul shot by Ryan after regulation time was up. The Air Force boys, who had never played together as a team before, proved to be a close-checking, accurate-shooting aggregation with a lot of fight. The fact that they had only one substitute was the real reason for their defeat, as the Blues picked up most of their points towards the ends of the periods. The fliers led 9-6 at quarter-time, but Varsity came back to lead by a 22-17 score at the half. With the exception of Don Gibson, our boys were way below their last game's form. Their shooting in the early stages of the game was very poor and their ball handling also left much to be desired.

Led by Wallace and Warrick, the Manning Depot boys outplayed Varsity in the first period and it looked like they were going to score an upset. With no second team, however, they couldn't keep up the fast pace, and this, plus some nice net shooting by Gibson, enabled the Blues to take over a five-point lead at half-time. The Air Force led by a 17-13 score at the fifteen-minute mark.

The second half scoring was just about indicative of the play. The Release Centre team outscored Varsity by a four point margin, which they really deserved. They had less shots on the basket but they made every one count. Varsity defence seemed unable to prevent them from breaking through and getting into a scoring position under the basket. The

Burke is Topic Of Prof. Priestly

"Burke conceived liberty as only a means to attain other values or ends," said Prof. F. E. L. Priestly, speaking in University College yesterday in the series on "Representative English Writers."

Prof. Priestly further described Burke as a man whose public exertions were almost wholly for the liberty of others, and whose anger was kindled only by tyranny. Thus, he supported the cause of the distressed in his age—the Irish, the people of India, and the Negro slaves, as well as championing religious tolerance.

This love of freedom was a lifelong attribute of Burke, said Prof. Priestly, although he advocated liberty, not for itself but for certain values, to pursue which liberty was desirable or necessary. Thus, continued the speaker, Burke supported the American Revolution, as maintaining their liberal constitution, but condemned the French Revolution, in which he saw no true liberty of government.

Burke advocated a manly, moral, regulated liberty, and psychological facts are consistent with his idea, Prof. Priestly asserted. He quoted Burke as saying: "Men of intemperate minds cannot be free; their passions are their fetters," and that men are not fit for civil liberty who have no controlling power over their will and appetites.

Prof. Priestly then submitted Burke's belief that "abstract liberty is not to be found; it inheres in some sensible object," a view best suiting the general and particular nature of man. Burke saw society not as an artificial cooperation of individuals but as a natural, organic state, and opposed the oversimplification of the radicals of his day. Burke, however, did not preclude reform, the speaker stated, for an organic society in its nature would change

Ex-Service Men

The Board of Governors of the University has approved of the following recommendations submitted by the Athletic Directorate: "That, in view of the fact that many of these men are so far behind in their studies and require extra time if they are to complete the academic year satisfactorily, they be exempted from Physical Training for the session 1944-1945."

"That, at the end of the present session the whole situation will be reviewed again and further consideration given to these men for the subsequent years of their courses." This exemption will be extended automatically and it will not be necessary for any ex-service men to petition for exemption.

The Senate of the University is prepared to extend the same exemption to women who have enrolled in the University following their discharge from active service.

Mexican Aztec R.C.I. Subject

"The Aztecs of Mexico" will be the topic of Dr. George Vaillant, A.M., Ph.D., Director of the University Museum, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, speaking at the Royal Canadian Institute's lecture tomorrow night at 8:15 in Convocation Hall.

Dr. Vaillant, a Harvard graduate of 1922, has made a special study of Aztec Mexico, a flourishing country of large cities, learned and well-trained men, and abundant crops until it was conquered and destroyed in 1519 by Cortes. Little was known of this 5000-year-old civilization until Dr. Vaillant's work on a small number of sites near Mexico City put the study of Mexican archaeology and history on a sound basis.

The lecture will deal mainly with the arts and customs of the Aztecs, and highlight their social organization. It will be illustrated by lantern slides.

Prof. Angus Honored By U.S. Association

Professor R. W. Angus, professor emeritus of Mechanical Engineering in the University of Toronto, has been elected an honorary member of the American Waterworks Association. Only one other Canadian is included among the twenty-five engineers who hold membership in the society.

Professor Angus was the senior member of the faculty of Applied Science when he retired last May. He is an honorary member of the Engineering Institute of Canada and the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, and past president of the Ontario Association of Professional Engineers. In 1942 he was awarded the American Waterworks Association Award for research contributions.

Essay Contest Held for S.P.S.

Schoolmen have been given the opportunity of winning cash prizes of $75, $50 and $25 in an essay contest sponsored by the Engineering Society, it was announced recently.

The subject of the essay is to be a critical discussion of a talk by Professor H. E. T. Haultain, professor emeritus of Mining Engineering, to an Engineering Society meeting last spring, in which he discussed the validity and practicability of auto-suggestion. His desire in offering the prizes and in encouraging the Engineering Society to sponsor the contest is to arouse interest among the students in the faculty concerning this subject.

Mimeographed copies of Prof. Haultain's address are available at the Engineering Society Store for all S.P.S. undergraduates.

The contest closes on Feb. 28, 1945.

New Lecture Series Sponsored by Avukah

Professor C. W. M. Hart, Supervisor of Studies in Sociology, will speak on "Group Antagonism" on Monday afternoon, January 29, at 4:30 in Room 8, University College. This is the first in a series of public lectures on minorities, sponsored by the Avukah Student Zionist Organization.

Other speakers in the series will be Professor Watson Kirkconnell of McMaster University, who will speak on "Some Canadian Minorities"; Mr. R. L. Birdwhistell, lecturer in Anthropology, who will speak on "The Negro"; and Mr. Edward Gelber, member of Bar of Palestine and Ontario, who will speak on "The Jewish Problem."

Everyone is cordially welcome to attend these lectures.

Whitey Belshaw's Schoolman Orchestra and Victoria College WHY are Biggest Hits of the Evening

TERRIFIC SUCCESS

Over 1500 students applauded wildly last night as this year's I.S.S. Skit Nite set a new high for All-University entertainment. The $300 taken at the door of Convocation Hall brought yesterday's total to over $1,450, in spite of a day of sub-zero weather.

The School Band conducted by Whitey Belshaw set the pace for an evening of entertainment in which the skit produced by Victoria College came off with continuous applause. Royce Frith portrayed the announcer of station WHY, introducing the various programs of the day which appear on radio networks. There was the usual soap serial, the commercials and other features introduced by John Spears. The Bob Quartet kept the audience rolling in the aisles with their allusions to several of the people on the campus.

The Follies started off the evening with the Tall Chorus, "Moon Over Hart House" by Gwen Innis and the "Pass Arts Polka," featuring Shirley Schipper and the Short Chorus.

Meds presented the old favorite, "The Doors Swing In," with a night-shirted child pleading with her father while a chorus of miners sang. Dents brought back the Typical Co-ed Contest, with the winner a Dental Nurse. There was a slight disturbance in the stalls as Miss O'Toole dashed through to take part in the contest.

Whitey Belshaw sang two of his own compositions, which seemed to appeal to the Schoolmen especially, "Fool from School" and "The Engineer's Blues," as part of the excerpt from School Night. Bill Tamblin again portrayed the lone man who lands on Mars in a manless community, surrounded by a chorus of girls led by Pegen Synge.

Skating Championships Draw Student Interest

So you are one of those who sometimes go up to Varsity Stadium to get an odd P.T. credit via the art of figure skating? And you sometimes wonder how it's done by the experts, and how great are its possibilities?

Your chance is coming this week-end, for yesterday afternoon, all today, and all day tomorrow the Canadian Figure Skating championships have been and are being held in Varsity Arena. Skaters from as far distant points as Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Schumacher, Winnipeg and Drumheller, Alberta, are in town to compete.

All afternoon yesterday the first part of the senior ladies' championships, the compulsory figures, was run off at the Arena. Last night it was announced that on the figures, which count for 60 per cent of the total marks, Barbara Ann Scott of the Minto Skating Club, Ottawa, who is defending her title of Senior Ladies' Champion, led her nearest rival, Marilyn Take of the Toronto Skating Club by a margin of 37.9 points. Nadine Phillips, also of the Toronto Skating Club, was in third place at the end of the school figures.

Not all the competitors are from distant points. Some of the students on this campus have taken off sufficient time from their lectures to practise and compete in the championships. Nigel Stephens, I Trinity, Junior Men's Singles Champion of Canada in 1943, is an entrant in the Senior Men's

AT CONVOCATION HALL

Dates—with Joan Cameron, and six of the most tantalizing girls on the Toronto campus—await the top bidders at the I.S.S. Auction Sale, to be held at 1 o'clock this afternoon in Convocation Hall. And that's only a start of the list of items that are going to be placed on the block, under the hammer of auctioneer Alex Siegel.

For those who are unsuccessful in bidding for a date with one of our campus lovelies, the key to Whitney Hall will be put up for sale. Such an opportunity! Maybe the key to 73 should be auctioned, for the benefit of all of the girls on the campus. And, getting down to less local items, Frank Sinatra's press agent has donated one of the swooner's own bow-ties to be auctioned to the Toronto students.

Diana Barrymore has autographed a copy of the book "Good Night, Sweet Prince," the biography of her father, John, which she has donated to the auction sale. From the artist of the Superman drawings, Joe Shuster, have come two original, colored, autographed Superman drawings. Militta Korjus, the leading lady singer in "The Great Waltz," has sent an autographed photograph.

The last item on the list is an original Walt Disney painting, on celluloid, which was actually used in the production of "Pinocchio." This particular cut is 20 inches by 15 inches in size, featuring pictures of Pinocchio and Jimmy Cricket, and it is one of a select few that have been released to art collectors rather than be destroyed with all of the rest. The Disney motion picture cartoons require the drawing of thousands of these cuts on celluloid. Numerous paintings are required for each minute change in

Co-ed Taggers Relate Harrowing Experiences

By Reg Herman

"Don't bludgeon them, but anything as a battery of girls closed in on else goes," I.S.S. Chairman Gord Stulberg warned enthusiastic taggers. And so began the campaign of red and blue tags.

An outstanding incident occurred when a Schoolman approached Mary Higley, III Sociology, U.C., with an ink-bottle and proceeded to pour out one hundred coppers, one by one. As an afterthought, he concluded, "Well, I guess you can have the ink-bottle, too."

Elizabeth Armstrong, III Arts, was found huddling by a radiator in the main library. "A professor walked by me shortly after I came on duty," she said, "and explained that he had no change, but would buy a tag on the way out. Every fifteen minutes since then he's started out and then gone back because he'd forgotten to get the change. I expect him out for the fourth time any minute." Another like case was reported by one miss: "One chap said he only had a ten dollar bill. Was he surprised when I changed it for him? Nine dollars change, of course," she concluded, triumphantly.

Sheila Atkinson, Arts student, was amused by the manner in which "some people say 'No, thank you,' as though you're trying to sell them the Brooklyn Bridge—with a bargain discount for cash."

In Hart House, screams of "Trapped! Trapped!" echoed through the building

The Editor,
The Varsity.

Dear Madam:

Having myself contributed virtually nothing to the winning of this war, I feel rather ashamed to speak at this time, but any such inhibitions as I may have had have been swept aside by the provocative nature of your flatulent editorial (Jan. 22nd).

Even remembering that it comes from the ivory tower, I cannot help but be amazed in the extreme—the more so on noticing that the date on my calendar is 1945, not 1936 or 1937 or 1938.

It seems that since we are on the verge of the long awaited millennium, the Varsity committee-for-adult-education-and-the-consequent-salvation-of-our-world has decided that upon the cessation of hostilities we should set aside things military, including national military service of any duration, because the fact that the whole world is armed to the teeth and has twice raped and massacred in some thirty years does not by any means point to the possible conclusion that such could happen again. And, on their own initiative, they are willing to take the chance; which when you stop to consider it, is really pretty handsome of them.

Their reasons for this clearheaded, hardheaded and realistic policy are manifold:

(1) The expense would be "momentous" in peace time (all right in war time, mind you, but in peace time momentous). That's what our old friends, Messrs. Baldwin and Chamberlain, used to think many, many sad years ago, when poor Mr. Mitchell was trying to scrape up a little cash to develop his aeroplane. And these good men lived to regret their tightfistedness, and to see their young countrymen die for lack of expensive equipment.

(2) The proposed year of military training would so disrupt and demoralize our young lives that they would lose all enthusiasm for education. The fact that the majority in the first place possess no such enthusiasm need not prove that the minority will return denuded of all intellectual bent. On the contrary, I would say just the opposite. You ask some of the chaps who know.

(3) A year, they believe, is quite insufficient to accomplish anything worthwhile. However, one year in the navy should provide a reasonable knowledge of things salty. One year in the army is today considered pretty fair preparation for battle by those who know. And I feel sure that one year in training with the airforce can produce quite a good pilot or navigator or what have you.

(And talking of things vivid, I'll bet a good many fellows will look back some day, while sitting at their large oak desks counting the shekels, and remember with more than calm similitude the weeks they spent under fire on the Battle of Inculcation course, the gale they weathered in the North Atlantic, the windless night they landed with no flaps and no brakes.)

(4) To the illustrious body there are no such things as happy mediums. Thus we must make it our prime interest, or none at all, to turn our youth into a fully fledged, full-time soldiering. And in the editorial office looms the spectre of fascism, technocracy et al. For these knights of education you cannot be educated primarily as a citizen and secondarily, but importantly, as a guardian of your society, so single purposed are their minds. Again, ask someone who knows.

And so they reason. The fact that as yet Stalin has not seen the light; that beyond the shadow of the doubt some wretched scheme is being hatched in the master minds of our teutonic foe for future reference; that the whole world seethes and boils and is not merely ready to settle down to an "all's well that ends well" sort of Utopia, does not at all daunt these scribes.

Throw away your arms and arrows and preach, they say. And they are right, about the preaching. By all means preach. Loud and long and to all men. But throw away your arms now, throw away your youth twenty years distant. Educate towards peace in time of war. And in time of peace educate to preserve that peace—and if necessary, by force.

J. C. CAIRNS,

I.U.C.

(Editor's Note.—Owing to the fact that we are unable to find "somebody who knows," we can only posit conclusions which seem reasonable. Men have usually assumed, in the past, that there will be another war within their lifetime or their children's. They have consequently directed their energies towards aligning their forces, planning the battleground and calculating the period for war. It has not been until recently that they have ever thought of perpetuating peace.

The proposed plan of Admiral Nelles still does not seem practical. The author of the above letter maintains that one year of training would equip a soldier for life. But we cannot possibly see how such a short period of training will keep abreast with the tremendous pace at which instruments of war and techniques of fighting are now being discovered. A veteran of the last war would find himself in need of completely new training if he were to participate actively in this war. Thus the only effective way to maintain a standing army is by regimenting the youth. There is no happy medium if we want men who will always have a complete knowledge of military discipline and modern techniques and inventions of war. If youth are to be educated as guardians of society, they must also be educated in citizenship. But it will be a citizenship into which militarism must permeate. Any society which has an efficient powerful army must essentially train its men as citizens of its country rather than citizens of the world. As a result, we will be furthering nationalism rather than internationalism.

The assumption that trainees, on the completion of their training will return to their schooling is somewhat dogmatic. It is feasible that the proposed plan will require young men to take compulsory training (a) after they have completed high school or (b) when they have reached a certain age. If the former were so, the gap of one or more years in their education would be enough incentive to forego any further academic studies. There is a difference between wartime and peacetime training inasmuch as a veteran receives allowances and compensation for his years of service. But a peacetime trainee would have no such considerations made to facilitate further education.

Those who pay income tax in this war have had a taste of what the price of maintaining an army is. During wartime, all energies and activities are unanimously directed towards victory. There is a unity of purpose which could never be achieved in peacetime. The cost incurred in equipping an army would meet with potent protest of which we never hear in wartime.)

Art, Music and Drama

Dorothy Maynor

Eaton Auditorium

The realm of art songs, like other fields in music, has had its own particular champions during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. In France, Gabriel Faure introduced a new subtlety and sincerity into French art songs. Brahms devoted much to song writing and one-third of his final output was in this form. It requires an artist of outstanding ability and inherent musicianship to interpret these works with the integrity they deserve. Dorothy Maynor is just such an artist.

Most people interested enough to read this review are probably quite familiar with Miss Maynor's dynamic personality, matchless stage presence and remarkable talents. While the scope of the program was not unusual, it was on a high cultural level practically throughout. No song was programmed purely for display.

Miss Maynor was at her best when singing in English. Two arias by Handel received treatment as nearly perfect as I hope to hear. Her interpretations made their transparent structure and emotional restraint a thrilling experience.

The Varsity Galluping Poll

Learning that Canadian universities are lowering their age entrance requirements as a desperate effort to outwit Selective Service Officer Arthur Backtonorra's snatch-and-grab methods, those two internationally-acclaimed Sociology experts, Messrs. Woo and Razbry, herewith present their questionnaire for two-year-old freshmen.

The questionnaire, testing individual Intelligent Quotients, has been fully endorsed by Pres.-elect Kidney Myth, and it is expected that it will be employed at the beginning of next term:

1. Who are you and why are you coming to college?
2. Sum up in one phrase the raison d'être of James Joyce's Ulysses. Who was Ulysses? Who was James Joyce? What does raison d'être mean?
3. Sum up in one word your first reaction to the Warden.
4. Underline one of the two following words whose meaning is most closely associated with Whitney Hall:

期第露露

5. Which of the following words are most closely related:

(a) The Globe and Mail, (b) Tim Buck, (c) Buck Rogers, (d) The Hart House barber.

6. Do you read editorials in The Toronto Evening Telegram? Or do you read the comic strips in The Toronto Evening Telegram? Which do you find more stimulating?

7. Are you ever stimulated?

8. What did you do when you passed the co-eds lounging in the University College rotunda? (Remember, all answers are strictly confidential.)

9. What do you think of the Polish situation? The Greek situation? The beer-shortage situation?

10. Do you know the facts of life? (Enumerate them in the space on the back of this sheet. Be precise. Be careful.)

12. Estimate after full consideration the possible date when The Undergraduate Magazine will be published.

13. Philosophy and Mathematical quiz: If two walnuts were eaten in their entirety twice daily by two elephants with whitewashed tusks at the rate of 50 per hour, and if a lonely man were to razor off the tip of each nose from each co-ed eating at Mac's at the rate of one nose per minute, and if each tusk were to be adjoined to the remaining end of the nose there-mentioned and if Mac's were to be whitewashed with the whitewash from the elephants' tusks heretofore-mentioned, would mankind thus discover its true hedonistic end?

14. Describe in your own words your hedonistic end. (Be precise. Be careful.)

15. Do you recall the words of Mairzy Doats?

16. Describe the raison d'être of Mairzy Doats.

Hart House Event
Initiated Tomorrow

ADMISSION RESTRICTED

Uplands R.C.A.F. will be the guests of the Varsity Blues basketball team tomorrow night at the first of the very popular Athletic Nights held in Hart House. The game will be the feature attraction of the evening and will get under way at 8:00 sharp.

The Uplands outfit have many well-known men in their line-up. "Sailor" Watson will be remembered best by those attending the Athletic Nights last year, as he was one of the stars of the Pendleton R.C.A.F. team who were here then. Our own Morray Thompson played for this same team before his indefinite leave from the Air Force. Corry Cornell, another man on the Ottawa squad, is a product of last year's Windsor Collegiate team. Griff Thomas has had previous experience with London Aces, and Freddy Thomas played for Paterson Collegiate and several other prominent Windsor teams before his induction into the R.C.A.F. All in all, they should give our Blues a hard fight.

Varsity will have a full line-up out this Saturday night. Doug Spry was the only questionable starter because of his

(Editor's Note.—Vern Purcell, the writer of today's column, is the Athletic Director of University College. TO JOE COLLEGE

They're here again. The first of the big five Athletic Nights gets under way this Saturday (27th) at 7:30 p.m. U.C., P.H.E., and Knox are presenting a "Joe College Nite"—full of fun and frivolity for fellas and frills from the farthest faculties (is that you, Murt?). The night is strictly informal. It's even rumored that the judge of a certain recent contest has borrowed the winner's "flannel" outfit for the evening. So don't be the "Joe boy" of Joe College Nite. Get your plaid shirts and sweaters with letters—and girls,—here's your chance. Remember when the boyfriend twisted his neck almost off to see the girl with the sweater? Well, she'll be here Saturday night. So will a few hundred more. So what about adding to the visual spectra with a plaid skirt and one of those sweaters?

It's your night—it's Joe College Nite—and here's the program. At this point we might remind you that the tickets will be definitely limited. Read the rest of the paper for details. And also—last year Athletic Nights were noted for the magazine collections. Let's carry on the good work this year. Those two Esquires that Mother wouldn't let Dad read, will do.

IN THE BIG GYM

In the first feature of the evening the hosts take on an All-Star School basketball team in an effort to decide that old Arts-Science grudge. It's rumored that the Arts boys have had an upper hand this year. What about it, Toike Oike? The time is 7:30.

The main feature of the evening presents itself in the form of a "cage match" with the Varsity Blues playing host to a highly rated Air Force squad from Uplands. This will be the first big game of the year for the Blues, and if their practices are any indication of their play, Saturday night is going to be a thriller. As an added attraction, Stu Heffernan and his trampoline troop will provide half-time entertainment through the courtesy of the famous Alf Phillips. At 10 p.m. the athletes will have a chance to display their skill at rugcutting on the gym floor, with novelty prizes.

IN THE TANK

Water-polo is the main feature of the evening. Six of the interfaculty teams are participating in the first intramural water-polo game this year. The teams are evenly matched and each will be out to draw first honors. Ken Tulley, Canada's junior diving champion, will complete the tank entertainment.

IN THE UPPER GYM

For men and women only. Yes! the upper gym is definitely restricted. If you have a weak heart you had better stay in the Joe College Rest Room. At 8 p.m. the Varsity Junior Boxing and Wrestling tournaments commence. Pugilists ranging from peewees to miniature giants will combine brain with brawn in an exhibition that no ring fan should miss. After the winners have taken their bows the floor will be cleared and "ye old square dance" orchestra will get the turkey off her nest for a few hours. Don't be bashful. We've arranged for some pretty instructresses to oblige if the language seems difficult.

JOE COLLEGE ROOMS

For anyone who takes cramps while applauding the Blues, we've arranged a rest room with games for those who can't decide whether they want to rest or not. For the boys who didn't do so well at Xmas there will be some up-to-date war films, presented through the courtesy of the C.O.T.C. and Capt. Gibson.

Well, I guess that's the night, Joe. Think you can stand it? P.S.—With the view that Joe only remembers half of what he reads, let me remind you: (1) Tickets are limited; (2) Girls, remember to remind the boyfriend that you both should bring a magazine.

* The Sportswoman *

By Janice Murray

NEVER LET YOUR BRACES DANGLE

And it might be a good idea to pull up a little tighter and help I.S.S. in the Auction Sale. Last night's Skit Nite was terrific, and although many people bought tickets in the form of little tags and didn't turn up, those who did, saw what was the best, but positively, campus show of the year. Maybe this isn't the place to tell you, but we can twist it around to Sportswoman. For instance, the U.C. tall and short choruses, or the School dance routine, takes lots of exercise. But this is incidental. The main thing was that the best show of the year was presented by the whole University for the I.S.S. Next year the doors will be jammed at Convocation Hall, and we'll put money on it!

The next thing is the Auction Sale. You've heard about the tie formerly gracing the Voice's Adam's Apple, but the real catch of the day is the original cut from Pinocchio. The I.S.S. has already turned down a considerable sum for the same, so that it could be auctioned off to the students. Such pieces as this have only been given to the few great museums and art galleries of the country. The remainder have been destroyed. This will be of even greater value in the future than it is now.

I.S.S. has worked hard to present these shows. They have been worth the work. One of the planned efforts which has taken the most work has been the Symphony Pops Concert for tonight. This concert has three guest artists and the program has been chosen to appeal to all tastes in lighter music. Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue played by Leo Barkin and the orchestra is a great favorite of both classical and so-called popular music lovers. Smetana's Overture to the Bartered Bride is one of the great pops numbers, as are the Rosenkavalier Waltzes by Richard Strauss. The other scheduled numbers are equally popular.

At Hart House a block of the best tickets at all prices have been saved to allow the students the choice. It is your last chance to help I.S.S. but it is to Sir Ernest MacMillan and the T.S.O. and Mr. Elton of Massey Hall that the I.S.S. acknowledges its great debt. They have contracted to turn over all profits after the initial costs to the I.S.S.

ATHLETIC NIGHTS

To ensure the maximum enjoyment of those who attend and to avoid overcrowding, it has been found advisable to enforce the following restrictions on attendance. Your co-operation is requested.

1. Paid admissions will be limited to a total of 1250.
2. Ticket sale will be limited to undergraduates. Each student, on presentation of his University registration card, may purchase two tickets in addition to his own. Members of the Armed Forces may also purchase tickets.
3. Passes to participants and others will not be honored after 8.30 p.m.

Admission to the big auction sale will be permitted only to persons who possess the blue I.S.S. tags. Two-bits to attend the big auction sale isn't very much—but to the students in war-torn countries, who will directly benefit by the affair, two bits is a lot. Remember, the time is 1 p.m., and the place is Convocation Hall—and that's not all. Word has just been received that there will be sundry other surprise items to appear on the block, one of them being a Petty drawing of undisclosed nature, autographed by Franchot Tonne.

O.K., all you eds and co-eds, just come out to the auction sale—you'll find a million surprises—and it's to be a real, honest-to-goodness kibitzing affair.

On Friday night the regular Pops Concert in Massey Hall will be conducted entirely for L.S.S. by Sir Ernest MacMillan, who himself was a prisoner of war in the last war. Of the three guest artists to be heard at the program, Leo Barkin will play Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue, and Maude Craig and Gordon Day will render the Mozart Concerto for flute and harp.

Resolute in its determination to prove itself a dispenser of literary uplift, this column today dips into the realm of the classics. Grim seekers after culture, bide with us; and we will demonstrate how Those Who Have Arrived Intellectually dealt with that fascinating topic, women.

The first profound word comes from Plutarch, who in his Conjugal Precepts proved that he wasn't old-fashioned at all, at all.

We quote:

"When the candles are all out all women are fair."

No medievalist either was Thomas
Fuller, who in his Gnomologia sagely expounds the theory:

"A woman, a dog, and a walnut tree,
The more you beat 'em, the better they be."

Even Sir Francis Bacon got around in his time, they say, picking up similes and other such oddities, including this one from his essay on Marriage and Single Life:

"Wives are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses."

Setting the precedent for all latter-day cave-men and wolves was John Donne, who began one of his poems on this gentle note:

"For God's sakes hold thy tongue and let me love!"

Admittedly, we are not sure which classicist penned this immortal line, but The Varsity's own philologist discovered this one on a faded and yellowed old manuscript:

She is the kind of look at that girl!

And the same philologist does not say whether this one is culled from Cicero or Caesar, but it reads:

Boybus kissibus sweeta girorum
Giribus libibus wanta somorum
Dean Gefusonobis combus and sees the pairorum

Kicksibus boybus outa front doorum.

And to round off this learned treatise, we turn finally not to a classicist, but one source virtually so—that acclaimed literary publication, The Queen's Journal, which has outlined its own Concise Oxford for the edification of culture-seekers:

Abbey: Abbey New Year!
Ink: A corporation
O: Capital of Cincinnati
Quince: The Dionne kids
Rain: Imitation silk
Six: Biological urge Trinket: Swallow a liquid
Vermis: Female sex
Youth: What's the youth?
X: President Hoover
Zipper: Evening meal

Innis Stresses Power of Press And Victorian Journalism In Lecture on Literature

Average Englishmen Favored Serial Stories, Critical Reviews and Romantic Tales, Political Economist States

LITERARY STANDARD LOW

"A century of peace and rationalism enters a century of war and irrationalism," said Dr. H. A. Innis, Head of the Political Economy Department, speaking on "A Sociological Approach to English Literature in the 19th Century" in the Economics Building last Friday.

In the first half of the 19th century, stated Prof. Innis, the industrial revolution encouraged more print by the lower cost of paper, duties, and the introduction of steamship power.

Due to the growing monopolistic position of various reviews, political parties were quick to grasp the advantages of controlling public opinion by means of them. With the growth of the Times, the monopoly of the reviews decreased.

Dickens and Thackeray found it profitable to enter the newspaper business and carried their reportorial viewpoint into their later writing.

In the latter half of the 19th century, the increased circulation of the newspapers, due to a reduction of taxes, increased the susceptibility of the English Parliament to journalism. And as one wit remarked, "The Boer War was made by newspapers and the newspapers were capable of carrying it on."

The stories were poorly written, any choice tidbits were plagiarized universally, and the small type "ruined the eyesight of millions of Englishmen."

The desire for lighter reading increased and popular writers such as Macaulay were high in public favor.

Many writers who found the Christian religion untenable turned to journalism and attacked the hypocrisy of the church in scientific magazines. Critical reviews and serial stories were the favorites of the English public, seasoned by the French influence with regard to sex.

The lower classes made great demands on literature after the passage of the Education Act, the average reader having a penchant for romanticism.

The adoption of certain mechanical inventions resulted in the growth of the "price system" in periodicals and the emergence of the literary agent.

The United States was England's greatest competitor in journalism. As copyright did not exist and the steamship did, literary piracy flourished universally and writers wrote in England to secure an American reading public.

Aztec Culture Is R.C.I. Topic

The Indians of Mexico are the heirs of a once-flourishing civilization, which has been uncovered and studied in detail only in recent times, said Dr. G. Vaillant of the University of Pennsylvania in a lecture of the R.C.I. last Saturday.

The complex culture which the Spaniards found on their coming to Mexico had behind it a long history, dating back many centuries, with a well-organized society, of which Montezuma's empire was the last in a long line of city-states, the speaker explained.

Religion permeated the life of the ancient Aztecs and regulated every aspect of the social structure, he went on, citing as an example the practice of the people to destroy all their implements, clothes and other property every 32 years, and lighting new fires, in all homes from the newly-lit sacred fire in the greatest temple in the country. Thus all life was symbolically reborn.

Most of the evening was taken up with the showing of lantern-slides, illustrating the art and daily life of the Aztecs. The growth of sophistication and realistic portrayal was illustrated in a series of clay figures and stone-sculptures and Dr. Vaillant stressed the feeling of the artists for monumental conception in architecture.

Reproductions from Mexican codices portrayed the passing of a hunting tribe to a settled city life, the education of Aztec children and the waging of warfare among the cities, which mainly served for the obtaining of tribute and of prisoners to be sacrificed to the gods, the lecturer commented.

I.S.S. Drive Nets $2500

Friday evening saw the end of a three-day campaign to obtain $556 for the International Student Service drive.

The total amount is as yet unverified, but according to Chairman Gordon Stulberg, approximately $2500 has been accounted for to date.

The campaign officially opened on Wednesday, Jan. 24, with a "Jiffie of Pennies." Co-operation of the students netted some $250, thanks to P. & H.E. students, who set aside all other activities of Wednesday to supervise the placing of the coins along the blue ribbons.

Thursday morning, coeds braved the sub-zero weather to effect the successful tag day. Thursday evening was Skit Night at Convocation Hall, followed by a "Come Sing, Go Home Double" affair at Hart House.

Frank Sinatra's bow-tie was a feature article of the auction sale on Friday, along with other similar objects. About $100 was collected. The Pops Concert that evening ended the campaign.

"The determining factor in reducing the objective to half was the unexpected frosty weather," stated Mr. Stulberg. He said that the only possible way in which to reach the I.S.S. goal is for each and every college to get together and hand in individual contributions. So far, the Faculty have shown interest by donating $100.

Prior to the campaign, approximately $500 had been received from private contributors. Sale of match books advertising I.S.S. sold in near-causap drug stores and restaurants benefited marvelously.

Many Novelties Planned by Meds

The scurrying of medical students in and out of the Medical Office in the Anatomy Building has finally been explained. The Dance Committee has been preparing for the Soph-Frosh dance to be held this Friday, February 2. The music will be supplied by Jack Evans and Ruddy Spratt. Among the many forms of entertainment during the evening will be novelty dances, two presentations, announcement of the results of the election of the future second and third year executives, and some as yet undisclosed mischief.

Cun Hill, of the committee, in an interview, said that he expected the dance to be a bang-up affair, with many an exciting moment during the evening. He hinted that there would be unusual, curious, and unexpected forms of entertainment, and extended a cordial invitation to all Medsmen to take a night off, bring their friends, and really enjoy themselves at the Meds' Soph-Frosh.

R.C.A.F. Dischargees Liable For Call-Up Though In College

Montreal—(CUP)—Dr. K. P. R. Neville, registrar and Dean of Arts at the University of Western Ontario, has criticized the local branch of National Selective Service for refusing permits to enter the University to young men discharged from the R.C.A.F. prior to completing their training courses.

W. A. Martin, divisional registrar of Selective Service, said: "The regulations are in the process of being changed. As they stand now, we have no choice but to call up these men as they are discharged from the Air Force. I think the misunderstanding arose from the fact that at some Air Force release centres Air Force officers, without any authority whatsoever, told these men that they would be free to go to college upon discharge."

Varsity Basketball Team Trims Uplands R.C.A.F. By Decisive 65-45 Count

Lecture Topic Is "Aesthetics"

Reverend Father G. B. Flahiff, C.S.B., addressed the second meeting of the St. Michael's College Thomistic Society yesterday afternoon on "The Philosophy of Art." Father Flahiff, a professor of medieval history in St. Michael's college, received a degree from Chartres.

Of man's three main activities, intellectual, moral and artistic, the most attractive is the artistic one, because it answers for him a deep-rooted need to get outside himself, Father Flahiff explained. As the speculative intellect is aided by the intellectual virtues, so the practical intellect is aided by the practical virtues of prudence and of art. According to the scholastic philosopher the virtue of art is the "recta ratio facibilium" or that which guides men to make good and beautiful things.

The speaker said that the modern emphasis on art as an experience begins with romanticism in poetry and with the close of the nineteenth century in painting. Before that, art was considered to be conformity to classical rules.

Artistic experience has been divided into three main stages. The first exists in the general background, the heredity and environment, of the artist. The second is an adumbration of beauty or reality which is not yet definite or conceptual, and of which the artist himself may hardly be aware. The third stage is the final technical one in which the work of art is actually produced.

In the same way, Father Flahiff went on to say, the effect of art on the spectator may be classified into three sections, the initial sensory perception, the emotional reaction, and finally the intellectual reaction; the intensity of these effects varies with the disposition and intelligence of the spectator.

To truly appreciate great art, Father Flahiff concluded, one should try to find out something about the intentions of the artist who created it and keep before him the idea that paintings are but paint and canvas.

RYAN STARS FOR BLUES

The Varsity basketball squad stretched its win streak to three games Saturday night when they defeated Uplands R.C.A.F. by the score of 65-45 in the main feature of the first Athletic Night.

The win was slightly overshadowed by the display of Freddy Thomas of the visiting team who was the outstanding man on the floor. After a slow start he ran up a total of 20 points for his night's work. His easy, skillful and graceful ball-handling detracted greatly from the efforts of the Blues.

Reliable Joe Ryan spearheaded the Varsity attack in his likeable battling manner. His 15 points were enough to make him high scorer for the winners. Harry Mayzel and Murray Thompson played outstanding games, while Don Gibson showed his best in flashes. Spry's work at guard was very neat.

The losers' attack was led by Freddy Thomas, but also prominent were Griff Thomas, Conny Correll and Norv Mathie. After watching his team take a terrific pounding in the first half, Coach and Manager Bob Dunsinore donned a uniform, but used himself very sparingly.

The Blues started off in an auspicious manner by running in four straight baskets in the first three minutes without a reply. The awed Airmen gasped for a time-out in a vain hope of stemming the tide. At the nine-minute mark the Blues held a 20-5 lead.

Play evened up but the erratic shooting of the Uplands club kept their score from mounting. The Varsity starting five of Gibson, Thomson, Ryan, Mayzel, Spry, ruled the hoop with baskets from all possible angles.

Half-time score was: Varsity 38, Uplands 17.

Reversing the procedure, the Airmen pushed through three markers without any serious threat before the Blues found their scoring eye. Thomson and Ryan scored before Freddy Thomas really

Girls Avoid Sinatra's Bow Tie But Buy Cigars at I.S.S. Auction

By Ernst R. Deutsch

Varsity students' fancies and interests were revealed in Friday afternoon's brisk auction sale which brought the I.S.S. 88 dollars, six cents, and 13 ounces of an unspecified fluid.

For instance, whilst the female portion of the audience contested eagerly for two cigars on the auction block, the Sinatra myth burst like an empty bubble, when the few co-ed addicts he might have had on our campus were hopelessly outbid by man-students in the contest for his bow-tie.

Much less was offered for unrealities such as autographed pictures, and uncertainties like the key to Whitney Hall, than for concrete objects of flesh and blood. Pictures of Militia Korjus, a "Petty" girl signed by Tone and of Superman together brought only $5.71, although the latter's powerful physique was analyzed in detail. The "Fool from Skool" script sold for $3.50, and "THE KEY" for $4.00. The highest price offered for any item was 27 dollars for a colored Pinocchio original, direct from Disney.

Alce Siegel, the auctioneer, used psychology when he sold a biography after quoting from it passages that demanded further reading, whilst students looking for the Atlantic Charter were being assured to find it in the smoke of two cigars attributed to Churchill, which sold for $2.75 each.

For most of the male students present, investment in humanity implied four attractively selected specimens of homo rather than literally the whole two billion of us. When dates with these girls were auctioned off, Convocation Hall at times assumed the rare aspect of a slave-market. On the basis of proceeds from the ensuing contest it was found that university students are prepared to spend an average of $7.62 for an evening together with any of the co-eds concerned.

On one occasion the bidding developed into a regular battle. It went as follows: 25c., $2.00, 2.05, 2.50, 2.60, 2.65, 2.70, 2.80, 3.00, 3.01, 3.02, 3.25, 3.26, 3.25 plus one street-car ticket, then another ticket, then a four cent stamp added. Obviously one enthusiast had gone bankrupt by then. At that point, however, what must have been half the faculty of Engineering started throwing him nickels, dimes, quarters, etc., and so it continued—$3.50, 3.75, 4.00, 4.25, 5.00, 5.05, 5.06, 5.07, 5.10, 5.15, 5.17, 5.50, 5.55, 5.60, 5.75, 6.00, 6.25, 6.50, 6.75, 7.00, 7.25, 7.50, 7.75, 7.90, until finally this Schoolman engineered it for $8.00.

It was quite a sum, too, considering that the Sinatra bow-tie, which The Varsity bought, went for a mere $7.60.

Big Spread . . . O'Mara Wed; 'Lead Me To The Altar, Salter'

Late last night word was received that Michael O'Mara, former editor-in-chief of The Varsity, was married on Saturday to Marion Salter in New York City.

"Tell The Varsity that I finally have the world-shaking news I promised them years ago," winked Mike to his Canadian Press colleagues. When the message was relayed, jubilant shouts echoed from one end of the press to the other as those of the "old guard" expressed their delight.

O'Mara graduated in 1943 from the University of Toronto. In his last year at the University as editor-in-chief of The Varsity, he carried on effective editorial discussion of the alien question. Before his appointment as editor, Mike was Exchange and C.U.P. editor of The Varsity, as well as a noted "hitler" writer.

Marion Salter was also a member of The Varsity staff. In 1943 she was assistant news editor and held a reportorial position in former years.

At present O'Mara is night editor at Canadian Press in New York.

5566 And All That

As the "Pops" concert in Massey Hall completed the three day I.S.S. drive, weary but happy students unwound their tags from their lapels and returned to their studies convinced that their 'buck' had been well spent. Carried out with a commendable enthusiasm, the drive sustained student interest throughout. Undaunted by the bitter cold, the committee staged the mile of pennies drive with startling success, in view of the circumstances. Intrepid taggers jauntily flaunted their wares beneath the noses of traditionally generous students who augmented the funds with comparative good will. Each college mustered up its resources to contribute its share to the entertainment of skit nite, while eager bidders borrowed right and left to purchase Frankie's tie or a date with a campus co-ed. The height of the drive was reached when a keenly contested bidding for an original Walt Disney drawing netted twenty-seven dollars. Aided by fellow students and hindered by competitive rivals, excitement ran high when a distraught schoolman sacrificed his friends' last cent to buy a date with one of the co-eds. Although such bidding may have struck outsiders as extravagant, the use to which the money is being put is alone enough to disclaim any such thoughts.

Aside from the primary aim of the drive, there is also the valuable fact that such affairs which embrace the entire university, create a co-operative and unified spirit that rarely is manifest in our usual lecture routine. Each college is content to put on its own entertainment for its own students, but it is only on such occasions as "skit nite" and the auction sale, that every faculty and college combines its talent for widespread university amusement.

Although the objective was not completely reached, the I.S.S. committee is to be congratulated for its enthusiastic endeavour and relative success.

Please, Mr. Henry!

It is a fine old custom, shamefully lapsed of late, for The Varsity to take its more muddled downtown brethren by the hand and patiently explain to them the facts of University life. A particularly touchy child, and one calling for special tact and solicitude, is the Toronto Telegram, whose Thomas Richard Henry lost hold of his nurse's hand in the big academic world last Saturday and bawled wilfully to passers-by that to judge the I.S.S. auction "the lads up at Varsity must have a lot of money these days".

"Yesterday", he went on touchily, "they were bidding eight dollars for a date and $7.60 for one of Frank Sinatra's ties."

"After the last war, a lot of the students had to look at a nickel three times before deciding to indulge in a five-cent cigar."

Experienced readers of Mr. Henry's hypersensitive lamentings will recognize through his suppressed "Boo-hoo's" the Telegram's traditional grumble that the war is far from won and here these damn idle rich parasites are flinging money around as usual.

Young Thomas Richard has not yet gone to the lengths that merit an editorial spanking, so we can only remind him somewhat wearily that the students in question, far from merely buying dates and sentimentalized bow-ties at fantastic prices, were scraping up their bottom dollars to give to other students: students in China without a book or a roof over their heads, students in German prison-camps far from professors and columnists, students in France and other liberated countries with the task ahead of restoring demolished buildings and razed and scattered libraries. The torch of learning sheds an international light.

It is apparently Mr. Henry's desire that the unhappy scholars whom the I.S.S. will benefit should be allowed to remain in that unlightened state so favorable to the swallowing wholesale of his column.

The sums which he mentions as being so gaily flung around were hurriedly collected by the bidders dime by dime from surrounding friends, prior to being given to I.S.S. officials. Mr. Henry's critical status may be judged by the entertainment value which he imparts to his column by habitually disdaining to acquaint himself with such facts as these.

ART MUSIC Drama

Hart House Concert

A well-balanced, contrasting programme was presented by Miss Margaret Brown, pianist, playing in the Hart House Sunday Evening Concert series. Miss Brown should indeed be congratulated for her ability to produce chords with a full rich tone, a feat extremely difficult for a person of so slight a stature. A deep, organesque quality was cleverly shown in the Rummel arrangement of Bach's "Jesus Christ the Son of God." The effect of a great variety of registers was deftly revealed in Bach's Organ Prelude in G minor.

Miss Brown encountered some difficulty in her interpretation of the first movement of Beethoven's Sonata Opus 27, Number 2 (The Moonlight). It is absolutely essential to have an intimate knowledge of the action of the piano before one attempts to use a "Half-touch". The second movement, however, was graceful and bright, typical of Beethoven's lighter moods. The fiery and moody third movement revealed Miss Brown's amazing technical ability.

The rambunctious Prelude Number 3 by Gershwin served as a fitting contrast for the sophisticated Reflets dans l'Eau, by Debussy. Both the Prelude by Debussy and the Liszt Concert Paraphrase of Themes by Strauss served to supplement the audience's opinion of Miss Brown's technical facility. However the audience felt that Miss Brown on several occasions unfortunately landed on wrong notes, which must have upset her interpretation considerably.

R. D. LLOYD

Divided We Appal

Massey Hall

One of the best "Pops"-style programs was chosen for the I.S.S.-sponsored Symphony Pops concert last Friday evening. The University's Blue and White pages of the program listed Smetana's Overture, The Bartered Bride, Mozart's Concerto for Flute and Harp, Richard Strauss' Rose Cavalier Waltzes, and Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue.

With such a program of lighter classics, it is a shame that the orchestra did not do justice to the work. From the ragged bowing of the violin in the sections taken from Sullivan's Gondoliers to the worried fingering of Mr. Leon Barkin, piano soloist of the Rhapsody, the orchestra struggled as eighty men. Somehow, playing "as one man" eluded them.

In spots, however, the orchestra appeared to better advantage. The Concerto for Flute and Harp with soloists Maude Craig, harpist, and Gordon Day, flautist, both of the orchestra, was handled with sympathy and skill. This concerto represents the lightest of light Mozart, and its lilting themes, carried in turn by the orchestra, flute, and harp, dimmed the memory of past imperfection.

With the Rhapsody in Blue, which lacked enthusiasm, and apparently even brief acquaintanceship with the score, the sad memory returned.

The encore, Morton Gould's arrangement of the Red Cavalry March, is also a great favorite.

PONY FOR PREXY?

Substitute Shetland Pony for Pres-elect Myth in Auction Mix-up: Garter Proves False Clue

"AT WAR"—DODY

Auctioned off by mistake at the I.S.S. bonanza Friday afternoon and taken home by his purchaser in a burlap sack, Dr. Kidney Myth, president-elect of the University, has not been heard of since, according to last-minute flashes from Simcoe Hall.

"This is a terrible thing," said Auctioneer Gordon Z. Iceberg. "The bags must have been switched. We thought he was a Shetland pony."

Accounting for the presence of the president-elect in a burlap bag on the stage, Iceberg explained that Myth had requested a hiding-place from which to carry on close-range scrutiny of the auctioneering procedure, ever on the alert for quaint Ontario customs to add salt to his forthcoming work, "The Fabulous East." "We cut peep-holes in the bag for him, and set it in a remote corner of the stage."

"After the auction, we untied the sack and called 'Come out, Kidney, it's safe now,' and were dumbfounded to have our faces suddenly licked by an equine tongue. Then we knew that we had auctioned off the wrong bag."

"This is terrible," echoed Assistant Auctioneer Alexander Babinton Seagull, beating his head dolefully with his hammer. "That man bought the Shetland pony for his kiddies. Think how disillusioned the wee tots will be when they untie their prize in the backyard and out hops a mortarboard and a speech!"

Hot on the scent as usual, faithful J. Doberman Pincher, University Police Force, announced that the dragnet was out. "The day Dr. Myth arrived," reminisced Pincher affectionately, "he patted me on the helmet and promised that when he was president I'd get a shiny nickel-plated police-whistle. Besides, what happened to him shouldn't happen to a horse."

Concern for the health of the president-elect was shown by Mrs. Myth, who broadcast frantic pleas that his purchasers look after his diet. "He always hated hay," she sobbed, "but put rolled oats in his bin and he'll be happy."

Questioned by Constable Pincher, who sank down on the steps of the Myth's Queen's Park residence to get his feet untangled from his dragnet, Mrs. Myth proffered a clue. "Try the tower!" she whispered dramatically.

"The tower?"
"The tower. Kidney always had an urge to climb up the Hart House Tower and bay 'I'm Big Bold Bertie from the Badlands' to the winds at daybreak."

Panting up the Tower staircase hot on this false trail, Constable Pincher was disgusted to find nothing at the top but a discarded garter and a supply of hoarded cuspidors, property of the Warden, which were being seasoned.

As the trail grew colder, arrangements went forward to have the unwilling pony installed as president-elect.

"We art at war," boomed President H. J. Dody, when pressed by the press for a statement. "But though difficulties and dangers manifest themselves on every side, we shall press on. What if no pony—or horse, for that matter—has ever headed this great seat of learning? We must Move with the Times!"

Junior Boxing Prelims Held at Athletic Night

BOUTS IN 4 WEIGHT CLASSES

The junior boxing enthusiasts on the campus ran through their preliminary matches in the upstairs gym at Hart House at Saturday night's Athletic Night. Bouts were fought in four weight classes, the 135, 145, 155 and 165 pound classes.

Starting off the evening, Arnaud of S.P.S. and Jackson of Dents tussled in the only scheduled 135-pound match. After three rounds, Jackson was awarded the decision.

Three 145-pound rounds followed. Easton of Trinity scored a technical knock-out over Stokes of St. Mike's in the first. Following, Myers of P.H.E. was awarded a decision over Clapin of Trinity, and Phillips of Forestry was awarded a decision over Bell of U.C. Both were close bouts, but in the former, late in the third round, Clapin weakened and Myers was definitely superior at the end. The Phillips-Bell match was tight all the way.

In the only scheduled 155-pound match Robinson of U.C. fought with Punnett of S.P.S., and the fight was very keen, but Punnett was chosen the winner. To end the evening, lanley Don McNeil of S.P.S., met the much shorter Ron Jones of Trinity, to represent the 155-pounders. The fight started off evenly, but McNeil's height and his crouching style made it difficult for Jones to land the deciding bread-makers, so that McNeil was chosen winner by those officiating.

Three junior boxers got past the preliminaries with byes. These are Dufon in the 145-pound class, and Thornton and Wilson in the 155-pound class. This week further matches will take place in the junior boxing tournament, and by next Saturday it is hoped that all finalists will have been selected, to appear at the next Athletic Night. Also scheduled for the next "A" Night are the preliminaries in both the senior and junior wrestling tournament.

U. of T. Students Win Two Titles

Overcoming a lead of 12.6 points on the compulsory figures, Nigel Stephens, Trinity freshman, came from behind in the free skating to edge out his only opponent, newly-crowned Junior champion Frank Sellers, in a closely fought battle for the Canadian Men's Senior Figure Skating title at Varsity Arena Saturday afternoon.

One other winner is a student at the University; he is Norris Bowden, 1 S.P.S., who teamed with Susanne Morrow to win the Junior Pairs title for the Toronto Skating Club.

In the other events, Barbara Ann Scott of the Minto Skating Club, Ottawa, successfully defended her Senior Ladies' title. The Senior Pairs were won by Olga Bernyck and Alex Fulton of the Porcupine Skating Club, while Doreen Dutton won the Junior Ladies' title.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasiw

CAGE POPULARITY . . .

Basketball has come a long way since Dr. James Naismith tried throwing a soccer ball through a peach basket at Springfield in 1891. Its basic idea hasn't changed much and its simplicity remains one of the reasons for its fantastic popularity. That, of course, applies to the game in the United States, where the biggest strides have occurred in the last few years. College doubleheaders at Madison Square Gardens now average 15,000 fans.

In Canada progress has been much slower. Last Friday evening some 500 enthusiasts were crowded in, while 300 more were turned away from the Merrittion Hayes Steel-West End Y match. Twice as many witnessed the Uplands-Blues net-to-at Hart House on Saturday. In all, two thousand people were drawn out from firesides to watch basketball.

The difference in popularity of the game as played here and across the border can be directly attributed to the whims of local sport promoters and upon the lack of a suitable auditorium to house the game. Promoters repeatedly insist that the Canadian populace is not sufficiently educated to appreciate the game. The press repeatedly refuses to give it the publicity it warrants. And yet basketball will ultimately overcome these obstacles and take its rightful place as a major sport. An organizational and publicity genius along the lines of a Ned Irish is the only requisite to place it next to hockey on the popularity list. Any sport follower who attended the first "A" Night will vouch for this.

SATURDAY'S LEFTOVERS . . .

At a meeting of the players prior to the game, Don Gibson was unanimously voted captain of the team. The choice could hardly have been a better one. With four years of Varsity basketball behind him, Don is one of the most dependable men on the floor. And, so, along with a throng of others, may we extend our congratulations and best wishes.

That exhibition of basketball displayed by Freddy Thomas was really tops. While his back was turned, team-mates confided that the starry twenty-year-old native of Windsor is rated the third best hoop star in Canada. Wonder if Western's Johnny Metras has been around to discuss Freddy's post-war plans yet?

Corney Cornell is another product of Windsor and watched Thomas when the latter was a junior star. Claimed that he's seldom seen Thomas tied up the way Doug Spry did it. And yet he accounted for twenty points!

Saturday's defeat was the first suffered in eight games for the Airmen this season as they are undefeated in the Ottawa Services League. Coach Bob Dunsmore was none too happy about it, either, as he had hoped for a win over the highly rated Blues.

The refereeing of Barry Lowes and Harry MstfothballmeUhlai The refereeing of Barry Lowes and Harry MstfothballmeUhlai was a treat to watch. Youthful Barry Lowes put on quite a show for the crowd with his uncatchable antics. Luckily the same combination is due for a return engagement this Saturday.

Jack Swan played himself a lot of basketball. In the opening game he paved the way for School's victory over the Hosts and then went into the big game. His accurate shooting was carried on here as he ran up three baskets. Quite a night!

Complaint department: Too much going on at the same time. Good excuse for coming back next Saturday.

The Sportswoman

WELL . . .

It is being bandied around in the ranks of those who know in the swimming club that there is a certain lack of enthusiasm about the coming swimming meets. So far, the attendance at the practices has been very light and it seems to be getting lighter. For those who intend to go into the big swimming meet, these practice periods are invaluable as no one can plunge into the pool for the first time in six months and turn in her best performance. Anyway, you're not allowed to, because the rule has been laid down that three practices are compulsory before the big meet.

So, on behalf of Joan Campbell and her overworked but enthusiastic cohort, we urge you to come out and practise rather more diligently so that the meets will be something really to watch.

THE SHUTTLECOCKS ALSO . . .

needs to be batted around a bit more up at St. Paul's before anyone can say that the U. of T. have had lots of practice. The courts up at St. Paul's are beautiful—they have good lighting and a very high arched roof. Like at the Granite Club courts (only not quite as cold). They are a pleasure to play upon.

TODAY, TOMORROW . . .

and for the rest of the week, there will be a thrilling game of women's hockey daily. St. Hilda's has a return engagement with P.H.E. II today, while later this week Meds play Vic, too.

St. Mike's plays P.H.E. II, U.C. plays P.H.E. I, and St. Hilda's plays St. Mike's.

Things haven't quite sorted themselves out in the femme hockey circles, but the old reliables, Vic and St. Hilda's, are pulling through nobly so far, while P.H.E. are certainly fielding a couple of strong squads. At the end of the week the outcome should be plainly discernible.

The reason we are making a point of listing these games (for times, see Friday's Varsity), is so that some people will go up and see them. Many people (especially boys) have asked us when the games will come off. The noon games are certainly hard on the lunch hour, but to see them it is worth bringing a lunch from home or arriving a bit early or late or lunch at the residences.

St. Mike's, Meds and S.P.S., Capture Water Polo Honors

The first Athletic Night of the 1945 season featured three games of intramural water-polo. Splashing off sharp at 8 o'clock, five aquatic-minded gents from St. Mike's, led by Bill O'Brien, took the Vic men for a ride to the tune of 7-0. The Vic men found the "Fighting Irish" a little too fast as they paddled up and down the pool in the wake of their sturdy opponents.

Jr. Meds B and Knox, the second starters, came up with a very tight game that went to the Does by a 3-1 count. The score was indicative of the spirit displayed by both sides.

Swimming off with the honors in the final game was H. Kohl. The boy from III Architecture scored all his team's six goals. This game was the most

S.P.S. Winners In Hoop Tilt

School defeated a combined team from the host faculties at the Athletic Night on Saturday by a score of 32-28. The S.P.S. outfit was made up of a little of everything from most of the School teams in the Intramural set-up, while the Artsmen were chiefly from U.C. and P. & H.E. The lone representative of Knox, the remaining college host, was Moorhead.

The game was closely contested all the way, with play fluctuating back and forth as both teams broke into sporadic scoring sprees. Half-time score read 18-16 for S.P.S. The Artsmen led several times throughout the event, once by a 23-24 count, but School rallied to finish very strongly as Swan and Tredgett sank a few lovely baskets.

Swan and Morrison monopolized the scoring points, Swan counting eleven for School and Morrison twelve for the hosts. Tredgett and Halliwell each got seven, Halliwell in particular playing good ball all 'game for S.P.S. Whittle of P. & H.E. was the second best for the Artsmen, and scored four points for their cause, as did also Ferguson and Cheesman.

School—Brant 2, Tredgett 7, Hennessy 1, Halliwell 7, Swan 11, Jagielnik, Hendricks 2, Anderson 2, Hamm.

Arts—Moorhead, Morrison 12, Salzmann 2, Gibson 2, Levine, Purcell, Whittle 4, Glair, Currah, Ferguson 4, Cheesman 4.

DEPARTMENT OF UTTER CONFUSION (H.M. Mails Division): The driver of a passing mail-truck looked like a good Samaritan to the girl on a Delivery Route who was shouldering her daily bundle of Varsitys through the snowdrifts and fretting about her 9:30 lecture.

So she asked the man in the little red truck if he would drop this bundle off at the U.C. doorway on his next trip round the letter-boxes.

The next morning S.A.C. officials were dumbfounded to have a huge, ragged bundle of yesterday's papers shoved through the door at them, coldly stamped "Returned for Insufficient Postage."

THROUGH HAIL, RAIN, WIND, BLIZZARD, THE VARSITY GETS THROUGH—some day.

A further bulletin on the Campus Cat's nocturnal ecstasies comes from a reader of the following lines in Thursday's hither:

"The morning after
The night before,
Our cat came home
At the hour of four.
The innocent look
In her eyes had went,
But the smile on her face
Was a smile of content."

Our reader's appendix runs:

In later days,
When the kittens came
To that Persian cat
Of noted fame,
They were not Persians,
But black and tan,
And she told them their dad
Was a travelling man.

Leaving her studies for a quiet smoke, she was astounded to see the main door suddenly swing open. And in popped the heads of two refugees from a Small Fry cartoon, who emitted from their mischievous little mouths one piercing, blood-curdling scream—and vanished.

Out poured the anxious inhabitants of the men's reading room, thinking to forestall a murder at least.

And there in the rotunda stood this solitary, red-faced co-ed.

And she looked at them, and they looked at her.

CURTAIN

The garbled, truncated co-ed-ese version of the Keats "Ode to Autumn" that graced a recent Campus Cat didn't impress one dark damsel at least, who was overheard commenting to her escort: "But my lecture notes always look like that."

Determined not to have his monopoly broken, the S.P.S. boy-friend of one of the co-eds auctioned off last Friday outbid to the limit of his pocket-book and then cried out for School to rally around.

Showers of quarters, car-tickets, and collar-buttons reinforced his treasury. But still the bidding went up, and another appeal for aid drew further donations.

When at last she was knocked down to him at $8.00, he found he had made twenty cents profit on the whole deal.

He took the Universe apart

Euclid, brilliant Greek mathematician, explored new realms of science, and analyzed the universe into points, lines, angles, curves, surfaces and solids. His Elements of Geometry, has been in use, practically unchanged, through 2000 years. New worlds of knowledge were opened through Euclid's research.

RESEARCH still goes forward. Twenty-four years ago industrial research with Nickel was greatly intensified. The Nickel laboratories in Canada, the United States and Great Britain have since discovered hundreds of new ways in which Nickel and its alloys can be used to make better products. This research has been a valuable aid in the great expansion of Canada's Nickel industry.

When the war is won, these laboratories will again direct their efforts toward new peacetime uses for Canadian Nickel. They will be aided by the great store of knowledge gained during the war.

Canadian engineers and metallurgists, who are constantly seeking better materials with which to make better products, are invited to make use of this store of information obtained through the years of Nickel research.

Thus will science and industry, working together, broaden the use of Nickel, and so help keep the Canadian Nickel mines and plants operating and men employed.

Though inferior to "Stage Door Canteen," "Hollywood Canteen" provides lots of entertainment with countless big names of the movie world and a fairly convincing romantic plot.

The story of the romance of a corporal visiting the canteen and movie actress Joan Leslie is brightened by the antics of a soldier's buddy, Dane Clark, who stole the show with his naive encounters with Barbara Stanwyck, Ida Lupino and Joan Crawford.

A violin duet by Szigetti, world-famous violinist, and Jack Benny, Eddie Cantor's rendition of "We're Having a Baby," and the songs of the Andrews Sisters highlighted the performances of the stars.

After seeing "My Learned Friend," we report with misgivings that British films have come up with a slapstick comedy pair somewhat

Hulbert play the parts. "MY LEARNED FRIEND" Abbott and Costello. HOLLYWOOD similar to Hollywood's of two disbarred, slightly wacky barristers who find themselves on the list of a quiet ex-convict as potential victims of murder.

Mervyn Johns, as the murderer, plays his role with finesse, and as an inmate of an asylum, Lloyd Pearson, who believes he is in India hunting buffalo, provides the best laugh of the movie.

Fight scenes in a pub, sequences on a stage of a theatre, and a chase on the hands of the face of Big Ben as the climax, are some of the routines that remind one of Abbot and Costello productions.

Though there is never a dull moment during the story, the dialogue is often lengthy and rather confusing with high-pitched, monotonous English voices and some "subtle" English humor. We recommend it for those who enjoy puns.

"TUG OF WAR AND PEACE" DESCRIBED BY PROF. BURT

"Nations Have Always Remained a Law Unto Themselves" Says Prof. L. Burt in Armstrong Lecture Series

SOCIETY IN ANARCHY

"If we as individuals insisted on being final judges in everything we did, our society would dissolve," said Prof. L. Burt, speaking on "The Tug of War and Peace" at Victoria College yesterday. "Thus," he continued, "because nations have always remained a law unto themselves, their society has never come out of anarchy."

Prof. Burt said that relations between states are not intimate, mostly because the states deem internal relationships more important than external, and have a fundamental distrust of other countries.

Prof. Burt outlined the slow movement towards international peace beginning with the Industrial Revolution when international intercourse became necessary for trade. This was followed by the establishment of the international union for the administration of the Rhine River in 1804 and later by the European Danube Commission, which was a highly successful experiment in international government, he said.

Another outstanding example, he pointed out, was the Universal Postal Union, 1878. Before this time, Prof. Burt continued, there were five different routes by which mail could be sent from the United States to Australia, ranging from five cents to one dollar and two cents in price.

The adoption of free trade in 1846 was also a very important step. At this time Britain deliberately turned her back on her own interests and accepted a policy which might expose her to starvation if she were ever cut off from supplies, he said. Just as this promising move was getting under way the United States started the trend towards isolationism, he added.

Prof. Burt concluded his lecture by saying that although Britain elung to free trade, the other countries adopted the attitude of the United States, which began the movement which carried the world back to anarchy.

Prof. Burt, a graduate of Victoria, is the Armstrong lecturer for this year, and will continue his series today at 4:45 in Victoria Chapel.

Swim Teams Train for Meets

Every afternoon at 4:45 the Varsity Swim Team is holding practices to organize the Big Blue Team for '45. There are also two other meets of importance, the Junior and Senior Interfaculty championships, which have a bearing on T. A. Reed Trophy points.

The following men are requested to turn out, as well as any others who are interested: P. Turnbull, J. Martin, W. Moffat, Z. Patterson, P. Aykroyd, P. Lochhart, T. Opie, Tress, Wilson, N. Lea, and Bowden, of S.P.S.; B. Bones, Huestis, Teskey, and Probert, of Meds; Dickie and Bier of U.C. Bramen (Trinity), and Peterson (Victoria).

Spanish Club Meet Will Feature Dancer

The meeting of the Spanish Club tonight at 8 o'clock at the Women's Union will feature Spanish dancing by Conchita Triana.

Miss Triana has spent a number of summers in Cuba and New York, where she has studied under Mr. B. Monpalvo and Mr. Angel Caneino. She went on a tour through Ontario and Quebec two and a half years ago, giving performances in many cities, and has also performed in Buffalo. At present, Miss Triana appears at banquets and other engagements in Toronto.

She is expected to be accompanied by Miss Eliza Lopez, who is studying with her in Toronto.

Charles Dobias, Violinist, Will Give Noon Recital

Charles Dobias, 20-year-old Pass Arts student, registered in St. Michael's College, is carving another niche in his career today at 1 p.m. as one of Canada's up-and-coming young violinists, when he will give one of a series of noon-hour recitals in the East Common Room of Hart House. He will be accompanied on the piano by another of the University's best musicians, Jimmie MacDonald of U.C.

It was several years after Charles came to Canada in 1931 from Czechoslovakia before he took up the violin in earnest, although he does somewhat sheepishly admit that it started originally when his father once gave him a toy instrument for Christmas in his earlier youth. Since then, however, he has climbed the first and hardest rungs on the ladder to recognition and success only after concentrated effort and practice, however as we are finding out every day, not to go unwarded.

Last year he was presented with the Musical Scholarship of the Toronto Conservatory of Music, which netted him $250.

At the same time, while only in his first year of University, he had the extremely responsible position of Concert Master of the University Symphony Orchestra, he gave many recitals locally as well, similar to the one that he is going to give this noon.

At the close of the last session he catered the Canadian Army Show as a violinist in the orchestra. Remaining with them until he was about to go to England, he was discharged and returned to University towards the end of November, along with many other ex-servicemen.

Since he has been back, what with taking lessons from Kathleen Parlow, playing on his many radio programs, and practising for all these events, he's had quite a time getting caught up in his work. Among the many radio shows on which he plays are the Tip Top Clothiers and the Cashmere Bouquet shows, with Samuel Hershenhorn's orchestra and The Mart Kenney program. Starting tomorrow night, he will have his own regular radio program, which will take place the last Wednesday of every month at 7:30 p.m. over CJBC.

The program that he has chosen for this noon's recital will consist of Balada by Dvorjak, Romanza Andalusia by Sarasate, Pollaniza by Wieniawski, Romance by Wieniawski, and Songs of House by Smetana.

International Student's Club

A few years ago there was instituted on this campus an organization known as the International Students' Club. The purpose of this group was to promote an exchange of ideas among students from different climes and cultures, thus making possible a wider understanding between Canadian students and those visiting and studying at our University. This club held regular meetings at which the students were addressed by notables from foreign countries; the address was usually followed by a formal open forum discussion and then by an informal social gathering at which those students present had an opportunity of meeting and knowing students from outside of Canada.

However, from a very successful beginning, this group has gradually fallen into a state of inactivity, largely because of a dropping off of attendance at the meetings. This general lethargy on the part of students toward such a valuable and constructive organization is not to be passed off lightly. True, it may be argued that with the increasing of academic pressure students find very little time for such extra-curricular diversions; nevertheless, there has been no noticeable diminishing of attendance at University dances of late years. Another excuse that may be offered is that any such group requires strong leadership and organization, and that the lack of such leadership has undoubtedly accounted for the decline of this International Students' Club. There must, however, be leaders to be found amongst students at this University whose homes are in other parts of the world, and this is just another indication of the widespread apathy of students toward such an intellectual and courageous effort.

It is often said that one very certain way of promoting lasting peaceful relations in the world's community of nations is the promulgation of accurate information regarding the culture, conditions and environment of the various countries. Due to individual bias and propaganda dispersed for a variety of reasons, this is a very difficult, if not impossible, task. It is through such media as the International Students' Club that this task may, perhaps, be accomplished. Therefore, it is the duty of every student, as well as to his own benefit, to support such an organization to the very limit of his capacity and to derive therefrom a maximum of profit.

Indoctrination

In recent years there has been much work done in the very important field of child psychology and the general problems of the raising of children. The conclusions reached in this science, as it may well be termed, should be of special importance to university students, many of whom will in the near future be faced with the problems that confront parents. As men and women who have enjoyed the benefits of a university education, they should prove that they are especially able and fitted by virtue of that education to bring their children up to be better and more conscientious citizens than perhaps they themselves were.

The indoctrination of children is, according to leading psychologists, one of the commonest causes of group tension and the resulting instability in our society. Children growing up in the future must be prepared to cope with the increasingly complex problems that beset modern society. The question naturally arises as to how far parents should impose their own beliefs on their young. Inasmuch as it gives the child stability, indoctrination is necessary, but beyond that it is conducive to the creation of the unquestioning mind which is one of the main elements that retards the advance of civilization.

But one might well ask where the dividing line is to be drawn. The child should believe in our type of society, which we consider to be, in principle if not in practice, the highest form of body politics; thus, when the child matures, he will not be faced with conflict but will be able to adhere to our principles until he is able to justify them by means of his own developing philosophy and as he sees its progressive aspects and moral superiority over other forms.

Childhood indoctrination is, however, the seat of prejudice; therein lies the danger. If the parents of the future can apply wisdom in the quantitative, and sincerity in the qualitative, aspect of this all-important task, perhaps the world of tomorrow will offer a more secure and pleasant place in which to live.

Manitoba Soph Cops Play Prize

Winnipeg—(CUP)—Meridith Robinson, second year Arts student, is the winner of the Student Playright Contest sponsored by Public Relations Committee of the University of Manitoba, it was announced last week.

The winning play, "An Eye for an Eye," is termed a "psychological drama," involving themes of love and murder, and is the author's first attempt at writing his own scripts. Meridith has been interested in dramatics for the past few years, taking part in the winning play of last year's Drama Festival, "Riders to the Sea," which also won first place in the District Drama Festival.

"A Funny Thing," by Tom C. Osborne, second year Science student, was awarded honorable mention.

S.P.S. Debate Topic Is Co-ed Hart House

"Should an Institution such as Hart House be Co-educational or Not?" is the topic for the debate to be held tomorrow at 4:30 in Room S-25 of the Engineering Building.

Supporting the affirmative are Jack Jarrel, Mechanical III, and John Marion, Mechanical III; and on the negative side are Ken Jay, Mechanical III and Harold Kohler, Engineering I.

"We want to see a bigger turnout than before," said the chairman of the debate, Sally Macdonald, of fourth year Engineering Physics. "The reason why there are no women to defend themselves is that the men thought the whole thing up and then, too, we women have fought for it so much that it is a relief to have the men do it now."

Narrow Viewpoint in Teaching, Local and Cultural Differences, are Causes of Race-prejudices, Hart States

CAPACITY AUDIENCE

Speaking before a capacity audience at U.C. last night on the subject "Group Antagonisms," Professor C. W. M. Hart of the Department of Sociology, opened the series of lectures on minorities.

Outlining the reasons why people act as they do in regard to minorities, he cited three main causes. First, the human is flexible and variable, and if one is trained from childhood up along certain lines, nearly anything can be produced. An example of this is the Hitler youth. Secondly, the varying conditioning systems or culture into which a man can be born affect his adult thinking. This leads to the third cause—that of local patriotism, in which the man thinks that his way must be right. Secure in his local beliefs, he goes about living naturally until he meets people of a different tradition. When he meets something strange, he reacts to it in the manner taught him by local ritual.

Prof. Hart then went on to point out some of the rationalizations we make as to the cause of group antagonism. Some blame it on Capitalism, saying that that system thrives on inter-racial war. Others trace it back farther to a period of European imperialism, where the struggle to create colonies led to the conquering of colored tribes. "But competition and capitalism do not create the mud of prejudice; they merely stir it up," said Prof. Hart.

"The fundamental factor is strangeness," he went on to say. "Our educational system is too localized." He pointed out that our schools teach only subjects of patriotic interest, and that it isn't until the student reaches university that he learns history other than that of his own people.

This tends to make us narrow in our viewpoint, and other cultures remain strange, he contended. And when a group is strange, we are prone to judge it by its faults rather than by its virtues, he continued. In dealing with our own groups we judge individuals as individuals, whereas with a strange group we judge the whole group by the action of one of its individuals, he said.

The answer to the problem then, Prof. Hart thinks, lies in broader education. Each case of prejudice should be investigated individually, for the solution to the Negro prejudice problem will not be the same as that of the Hebrew problem. Wider education would lead to the eradication of the race myths, and to the substitution of facts.

New Light

Conservatory Concert Hall

The opening recital of the Society for Contemporary Music last Saturday night was a tremendous success. After a few introductory remarks by the president of the Society, Dr. A. Walter, two string quartets and two songs, all by young Canadian composers, were presented.

The program started with the Quartet 1943 by H. Somers. Of the four movements originally written only three were played. It is a work vigorous, energetic, and sincere, yet filled with youthful pessimism and disillusion. Protest, cynicism, and bewilderment permeate the first movement leading into a plaintive second movement, and rounded off by an attempt at smiling in the third.

Godfrey Ridout's two songs for soprano and oboe, Virginia and New Hampshire, both based on poems by T. S. Eliot, are particularly interesting compositions. Somewhat reminding of Arabic music in atmosphere, the oboe follows rather than leads the voice throughout, making for a very peculiar and striking effect.

The program concluded with a Quartet in F minor by Oscar Morawetz, which mirrored to quite a degree the atmosphere of the composer's native Prague. Although more academic and conventional than the other parts of the program, this quartet shows to great advantage Morawetz's admirable gift of harmonization of the instruments and artistic polish, stressed by melodious melancholy in the second and by gaiety in the third movement.

We cannot but express our deep appreciation to the Society for Contemporary Music for encouraging new Canadian chamber music in such a splendid way, and hope for more recitals of this kind.

Bride Saw Red, O'Malley Wed

A lavender and chartreuse linotype machine of their very own was the feature gift of a Varsity shower held at the University Press last night for Shamus O'Malley, superintendent editor, and his bride, the former Heltzer J. Skelter, who exchanged vows and curtsies at the Church of St. Champus the Martyr in Manhattan last week.

"There comes a time in the life of every editor," said O'Malley in a short farewell speech to condoling intimates, "when shdrlushdrldflufflappapatomaxffl etain STOP THE PRESS."

Asked to say this over again slowly for the benefit of plodding reporters, Mr. O'Malley explained lamely that he had forgotten what he was going to say. He offered, however, to express his views on any subject reporters cared to mention.

This offer finding no takers, the program continued, typewriter ribbons being twined around bride and groom and "The Prisoner's Song" being rendered by a leather-lunged chorus with linotype obligato. (Dr. Shrdlu at the keyboard.)

The personal linotype, gift of The Varsity staff, was unveiled with a tasteless speech by Editor Mothballs. Other gifts included a large poster of Niagara Falls to be used as a background for wedding pictures, a Gothic dog-house, and a framed copy of the Riot Act.

Managing Editor McCrab contributed a jar of fermented horse-radish which he had been trying to get rid of for some time, while Hank Razbry donated a collection of embalmed mosquitoes with the remark that when you're setting up house you never know what will come in handy.

For travelling, the bride wore leather blinkers, an engaging smile, and a smart two-piece suit trimmed with cow- (continued on page 9)

Water Babies!

We have been asked to contribute to that noble institution of The Varsity, namely, the S.O.S. Being quite broke after our contributions to the other institution, the I.S.S., we are forced to limit our discussion to a particular athletic bias, namely, water-polo. Contrary to common belief, this game is played neither with sea-horses nor with mallets; the only equipment required for this noble sport is an expanse of water, a ball, and two teams of seven men each, those men having gargantuan strength, tremendous lungs, a healthy disregard for rules, and at least some swimming ability.

In general, the idea of the game, after the referee has raised a peculiar basket from the surface of the water to release the ball, is for one team to so position itself that the ball can be hurled past the goalie into the opposing net. Just like soccer, isn't it? And more often than once does a foot find its way to an opponent's body, hidden from the referee's wrath of the referee. During the course of the healthful scrimmage, a defence-man will gaily dunk an unwary wing-man who is blithely preparing to hurl the ball into the goal.

The first public exhibition this year of University water-polo was held last Saturday night—Athletic Night—when some six teams swam their way to the results that were posted in yesterday's Varsity. Large audiences observed these matches, although at times we felt that our audience had only secondary interest in our games, being the blow-off from the basketball games.

However, it is for the sake of those who already have an interest, or would like to have an interest, in this breathing (for both players and spectators) game that we have printed this article. Every men's faculty and college has one or more teams, so we ask that every undergrad and co-ed be present at the particular Athletic Night when their team is playing. The rules are reasonably simple to understand, being summed up thus: get the ball to the opponent's goal by co-operating with your teammates, and when in close check with an opponent do your utmost to move past him, but for the sake of the rest of your team don't let the referee see your utmost effort, for he usually frowns upon such activities.

Eventually, we hope to see inter-collegiate water-polo back into the niche of honor that it held before war; Toronto Varsity Blues splashed their way to victorious fame quite often, and from the available swimming talent at school this year there is evident the makings of teams equal to those of the past. The game, the teams, and the trainers all deserve the attendance and support of the students.

Vic...

We have been wending our way wearily round the campus for the last couple of days, pecking furtively around corners as is our wont, but we have to admit that there is one on this campus who can catch us at any time. Not only in Vic does Helen Shaw catch us to impart news of swimming, but in the Harbor Street Sweetery, on the street itself, and even in U.C. rotunda. We are beaten, Helen, so we hereby print stuff on the Vic swimmers, bless their hearts! They have a publicity agent par excellence.

Vic is having its swimming prelim tonight at U.T.S. pool. They want everyone—and that means you, even if you don't swim—to come out. This test will decide who will represent Vic at the big meets. Now, beyond that, we aren't sure whether this will be the final team. They are holding a big Splash Party now, since this is the second year—an annual affair—on February 5. Whether this will yield more team members is something in doubt here. Anyway, everyone out for that, too. It is guaranteed that you will have a good time.

U.C. ...

The bowling situation needs a quick look-into on the U.C. front. Judy Henderson tells us that all the U.C. girls who wish to be eligible for the U.C. bowling team must have bowled 4 games by Thursday, Feb. 1. Also, girls, pu-leaze leave your cards on file at the alleys.

St. Hilda's, P.H.E. ...

P.H.E. II has lost again to St. Hilda's in the return match. It was a hard fight for each team, although St. Hilda's seemed to have the edge on the Phys-edders in passing and team-play. The action stayed about two-thirds of the time in the P.H.E. net, but often menaced the Saints' goalie. P.H.E.'s Gwen Earle has more speed than anyone else on the ice, while Ruth Weststead starred on the second line. The Saints' Marie Fletcher, Joan Fletcher, and Marg. Alexander turned in their smooth performance again.

We noticed that there is a very neat trick in tripping these days, to wit, you put your stick between the other fellow's ankles and twist. We may be a kill-joy, but we deplore this action. Tripping is the one trick that one can't quite take. Next time, we are going to deplore it with names!

Grey-North By-Election To Be U.C. Debate Subject

Offers Opportunity for Expression of Undergraduate Political Opinion on Approaching By-election

ALL DEBATERS WELCOME

"Resolved, that General McNaughton should not be elected in Grey North" will be the topic of the debate to be held by the U.C. Parliament this Friday at 4 p.m. in the Junior Common Room of U.C.

Prime Minister the Rt. Hon. Betsy Mosbaugh and the Hon. Cathleen Sygne will take the affirmative while the Hon. Ed. Safarian and the Hon. Sheila MacQueen will uphold the negative.

"The possibility that Prime Minister Mackenzie King might fulfil his threat to call a general election in the event that General McNaughton's candidacy was contested in Grey North," stated Ralph Shepherd, publicity director of U.C. Literary and Athletic Society, caused some uneasiness to the Prime Minister of the U.C. Parliament, the Rt. Hon. Betsy Mosbaugh. She felt that this would result in the house debating on a dead issue."

When it was announced Monday night that there would be no general election prior to the by-election in Grey North, it was felt by the Literary Society that it would afford an opportunity for undergraduates to clarify and express their own opinions on one of the most important by-elections in Canadian political history.

Mr. Shepherd announced that the U.C. Parliament would welcome debaters from other faculties in a cross-sample of student opinion.

Students of Laval Arrive in Mexico

Doors of S.P.S. Open Tonight

Green ties will flutter at the "School Open House" when the engineers entertain their friends tonight at all School buildings with the exception of the "School House" itself.

For this event the chemical, electrical, thermodynamic, hydraulic and material testing departments plan to get together to show the life, the work and the secrets of an engineer.

After the show, refreshments will be served either in the new study room in the Mechanical Building or in the first floor hall in the Mining Building.

This will be the second event of its kind, the first having been held last year on a smaller scale.

One innovation this year will be that the thermodynamics display will actually be a lab period for the third year men. It is asked that only fourth year students bring guests.

Lectures, Labs, Disrupted; Building In Use Fifty Years

Explosion Announces Fire; Sprinkler System Turned on Immediately; Students Calm and Orderly in Exit

NO SERIOUS DAMAGE

Three hundred students were transformed into dynamos of action yesterday when fire estimated at a $2500 loss broke out in the Chemical Building at noon. Clambering out on to window ledges, those students whose passage was blocked by flames shooting up the stairs, sought refuge from smoke-filled halls and lecture rooms, until firemen effected their rescue with ladders. Three people received minor burns about the face and hands in attempting to escape.

The fire started in an old elevator shaft which had been reconverted into a laboratory. Inflammable material being used in defence project of E.E.19 which spontaneously ignited while being processed caused the fire, it was officially announced.

Hearing the explosion, Professor G. F. Wright, who was lecturing to a group of sixty students, tossed his chalk on the ledge of the blackboard and ran instantly out of the room to turn on the flooding system. By the time his amazed students had comprehended what had happened, the sprinkling system was combating the flames.

"I must compliment the students of the University of Toronto," Dr. Wright said, "on the well-mannered and polite way in which they let their professor get out first."

When students reached the door of the lecture room, smoke and fumes barred their way. They returned to the room and contemplated jumping from the windows. "But as we looked down at the long drop, we decided that we wouldn't jump until it was absolutely necessary," one student told The Varsity.

Within twenty minutes, Jim Brown, a demonstrator in Chemistry, made his way up the smouldering stairs to bring the trapped students to safety. Once a passageway was cleared, the students

Since 1895, the Chemical Building has witnessed a constant increase in number of its students

MODERN—WHEN BUILT

The Chemistry Building which was damaged by fire yesterday afternoon is fifty years old. Built in 1895, it was considered by an eminent authority "to comply with the latest needs and trends of the time."

The building was designed by D. B. Dick who was also the architect of the Biology and Library buildings. Since its erection, few alterations have been made to the original structure.

According to the University Calendar of 1895, "The new chemical building is now completed and will be ready for occupation at the beginning of this session. It will, in addition to two lecture rooms with accommodation for 300 and 100 students respectively, contain special laboratories for qualitative analysis and for prosecution of original investigation. The total number of working places in these laboratories will exceed two hundred."

Since 1895, enrolment in courses involving chemistry and in Chemistry itself has increased by more than fifty per cent.

Newman Ball To be at Castle

The annual Newman Ball is to be held this year on Feb. 8 at Casa Loma. Ellis McIntock, his trumpet and his orchestra will be featured for the evening.

Dancing will be from 9 till 12:30 and, as an added attraction, a coffee party will be held at Newman Club after the dance.

Another highlight of the evening will be a draw for a 1945 pass for any Famous Players theatre in Canada, which will admit two persons twice a week.

GRADUATING ARTS SCIENCE STUDENTS

All Arts Science students, both men and women, who expect to graduate in 1945 are required by the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel to fill out questionnaires which are available at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall.

The following students are affected:

- (a) Those enrolled in the Honor Courses in Groups C and D.
- (b) Those enrolled in the General Course or the Pass Course and taking science courses as three of their five regular subjects.

'Quickly Lancelot; A Lady in Distress'

"Resolved, that the age of chivalry is not dead," will be the topic of the debate to be held at Brennan Hall, St. Michael's College, tomorrow.

Mike Mahaney, III Pass, and Salfec Mosteller-West will uphold the affirmative. The negative will be upheld by Dan McGarity, IV English, and Jim McIsaac, II Pass.

The executive of the St. Michael's Senate Club express the hope that the debate will be conducted in a light and humorous way and give the affirmative an opportunity to express their opinion of the present age.

AGE OF REVOLUTIONS

"Nationalism," said Professor L. Burt in the concluding lecture in the Armstrong series at Victoria College yesterday, "is like electricity, for it is easy to see its manifestation but difficult to tell what it is."

Continuing, he said that it was not a common race, language, country, government, religion or culture that made a nation, but a combination of these. Nationalism is rooted in a consciousness of having something in common. However, while this will pull a nation together it will also pull nations apart.

The evolution of French nationalism was liberal, democratic, and humanitarian. The French wished to rescue others from tyranny, but they also treated as enemies those who refused to throw off their chains.

The Revolution awakened national spirit in other countries, he continued, as in the Balkans and Italy. However, nationalism was also a reaction to French conquest and repression in Spain. As the French Empire diluted French nationalism, the forces that

The state plus nationalism, plus militarism, plus economic nationalism, equals the totalitarian state, he said. The future must be faced with the knowledge of a change in the tactics of warfare. Previously, because of the problem of supply the conqueror had to preserve society in the conquered area or he would be

The Other Side

(EDITOR'S NOTE: We have expressed our opinions in this column on compulsory peacetime military training. We publish below an editorial on the same subject written in The Christian Science Monitor. Although we do not entirely agree with some of the arguments posited, it is only just to hear both sides of the question.)

Rarely have we seen so much pre-heating of a subject as is involved in the warm and waxing discussion of peacetime conscription for the United States. Even before President Roosevelt announced that he would send a message to Congress on universal military training and before the substance of proposals offered in Congress was known, citizens and civic groups were issuing statements and passing resolutions. The prospects are good for this question to be thoroughly aired before the Nation makes its decision.

There have been two approaches to the question: 1. The military chiefs have become convinced that a year's training of youth somewhere between 18 and 21 is needed as matter of basic military preparedness. Some advocates have emphasized instead the advantages in physical hardening and learning to live democratically with other Americans of all social strata and sectional origins, but the military leaders are thinking in terms of conditioning men to discipline, to military organization, and a knowledge of weapons.

They know that weapons change, but declare that men who have had some training adapt themselves to new weapons and combat conditions far more quickly than raw recruits. They have heard the argument also that the chief reliance for defense must be upon air forces, the navy, or new devices, but remain unconvinced and ask, "What would you do today without the infantry?" There is reason to believe that they are interested not only in developing a trained reserve of soldiers, but in training officers in handling large units and in holding the military organization together.

2. The other approach has been represented especially by labor, educational and church groups. They either oppose the whole plan for universal training or they wish to demilitarize it in varying degrees, placing the emphasis on education. Some politicians seem to think that they must "sugar-coat" the proposal by making it an "educational program." Others see some possibility of getting government funds for colleges in their districts.

But a survey of school superintendents conducted by the National Education Association showed only 48 per cent favoring mixing education with military training, while the Association of American Colleges adopted a resolution urging that the program be designed for defense, not as a boon to health or education. This seems to be the trend of other opinion.

Labor unions oppose a year of military training as a step toward regimentation and militarization. Some church groups take a similar position and also express fears that moral standards may be impaired by sending youth into a "camp atmosphere." Certainly most Americans will want assurance of safeguards on both these counts before turning their boys over to the Army.

Another opposition argument is that the United States should put its trust in a world peace organization and that adoption of a new military training program would only show distrust. This point may be more attractive in the abstract than in practical peace planning, for America is going to have to be strong even under a collective security system.

There is a considerable movement to postpone any action until after the war. It may be logical to adopt a national service act to more fully mobilize Americans to win the war before adopting preparedness measures for peacetime. But it will be necessary to safeguard against a sudden destruction of the Nation's military organization when peace comes, and it is not too soon to have a thoroughgoing debate which will test and try all the arguments in a complex question.

The Editor,
The Varsity,

Dear Madame:

I write in commentary on a situation which received considerable notice in your feature columns recently, to wit, the mixing of the sexes in the University Library reading-rooms. Contrary to some expectations it has not become a widespread practice. Some hardy men did continue to use the women's reading-room for a few days after the men's room opened, and some girls studied in the other reading-room. But both groups appear to have lost heart, for the normal segregation is now completely restored.

Granting the danger of generalizing from this one observation, it does support the view that studying is best carried on without the distraction of sex-appeal.

To be more vicious, this convention which the students have accepted is mute testimony against those pseudo-psychologists who roam around telling of the horrible fate of our poor little undernourished sex-urges. When there's work to be done, we can get along pretty well without them.

Sincerely,

Roy Clark.

On Kozatchokas And Wolfhounds

Eaton Auditorium

Any remaining doubt anyone might have entertained that the Russians lack stamina, vocal or otherwise, was quickly dispelled last night when the General Platoff Don Cossack Chorus filled Eaton Auditorium with the full-throated power of lusty Slavic melodies.

On the whole, the group were at their best when they co-ordinated their considerable talents on the more fiery martial airs in their repertoire; but when they attempted the more artistically subtle portions, the impression conveyed, in a way, was much more solemn and subdued.

The far-from-considerable audience, though, did their utmost to infuse some warmth with genuinely enthusiastic applause. Probably most highly lauded was an encore, The Laughing Polka, in which the melodiously-boomed ha, ha's of the singers was infectiously caught up and re-echoed by the listeners.

The chorus, we thought, was harmoniously impressive in the fine shadings of the hymn, Glory To Thee, O Lord, by Gretchaninoff; passionately melancholy in a soft requiem, Snow Over Russia; properly martial in The Song Of General Platoff, (which threw in a whistle for good measure); and merely adequate in Kipper's popular Song Of The Plains (which did not indulge in whistling, but did append the clap clap of a hoofbeat, as clicked by a singer's ingenious tongue.)

Changing the mood, a loud boom was heard off-stage, and then, like two Russian genii popped from an Aladdin's lamp, out bounded onto the platform two Caucasian Cossack dancers, both fine we thought. One flailed the air with the traditional leg-flinging kozatchok, the other spinning about while precariously balancing daggers from his teeth. Almost equally precarious was the competent conducting of

CHAPTER THREE

In seven minutes McGeech was abreast of the situation—the fractured pool-cues, the pilfered cash-register, the mangled memoirs, the missing minute-hand. The brow of the Warden wrinkled more and more as he recounted the inexplicable happenings, furrow multiplying on furrow until his nose had retreated beneath his toupee.

But McGeech displayed no concern. For he was McGeech, the Terror of the Underworld, the Anticipator of his quarry's every move. He asked but one question—

"Are there frogs in the Taddle?"

"Of course there are frogs in the Taddle," snapped the Warden, absently impaling his pen-nib like a dart in the ceiling. "If you will forgive me, a stupid question."

"Not at all, my dear Warden. I beg you to consider your answer carefully. You are sure there are frogs in the Taddle?"

"Absolutely sure. We strain them out of the water before it is served as coffee."

"Excellent, my dear Warden. And what do you do with the frogs?"

"We serve them as chicken."

"That is all I need ask. I shall have your criminals by nightfall."

The Taddle—murky, inscrutable, serpentine, besliming stone walls beneath the foundations of Hart House; reflecting no glint of daylight, but now loathsome mirroring the flashlight of Dr. McGeech.

Dr. McGeech was perched on a stone in mid-stream, spearing frogs.

That is, you might have thought he was spearing frogs. He was painstakingly disguised as one of those itinerant spears of frogs that occasionally poach in those subterranean recesses. He had donned hip-boots, and procured a frog-spearer's license and a collapsible rubber boat. But the full-throated serenade of the frogs had no charms for his ears. He was waiting . . . listening . . .

Nor did he listen in vain. Down the dark stream, out of the enfolding shadows, came drifting a battered row-boat, its occupant singing in Hindustani as his prow cleft the dim waters.

Only one denizen of the Toronto underworld habitually sang in Hindustani as he worked—the Pakir Alloh-allova. McGeech quivered with attention

TELEQUATIC MEET — SECOND EDITION . . .

Slightly under a year ago the masterminds at the Hart House athletic wing and their counterpart at McGill got together through the courtesy of the Royal Mail and came up with a brainchild—the telegraphic swim meet. It wasn't because the Blues went down to defeat but rather it was the inefficient manner in which the results poured in from McGill that left a small amount of pungency with us.

For some weeks now official communiques have issued forth from here to Montreal, Kingston and London, and the second meet of this sort has been arranged for on the first day of March. McGill and Queen's are definitely in, while final confirmation is forthcoming from Western.

Due to rather obvious reasons, the rules governing the meet of a year ago have been thoroughly overhauled and the new laws have gathered favor with the local swimming fraternity.

At eight-fifteen on the day scheduled, the Blues will plunge into the Hart House pool for the initial event—the 300-yard medley relay. Simultaneously, swim artists at the other three colleges will do likewise. All results will be forwarded to Mrs. Horton, Registrar of the C.I.A.U., and from her office will emerge the winners of the meet.

The events are six in number—the aforementioned medley relay, 50-yard free style, 100 back stroke, 100 free, 100 breast stroke, and the 200 free style relay. Scoring is on a 5-3-1 system for the individual events, 6-3-1 for the medley, and 8-4-1 in the free style relay.

Meanwhile, the Blues are hard at work organizing the squad as most of last year's personnel graduated last spring.

"A" NIGHT — SECOND EDITION . . .

Mac Cutcheon's basketball Blues really have their work out when they hook up with Wayne Tartars on Saturday evening. The visitors are on the crest of a 5-3 season, but will likely stretch it to six wins as they are scheduled to meet Western at London on Thursday. The Mustangs have yet to turn back the Green and Gold in five attempts. In fact, on but one occasion have they counted more than 23 points on the Tartars.

Varsity's luck has been much the same, with three straight losses. The first encounter ended in a disastrous 73-37 setback. Then Warren Stevens' charges stiffened, but to little avail as Wayne came out on top by scores of 50-35 and 62-44.

Saturday's game will be the outstanding match of the year as American teams have always been crowd-pleasers in the past. The Blues will be out to avenge those three defeats.

Of course, the pessimists do claim that the Blues are doomed to defeat. We'll be around to see for ourselves!

Hockey seems to be the main drawing-card in the women's athletics these days. Those who sauntered over to the tussles yesterday no doubt saw lots of thrills and spills as Vic emerged the winner. We might as well tell you that we are going to be very unbiased about all this and give you the write-up minus the flag-waving.

In the first tilt, Vic II took Meds-S.P.S. to the tune of 1-0. The score was very indicative of the play. The girls seemed to have fun as they chased the elusive puck up and down the ice. It is true that their playing technique lacks the finesse (if it could be called that!) of some of the other teams, but they outweigh this by their enthusiasm. On the whole, the game was scrambling. Both sides had quite a few break-aways but the puck was apparently hard to handle. Meds-S.P.S. had some very good skaters but their puck-carrying was rather nil at times. Both teams had the happy faculty of getting rid of the puck as soon as they received it. We would have liked to have seen some good stick-handling just once. Jean Dunean planted the puck in the net in the second period and for the rest of the game it was rather a survival of the fittest, but it was fun. Beryl Rutherford played a nice game on Vic's defence.

Last night at Little Vic Rink, Vic I took P.H.E. by a score of 1-0. As the score would indicate, the play was anything but one-sided. Marg Pellow executed some nice saves in the P.H.E. nets as she more than once kept the puck out. Dinny Russell and Kay MacMillan teamed up on break-aways, but they were hampered by Betty Fullerton and Mary Stewart, Vic's guards. Shirley Pearce netted the one goal for the Scarlet and Gold on a pass set-up by Leone Eunsion. The passing was definitely not up to par. Too often the play was scrambling.

It was gratifying to see a few spectators. We are overlooking those males who lean over the boards and roar at the antics of the female hockeyists. Granted their hockey technique is not the acme of perfection, but they seem to get a lot of enjoyment out of it all.

It seems that all is not well in the volleyball world. To date the only score turned in is when P.H.E. "A" defeated U.C. by 40 to 30. If someone would take time to phone in the score, everyone concerned would be much happier. If this cannot be done, how about getting the game results in at the S.A.C. office the same day, or early the following day? It is quite a chore and headache to try and get the scores of the different games played from day to day, so let's have more co-operation.

Fleet-Footed Medsmen Capture Track Honors

Lewis Lopes Away With 100-yard Dash Title in Field of 190 Trackmen; Meds Also Win Relay

The fourth week of the indoor track meet is over and in both of this week's events Meds' trackmen came out on top.

The sprinters got their dig in with the running of the 100-yard event. A total of 190 men ran, and nine of them beat the 12 second mark with plenty to spare. George Lewis of Meds came in first, with a time of 11 seconds flat, away ahead of Matthews of P.H.E., last year's winner. Vic men placed second and ners with times of 11.3 and 11.35 respectively. Matthews of P.H.E. ranked fourth, Fordyce of S.P.S. fifth, and four runners were tied for sixth place—Nord of School, Davies of Meds, Buskley of St. Mike's, and Armstrong of S.P.S.

The other event of the week's program was the 2-mile relay, with teams of four men each. Only 24 men participated, and teams from Meds, Vic and S.P.S. finished tops in that order. Meds' team was made up of James, Mowbray, Lewis and Fyfe, and they ran the race in 10:00.5. The Vic men were Sloan, Horning, Grant and Findlay, and School's team was made up of Thornton, Storch-

Trinity Downs U.C. 7-0; Enters 3-Way Group Tie

Theologs Run Up Three-Goal Lead in First Period; U.C. Puckmen Unable to Beat Goalkeeper Appleton

Trinity "A" hockey team trounced U.C. 11 7-0 in yesterday's only scheduled game of the interfaculty league. Displaying superior passing ability, Trinity opened the scoring at the four-minute mark when Mitchell broke through the U.C. defence. Sage brought the second Trinity goal shortly afterwards. The U.C. squad attempted to rally towards the end of the period but Higginbotham of Trinity managed to drive home the third counter just before the bell.

In the second half the play centred in the U.C. zone with the Trinity squad rushing constantly on the goal. Higginbotham scored the fourth goal for the Red and Black in the third minutes. Bolte followed with the fifth goal shortly afterwards. The scoring ended with two goals by Kingston and Higginbotham, to give Trinity a 7-0 margin.

Clarkson on defence for Trinity played an outstanding game and broke up many of the U.C. plays. Appleton, in the Trinity nets, made some outstanding saves in the final minutes of the game when U.C. pressed for a score.

Today's game makes an interesting three-way tie in the third group. Dent's "A," S.P.S. III, and Trinity "A" each having lost one game. Dents lost to S.P.S. and defeated Trinity, while Trinity defeated S.P.S. It is expected that Trinity and Dents will fight it out for the top spot to gain a berth in the play-offs.

NATIONALISM . . .

raised Napoleon passed to the other side and helped to pull him down.

Freedom from the conqueror rallied nationalism around against Napoleon, the speaker said. With legitimacy as the key-note, Italy and Germany were split up again.

But nationalism was not to be denied. The 19th century was an age of revolutions. Germany, Italy, Belgium, all had their revolutions. On this continent, the Mexican War was the expression of a vigorous nationalism, and the Civil War was fought not over the issue of slavery but the preservation of a national union.

Certain changes have occurred in nationalism in the last quarter of the century. It has spread to the east, and successful nationalism has become arrogant, intolerant, aggressive and addicted to imperialistic grabbing of territory.

as he listlessly went through the motions of spearing frogs.

The man in the drifting boat paid no attention to the hunched fisherman on the rock. Little did he know that the eyes of McGeech, the Terror of the Underworld, were fixed on his every move! All at once he stiffened, stood upright, and raised aloft a gleaming spear.

McGeech recognized that spear, but gave no sign. It was the missing minute-hand of the tower clock!

A thrust, a flash of gleaming metal, a maddening splash, and the Fakir Alhellallowa had transfixed a struggling frog of unusual dimensions. He hauled it, struggling into his boat, forced open its mouth, dipped his hand into a canvas bag, and, removing a gleaming object, forced it down the frog's throat.

Then he threw the frog with a splash into the pool.

As the wounded beast swam wearily through the healing waters, McGeech with a lightning swipe hoisted it from the pool. Stealthily he squeezed its tummy, until with a pop! it gulped up the gleaming object it had been forced to swallow.

McGeech knew that object instantly for what it was—a thrackle-pin from the innards of the missing cash-register!

He had all the evidence he needed. "Fakir Alhellallowa," he shouted, suddenly rising, "I have you cornered. I am McGeech."

But the Fakir without a word leaned forward and with the long minute-hand shoved him off his slippery perch into the pool.

In so doing, he overbalanced himself. The boat capsize, and McGeech, spear, criminal, frog, and the bag of thrackles were born in inextricable confusion, gasping for air, down the oozy stream to the sewers.

Horror! What will befall our hero in this loathsome place? What dark underworld scheme has he uncovered? What are dismembered cash-registers doing inside reluctant frogs? Don't miss Chapter Four!

Spanish Meeting Features Dances

Miss Conchita Triana, dancer, was the guest artist at a meeting of the Spanish Club last night, which was held at the Women's Union.

Miss Teresa Clancy accompanied Miss Triana in three dances and an encore. The three dances were the Alma Torera, the Andalaz, and the Cielo Andalaz.

"I think my audience tonight was very nice, very attentive and very appreciative," commented Miss Triana afterwards. "No, my shoes do not have clickers on them. On the contrary, they have rubber, to stop me from sliding on the floor. And as for my castanets, I got them some time ago in New York."

An unexpected guest was Senor Danilo Brugal Alfau, consul of the Dominican Republic, who had arrived in Toronto not long ago.

"I arrived in this beautiful town of yours in the midst of a great snowstorm, and my train was very late," said Senor Alfau. "I like your club very much, and will bring my friends to it often. I will bring pictures of my country to show you. I do not wish you to regard me as a stranger because I shall see you often."

Peggy Gannham, the president, asked several boys, who came from different parts of the world and who had different accents, to speak to the audience. Four countries were represented.

Sing-song, dancing, and refreshments added to the meeting.

hither and yon

with frank rasky

This column is as sick as the next man about these absent-minded-professor stories, but at last we have finally been tipped off to the absent-minded-professor story to end all absent-minded-professor stories.

It happened, we're told at a Harvard University public meeting, when a certain pedagogical was introducing to a packed hall the speaker, a famous Shakespearean authority.

After a ponderous introduction, brim full of the usual professorial platitudes, the prof closed: "... and so I have no need to disclose the name of this great lecturer and philosopher whose fame, of course, is known to all of you. I speak of the great Miss—Miss—Miss—Miss ..."

His voice faltered off to a weak stammer.

And then, despairingly, he blurted out to his giggling audience: "Damn it all, I've gone and forgotten it; but the queer thing is that I distinctly remember her last name is the same as mine."

MORT AR-BOARD, MORTAR-BOARD, WHAT LIES BENEATH YOU?

It happened at a Prom concert not long ago. A certain student who wears contact lenses had removed one of these devices from his right eye during a Beethoven interlude and put it an arm's length away, so that he could increase the focus and get a better view of the symphony conductor.

At this point an elderly matriarch, sitting directly in front, turned around and, seeing the lens flash in the dark, thought the student had popped out one of his eyes.

So amazed was she that she opened her elderly lips and sounded forth a blood-curdling scream, so piercing that Beethoven was forgotten and the audience turned as one to look to view the calamity.

Meanwhile, the student had popped back his lens, and all that left of the emotional debris was a matriarch whose cheeks were more scarlet than her rouge. IT SHOULDN'T HAPPEN IN THE LIBRARY ROTUNDA.

WIMMIN IS APPALLING DEPARTMENT:

While smoke belched from the windows of the Chemical Building yesterday in the wake of yesterday's conflagration, a co-ed dodged firemen's ladders and tried to make her way into the building.

She was stopped, though, by a newspaper photographer who enquired, "Say, lady, is this where the fire is around here?"

"That's right. And I've got to get inside, because today is the last day for my overdue essay."

Last seen, both were battling their way into the building, the camera-man clutching his flash bulbs, and the co-ed, equally determined, firmly clasping her essay.

JUST BURNING WITH AMBITION.

ROTUNDA-DIALOGUES:

"Well," said one student wearily with a shrug of his shoulders, "as they say in China, 'Woi sher maegorem!'"

"What in heavens does that mean?" inquired his co-frere.

Sighed the first student, still wearily: "How should I know? I don't understand Chinese."

AS CONFUCIUS WOULD INTERPRET—

There's no accounting for co-eds' tastes while relaxing. The publication of the Acadia University took a student poll the other day, asking whether they'd like recordings to replace professors. So one co-ed replies she'd enjoy playing the recordings of a week's lectures while lying in bed recovering from a strenuous week's holidays.

FIRE !!!

filed out without panic or disorder. Joe Finkelstein, III Physiology and Biochemistry, emerged from the smoke-filled library where he had taken refuge and proceeded to collect his scattered water-soaked notes before he would descend to colder regions.

Alan Kahn, Dave White and G. N. Mitford suffered facial and wrist burns, and received treatment at the General Hospital. White broke his ankle when he fell headlong down the water-logged stairs. John Bartlett, III Chemistry, had his hair singed by the flames. "I needed a haircut, anyway," he said. Several students were left coatless when the flames gutted the coat rack beside the elevator shaft. "If Finkelstein could get his notes, I don't see why I couldn't have gotten my coat," said Philip Freedman, III M. & P. "It was heartbreaking to see it burning so nicely as I passed by."

Dr. F. W. Wetmore was lecturing to his class in Chemistry when the fire broke out. Paying slight attention to the commotion without, he continued his lecture until wreaths of smoke began to seep through the walls. "Convinced by that empirical data, he was galvanized into action," remarked one unnamed student.

Lectures were cancelled for the rest of the afternoon but will be resumed today. A battery of cleaners and carpenters have been busy at work cleaning up the debris and mending the charred doors and window sills.

Four engines responded to the alarm turned in by R. O. Brown, research assistant. Fire Deputy Herd stated that most of the damage had been caused by charring and water.

The consensus of opinion seemed to be that the General Platoff Chorus was not quite up to the scratch of the chorus more frequently heard in Toronto, the Don Cossacks, conducted by Serge Jaroff; but generally the Platoff singers were pleasantly entertaining, even to the point of singing God Save the King, naturally, in Russian.

Convocation Hall

The fifth recital in the present series of Organ Recitals was given yesterday afternoon (the day has been changed from Monday to Tuesday) by Eric Rolinson, Mus.Bac., F.R.C.O. The program included works by Bach, Stanford, Franck and Vierne, and was played with unusual vigor and admirable control. The performance was on a par with the others given in this series.

Rather than describe the highlights of Mr. Rolinson's competent performance to the reader, I would like to devote the rest of the column to a discussion of the merits of this series of programs in hopes that somehow it may help boost the attendance which is, as a rule, appallingly small. It is difficult to understand why music-conscious students avoid these concerts, especially as they are given at a time and place convenient to all. It may be taken for granted that many students are mature enough to realize that the organ has provided a unique medium for the expression of some of the greatest thoughts in music. What may not be realized is that it is a medium to which one soon becomes accustomed and one which provides the listener with the same sort of intimate satisfaction that one may derive from

Madam Editor,

On behalf of the course of Honor Psychology, which Mr. R. Clark slandered in his recent editorial, we, on behalf of the Class of 4T7, submit this reply.

We maintain that the opinion expressed by him is one that is rather immature, one that would be given by a person who has not yet worked with women, and expects to continue to live and work in a similar hermit-like world.

Women are definitely a power on the campus. Too, they are gaining even greater influence in the affairs of the world. Mr. Clark must some day realize this, and the blow will come to him much more easily if he learns to adjust himself to their presence while his character is still in a relatively plastic state.

A poll has again been conducted to obtain public opinion regarding segregation of the sexes in the library, and the majority are agreed that it is a bad thing, that they would like to see joint reading rooms similar to those in University College and Victoria College.

Does Mr. Clark intimate that studying of lower calibre is done in those libraries than in the main library? Has he any statistics to back up his opinion?

If Mr. Clark finds himself distracted by what he calls "sex-appeal" when there are women present in the same study-room as he, we suggest that he petition for a seminar, or some other such cave, and not advocate segregation for the rest of the students. He suggests that he is generalizing upon his own reaction, and we are inclined to agree with him, for the poll conducted indicates that he is wrong.

There are always those reactionary individuals who will refuse to comply with innovations, which general opinion reveals are for the better, and the example of the again segregated reading-rooms is a sign that their force has won out. Such reactionaries seem to be a minority, but since they have the strength of convention on their side, they have discouraged the progressive tendencies of students who are willing to accept members of the opposite sex as students, and students alone (during school hours, of course).

This is a country where both sexes are on an equal plane; submitting to a move which separates them causes us to regress to the days when "a woman's place" was in the home. We urge Mr. Clark to realize that they are fellow-students and should be considered as such during school hours.

Yours sincerely,

SIDNEY M. JOURARD

Wave of Future Breaks; Men's Lit. Broke Too

Mopping up of stragglers by Amazon storm-troops and redecoration of the U.C. Men's Common Room in accordance with the tastes of the New Order were the features of the week-end's action on the political front. Culminating the successful revolution, Miss Lily (Muscles) Catkin was officially installed as president of the U.C. Men's Lit Society.

"They staggered and stumbled in the past, but we are gloriously Lit," Miss Catkin proclaimed in her inaugural address. "The wave of the Future has broken at last about the heads of the men. We claim no personal credit. We are but Wavelets of that stupendous Wave."

Miss Catkin revealed that paper frills in soft pastel colors would be issued in future to all men entering the Common Room. "These are designed for wearing around the neck," she elucidated. "We feel that this will lend an air of informality to the severity of college life."

"We will in future drape the men with daisy-chains," she continued. "We have conformed to men's customs for too long. But we are wearing the pants now."

Miss Catkin went on to warn her listeners that violation of the new color scheme would not be tolerated. "Violations of the new color scheme will not be tolerated," she warned. "Men whose ties do not match their socks will in future be debarré from the premises."

Miss Catkin then revealed that pots of Poison Ivy would be arranged at strategic intervals around the Common Room to complete the desired aesthetic effect. "A rose by any other name..." she quipped wittily.

Copies of Good Housekeeping and Harm are to be introduced into the magazine rack, Miss Catkin is also said to have said, they say. "Isn't it amazing what the Readers Digest," commented Principal Myth. "But I suppose they're at Liberty past their PUNCHES if they have Time. That's Life, I guess."

Asked what had inspired the women's dramatic decision to move into new headquarters, Miss Catkin replied that they deemed it advisable to consolidate their position. "After all, we had to have a place where we could pick up our male," she said.

From beneath his paper frill, ex-president Blob Gel could be heard making a disgusting noise with his empty check-book.

Mix Sexes in Library? Yes Say Most Students!

By Ruth Cohen

The question: "Should there be a mixing of the sexes in the Library?" raised this fall has been brought under discussion again. Roy Clark, II Pol. Sci., stated yesterday in a letter to the editor that, regarding the fate of "our undernourished sex-urges, when there's work to be done, we can get along pretty well without them."

Contrary to Clark's opinion, the majority of students interviewed on the campus expressed a protest against segregation of the sexes, though Jim Kyles, III Engineering Physics, asked: "How can you work with a bunch of distracting women?"

The only other interviewee in favor of segregation was A. Malcolm of II Pass, who says: "There should be no hard and fast rule against women and men studying together; it should be optional. But what I can't stand about these women is the way they click-clickclick at their knitting all day long! They drive me nuts! Women are fine as a sex, but not in a library."

In favor of co-educational library activity, the first year Physio girls say that they are with women so much they have to go to the library to even see a man. "Definitely no segregation..." they pleaded. Of the same massaging cult, Betty Chamberlain believes that "it stimulates interest, 'cause if you're bored with what you are reading, you can always look around and see the men!"

Harold Laski, third year S.P.S. student, admitted "I'm prejudiced. If they won't let women in Hart House, why not let them study with us?" Percy Grader, II M. and P., said that men and women should not be separated at the Library. When asked why, he shrugged his shoulders and muttered: "That's a good question."

Wrong and Ferguson Will Express Views To Poli. Sci. Club

Hume Wrong, of the Canadian Department of External Affairs, and George Ferguson, editor of the Winnipeg Free Press, will be in Toronto to address the Political Science Club next Saturday and Monday evenings respectively, Dave Goldberg, IV Political Science, president of the club, announced yesterday.

Mr. Wrong will speak on "Canada in the Postwar World." Mr. Ferguson's topic will be: "Newspapers and their Role in the Formation of Public Opinion."

The reason for the appearance of two guest speakers at so close an interval, he explained, is that both speakers found it necessary to combine their meeting with the Political Science Club with other business in the city, and it happened by chance that both planned to visit Toronto on the same week-end.

Mr. Hume Wrong, son of Professor G. M. Wrong, was himself on the staff of the History Department from 1921 to 1927. Since then he has been with the Department of External Affairs. Before the war he was a permanent Canadian delegate to the League of Nations at Geneva. Since the outbreak of war he has held posts in London and Washington. His present position is Associate Undersecretary of State at Ottawa.

Mr. George Ferguson went to Oxford University as a Rhodes scholar. For the past 19 years he has served on the Winnipeg Free Press as reporter, editorial writer, and managing editor. When the late John W. Daloe died, Ferguson succeeded him as editor.

Both meetings, Goldberg announced, will take place in Wynilwood, and both will commence at 8:15 p.m. All interested students in any year are invited to attend.

ORCHESTRA REHEARSAL

The University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra will hold a full rehearsal on Monday in the Women's Union at 7:30 sharp.

Army Receives U. of S. Failures

Saskatoon—(CUP)—In the University of Saskatchewan, forty-seven students who failed to obtain a sufficiently high standard in the January examinations have been reported to National Selective Service. Some faculties have not yet completed their evaluation of the results of the exams.

The rules for judging failures will not be applied as strictly this year as in 1944, especially towards first year men. Last year 130 students were reported.

Approximately 700 students and guests attended the "School Open House" held last night in all the School buildings with the exception of the "School House" itself.

The life, the work, and the secrets of the engineers were shown by the chemical, electrical, thermodynamic, hydraulic and material testing departments. The senior Schoolmen were the hosts, while the third year men did the "Joe-jobs," running the experiments and looking after the check-rooms.

"Water flowing over things, and people blowing up things" was one Freshie's non-technical description of what she saw.

The "Open House" was the second event of its kind, and featured a thermodynamics display which was an actual lab period for the third year men.

After the show, refreshments were served in both the Mechanical Building and the Mining Building.

Chamber Music

Conservatory Concert Hall

The sixth concert in the present series was given yesterday afternoon by the Conservatory String Quartet—Elie Spivak and Harold Sumberg, violins; Harold Carter, viola; and Joyce Sands, cello. This quartet, while not attaining the finished professionalism of the Parlow Quartet which has performed three times in the series, has a truly integrated feeling for ensemble playing, an essential so regrettably lacking in another well-known quartet about town.

Russian composers, as a general rule, do not write good quartet music. In temperament and imagination they are better suited to the tremendous range of resources provided by the modern orchestra. Many of the Russian composers owe a great deal to the devoted patronage of Mirofan Beliaeff, a prosperous timber merchant of St. Petersburg, who gathered about him each Friday night Glazunov, Ljadov, Rimsky-Korsakov, Borodin and others, for the purpose of making music.

Later, when he had founded a publishing house, he frequently published their works under his own name. Tour de fete was one of these. The first two movements, Les Chanteurs de Nod by Glazunov, a closely harmonized, relatively innocuous composition, and Ljadov's Glorification, too ponderous and pedantic to suit its title, are not satisfying in quietest form. However, the third movement, Choeurs d'asse Russes, showed Rimsky-Korsakov's clever handling of the instruments and complete understanding and appreciation of quartet writing. The well-coordinated performance of the last movement made it, without doubt, the best.

Beethoven's Quartet in F major (Op. 59, no. 1) is generally considered to mark the beginning of his "second period." Variety of mood and color make it interesting; but Beethoven's tendency to be too verbose makes for tedious lapses. Possessing a rather brusque sense of humor, Beethoven plays the occasional joke on his listener. The exquisite and moving third movement is one of Beethoven's most lyrically beautiful, and the performance did it ample justice. The gay finale, although called Theme Russe, is typically Beethovenesque.

The two concluding concerts will be given by the Conservatory String Quartet, their next program for Feb. 14, consisting of Greig's Quartet in F major ("Unfinished") and Quartet Op. 74 ("Harp") of Beethoven.

The plot in "The Suspect" has definitely been gleaned from the bottom of Hollywood's pile of eternal triangles. Charles Laughton, at Mr. Philip Marshall, portrays the mild-mannered husband who kills his unwanted wife "THE SUSPECT" for the love of Ella Raines, the other woman. Inevitably, there is the detective who, believing that Mrs. Marshall's death was not caused by an accident, proceeds to hound the life out of Mr. Laughton to the utter dismay of the sympathetic audience.

As usual, some villainous person, in this case a drunkard, decides to blackmail Marshall and is promptly done away with by same. Of course the usual run of the mill scenes are used and the murderer is almost tripped up every time.

We have no misgivings about these scenes, but we do like them shown in a more subtle manner.

Frosh Shows Figures; Skates Way To Fame

Wandering on our campus unknown to most of us is a young man who last week attained the year's highest figure skating award in Canada.

Now, at the age of 19, Nigel Stephens, I Soc. and Phil., has won the 1945 Men's Canadian Senior Figure Skating Championship. Interviewed yesterday, Nigel gave us the story of his road to fame.

"I started skating when I was seven, at a club near my home," he began. "I used to go over every day and mark up the ice." Stephens entered his first national skating competition in 1941—and came fourth. The following year he placed second, and in 1943 he won the Junior Men's Figure Skating prize. "It certainly isn't as easy as it looks," he said, "but it makes up for it in the end because of the thrill you get from skating."

In the summer of 1943 he passed the Canadian Gold Medal test at Schumacher, Ontario. This is awarded after a skater has passed seven other tests, which include the competition of 42 separate figures to the satisfaction of the judges.

"That summer," he said, "I was working at a mine at Schumacher. We were

CONDITION FAIR

Margaret Nishikawara, II Physiology and Biochemistry, suffered cuts about her face, hands and neck yesterday morning at 10:35 a.m., when a bottle of benzoyl peroxide (which smashed two window panes) exploded in the chemistry laboratory at the Economics Building.

Miss Nishikawara was removed to the Toronto General Hospital, where her condition is said to be fair.

"There was a deafening roar when it happened," said Madeline Maykut, who was standing next to Miss Nishikawara at the time. "She placed a hot spatula inside a bottle of solution—known as lead peroxide—and it exploded in her hand."

Fellow students reported that fragments of glass showered about Miss Nishikawara, splinters flying on to her, and breaking one of the lenses in her glasses.

Smoke swirled about the room and there was a "horrible odor," said one student. No fire broke out.

While E. Chadwick, lab. technician, rendered first aid, Sidney Faibish, II P., and B., called a Bloort Street physician. Miss Nishikawara was then taken to hospital by Miss Maykut, who suffered minor eye burn.

"It was just an accident," said Prof. F. R. Lorrimer, laboratory director, who was in his office when the explosion occurred. "It was not a matter of carelessness—merely an unfortunate incident."

Any time's SHOPPING TIME!

FAIRWEATHER'S NEW SUITS have arrived. They're in bright and early this year, and they are very definitely 1945. Although you can wear one under a fur coat now it can emerge as fresh as paint later and be perfect without your top coat. One of these new Spring suits will never be mistaken for a last year's model. They're distinctively new, with more interesting detail than you've seen for several seasons, odd little pockets, sleeves with cuffs, some of the skirts have tiny slits at the hem. The shades are good new high pastels, gold, Chinese fuchsia, American Cherry, etc.

WHEN YOU SEND your next parcel overseas, remember to tuck in a bottle of Sloan's Liniment. Sloan's will last longer than the goodies, and your soldier will respect your good judgment proportionately. Sloan's is tops among liniments, and in case you get tied up with a twisted ankle or a stiff shoulder just when you need it, Sloan's is a wise precaution to keep a bottle of Sloan's around. Always remember... Sloan's is stronger, quicker acting, with gentle pain-easing qualities.

FOUNDATION FOR A GOOD HAIR-DO is a healthy head of hair. The Antoine Salon, where the scientific approach to hairdressing has always been stressed, has made the care of the hair a fine art. The Antoine experts are trained to know what re-conditioning treatment is best suited to your own particular type of hair. They are firm believers in the fact that a thorough re-conditioning job in wintertime to keep the hair glowing and soft and with that "alive" look will pay dividends in the easier head of hair to manage all the year round. PRETTY SMOOTH . . . Du Barry Foundation Cream makes a perfect powder base, smoothes out the tiny imperfections which mar the complexion, adds considerably to the sophistication of your make-up. Put it lightly in, smooth with the tips of the fingers, then apply just a shade of rouge, spreading with a circular motion, then a gentle "patting" of powder, and if the first friend you meet on the street doesn't say "I'll bet you've been looking extra-minut" we'll be surprised. The foundation makes a base which levels and blends the rouge, giving it a natural effect.

MORE THAN LIKELY you've been shopping around for a blouse these days when your old stand-by, the basic winter suit or sweater and skirt ensemble, needs something in the way of a build-up to keep you on speaking terms with it. The Evangeline Shops are specialists in blouses, can show you everything from a strict-as-a-ruler classic tailored shirt-waist to a feminine bit of a blouse which can be worn in the evening with a crepe skirt and pirate sash or metallic belt. The Evangelines are also showing nice things in handbags, scarves, gloves, etc.

MANY AN INTELLIGENT GIRL goes shopping with a far-away look in her eye and not the slightest idea what she wants. This, my dears, is a sign she wants Something and our guess is that Something is a desire to make herself attractive in a general way to a particular individual of the opposite sex. Now, one of the good shopping habits for this young lady to acquire is North-west's Fashionland, where clothes are grouped to be studied and inspected together, tried on, matched, blended or contrasted with all the time in the world in which to make that very, very important improvement in her general morale.

"EVOLUTION DE-BUNKED"
by DR. W. K. FENTON, M.D.
His interesting lecture graphically illustrated by the use of his life-long collection of professional movie film!
A lecture with a concrete basis—that shatters the very foundations of the theory of evolution.
A challenge to all its adherents! A basic proof for all who would oppose its false doctrine!

It Can't Happen Here . . .
Basketball really is quite a game! Following our recent column gazing in an awed manner at the lofty heights of the game in the United States comes a news story describing how a gambler of no little repute enticed basketball players at Brooklyn College to accept bribes to "throw" important matches. As a follow-up, a Grand Jury investigation of gambling on college athletics has been ordered, as desperate fair-haired college officials moved to purify their own names as well as those of the institutions they govern.

For years now these same fair-haired officials hiding under their angelic halos have proudly officiated at opening game ceremonies and then, with self-satisfaction, have watched their respective teams draw multitudinous spectators. At the end of each fiscal year they covetously fingered the receipts. Big Business was wonderful!

Two months ago, when "Phog" Allen of the University of Kansas sounded off with a blast against professional promoters invading the colleges, his charges were suppressed and quietly laughed off the inquiring reporters. It was merely a figment of Allen's imagination, they beamed.

Today, they are fencing off charges that are being hurled at them and at the College Association. Seeing a fat revenue of thousands of dollars fleeing out of their grasp, their tunes have suddenly changed. They are clamoring for a high commissioner or a Judge Landis.

The reason for all this? Because athletics have become a paying proposition with them. Scouts are being sent to unheard-of communities to throw athletic scholarships around into the four winds. Good blood as well as bad is attracted to these institutions to be tempted by these gamblers.

Canadians should be thankful that someone had enough foresight by avoiding numerous scholarships for outstanding athletes. Athletics have been kept on a competitive, not a commercial, basis. Thankful we should be that Varsity is searching for mere games and not for a commissioner to control these games and what could go on behind the scenes.

Dear Miss Dix, I have a problem . . .

"Could you kindly help out a puzzled Freshie by giving some information about the Athletic Nights in the Sports-women column?"

(1) Can a gal without a man attend the affair alone?

(2) Where does one purchase the prize tickets?

(3) If a gal wants to bring her man, can she buy tickets for both of them or does she have to ask a man to buy them for her?

Thanks in advance for your help.

Yours truly,

An "awed-by-Hart-House" Co-ed.

Well, this letter drifted into the Varsity office and caused a lot of comment, mostly to the effect that it was a good idea. We think so, too.

So . . .

(1) It's not a good idea in the long run, although it can be done, and is being done all the time.

(2) The tickets are sold at the entrance to the Athletic Wing as you go in. Get there early as only a limited number are sold, and it's first come, first serve.

(3) Well, as the tickets are sold at the door, it's up to you. One of you should be in University, or the Armed Services, but, Oh, awed Co-ed, we wouldn't worry about that.

Anyway, we hope this has been of a bit of help. Thinking back now, we realize that this question has bothered a lot of Freshies in the past.

Of course there are some individuals who rarely enter the sanctity of the reading rooms. One, Hugh Graham, III Classics, says, "I don't think anything of it at all—I'm always in the stacks, anyhow." Following this, Marge Henderson, II Moderns, uttered a brief "Unnecessary" to the question.

In general, the student poll indicated that if there were a student vote, the majority would advocate co-educational library activities on campus.

Guinevere Is Still Safe As Chivalry Remains

St. Mike's Men to Stand Up in Street Cars From Now On: Will Turn Over a New Leaf as Result of Debate

MAJORITY OF EIGHT

The resolution that "Chivalry is Dead" was upheld last night at Brennan Hall as the Glamour Girls of St. Joseph's debated against the Fighting Irish of St. Mike's.

"Mike" Mahaney, for the fair sex, traced chivalry from medieval times and emphasized the degradation that has come with the centuries. She hotly decried the modern attitude of indifference and concluded with the observation that it is the women's duty to demand respect.

Dan McGarity, arguing for the male animal, stated that there would always be chivalry as long as women were content to remain the weaker sex, but if they demand equal rights and pay, as they are doing now, they must expect to be treated as equals in other directions.

Evelyn Courtelli, for the affirmative, requested that men treat women with politeness and courtesy rather than knightly chivalry. She argued that changing conditions and a world at war had thrust the women of today into their present position.

Jim McIsaacs pointed out that chivalry, or the showing of common courtesy, was a virtue innate in the hearts of all men and could be brought to the fore on proper provocation. Chivalry, he said, might be dormant in some cases but it is not dead. He mentioned North America as the place where a happy medium existed between the complete lack of chivalry shown in Germany, Russia and Japan on the one hand, and the ridiculous superfluency of chivalry shown in South American countries on the other.

Following a short rebuttal by the affirmative, the resolution was passed to the House for comment. A heated period of accusations and counter-accusations ensued and the resolution was finally passed by a majority of 38 to 30.

Ace Bailey Coaches Team With Subtle Psychology

By Betty-June McKenzie

Psychology has its points. It can run a hockey team, for instance. At least "Ace" Bailey uses it, and seems to be successful. After nine years of coaching the Varsity Blues, Irwin D. Bailey has found the best way to produce a good hockey team is to use a little diplomacy.

Most of you will remember him as a right winger on the Maple Leafs, but there are some in Bracebridge who will remember him as goalie of the Bracebridge High team. That was when he was sixteen.

Then there are those who will remember the '510" right wing in the St. Mary's C.L.M.A.A. That team is now known as Marlboroughs, but, back in '21 and '22, when "Ace" played his junior hockey with the team, the long monicker was the one best known.

In '23 and '24 he played senior with the same outfit; then went scouting down to play with the Peterborough Senators.

Coach Bailey smiled behind his glasses as he reminisced about those days, especially 1926.

"We won the O.H.A. that year," he said.

It was in November, '26, that "Ace" returned to Toronto. This time it was to join the St. Pat's, a team which was bought by private business men in February of the following year. The team was renamed the Maple Leafs, and Bailey stuck with it for eight years as a pro, until his career came to a sudden halt.

Rifle Practice

Twenty-five men students who have had experience in handling rifles are requested to spend one half-hour a week, time at their own convenience, in an experiment of great importance for army research.

Students wishing to volunteer for this work are asked to leave their names, telephone numbers and the time when they are available, either with Miss Bransby at the Psychology Department, 71 St. George Street, or with Mr. Shane at 64 St. George Street.

Can. Students Discuss Crisis

Montreal—(CUP)—By special invitation, two student representatives and one faculty member represented McGill University at the third annual Cultural Conference held at Middlebury College last Saturday and Sunday, January 27 and 28. The subject of the conference was: "The Challenge of the World Crisis."

Ticket a Task Got My Basket?

Montreal—(CUP)—A course in handicrafts open to all McGill students and staff, is being sponsored by the Women's Union Art Program Committee, it has been announced.

Classes in leatherwork, weaving, drawing and sketching, and perhaps linocutting, will be held one or two nights a week, with Dr. Crowell of the Handicrafts department at MacDonald College supplying the material.

MacDonald College has established a similar program, and some of the work of their students was displayed at the Arts and Crafts Exhibit at McGill in December.

Ticket Sale Now Open

Emmanuel, Forestry and Victoria Colleges will be the hosts at Hart House tomorrow in the second Athletic Night of this season. "Butch" O'Malley of Victoria, Walton Tonge of Emmanuel, Bill Clipperton and J. W. Giles of Forestry are heading the entertainment. These representatives have gathered together a troupe of boys and co-eds from all three colleges to help with the entertainment and preparation.

Bill Clipperton will be the master of ceremonies in the lower gym during the social period from 10-12. In the upper gym, square dancing will be the main feature after 10 p.m., with Jack Paterson and his boys from Emmanuel providing the old-time hoochown music!

The crowd will be limited to 1500 people again this Saturday. Tickets will go on sale at 7 p.m., and participants' passes will be honored up till 8:30 p.m.

The committee has reported that magazine, book and card contributions have fallen short of last year. Last year approximately 7000 magazines, 2000 books and 2000 packs of playing cards were handed in during the five Athletic Nights. To even approach this mark, students will have to greatly increase their donations.

Joint Gathering To Feature Play

The annual joint meeting of the Victoria, Trinity, and U.C. French Clubs will be held on Wednesday, Feb. 7, in Cartwright Hall at 8 o'clock.

La Société Française of University College, the hosts of the evening, extend a cordial invitation to all students and friends interested in French. The meeting will open with a sing-song conducted by the music director of the Victoria College French Club, after which three one-act plays will be presented.

Trinity College French Club will stage "Ces Dames aux Chapeaux Verts," followed by U.C.'s "Rosalie." After a brief interlude of music, Victoria College will present "A Loner Meuble." These three plays offer a varied program of comedy.

A social period, including refreshments and dancing, will afford an opportunity for members of the three clubs and their friends to get acquainted.

Swing News . . .

By Stuart Barton

"Piano man, piano man, no-one spunks those ivories like he can." That's what the song says and that's what we say, too. The man in question, in case you don't know, is Earl "Father" Hines, and also in case you don't know, Mr. Hines, his orchestra, his cigar and his piano, gently rocked Mons Kerim's dancery last Saturday as it has not been rocked in quite a spell.

The "Father," along with Armstrong, Hawkins and Goodman, is one of the great jazz "originators," his influence being very apparent in the playing of younger piano men such as Billy Kyle, Stan Kenton and Mel Powell. But, unlike some of the other old-time greats, unlike, say, Louis (with whom he played in the early Chicago days), Hines is still very much in the swing avant garde. Recently he has been recording with ultra-modern stylists Charlie Shavers and Coleman Hawkins, and has been appearing as guest star on the Mildred Bailey show.

Featured with the Hines aggregation is one of the least heralded of the alto-clarinet men—red-headed "Scoops" Carey. Possessing the technique to do it, he pours out hundreds of notes and throws himself into mad ideas which nearly always make a great deal of sense. His alto work provides a refreshing contrast to that of the many Hodges imitators. In the past, Hines has presented trumpet men of Dizzy Gillespie, Shorty McConnell calibre.

Knowledge For College

The Victoria College Debating Parliament is continuing its series of afternoon debates on Monday next, Feb. 5, when the motion, "Resolved, that lectures are a handicap to learning," will be upheld by Dorothy Lindsay, II Sociology, and Bob Buchanan, I Law. Helen Foster, I Soc. and Phil., and Charles Tipp, I Eng. Lang. and Lit., will oppose the motion. The debate will be held in Room 21, Victoria College, at 4 o'clock.

The afternoon debates are less formal than those held in the evenings, having been organized to give more students the opportunity to become acquainted with parliamentary procedure and to encourage speaking from the floor.

Bob Buchanan, speaker for the government, told The Varsity that "the affirmative expects little opposition because the resolution is obvious."

Helen Foster, opposition speaker, said: "We are much concerned about the welfare and security of the faculty and do not wish to see the professors lose their jobs."

Post War Plan To be Topic

Dr. Malcolm Wallace, former principal of U.C., will speak on "Dumbarton Oaks" at the International Affairs Society on Monday at 4:30 at the Women's Union.

"Dr. Wallace is especially qualified to talk about world affairs because he spends a great deal of time at the Canadian Institute of International Affairs," said Agnes Fischer, president of the society. She added that the subject of his talk is a very timely one since there will likely be another conference on post-war policy in the near future.

At this meeting it will be announced that the International Affairs Society and the Current Events Forum have amalgamated. The executive hopes that under this union the meetings will be even more successful than before.

Let's go places . .

"Secret Command" starring Carole Landis and Pat O'Brien, has but one redeeming feature, and that is the scenery (Landis, we mean). It is all about "SECRET" saboteurs at the shipyards and the FBI undercover man (Pat O'Brien) gets into awful tangles and is suspected by all, even his brother (Chester Morris) of being a Nazi agent. All the thrilling scenes, such as fights, are filmed in complete darkness, which makes everything interesting, as well as confusing. The less said about this the better.

"Dixie Jamboree" on the same bill, is more of the same except for Frances Langford. Her acting ability is by no means outstanding, but that can be overlooked in her case. Guy Kibbee plays the part of the captain of a Mississippi River Showboat, who sells quack medicine as a side-line. Things get mildly interesting when Bourbon is added to the mixture instead of water. There is somebody, whose name it appears the producers didn't think worth featuring who plays a beautiful trumpet, Spivak style. He is good. There are also a couple of Indians in it, who never speak a word but produce from underneath their blankets everything from Kleenex to tom-toms.

However, if you like "Bugs" Bunny, by all means visit the Midtown. We enjoyed his fifteen minutes of the program.

Travel Future Is in Skyways

"The Future of the Helicopter" will be the topic of Mr. Frank H. Kelley, assistant to the president, Bell Aircraft Corporation, Buffalo, N.Y., speaking under the auspices of the Royal Canadian Institute at Convocation Hall tomorrow night at 8:15.

Mr. Kelley, a former navy pilot and son of Admiral Frank H. Kelley, was in charge of the secret flight test work on the first American jet-propelled plane at a far-western base. At present he is doing experimental flight test work on the new Bell helicopter and is one of the very few pilots in the world to have extensive experience in conventional aircraft jet-aeroplanes and helicopters.

Mr. Kelley will deal with the practical uses of the helicopter and its probable cost. A sound motion picture in color will be shown which will tell the history of the helicopter and its potentialities.

Wayne Victory

Wayne University turned in a stand-out display of basketball in London last night as they swamped the University of Western Ontario Mustangs 64-47. The Detroiters jumped into an early lead and piled up additional points as the game progressed. Hall with 19 points and Wheeler with 13 starred for the visitors, while Cunningham with 15 points and Scorgie with 12 were best for the Londoners.

Wayne will be visitors at Varsity this Saturday night in the feature attraction of the second Athletic Night.

Gigantic Cave is Stage For Shuster, Wayne Gag

Frank Shuster and Johnny Wayne, stars of the Canadian Army Show, are back in Toronto after 13 months of duty overseas. Being interviewed by The Varsity yesterday brought back to them happy recollections of the times when they themselves were on the mainstage of this paper and became immortalized in the Champas Cat column as a team under the names of Han Rooster and Wiregarters, respectively; as well as in the U.C. Follies, which they produced for several years. As ready for a laugh or humorous story as they had ever been, they were modest about the grimmer aspects of their assignment.

In spite of their separation from home, they found many old friends overseas. "Imagine meeting our old profs over there," said Johnny Wayne, referring to Earl Birney, assistant professor, and Claude Bissel, lecturer, both of the English Department of University College. "We also came across many former campus celebrities, among them Doug Turner, once all-Varsity rugby star," he said, emphasizing that they never had an audience in which there was not at least one former U. of T. student present.

"Wordsworth believed strongly in human liberty, but considered a general moral education to be an essential prerequisite," said Professor J. R. MacGillivray, speaking in University College yesterday in the series on "Representative English Writers."

Wordsworth is not often considered as a great or steadfast lover of human liberty, and derogatory judgments are passed on his political consistency, the speaker stated. When his thought is examined, however, it is seen to have been modified by events, but never radically changed, he continued. The radicalism apparent in his youth was tempered as his passion and reason were disciplined.

An ardent humanitarianism and an inherent conservatism showed at an early period; where nature only had commanded his sympathy, man claimed it, as he came in contact with the forces of the French Revolution, said Prof. MacGillivray. They filled him with hope of man's capacities, as well as an admiration of republicanism.

The most conservative part of Wordsworth's thinking, the speaker said, was his lifelong attitude toward education. He believed that true education was the daily training of the mind and emotions, a kind of moral education, gained largely outside the schools. Formal education might, therefore, be harmful, especially to the poor.

Coupled with this ideal general education, Wordsworth believed national independence to be vital to liberty. During the Napoleonic Wars the poet no longer regarded France as a champion of freedom, and became reconciled to Britain; he developed a new sense of the long, slow course of liberty in his country, Prof. MacGillivray explained. This made him fear the democratic future, and look longingly at the feudal past, the speaker asserted.

Wordsworth was violently opposed to the Reform Bill, but later began to see the right of every man to a means of decent self-preservation. Then he saw hope of an economic freedom which, the speaker concluded, was similar to our vision in the twentieth century.

"I like travelling," said Shuster, "but we had a bit of an overdose. We would get an order to move at a certain hour to, let's say, Holland, which meant getting our five trucks ready and groping along the road as well as we could. By this system we once happened to play in France one day, moving to Belgium on the next, and arriving in Holland on the third day, before any other Canadian troops had moved into that country." Shuster added that travelling could be comfortable at times, recalling one night he spent all by himself in a bed-hall of the Rothchilds' splendour, and so far undamaged, palace at Deauville.

Once they performed before a whole division that had been through 54 days of solid fighting, using a giant cave which held 2000 people at a time. "We felt rather soft compared to what they had been through," explained Wayne, modestly, "but after we had rendered two performances a day for quite a while it was decided to give us plenty of rest. We were thus moved to the Falaise sector but, as it turned out, an offensive was soon to get under way nearby, and it was there that we spent

Canadian Campus

-- a CUP feature

VETERANS

Throughout Canada, veterans and discharged servicemen are taking advantage of the government's policy of providing free tuition for these students who left their studies to take up arms against the enemies of their homeland and their way of thinking and living. Canadian University Press has compiled an anthology of veterans' activities across the Dominion.

University of New Brunswick:

At UNB, veterans compose 4 per cent of the total enrolment. Forestry has become the most popular course here, with Engineering running a close second. A veterans club was formed in November and is quite active on the campus. The ex-servicemen are popular with the students as is seen by the fact that already one is a member of the SRC, another is the president of the freshman class, a third is president of the International Relations Club. One veteran played varsity rugby this fall. Brig. Gregg, V.C., veteran of Wars I and II, is now the president of the University of New Brunswick.

Mount Allison University:

Ten veterans have enrolled here to date, with additions expected. Second term ex-servicemen seem more appreciative of the opportunity to study, but are finding difficulty resuming student activities. As far as the other students are concerned, they are mingling well with their new colleagues.

Queen's University:

Forty ex-servicemen are registered here as rehabilitation students. The Air Force has a slight majority, although the services are almost evenly represented. This is according to information released in an interview with the Registrar here. Two new students registered in 1944. Others have registered throughout the year. The first ex-servicewoman in a Canadian University, Heloise Goodwin, registered here November 13, attending classes on furlough. Last term veterans decided not to form a separate club in order to integrate with the student body.

University of Manitoba:

The U. of M. is cooperating with affiliated colleges to provide ex-servicemen with five and a half months courses covering first and second year, beginning April 2. Thus the veterans will have a good start with next year's work in September, it was stated.

St. Francois Xavier University:

There are at present eight returned servicemen on this campus. More are expected during the second semester. The board of governors here has approved the construction of a new residence to accommodate returned men. This building, when finished will hold 22 students and it is expected to be completed next September. When the number warrants it St. F. X. will go on a speed up program to enable returned men who enter in January to complete their year by the following September.

University of Toronto:

It was recently announced that a first-year course in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering will begin on April 2 and continue for six months. Those ex-service students who complete this summer course will be admitted to the Second Year of the Faculty in October, 1945.

Plans have also been made for an intensive ten months' course in business including lectures in statistics, accounting and economics, scheduled to start February 5th.

Public Lectures

In time of peace or in time of war, the university should be the centre of cultural life of the community, a vital force within a nation, not just an ivy-covered institution where generation after generation of students passively accept traditional theories. It should teach its students to think and act, not just fill their notebooks with undecipherable notes. It should not only be the training ground for the future leaders of the nation, but also form an essential part of the social structure of the nation itself, contributing not only scientific discoveries and academic research, but constructive and challenging ideas. Nor should it be an ivory tower for the esoteric, but should fulfill a public function.

It is for this reason that the numerous lectures to which the general public are invited are such a valuable contribution to community life. This year at the University of Toronto, there have been some especially fine series delivered. Most notable among them is the course in Russian History being delivered by the eminent scholar, Sir Bernard Pares. The general public showed such a keen interest in this series that Sir Bernard was forced to commandeer Convocation Hall as a lecture room in order to provide sufficient accommodation. At the present time, there are also being delivered a series of lectures in Sociology, a group on Representative Writers and the Theme of Liberty, and a series dealing with Minorities.

These lectures are delivered not only by the most outstanding professors at our own university, but also by notable scholars from many other colleges, both in Canada and abroad.

Public lectures are a means of establishing a closer bond between the university and the general public. In addition, they help to broaden the outlook of students who are enrolled in very specialized courses. Students are often heard to remark that they find their course inclined to be too narrowing. If they find that this is the case, these public lectures are an excellent opportunity of having new avenues of thought opened up to them.

In all the countries of Europe which are now or have been in the past under the Nazi yolk, the universities were the first points of attack. If they were not completely closed down, their privileges were abrogated, and the students, the staff and the courses taught were placed under the most stringent supervision. The totalitarian powers realized that the university was a vital force in the emanation of thought in the community; therefore, its voice was silenced.

Let not the universities of Canada forget their responsibility to the public at large. The scholars at the universities have freedom of access to knowledge, and it is their duty to communicate it to others, for the betterment of our society.

AR DE MUSIC

Don Juan

Eaton Auditorium

America's super-charged serenader of concert and radio fame sang his way into the hearts of every one of his almost entirely feminine audience. Possessing a charming personality and bewitching smile, James Melton, leading tenor of the Metropolitan Opera Association, gave liberal dose of the old favorites and a considerable number of modern ones. Good psychology and a wolfish charm, combined with insinuating innuendoes and rubatos, and a powerfully ringing tone, are the cause of Melton's sure-fire audience appeal.

Coming down to earth now, we will attempt to discuss the concert from a critical point of view. Operatic arias of Mozart, Puccini and Delibes showed Mr. Melton's relative lack of volume control; his breath control, however, was very good. Several with Silenced Guns Says New Edict: Gervuson Reigns as Squeaking Mice Oiled: Girls May Drop Only Noiseless Pins

AW. SHEDDAP!

Interrupting for a few weeks his monumental series of experiments designed to show that people who drink 40 beers get drunk, Dr. J. Pierperpoint Dooleydingus has conclusively demonstrated that Whitney Hall girls who scream continuously for 48 hours frequently keel over from exhaustion.

"This is distinctly below the national health level," said Prof. Dooleydingus. "We have a steel-and-plastic dummy in our laboratory that has screamed without ill effect for seven weeks on end. I can only attribute the lamentable softness of Whitney Hall girls to the lamentable effect on their nerves of the noise pervading that building."

Moving swiftly to cut down the noise level in the interest of the health of her brood, Dean Maryrin' B. Gervuson promulgated a series of edicts effective from 7:08 p.m. last night. She was said to have been encouraged by the protests of Col. LesPants that too many residents' corpses are gumming up his snow-plows.

1. NO vocal intercourse permitted from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m., including talking, whispering, laughing, and swearing at busted boot-buttons. Sneezing and spitting must be done out the window. Specially expurgated portions of The Bobbsey Twins may be read aloud in sign language.

2. NO trapping of mice under beds, unless specially-silenced mousetraps are procured from the Dean's Office. Several girls are nervous wrecks from hearing mousetraps go off in the night.

3. NO sleeping except on the floor, until such time as the W.C.T.U. will permit us to have creaking bedsprings well oiled.

4. NO climbing of stairs after 8 p.m. Girls returning from late leaves must use noiseless rope-ladders, with which all rooms are being equipped. Late entrants must stuff their wigs under their coats to silence rustling hair.

5. NO heels clattering down corridors. First and second year students must be examined to ascertain whether they are heels. Trips to the bathroom

S.P.S. Wins 3-2
Gain Group Tie

U.C. I, defending Jennings Cup champions, lost their first hockey game of the season yesterday afternoon at the Arena when Sr. S.P.S. eked out a 3-2 win, scoring their tie-breaking goal in the last minute of play. The Engineers are now tie for first place with the Artsmen in Group One, each having won two games while losing one. Sr. Meds trail the group with two losses.

U.C. started off strong, scoring in the first minute of play. From the opening face-off, Furry lugged the puck down to the School end and shot it at McCombe. The puck bounced back and Doug Davison picked up the loose puck and parked it behind the S.P.S. goalie. Half way through the period, the game started to roughen up and Bain, Anderson and Walker were sent off for penalties. School put on a determined attack toward the end of the frame when U.C. was short-handed, and were almost rewarded several times. Major shot from the blue line in the last second of play and hit the goalpost to almost tie the game.

School charged out to begin the second period and were successful in keeping the puck in the Red and White end. Boa caught the puck at the U.C. blue line and shot a long, low one into the right-hand corner, thereby tying the score. At this stage of the game Purcell and

Davis were sent off for roughing. Before their time was up, Major and Bain were given major penalties for fighting in the middle of the ice. While the latter two were off, Murray Walker skated in Jon Davidson and hit the cords to give later, Ian Hart shot the rubber into the Engineers' goal, again tying the game. Play speeded up at this stage of the game, with rapid-fire rushes by both teams, contrary to the usual trend

By "Butch" O'Malley

This is the week U. of T. proudly spreads the "Welcome" mat for the University of Wayne. Although the big Blue squad has been roughly handled by American friends in the past, nevertheless Varsity is pleased and honored to play host to this team from across the border. Certainly it is a rare treat for the student body of Varsity to catch a breath of the long-dormant intercollegiate spirit that this game momentarily revives. Although the prevailing opinion as to the outcome of the game appears decidedly pessimistic, there are many who, perhaps rather timidly, assert that McCutcheon's well-drilled squad will spring a surprise by upsetting their heavily favored opponents. The big game starts sharp at 8:30 p.m.

As a curtain-raiser to the main feature, Brampton High School will play an exhibition game with Roy Dilworth's Seniors from U.T.S. All those who expect to get near enough to see the Varsity game would do well to come early and watch these youngsters play. In any case, oil up the ripparties, give out with the rapperties, and leave us all come out and cheer for the Varsity Blues.

For those who desire more rugged sport (and those who cannot get near the basketball game) there will be plenty of action in the upper gym. Here the finals of the Junior Assault prelims will take place. Although the number of men turning out for the mainly art of self-defense has been somewhat disappointing, Mel Gliona has uncovered some fine fighters. Shifty Bill Merz of P.H.E., ace Balmy Beach half, stabbed his way to a very flashy win last week in the 145 lb. class, and will be in action again this week. A highly-touted, hard-hitting lad from U.C.—Nicholson—will be gunning for the Junior 165 lb. championship and a chance at George Lewis of Meds, last year's 155 lb. winner, who has put on weight but is still the smoothest boxer on the campus.

A well-rounded program has been drawn up for those who enjoy their aquatic. Water-ski, exhibitions of diving, swimming, matched races, and special events will all be planned for your enjoyment. The feature of the pool program will be the special appearance of Peter and Paul Hughes of the Lakeshore Swimming Club. These young men, six-year-old twins, give exhibitions in swimming and diving which are truly remarkable. Put them down as a 'must see' for Saturday night. Ken Tulley, Junior Diving Champion of Canada, will again go through a number of his better dives for the pleasure of the gallery.

Forestry, a live-wire little faculty if there ever was one, co-hosts tomorrow night with Emmanuel and Victoria. The big little faculty will display some of the inner workings of the timber industry and what goes on down at the south end of the campus. Veteran Athletic Director observers say that the Forestry display last year was the finest ever to appear at an Athletic Night, so be sure to drop in to the fencing room.

After the basketball game there will be the big dance of the evening, enlivened by special emcee Bill Clipperton of Forestry, who promises plenty of entertainment and some new ideas in novelty dances.

All in all, it should be a grand evening, and may we once more issue the warning that the ticket sale is limited, so come early. Special ushers and committee members will be on hand ready to assist and proffer information to the best of their ability.

—and plenty of them, went on yesterday up at the Arena. In the first game, U.C. defeated P.H.E. I, 3-2, in a fast, thrilling tussle of the sort that makes us feel that girls CAN play hockey! Ellen Cameron starred brilliantly for the Royal College, ably assisted by Mary Hicks, Liz Kennedy and Lin Fellows, while the fast-skating Pys-Eds. were led by Mickey MacDonald and their dependable goalie, Marg Pellow. A game of such exciting calibre certainly deserves some cheering. How about coming out to see the Ice Queens fight it out?

In the second encounter, P.H.E. II defeated St. Mike's, 1-0, in a comparatively slow game which lacked some of the thrills of the first event, but none of the interest. Gwen Earle and Ruth Wellstead, a pair of hard-playing Freshies, spearheaded the Phys.-Eds' attack with fast skating and superior stickhandling. St. Mike's, although outweighed and outplayed, joined battle with gusto, led by none other than the diminutive Jacky Monohan. If the game scheduled for today noon between St. Mike's and St. Hilda's has half the thrills and excitement of these two, we will be well pleased from a spectator's point of view. we have unmet games to report. P.H.E. "A" defeated U.C. 40-30 in a very well-played game. Joan Davis, ex-P.H.E., starred brilliantly for U.C. but to no avail as the smoothly-working P.H.E.'s battled to win. The other games unfortunately will have to be listed minus scores, but nevertheless here goes: Vic defeated Meds; P.H.E. "B" defeated Dental Nurses and O.T. lost to St. Hilda's. In the next round, Pharmacy defaulted to P.H.E. "B" through an unforeseen accident which certainly shouldn't be held against one of the scrappiest faculties we have.

French songs of the lighter romantic variety showed an intimate knowledge with that language. Sombrera by Chaminade, although written in French, epitomizes the rollicking Spanish spirit; this, along with other Spanish numbers, was particularly well done.

Mr. Melton will be remembered, perhaps more than anything else, for his numerous encores, all in the popular vein—Schubert's overworked Serenade, Martha, Water-Boy, several delightful Irish folk-songs, closing with a whiff from Oklahoma! A particularly heavy schedule has tired Mr. Melton's voice, as is only to be expected. A slight over-tone ring was detected as he reached for his top fortissimo notes. However, this quality became much less noticeable as the program continued.

To epitomize the impression that the evening made on Mr. Melton's audience we quote a remark overheard while leaving: "From now on, I'm a dyed-in-the-wool fan!"

near the end of a hard-fought game. The Artsmen had several good chances but didn't seem to be able to skate fast enough when they did get into the clear. Walker scored the game-winning goal twenty seconds before game's end, when he recovered the rubber from a scramble and lifted it over Davidson's prostrate form.

The game was one of the top games of the schedule thus far. For a game between two top teams, it is best to have experienced and capable referees.

At 11, I shall tip-toe around the Hall and slug those not asleep with a muffled baseball bat."

Basement machinery, including washing machines, would be equipped with mufflers, she announced, adding that this would prevent it catching cold.

Reporters found the inhabitants of Whitney Hall sitting in a circle on wooden benches, contemplating a Pure Idea called "Death in the Denary." No one was breathing. From time to time the less hardy girls, their faces blue, tip-toed to the open windows to draw a breath.

"I think the new rules are wonderful," chirped Sally Nervecrack, IV Sociology, in sign-language. "At last we neurotics have something to think about."

In sequestered corners clandestine groups were harmonizing "Silent Night" and "All Round is Desolation" by mental telepathy.

At a late hour it was rumored that one of the girls had threatened to leave the House on the grounds that a Sophomore had telephoned a naughty word to her.

Phoned for comment on this report, Miss Gersufson replied with a dead silence. WOO AND CATCALL

BLUES BOW 49-46 TO MIGHTY WAYNE

Athletic Night Crowds Agape as Underdogs Display Thrill-packed Basketball: Muffed Free Throws Cost Game

MAYZELL STARS

By Mickey Michasiv

The mighty host of Wayne University paid their first visit to staid old Toronto on Saturday and left the fans agape as they walked off the Hart House floor with a 49-46 victory over the previously undefeated Blues. Lured by the magic name of Wayne, a capacity crowd of 1500 came out and marvelled as the local underdogs proceeded to make it the most thrill-packed game of the season.

Inaccurate shooting at the foul line led to the downfall of the Blues as they missed 15 of 21 free throws after having kept pace with the visiting Tartars by counting 20 baskets.

Arising from a sick-bed, Harry Mayzel again led Varsity scorers. His 14 points edged out Captain Don Gibson's 13. Guard Doug Spry turned in another superlative defensive game, and, in between, rusted through four baskets. Murray Thomson, while suffering from an off-night offensively, played a stand-out game in holding out the Detroit attackers.

However, these players and their team-mates were overshadowed by the play of Dick Hall, who ran up 23 points. Hall is a recent addition to Newmie Ertel's squad and appears to be a real find. Abe Parness and Leon Wheeler also proved thorns in the sides of the Blues.

The Blues started off in an auspicious manner by counting the first basket as Mayzel was left uncovered, but this lead was short-lived as three quick goals by the Tartars caused a Varsity time-out.

Wayne steadily built up a commanding lead and at the half led by 28-18. During the second half the Blues slowly whittled the lead down and with but eight minutes to go in the game, Gibson tied it up at 42-42. Thomson's single point placed the Blues on top, but Hall came back to give Wayne the lead once again. Baskets by Pittman and Hall clinched the victory as the Blues strove desperately for the tying points in the dying moments of the game.

HELICOPTER OVERSOLD SAYS PIONEER PILOT

Frank H. Kelley, assistant to the president of the Bell Aircraft Corporation of Buffalo, spoke on the future of the helicopter at the R.C.I. meeting at Convocation Hall Saturday evening.

Claiming to be "deliberately pessimistic" and "that the public had been oversold," Mr. Kelley stated: "The helicopter is still in its infancy and for some time won't be a cheap, easy-to-fly, fool-proof jack-of-all-trades."

"The smallest helicopter after the war," he continued, "will cost $5,000 and the 600-h.p. helicopter being sold through the United States government now, costs $50,000 to $75,000."

Mr. Kelley began with a dramatic account of a Bell pilot hurt in bailing out of a jet-propelled plane and compelled to use his parachute at high altitude.

"The sudden drag of the chute froze off his foot in air at 30 degrees below zero and when he landed, fifteen minutes

DEBATERS UPHOLD MINISTER

The resolution of the government that General McNaughton should not be elected in Grey North was defeated by a vote of 38-30 in the session of the University College Debating Parliament Friday afternoon.

The Honorable Catherine Sygne, first speaker for the government, said that a vote for General McNaughton was a vote for Mackenzie King, who is a compromiser and a vote against conscription. She continued that since there is to be a general election in April there is little need for a by-election.

The Hon. Ed. Safarian, the opposition's first speaker, outlined the present Liberal government's wartime record in handling manpower and inflation problems. The fact that 6,300 draftees are A.W.L. has been employed by the Progressive Conservatives in their campaign to discredit the government, he said, but in the last war 30,000 men did not return to their quarters.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King's blaming the North Grey electors for causing political chaos if General McNaughton were not elected was termed

TO CONSIDER POET'S WORKS

The writings and beliefs of the contemporary poet T. S. Eliot will be under discussion at a meeting of the University College Modern Letters Club to be held in the Women's Union this Wednesday evening at eight o'clock.

Ken Peacock, Philosophy and English II, will deal with some of the poet's critical essays, considering Eliot "the esoteric high priest of tradition in relation to the modern world." Discussing Eliot's poetry with emphasis on the much-discussed "Waste Land" will be Dune Robertson, English Language and Literature II. Margaret Dale, Latin and English I, will consider the poetic drama, "Murder in the Cathedral."

An informal discussion period will follow the three addresses. Refreshments will be served. All students of University College are invited to attend.

TURNAWAY ARTS BALL 500 FROM "FIESTA" SI, SENOR!

The second Athletic Night in the current series was held Saturday night and was attended by a capacity audience. The evening was sponsored by Victoria College, Emmanuel College and the faculty of Forestry. Due to the popularity of these nights, attendance has been restricted. William Rimmer of the Hart House Athletic staff estimated that 500 people had to be refused admission.

A feature of the evening was a basketball game between the team from Wayne University, Detroit, and the Varsity Blues. The Wayne team was victorious with a score of 49 to 46. In the swimming pool a demonstration of diving was presented by the Hughes twins, six-year-old girls. A display organized by the faculty of Forestry was exhibited in the Fencing Room and included mounted animals, wooden models of dams, bunkhouses and other forestry equipment. The Forestry committee reports the ab-

CESAR BORRE IS SPEAKER

Cesar Borré, organist at St. Basil's Church, Toronto, was the guest speaker at the St. Michael's College Music and Drama Society last night. Mr. Borré who has been guest conductor at the Toronto Symphony orchestra promenade concerts, described the history of the symphony, with specific comments on Cesar Franck's Symphony in G minor.

With Cesar Franck the symphony became a cyclic form, a fusion of many themes and of classification and romanticism, said Mr. Borré. Although Franck had written chamber music and oratorios in his youth it was not until he reached old age that he attempted to write a symphony.

COL. MADILL LAUDS RECORD OF UNIT

FOREIGN POLICIES DISCUSSED

Intervention in the domestic affairs of potentially dangerous militaristic countries was the possibility discussed by Mr. Hume Wrong, Associate Undersecretary of the Department of External Affairs, in an informal address to the Political Science Club at Wymilwood last Saturday night.

It is necessary to pay attention to the domestic policies of countries such as Germany and Japan, for dangerous doctrines cannot be quarantined, he pointed out. "What is needed to do this," he said, "is an intelligent public opinion to watch over world security, as nothing can be accomplished by words or covenants alone."

"Often," he continued, "action is taken only after aggression has occurred. This is insufficient; to preserve peace, countries must be prepared to take bold steps in cutting out aggression at the root."

International problems today, he admitted, must be approached not from the economic viewpoint but from the point of view of international peace.

Canada's place in shaping the post-war world, the speaker said, will be confined

U.C. DEBATERS OPEN SERIES

The annual Robinette debates, open to U.C. men only, are now in full swing as far as the separate debates among first, second, third and fourth years are concerned. Further elimination will take place on Feb. 15, when the semi-finals come off. The final debate is tentatively scheduled for Feb. 28, at one of the Red and White nights.

The Robinette Trophy was presented to the Literary and Athletic Society by Jouni J. Robinette, K.C., as an award for the encouragement of competition among debaters. The Robinette debates are a memorial to the late T. C. Robinette, K.C., who took great interest in the promotion of undergraduate public speaking in the college.

The debates begin with elimination debates in each year until one team has been selected for each year.

HEARST-STYLE PRESS TOPIC OF DR. HUGHES

"The Popular Moors and the Public Press" was the title of the third lecture in the current Sociology series given by Dr. Helen McGill Hughes from Chicago, a graduate of the University of British Columbia.

Dr. Hughes pointed out that for each group and stratum of society there are newspapers and magazines, specially made up to appeal to its interests. A shrewd publisher knows exactly what kind of story, he it only a hockey score, will "go over" with his paper's particular reading-public, his ultimate object at all times being to sell the paper.

Two extremes of newspaper came thus into being: The class-paper on the one hand, catering to the more educated classes usually concentrates on sober news-coverage and appeals to intellectual curiosity, so that circulation remains limited. The mass-paper on the other hand appeals rather more to emotion and places

Battalions Drawn Up in Mass for Inspection at Command Transfer; Madill Takes Salute at March Past

CODY, SMITH PRESENT

By J. D. Wray

At an impressive ceremony Saturday afternoon, Lt. Col. H. H. Madill, V.D., officially turned over command of the University of Toronto Contingent, Canadian Officers' Training Corps, to his successor, Lt. Col. W. S. Wilson, E.D.

Col. Madill, in command of portions of both battalions, drawn up in mass on the floor of the University Avenue Armouries, ordered a general salute upon the arrival of Col. Wilson. Accompanying Col. Wilson were Col. H. J. Cody, honorary colonel of the Contingent, and Dr. Sidney Smith, president-elect of the University.

Col. Madill then stepped forward, welcomed Col. Wilson, and invited him and his party to inspect the troops.

At the conclusion of the inspection, Col. Madill spoke briefly to the members of the Contingent.

Complimenting all ranks upon the splendid showing they had made during the ceremony, he referred briefly to the traditions and splendid record of the unit, both in World War I and the present conflict.

"I wish to thank all ranks for the whole-hearted co-operation and support they have displayed during my period of command, which has been for the past ten years," he said. "It is a privilege to be a member of the C.O.T.C., and to be its Officer Commanding is a very high privilege indeed."

"It is with great satisfaction that I turn over command to Col. Wilson, who has been Second-in-Command for the past ten years, and Officer Commanding the 2nd Battalion since its formation in 1940," Col. Madill concluded.

In replying, Col. Wilson said that his only regret in taking over command of the unit was that Col. Madill was stepping out.

"It is very fitting that the Contingent parade as a unit in this way to wish Col. Madill good luck," he said.

In conclusion, Col. Wilson said that he hoped the unit would continue with the success it had experienced under the command of Col. Madill.

Col. Wilson then led the Contingent in a March Past, at which Col. Madill took the salute.

Why Are Professors?

The approaching conclusion of the European phase of the war has already presented the Universities of this country with problems on whose happy solution the future of Canadian education directly depends. Decisions made under pressure in times of transition from a defined past to a future yet amorphous and pliant ought to be guided by a clear and well grounded conception of the needs to be served and the ends aimed at. What are the broad and basic needs which our Universities serve, and what ends ought they to envisage?

Undergraduates are inclined to be most acutely aware of the function of the University as a transmitter of the hard won and immensely varied culture of our past to the generation which is to shape the future. Through lectures, libraries, and laboratories Canada's need for an educated citizenry and far sighted leadership is served. The difference between a good teacher and a poor one, although hard to define is not at all hard to see. Students are not likely to forget that our Universities must see to it that the competence and color of their teaching staffs shall be maintained and fostered.

What is more likely to be overlooked is a second function of the University, if anything more important than the first, and more vital to the nation's future. The advancement of learning, the conception and delivery of ideas, the fashioning of wings for the earth-stained mind of man, this is the great task which western civilization has given into the keeping of its Universities. To this task, students are quite irrelevant. The claim of the Universities to this function is not undisputed. In recent years great industrial trusts have established their own private research institutes, the federal and provincial governments have created departments to do research on special problems, and privately endowed research groups have been set up to work undistracted by young and immature students. By and large, however, it has remained the privileges of the Universities to develop the fundamental framework of thought and action within which our age moves. Only by maintaining their traditions, and by continuing to foster the obscure, minute, and painstaking profession of scholarship, can our Universities retain and strengthen the position which has been theirs.

It has been often enough said that a good University teacher ought also to be a good scholar. It has not always been understood how intimate is the connection between the two. A teacher cannot present to his students the whole of the past, unadulterated and unabridged. He must shift and weigh, consider and choose what of the past shall be reported and what shall be left to moulder in the archives. If he is a man without reliable and mature judgement, this task must be performed for him, and, as in the lower schools, what he is to teach must be prescribed to him from above. The judgment of what is important and what trivial, of what is fruitful and what a blind alley, is the essential quality of the scholar and research worker. Only a man who has this quality of rare and subtle discrimination deserves to be called a good teacher.

Our Universities must seek out and help not only the men of ready wit, apt illustration, and well turned phrase, but also those of less flowing speech who are most happy in dark library stacks and quiet laboratories. Their monuments are found in the learned journals and in the rare students who can carry on their work. We are fortunate to have such men in our midst, and we must see to it that they remain. The student who has known them and appreciated what they have to offer, has experienced something rare and inspiring. Scholar and research workers, those whose interest is in the pursuit of truth rather than in its mere dissemination, must be assured a large share in the shaping of the Canada that is to be.

In Poor Taste

At the C.O.T.C. ceremonial parade Saturday afternoon, the band of the first Battalion played "O Canada" as the inspecting party proceeded on its tour of inspection. After the ceremony we heard witnesses complain of the use of a song that is now more or less recognized as an unofficial anthem of Canada as incidental music to the ceremony, while some companies remained at ease and others in the balconies were seated.

Of course there may be the excuse that the Band knew no other slow march suitable to the occasion. If this were the case, perhaps "O Canada" was better than nothing. But there seems to be legitimate grounds for complaint nevertheless.

Whether or not "O Canada" will be adopted as the national anthem is a subject of acute political controversy, and outside the scope of this column. But we do know that it may be considered as a national anthem, and is already partially considered as such by large elements of the population. This being the case, we think that its use as a march is a potential source of friction among the elements that are sufficiently strained to conserve the national unity.

Anything that could lead to a further straining of racial relations in this country is to be avoided at all costs. It is not probable that the use of the anthem as a military march by the C.O.T.C. Band will be publicized widely in other sections of the country, but like charity, national unity begins at home, and a start at national disunity similarly begins at our own door. For this reason we think that the playing of "O Canada" under the circumstances of the ceremony at the Armories last Saturday was a breach of good taste.

ARE MUSIC

Latent Talent

Women's Union Musicals

It is always difficult to write of a student recital, and the Musicals given by the students of University College last night was no exception to the rule. One is tempted to compare the program, unconsciously perhaps, with the average professional concert.

This leads to two difficulties. It is not quite fair to compare student musicians with professional musicians on the grounds of musicianship and acting ability. Moreover, a professional artist giving all or a large part of a program plays a wide enough selection to enable one to appraise his performing ability quite accurately, whereas it is next to impossible to give a fair estimate of the abilities of a young musician in one or two short numbers.

The recital last night was generally of a high calibre throughout, the odd slip or moment of hesitation being attributable for the most part to the lack of performing experience of the artists rather than to overambition in choice of numbers or incomplete mastery over their instruments.

However, it would be unfair to leave this general impression without mentioning one exception. James MacDonald's rendering of Liszt's Second Hungarian Rhapsody was given with the assurance, feeling and technical brilliance that are usually combined only in a professional artist.

It was a good idea, and a novel one, to combine the musicals with an exhibition of paintings by U.C. Students. The paintings will be reviewed in this column at a later date, as the exhibit will hang for the remainder of this month.

NO BEEF ABOUT BIG CITY

Bull Session at Whitney Despite Talk Ban

Once upon a time there were three bulls, Father Bull, Mother Bull, and a little Baby Bull called Schuta. One day, the Bull family sauntered out of the Union Station corral, sick and tired of waiting for a pullman for Chicago, and took a walk up Yonge Street, window-shopping in front of the girdle and foundation shoppes.

At the corner of Yonge and College Streets, Mother Bull uttered a moo of surprise. "Look at that billboard!" she boomed. "Our cousin Elsie!"

"Well, well," said Father Bull. "That picture flatters her. She looks as sweet and bawling as ever."

"Well, I don't know," said Mother Bull, flicking her tail peevishly and primping her cowlick. "She looks plump to me. And who wouldn't—getting a facial and as much milk as she wants every day."

Strolling along College Street, the three Bulls stopped in front of a delicatessen shoppe to admire a long, serpentine salami. And before Mother Bull and little Schuta Bull knew what was happening, the also admiring delicatessen proprietor had seized the paternal Bull by the horns and persuaded him to sign a contract as a window model carrying a sandwich board.

As the left, the faithless Bull preening himself before a slathering mob outside the shoppe, Mother Bull muttered, "Come along, Schuta. Ah, men! But I suppose that's the Way of all Flesh."

Hardly had the derelict Bulls crossed Spadina Street, however, when a cruising Swift's truck careened up to the curb. Two drivers lured Mother Bull inside with some Kentucky blue grass, spiked with a malted milk mickey finn. And so little Schuta found himself all alone in the world, for Mother Bull was rid of in short order, and was last heard of in the bovine world as 20 cases of Span.

Undeterred, Schuta Bull ambled up St. George Street. He was delighted to see a barn, so, of course, he entered. But, horrors! It was Whitney Hall!

With cries of "Eek! The Engineers have broken loose!" sounding from shocked female voices, the little lonely Bull, spurned by all, quickly galloped out.

Then, dolefully, he wandered into the Chemistry Building. It was at the time when the chemists were holding their annual house-warming party, but even though little Schuta protested that he was a close relative of Mrs. O'Leary's Cow from Chicago, the fire-helmeted students kicked him out, too.

Tears streaming down his little jewels, Schuta finally picked up an old copy of The Varsity lying on the ground, and soon stopped sobbing when he read that co-eds were having a difficult time finding dates who could wear tuxedos for the Vic At-Home. So he immediately loped down to College Street again and bought tie and new tails from Fleaman's Formal Wear.

After that, little Schuta was the most popular Bull on the campus. Co-eds from St. Hilda's Residence to as far as Loretto College Residence sought dates with him. It was true that his horns protruding through his top hat did slightly mar his appearance, but on the whole he looked splendid, co-eds raved, in his tie and tail.

So the moral of this story is that if you have social ambitions, a little bull goes a long way.

Speedy Varsity Crew Clips Aircraft in First Game, 5-3; Bulldogs Scuttle Watson's, 9-2 in Second

RESULTS NO SURPRISE

By Jerry Ewins

Varsity Blues grounded Victory Aircraft 5-3 in a very fast, hard-played hockey game at the Arena Friday night. Navy Bulldogs scuppered Watson's A.C. in the second game of the evening, 9-2, and thus a three-way deadlock for first place in the Varsity Friday Night Hockey League has arisen, each of the Blues, Victory and Navy having amassed a total of two wins and a loss.

Both games went as was expected, although Navy's swamping of Watson's by such a decisive score was rather unusual, due to the fact that they have never before shown the top-flight team which appeared Friday night in our league. On Friday night Navy brought up all their best men, and they put on a real show of how a well-practised team operates. The line of Bobby Schmitt, Bob Love and Floyd Curry was one of the smoothest combinations we have seen for quite a while. Watson's were no slouches themselves, showing a very good defence, but very little offence.

The Blues got off to a good start when Boa notched a goal early in the first period on passes from Smythe and Anderson. Bud Chauvin got this one back on a set-up from Morton, but Murray put the Blues out in front again on a nice play, combining with Lawler and Wade. Shand picked up a penalty for tripping during the period, but no damage was done while he was off. The score at the end of the period stood at 2-1 for Varsity.

The second period was featured by a very scramble type of hockey from both clubs.

Victory started the last period off with a burst of speed and held a decided edge in the play for a few minutes.

Currie parked the puck behind Davidson in the Blues' net at the two-minute mark to knot the count at two-all, Bud Chauvin setting up the goal. Bob Murray notched Varsity's third goal on passes from Lawler and Hughes. Richardson then got the gate for tripping Murray, and while he was off Shand scored Varsity's fourth on a pass from Lawler. Richardson returned to the ice but the Blues did not slacken their torrid pace, and Murray made it 5-2 as he finished off a play with Smythe and Shand. Victory then succeeded in putting on a bit of pressure, but Chauvin fell into the boards behind the net, aggravating an old knee injury, and he had to be assisted from the ice. They were eventually rewarded with a goal, Morton getting it from Markle and Currie. The game ended shortly afterwards with Shand still in the penalty box, the final score reading 5-3 for Varsity.

Murray, Lawler and Wade were Varsity's best men for the night. Bud Chauvin, Morton and Currie carried most of the Victory play.

Meds Monopolize Water-Polo Duet As Goalie Stars

Saturday's intramural water-polo was strictly a Med affair. In the first game, Jr. Meds "B" took host faculty Forestry's seven men for a merry ride to the tune of 5-0. The doctors had little trouble running up that comfortable lead in a game that went on to half time. The second game, between Jr. Meds "A" and Vic, provided more interest. Meds came out on the top end of a 4-3 score. Outstanding for Vic was big Dean Peterson, fresh from two years in the Navy, and just getting himself into top swimming form. He accounted for two of the Vic tallies. Ted Tenhuen and Sid Helperin with two goals apiece were the Meds stars, along with Goalie Sugar, who came up with some fine saves in the final stanza.

While the water-polo boys caught their breath, the six-year-old Hughes twins and, later, Jr. Canadian Champion Ken Tulley harassed by Ken Burton, the Sr. Champion (in a bathing costume, 1900 variety), showed the customers just what to do with that springy plank that sticks out over the water.

WELL PLAYED, BLUES!

Facing the most difficult game on this year's schedule, Coach McCutcheon can look back upon Saturday's game with a true sense of pride. In absorbing their second defeat under Mac in two years of play, the Blues acquired a host of new followers. That is the making of a great team. It was one time in which Goliath was not stopped by David. Everyone knows how the rest of the story goes.

Further in the background of the basketball picture is another individual who works endlessly, works hard. He is none other than Frank Tropea, student manager of the Blues. Even though he receives no public recognition, no cheers, and no back-slapping, Frank is perhaps the most conscientious man on the squad. All practices find Frank diligently going about his chores—and getting a kick out of it, too.

Last spring, Tropea was awarded his Varsity "V" in basketball, but has been kept out of action this year due to an injury. Between his fifth year Dentistry studies and the Blues, Frank is kept constantly on the run and so is on the lookout for an assistant to step into his shoes next year. Anyone interested should contact either Frank or McCutcheon.

Displaying the old college-try, Harry Mayzel played the game suffering from an attack of flu. And quite a game he played, too. Similarly, Joe Bryan did his best for three-quarters of the game with a badly sprained thumb.

Newmie Ertel is still the grand showman he was two years ago. Without doubt, he was the most excited person in Hart House during parts of the game. His complaints to Barry Lowes were far too numerous.

As for the rest of the visitors' team, well, the score does credit to it. Their high scorer, Avery Jackson, remained at home at his war work, but that was no alibi. However, Dick Hall more than made up for Jackson's absence.

We were a bit disappointed in the officiating. Maybe we can be blamed for prejudice but the foul that sent Don Gibson to the sidelines was a bit on the cheap side. Of course, maybe we are wrong!

Can think of only one real complaint, and that is the spirit displayed by the student body. By accurate count there were three Varsity yells and a couple of mediocre Toike Oike's, one while Joe Ryan was at the foul line.

It would seem that one of the hosts for the remaining "A" Nights could provide for a number of cheer leaders, preferably feminine. If there was the least bit of encouragement, the students would quickly revive a small portion of the dying college spirit. How about it?

SCORES AND MORE SCORES

The scores that have rolled in since and including Thursday are thusly: Thursday, St. Hilda's was wallowed in volleyball by Vic by a score of 39-18, and in the second tussle U.C. defeated Dental Nurses by 46-37. The Saints' star, Marg Cockshutt, turned in a neat performance, with her height helping her a great deal. U.C.'s stars in the second match were Dorothy Brown, Kay Williams, and Joan Davis.

Friday's scores, when St. Hilda's "A" played St. Hilda's "B," ended up 52-17 for St. Hilda's "A." Stars of the St. Hilda's teams are Ann Corrigan, Pat Paterson, Marg Cockshutt, Ruth Pakenham and Nesta Chappell. The other game, featuring Meds and O.T., ended up with Meds on top, with a score of 7 points ahead.

The hockey tilt between St. Hilda's and St. Mike's was again a shut-out against St. Mike's. The Saints (Hilda's) plunked the puck in Connie De Marco's own personal net 4 times, despite her valiant efforts. She played one of the top games for the Double Blue as did Patsy Dewan and Doris McKenna. The St. Mike's squad was minus Babs Smith, who cut her leg badly a game or so ago, and two others of their team. This was evened up, though, as the Saints had not the services of their three top players, Mardie Fletcher, Joan Fletcher and Barbara Wilson. The playing was closer than the play of the first game when St. Hilda's defeated St. Mike's by the same score. St. Mike's have shown the result of a good lot of practice and they play a faster, harder and wiser game than they did three weeks ago.

We're not sure what happens now, but if they stay in the play they should garner a win or so before the end of the season. If their

Wilson. Dafee Take Decisions in Weight Classes of Jr. Finals: Wrestling Preliminaries Also Staged

AT SATURDAY'S "A" NIGHT

The upper gym in Hart House was the scene of the junior wrestling preliminaries and the junior boxing finals at last Saturday's Athletic Night.

The wrestling was run off first, and out of four bouts scheduled only two were run off. Two men from St. Mike's—McDonough and McLeod—led off in the 165-pound class, with the better rasslin' match of the evening. The two Irishmen fought the regulation three rounds without coming to any falls, and only after one extra round was McDonough awarded the decision. In a junior heavyweight match, Rosen of U.C. proved himself the better man over McIntyre of S.P.S. Rosen took the offensive from the first bell and gained two falls over his opponent.

The unfought junior wrestling prelims have been postponed for two weeks and, in addition, Drohan, Smith and Guild have received byes into the finals.

The 155-pound junior boxing title went to Wilson of Meds, in the first boxing match of the evening, when he defeated Punnett of School. Wilson took an edge in the first round, held it during the second, while in the third he more or less macerated Punnett to a pulp, earning the decision with a technical K.O. to his credit. The 135-pound title match followed, Jackson of Dents meeting Myers of P.H.E. Jackson held Myers to an even keel through the first two rounds, but in the third he weakened and Myers took every opportunity to pound him into submission, finally pounding his way to the second technical knock-out of the evening. In the last tournament meet, Dafee of S.P.S. defeated Phillips of Forestry, gaining the 145-pound junior title. Dafee held the top notch all through the fight, but Phillips fought hard right until the end of the third round.

After the tournament matches, Coach Mel Glioma announced an exhibition boxing match between Nicholson of U.C. and Leitch of P.H.E. The exhibition match provided was a masterpiece of showmanship, coupled with a show of real boxing technique.

At next week's "A" Night the assault tournaments give place to a gymnastic exhibition, under the guidance of Charlie Zwygard, and the boxing and wrestling will be continued in two weeks.

Other attractions of the evening were boxing and wrestling matches in the upper gym, square dancing (also in the upper gym), and a water-polo match.

A number of games, including table tennis, croquinolet, and checkers were available in the various gymnasias, and the Tuck Shop was open all evening. Arrangements were made by the committee to provide the guests from Wayne University with dates for the evening.

B.H.S. Takes Cage Fixture By Single Point

Brampton High School climaxed a very thrilling basketball game by scoring seven points in the dying minutes of the last half to nose out U.T.S. by a 26-25 count in the first part of a doubleheader presented to the students at the Athletic Night on Saturday.

The score see-sawed back and forth as the lead changed hands quite often during the game. Brampton were out in front 14-10 at the half, but U.T.S. staged a determined rally and went out in front 25-19 with very little time left to play. Brampton rallied strongly as they realized that time was running out on them, and pulled the game out of the fire with a last-ditch scoring point, to win 26-25.

Walsh, Wilson and Chester turned in good games for Brampton, Chester especially finding the basket range to his liking in that final spurge. Maxwell was top scorer for the night for both teams with his ten points in U.T.S.'s total. Gibson and Chesney also went well for U.T.S.

Explaining that for some reason or other Mr. Hearst was a convinced anti-unionist, she described how he used his Chicago paper "The Herald-American" to flood the readers with propaganda against that medical practice, by making constant use of emotional psychology. On the other side, championing vivisection, was the Chicago Daily News, a class paper, which in its campaign employed mostly scientific material and authoritative statements that were usually truer arguments than the Herald's but failed in the appeal to the wide reading-public. Whilst the class-paper defended vivisection by use of statistics, the mass-paper would fight it with letters to the editor, saying: "They will never get my dog!"

"There is nothing a publisher fears more than that he is the mouthpiece for the doctrines of some other group or party," said Dr. Hughes in conclusion. She stressed that especially in a democracy discussion is of vital consequence everywhere from the family circle to the conference hall.

task, but I would single out Margaret Kerfoot, Bill Hossack and Gwen Mihalko for special mention. Miss Kerfoot showed a promising mezzo-soprano voice when she sang Think On Me by Lady John Scott. Valze Triste, one of a group of cello solos by Mr. Hossack, was performed with sound musicianship. Miss Mihalko's rendition of Schubert's Gretchen am Spinnrade was outstanding, not for its display of voice but rather for its meaningful performance.

One important fact was made obvious at last night's musicale, namely that the Victoria Music Club is an active group. It is having a definite influence in uncovering hidden talent at Victoria. Its efforts in this direction should be encouraged.

Professor Today In Minority Series

Professor Watson Kirkconnell will speak today on "Some Canadian Minorities" in University College in the Minority Series lecture sponsored by the Avukah.

Prof. Kirkconnell is the head of the Department of English at McMaster University. He is the author of a number of articles and books on literature, history, sociology, philosophy, and other scientific subjects, and he has also written poetry.

Widespread controversy has been aroused in recent years by Prof. Kirkconnell's political views, in particular his attitude towards Communism, as set forth in his book, "The Seven Pillars of Freedom."

In the latter book he observes, in defence of his position: "I have ruined my eyesight toiling over difficult languages in order that I might better understand and interpret immigrant groups."

In an interview, Max Rosenfeld, president of the Avukah, commented: "We are aware that much comment has been made on the coming address of Prof. Kirkconnell. It is our opinion that various political sides should be represented at the Minorities Series, in order to stimulate thinking on the problem by free discussion, or, in Milton's phrase, by the grappling of truth and falsehood."

Psychologists Appeal, "U" Riflemen Respond

"The demand for men students to aid in government research has been satisfactorily answered," stated Miss Bransby of the Psychology Department, on Saturday morning. "We already have twenty volunteers, and names are still coming in."

"The work is a military secret, and thus we are unable to give any details at this time," Miss Bransby continued. "Any male students experienced in handling rifles who could spare one half-hour a week are asked to leave their names, telephone numbers and time when they are available, with me at 69 St. George Street and NOT at the address that was previously announced."

games are now over, they will have a good start towards their team next year. For one thing, they certainly have the right spirit. The reason that we seem so vague on what is exactly the scheme of the hockey schedule is that despite careful explaining by Barb Wilson in words of one (or less) syllables of how the whole thing works, we still can't see beyond our own league.

It seems that the whole thing had to be worked to allow 24 games. So to do this Barb arranged for a number of little leagues of about 3 teams each. These play each other team twice. The two leading teams of the three go into another league. From there they may go into another league and so on ad infinitum like Dean Swift's flea, or they may not. Anyway, we hope to unfathom this perplexing problem by the end of the season.

All-Stars . . .

Last night we thought of a wonderful idea. Anyway, it may be good. We'd like to have each coach in the basketball circuit, and each hockey coach, to submit a name or so of their choices for All-Star teams in these sports. Basketball could be done right now, while hockey really couldn't be judged until a bit later. A whole team could be suggested, but not from the coach's own team.

We'll give a week or so for the names to roll in and then publish the All-Star choices for a first and second basketball team.

Odds and Ends . . .

In the badminton world, there will be a series of college tournaments culminating in the All-University Tournament, which will be held Feb. 14 at 7:30 at St. Paul's. The first tournament will be St. Hilda's, held this evening. The other tournament will take place the other even evenings of this week and next. Thus, every college will have been able to pick a team. Last year, because there were no facilities for practice, the teams were mainly picked by guessing, but this year should see better play.

Staffers Report, Save Story Points

"Our reporters do not seem to realize that under the new point system they should report in to the office on the days for which they have signed up whether they are free to take an assignment or not," Barbara Jones, news editor of The Varsity, stated in an interview Saturday.

"You see, each reporter starts out with ten points so that it is possible to lose points as well as gain them," she continued. "Every time a reporter fails to come in on the day assigned, he or she loses one point. Some scores are already as low as five because of this neglect."

"All they have to do if they are completely absorbed in tests or lab reports or essays, is dash into the news office and sign the left-hand side of the news-book. Then their points are safe."

"The main reason for this is that we want to know just what reporters are still on the staff and which ones have lost the enthusiasm for the newspaper business they had in September," she explained.

"Some of the scores have gone as high as twenty-one already, while several are over fifteen," she continued. "Scores will be posted once a week from now on so that everyone will know just where they stand."

Dumbarton Oaks Scheme Appraised By Dr. Wallace

Must be Viewed With Degree of Optimism. Disarmament, Pacifism and Isolationism Not the Answer

JUST TEMPORARY SCHEME

"Dumbarton Oaks is based on the enormous assumption that the Big Four will stick together." Such was the statement made by Dr. Malcolm Wallace, president of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs, and former principal of University College, yesterday at the meeting of the International Affairs Society in the Women's Union.

If they (Britain, China, Russia, United States) can hold together for a period of fifteen or twenty-five years, it is perfectly possible that we may learn the solution for peace, he continued.

Dumbarton Oaks is just a temporary scheme intended to guarantee peace in the world while they were planning for a more permanent peace, Dr. Wallace went on to explain.

Dumbarton Oaks has an assembly, an executive council, with a representative from each of the four big powers and France, and six other chosen representatives, a court of international justice, a huge secretariat, an economic and social council, and a military staff committee, the speaker explained.

Dr. Wallace said that we must not expect too much or too little from this plan but must view it with a certain degree of optimism. He went on to say that the chief criticism of this scheme is that each of the big powers will be able to sit as judges in their own cases.

Now that we have learned that disarmament, pacifism, and isolationism will not bring about peace we will have to find some new way, he continued. Force must not be omitted this time as it was in the League of Nations, the emphasized. "For," he continued, "human society everywhere is an aggregation of human beings who can live happily provided unquestionable force is in their midst."

Dr. Wallace said in conclusion that everyone, especially university students, should take some part in the public affairs of their community and their country.

Miss Agnes Fisher, president of the International Affairs Society, announced that there were new books in the library on the second floor of Baldwin House, and that there was going to be an essay pool for third and fourth year history students.

New Blood Drive Needs 3000 Cards

"There are 3,000 students who have not signified whether they can donate blood, and we are going to find out why," said Pete Aykroyd, director of the blood donor service at the University, last night. The drive for blood donors will be carried out in the next two weeks, and all those who have not yet signed their cards will be asked to do so.

"We are going to start with School, because there are 1,000 Schoolmen who have not signed up. These men will be contacted individually in their classes during this week. There are ten departments each of four years, which makes 40 groups, of which Murray MacCullough will be in charge," continued Pete Aykroyd.

Trinity and St. Hilda's will come next and those who were supposed to donate last term and didn't. Those who donated last year will be contacted by the Toronto Branch of the Blood Donor Service.

Corruption In Sport

On Tuesday last, five basketball players at Brooklyn College, Brooklyn, N.Y., admitted having accepted an initial $1,000 of a $3,000 bribe from two professional gamblers to lose a game with the University of Akron team in Boston on February 2nd. The revelation of this corruption of college sports had a thunderous impact on the whole of the United States. Kings County Judge, Samuel Liebowitz, immediately convened a grand jury in Brooklyn and ordered its members to investigate the college sport activities of "gambling vermin," and asked for "indictment without hesitation" where it is justified by evidence.

College sports have never been commercialized in Canada to the same extent as they have in the United States. The intercollegiate sports set-up across the border has received much criticism in this respect. Football, basketball, and even hockey games have been a source of revenue, not only for first-rate athletes without any desire for learning, but also for big-time gamblers, and for a few fortunate speculators. It is not wholly beyond credibility that college sports commercialized to this degree were only a step away from being a racket. While many of the stars of the college teams were actually semi-professional and well-compensated athletes, many of the players were actually students struggling for higher education. These men would seem to be especially susceptible to the temptation of large sums of money.

In his characteristic frank and outright manner, Mayor LaGuardia of New York City excoriated the gamblers who had tempted the college boys with money and asked the public and press to co-operate with him in efforts to "take these cheap, thornier chisellers, these procurers, these punks and thieves, and throw them in jail." The New York police have been working since last fall in an attempt to ensnare bookmakers and other professional gamblers seeking to enmesh college undergraduates.

Through this particular case coming into the foreground, the storm regarding intercollegiate sports in the U.S.A. has been stirred up again. The inquiry has shown that the practice of bribing athletes has not been confined to this particular case but is widespread. Many similar cases of attempted bribery and "fixing" of college games have been brought to light. This is a sad commentary on both the morals of the students involved and the manner in which sports, which are supposed to build up the nation's manhood, have been distorted by commercialism.

This case should serve as an object lesson to the authorities when intercollegiate sport is revived once more in Canada. In football especially there are strong forces which tend to commercialize the game and thus make it a breeding ground for corruption. The utmost precautions should be taken to prevent this and maintain sport for its true purpose, that of developing strong and healthy citizens and promoting the elements of team-work.

Correspondence

Feb 15th, 1945

The Editor of The Varsity.

Madam:

It is really "in poor taste" that you should, intentionally or unintentionally, criticize the C.O.T.C. Band because, according to your sentimental suggestion, it did not know any "other slow march suitable to the occasion" than "O Canada." I am not here concerned with your general attack as to the inappropriateness of this national Canadian song being played by the Band on a ceremonial parade. It is sufficient for me to point out that "O Canada" is recognized and authorized by the powers that be as a proper piece of martial music for such an occasion as it was used last Saturday.

In your editorial of today, you apparently assumed that the C.O.T.C. Band has such a poor repertoire (or perhaps it has none at all) of ceremonial music that its players had to fall back on "O Canada." Must I conclude you wanted to get a "crack" at the C.O.T.C. Band for some unexplained reason, and you could find no better opportunity to pile on your ridicule than to shelter under "O Canada"?

All I can say is your editorial performance is pretty cowardly, but real musicians can rise above such "featherweight blows."

Yours sincerely,

J. M. ROSBOROUGH, III S.P.S.
B. WASSERMAN, II S.P.S.

(Editor's Note.—That the playing of "O Canada" by the Band was due to the paucity of its repertoire was a suggestion only made in passing as a possible explanation of the choice. We did not mean to cast aspersions on the Band. We shall be glad to reserve our opinion of it until it gives a concert in the spring, as it has done in former years.)

Candida

Royal Alexandra Theatre
The old maxim that "clarity begins at home" was fought out on the boards last night as G. B. Shaw's Candida, starring Elissa Landi began its weekly run. Always the social purpose of exposing the stupid conventions of society, Shaw presents the inverted picture of Candida as the bulwark of the home, as protector of her reverent husband, who thinks he is the whole church, Chuckled full of Shavian taunts at society, he makes every word important in his web of arguments. Our interest never lags for one moment as the play zips through three hilarious acts. For an uncanny sense of timing, Shaw's stagecraft is a by-word of perfection. Entrances and exits, and above all his curtness, are wonderful. The closing lines of the first act are especially apt when the Vicar, whose jealousy and suspicion has been aroused by his protégé, states that he was a happy man until

Race Minorities Explained In Kirkconnell's Lecture

Lecture Issue Debated at Vic

"Resolved that lectures are a hindrance to learning" was the topic of the debate of the Vic Debating Society yesterday.

The affirmative was upheld by Dorothy Lindsay, II year, first speaker for the government. Freshmen arrive at college so full of enthusiasm that they are apt to be sitting in the lecture room at 8:27 waiting for an 8:30 lecture, she said. Contrast this, said Miss Lindsay, with a fourth year student sitting in D's at 9:25. He has missed his 8:30 lecture and is trying to make up his mind about going to his 9:30.

In reply, Chuck Tipp, I year, first speaker for the opposition, suggested that a university graduate remembered his professors longer than the books on his course. Furthermore, he continued, students usually select the university with the best libraries or the best swimming pool. Our presence itself shows our faith in this system, he stated.

We are not finding fault with the present lecture system, said Bob Buchanan, I year, second speaker, without suggesting a constructive plan to be adopted in its place. By systematic calculation with a professor who prefers to remain anonymous it was discovered that the approximate price of each lecture is 40 cents. The new plan includes three points: first, weekly bulletins; second, increased written work; and third, discussion groups.

We learn through practice, listening and understanding, insisted Helen Foster, I year, and second speaker for the opposition. Psychologists have proven this theory to us, she said. The speaker illustrated her point further by reference to the popularity of public lectures and of extension courses.

Another member of the debating parliament suggested another plan to take the place of the present lecture system. It was suggested that undergraduates be called upon to give one lecture a year to the class. In a course such as pure mathematics, fourth year, there would probably be two lectures.

Finally, in order to deal with the problem of the unemployed professors, it was suggested that they be given a copy of Acta Victoriana to see what they could do with it.

At the end of this discussion the vote was taken and the opposition had a majority of one over the government.

Although too old to be convincing as the Rev. James Mavor Morell, Bram Nossen played his part in the required self-assured and ministerial manner. Very long and for the most part very difficult, his speeches are the social preachings of Shaw himself. His wife Candida, played by Miss Landi, does not blossom forth until the last act when the climax comes with the auction sale. Richard Hylton's characterization of the super-sensitive poet Marchbanks as a "snivelling whelp" was overdone, of course, as the part calls for it, but nevertheless was extremely well done. A. P. Kaye as Candida's father, Mr. Burgess, was wonderful as the epitome of big business. The frustrated secretary, in love with her boss, was amusingly and convincingly played by Marie Paxton. Typical of the Shavian genius is the ludicrous touch when she comes in slightly tipsy on the arm of the Vicar's prissy assistant, Rev. Mill (Dorman Leonard).

Shaw draws all his characters with deep human insight, and this competent company gives a satisfying interpretation.

To tell you the story would spoil half the fun. However, if you aren't familiar (Continued on page 2)

Must Make Distinction Between Racial Minorities and Social and Political Minorities. Nationality a Very Real Factor

"CANADIAN MINORITIES"

"There is no word so misused in the world today as 'race'. We must distinguish between minorities which are racial and those which are not racial, but social and political," said Professor Watson Kirkconnell in the lecture, "Some Canadian Minorities," yesterday afternoon in University College. Racial differences are seen in physical characteristics; thus an ethnologist would not distinguish between a Frenchman, a Ukrainian or an Anglo-Saxon, racially, he said.

"Nationality, though not measurable like racial characteristics, is a very real and potent thing in the world today," continued Prof. Kirkconnell. There are few racial minorities in Canada. The Indians, amounting to 123,000, compose the largest minority in this country. The other racial minorities are the Chinese and the Japanese with a tradition and civilization quite different from those of the Occident. The Negroes in Canada are chiefly confined to southwest Ontario and Nova Scotia, while the 6,000 Eskimos are situated in the Arctic region.

The important problem is the overwhelming majority of Canadians who come from Europe and who are an intermixture of the three racial types of the Continent, he emphasized. "These groups are more strictly national and cultural than racial—if we regard minorities in statistics we are all minorities; there's no majority in Canada," Prof. Kirkconnell continued.

The French-Canadians are descended from the 6,000 who settled in Canada in the 16th century; they now consider themselves as "Les Canadiens." They have a marked tradition of their own, especially with reference to higher education, the speaker stated.

Prof. Kirkconnell then went on to discuss the Scandinavians in Canada who have produced an amazing amount of Canadian literature. He said that the Jewish Canadians to some extent had tended often, for reasons not of their own choosing, to become isolated. They play a large part in the national life, however, as can be seen by their contribution to music and the fact that in the last war their share was a little better than the national average.

French-Canada and labor interests are hostile to post-war immigration from Europe, and Prof. Kirkconnell thought that first claim for employment should go to the Canadians in the armed forces and to the million war workers. He said, "We must consider the capacity for new population, not in terms of nationality but in terms of straight economic considerations." From diversity might come a much greater national life and if we stress the fundamental liberty of every individual there are great possibilities ahead, he added.

Roaring disconsolately over the campus at daybreak, and flapping its great grey ears mournfully in a stinging northern blast, a medium-sized bull elephant imprisoned atop Hart House Tower startled weak-nerved students with its trumpeting for help early this morning.

Experts from the Superintendent's Removal Staff, hastily summoned to the scene, came to the conclusion that the elephant had in some way gotten to the top of the tower and was finding trouble in getting down.

Thongs collecting at the base of the tower were early split into two factions, favoring the historic versus the pragmatic approach, and headed by Prof. Bertie Bilkinson of the History Dept. and Prof. F. H. Underdon of the Philosophy Dept., respectively.

"It is deuced plain," rasped Prof. Bilkinson irritably, "that the historic approach, in this as in all other problems, is of the utmost validity. Before we can tackle getting the pachyderm down from his perch, we must first of all determine how he got up."

Prof. Underdon phrased his approach in the form of a dialogue which boiled down to the view that for the pragmatist only the problem at hand is of importance. "Who in blue blazes cares how he got up?" he roared. "Let's get him down at once. First things first. No useless theorizing for me."

The suggestion of a passing sociologist, that the elephant might be induced to slide down the bell-ropes, was rejected as impractical by Superintendent Les Panta. "The ropes would never stand it," he said.

Advent of one Skidder McGurk, aged 10, St. George Nursery School alumnus, broke the dilemma. Explaining that he had put the elephant atop the tower late at night for fear it should follow him right home, which his mother wouldn't like, young McGurk offered to entice it down.

At the offer of a peanut, the great beast loosed a joyous hoop and spiraled gracefully to the ground, its great ears fanning the air.

Profs. Bilkinson and Underdon thereupon commenced a controversy, conducted with umbrellas, regarding the philosophical validity of a miracle attested by the senses.

At press-time the elephant was joyously bearing its deliverer homeward atop its back. "Gosh, whottle mudder say?" moaned young McGurk.

In the Ballistics Lab . . .

The Green Room, once so popular with Artists, Engineers and Medsmen alike as a research laboratory in which to practise their experiments on impact and develop new proofs for complicated geometrical problems, has gradually degenerated during recent years to attain an all-time low. No longer is there a line-up formed in the lower regions of 'the House' at 10:25 each morning. Students have forsaken this den of iniquity for the respectable regions of the libraries and lecture rooms of the campus. Experimental work on mathematical and physical theory is dying among the undergraduate body of the U. of T. of today.

War is truly hell. The great majority of the men who could make those little balls dance to the tune of their eyes have departed in the service of their country, leaving behind only a small group of individuals who refuse to let this sterling English pastime die a natural death, and carry on in spite of all for the sake of the old school (the word is used loosely about our campus to denote the faculty of Applied Science and Engineering). University of Toronto men are attending lectures in droves, leaving several moments in the day when there is a vacant table available in this subterranean paradise, a deplorable state of affairs. Hart House has been financed for years on the take amassed in the Green Room's cash register, aided and abetted by the barber shop and the great hall gleanings. People are still getting clipped in the barber shop at standard rates, but the great hall has found it necessary to jack up its prices increasingly with the years in order to make up the new deficits in the pool room. Ah, to attend university in peacetime! "The captains and the kings depart," and "leave the world to darkness and to me."

Yesterday saw the final round of this year's Handicap English Billiard Tournament. Two very ordinary players waded through a prolonged match to reach a decision that foisted the crown upon Harry Denham. Both he and Ted Vetter, the runner-up, receive a slight cash remuneration for their efforts in the competition. In other years these two would be looked up to with admiration and respect by their fellow students. 'Tis year—well, you know how it is.

Skimming the Surface . . .

Response to the Hart House appeal for boxers and wrestlers to take part in the Junior and Senior tournaments has been very disappointing this semester, wrestling in particular taking it on the proverbial chin in this respect. The display that those who were interested enough to turn out for instruction and training have put on has, however, been very good. Why there isn't more enthusiasm about these sports is hard to understand. The equipment and coaches are of the highest calibre, and what there has been to stage at the Athletic Centre in the way of competition bouts has been well received by those attending these big events. . . . The subject of crowd control has been brought up by several people who protest this Hart House Athletic Night regulation as unfair to those who cannot get down early. We can only retaliate with the remark that it seems to be more beneficial to the ones who do arrive on time than a relaxation of the 1500 quota would be to those who just come for the dancing. The big gym is always jammed to capacity early, and the overflow crowd which is admitted packs the other attractions, much to the enjoyment of the participants. Have you tried to dance in the big gym after the basketball game? We guess you see the point. . . . The hockey Blues worked out last night at the Arena as usual. They played a good game on Friday night, and we think these Friday doubleheaders are a swell evening's entertainment. The Varsity team is worthy of a lot more support than it is getting in the way of students at the games. The same Navy team that which plays in our league is playing in that exhibition at Maple Leaf Gardens in aid of the Red Cross against St. Mike's Jr. A team; they also hook up

Slalom 'n' Stuff . . .

Well, girls, although you haven't heard much about skiing this year, your University Head of that department hasn't been exactly asleep at the switch. D. J. Sanders, the said Head, has been plugging along trying to arrange things so that there could be a ski meet this year, or at least some form of organized activity in this line. There are troubles, however, in that there is that little ole gas shortage.

As well as that, there is a little ole train shortage. The prospects looked pretty poor before D. J. started writing, phoning and otherwise heckling people, and they look even poorer now.

Even a trip to Summit is hard to manage, unless you worn and weary femmes can smile sweetly and pick up a ride from the end of the trolley line to the Summit property. By the time that one hikes the three endless miles there, it is just about time to turn back. Anyway, the consensus is that a meet is out of the question. D. J. consulted all the authorities and semi-authorities that she could find and they were enthusiastic about the idea but very vague on the practical question as to how it could be arranged in the face of all the restrictions and rulings.

Now it can be told, it can't be arranged. So if you have your skis out hopefully expecting great competition, you're out of luck. If you just plan to have a good time, we advise Scarborough or Rosedale golf clubs or Summit. This last really is worth the effort, but there is fun to be had aplenty at the golf clubs. They say High Park is all right, too!

Hockey . . .

Due to the zeal of the officials up at Varsity Arena yesterday, the game between St. Mike's and P.H.E. it could not be played. We hope the sight of the blue lines and the red spots will justify all this unfreezing and freezing up again. There is one happy thing. Yesterday, Barbie Wilson corralled us and explained with diagrams how the league was planned. We plan to give a full outline of this some time after tomorrow. By that time all the first round will be played off and the field will be reduced by three teams, when the second round will begin. Anyway, it is more or less straightened out in our mind now, and will be reproduced, with the points so far garnered.

FEATURE ARMED FORCES AT "ATHLETIC NIGHT" DEFEAT S.P.S. RESOLUTION FOR CO-EDUCATION UNIT

All Three Branches of Armed Forces Will Be Represented in Sports at Hart House This Saturday

BASKETBALL FEATURE

Another big Athletic Night is in store for Varsity students this Saturday at Hart House. S.P.S. and Wycliffe are the hosts for the evening, and members of the Armed Forces are being invited to participate in the sports this week. Representatives from the Navy, Army, and Air Force will be there, so that the whole night will be almost an Armed Services affair.

Books and magazines will again be collected at the doors. The response to this appeal has so far been very disappointing. Last year such large amounts of both were brought in by the students that the Navy League and the I.O.D.E. were more than pleased with the results. Playing cards are also very acceptable.

Proceedings will begin in the big gym at 7:30 when an all-star aggregation from School hooks up with a team from the Army Basic Training Centre at Newmarket in an exhibition basketball game. The S.P.S. team which played the Artsmen at the first Athletic Night certainly put on a good show, and if this squad measures up as well as they did a real game should develop.

At 8:30 sharp the main attraction of the evening gets under way as the Varsity Blues and No. 1 Air Observers School at Malton meet in the basketball feature in the big gymnasium. At half-time there will be a fencing exhibition, put on by some men and women experts and conducted by the U. of T. fencing master, Mr. Chas. Walters. After the finish of the basketball the host will be cleared for dancing. The gym faculties have promised to stage a variety of new and unusual novelty numbers during the rest of the evening, with Duncan and Thompson taking care of the P.A. system.

In the upper gym Charlie Zwygard's gymnasts will hold their annual Senior Interfaculty championship competition, starting at 8:15. P.H.E. and S.P.S. have usually dominated these events in other years, but Saturday's tournament will see nearly every faculty represented. When the apparatus has been removed, Jack Paterson and his student musicians will again supply the accompaniment for some old-fashioned square dancing.

The swimming pool program commences at 8:30 with a water-polo game between Sr. S.P.S. and Sr. Meds A, followed by a diving exhibition by some

Rotunda Display By National Board

Recent visitors to U.C. who may have been mystified by the large display in the rotunda can now cast their fears aside. It is not a nefarious scheme of the staff to get more essays from their pupils, but an important display from the Wartime Information Board.

Four large colorful sections proclaim the importance of price control in Canada. Illustrated by maps, graphs, tables, and raised photographs, the display shows production, consumption, and price control in the fight against inflation. Across the top, in large letters, is the statement: "War brings increased production. We must prevent inflation. The voluntary co-operation of every citizen is needed. Production, planning, and economic controls," and underneath are the posters.

The Wartime Information Board wanted to have a display of this nature set up at the University, and approached Pres-elect Smith the last time he was in Ottawa. After seeing the display, Pres. Smith agreed to their proposals and asked them to send it along.

U.C. was the only place on the campus with space enough to handle the sizeable outfit, and representatives of the National Film Board set it up there on Monday.

Previous to its appearance at the University, the display was shown at the Royal York Hotel.

The record program, held daily from 3:45 to 5:00 in the Women's Common Room at U.C., is open to the men and women of every college and faculty.

Tendency Toward Separation of Sexes in University Library Noted in Census. Although No Rule Made

WOMEN DISTRACTING

"Resolved that institutions such as Hart House should be co-educational" was the topic of the S.P.S. Debating Club yesterday afternoon at School. The government, led by Jack Jarrell, was defeated on the resolution by a vote of 13-11 in favor of the opposition, led by Ken Jay.

Prime Minister Jarrell opened the discussion by stating that the issue became a choice between two separate institutions for men and women or a single co-educational unit. He pointed out that one building would be cheaper than two separate buildings in which there would be obvious overlapping of services. He noted a definite trend toward co-educational centres and referred to the recent admission of women to the common room in U.C.

Ken Jay, leader of the opposition, contrasted the present agreeable state of affairs in Hart House with the catastrophe which would result in the event of an invasion by women. No longer would the Great Hall be a dignified room for the enlightening conversation of engineers, doctors, and "even artsmen." Rather, the conversation would be lowered to mere trifles.

The first speaker of the opposition strengthened his point by referring to the University Library, where there is no rule against the intermingling of men and women, but where a natural tendency to separate operates.

Bill Neale, Minister for Social Affairs, supported the argument for the government by references to the increased responsibility assumed by women in the business world. The minister suggested that college days were a good time to learn understanding of the opposite sex, who would be working with S.P.S. graduates rather than under them.

Harold Koehler, second speaker for the opposition, brought up the possibility of embarrassing situations arising from the presence of women in an institution created as a sanctuary from the distraction of the other sex.

He referred to the possible end of peace and calm in the library and of the present informality in the common room. Furthermore, added the speaker, with feeling, it was possible to concentrate properly only when out of sight and hearing of the opposite sex.

In the discussion on the floor of the week.

Varsity Representatives Show Campus to Co-Eds from Queen's

Four pretty co-eds, each a queen, were brought to Toronto by The Robert Simpson Company on Sunday night and were given a hectic but thrill-packed two days in the city. They visited the University yesterday morning and were shown around by two representatives of The Varsity.

Mr. Burwell took them on a short tour of Hart House and each girl agreed that it was most impressive, but, asked one queen, "Why are all the boys so amazed to see us?" The invariability of Hart House to women was duly explained, and the co-eds were then shown around the rest of the campus.

The campus queens were selected from photographs submitted in the first term and decisions were based on both personality and appearance. The final choice was made after personal interviews with each of the eight finalists by a judging committee headed by Tricolor editor Garth Gunter. A queen was chosen for each year, Ann Parkhill, of Winnipeg—tall, blonde and 18 years old—being Freshette Queen. Specializing in Fine Art, Ann intends to take up advertising.

Mhara Howson, a Toronto girl, is the Sophomore Queen, and her ash-blond hair and blue eyes provide the reason. Junior Queen Elaine Loa is a slim, dark-eyed girl from Ottawa, who graduates next year in Political Economy.

The petite Senior Queen, Lucette Hansen, is active in the Queen's Drama Guild and says that she would like to take up social service work after she graduates.

Each girl reflected that the two days they had spent in Toronto had been absolutely "dreamy" and hoped that they would be able to visit Varsity again sometime. Monday, they had a great time trying on new spring coats, suits, dresses and experimenting with new hair-dos and make-up.

Monday night, they had dinner at Angelo's and later saw Candida at the Royal Alex. The highlight of this evening was going backstage after the play, meeting Elissa Landi and the rest of the cast, and having their pictures taken with the stars. Broadcasting over CFRB was also exciting, but, said Lucette, "The wonderful food was best of all."

However, all was not pleasure for the girls as their two-day schedule also included several grueling appointments with mascara, grease paint and photographers. All the girls agreed that modelling for two days is fun, but for a profession—we-ell!

Last night the girls headed back to their books at Kingston, "to sleep for a week."

Angelo's and later saw Candida at the Royal Alex. The highlight of this evening was going backstage after the play,

Find Students Are Dissatisfied With Results of By-Election

Since the Grey-North by-election is generally considered the most timely political issue in the country at present, The Varsity quizzed several students yesterday afternoon on their reaction to the results, which gave Garfield Case, Progressive Conservative, the contested seat.

One trend of student opinion on the subject is struck by Ed Safarian, III Pol. Sci., who said: "I am very disappointed in the results. I think that if it had gone down to a clean fight between the Liberals and the Conservatives, the Liberals would have won."

After considerable thought, Mary Richardson, II Pol. Sci., quipped: "Nasty gory mess, isn't it?"

"I'm glad, but I fear they'll find a way of putting him (McNaughton) in later," said Ruth O'Shaughnessy, II Mod. Hist. "Case pulled a lot of votes on his personal popularity. It is not an expression of popular opinion towards the government, but it shows the trend in Ontario towards the Progressive Conservatives," opined Dave Thompson, III Law.

Sholom Perlman, V Dents, said: "The Grey-North by-election demonstrated that big business working passively with short-sighted 'progressives' can swing public opinion away from national duty, and the winning of the war."

Norm Lemmer, I U.C., said: "I expected McNaughton to get in"; while Bern Warren, I Civil, complained, "It's a rob. Godfrey for me."

Jim Younger, III Pol. Sci., said: "It was unfortunate, but not tragic, that General McNaughton did not get in."

Although this was not a scientific poll, most students interviewed were dissatisfied with the results of the by-election, and most of them favored General McNaughton. There was no indication that this was solely because they wanted the Defence Minister to sit in the House, or because they were Liberal partisans.

Creative Efforts Too Restrained By Over-Emphasis of Perspective

Perspective is overused to the detriment of other factors influencing creative efforts, said Caven Atkins, director of the Hart House Art Club, speaking on his paintings in the Art Gallery yesterday.

Mr. Atkins emphasized that a painting should be a pattern in light and form expressing the feeling which caused it to be painted. Achievement of this is much more important than proper perspective which by enslaving the artists of the last century limited them in their creative efforts.

Art is now freed from this restraint and a straight representation of the subject is no longer required or desired, but the mood of the subject must be presented in the form of a pattern, Mr. Atkins continued. In demonstrating this he pointed out examples, from his own work, of ignoring perspective and even deliberately distorting it, to obtain a homogeneous mass on the picture surface.

In one of these, The Old Town, a Jeep, and the Navy, he exaggerated the perspective to emphasize the age of the buildings and to shape them into a homogeneous mass. However, in another painting, Around Bloomfield Hills, he was so struck by the pattern caused by the snow on the hills that he did nothing to alter it. He also used this painting to demonstrate how depth may be obtained in a picture without the use of perspective, by making the background of a color which is in contrast with foreground objects.

Another example of this was Sandbanks No. 1, in which posts in the foreground contrast in color with the sandbanks. In still another painting, Lovers by the Sea, he said background colors were used to convey a feeling of indefinite depth.

The New Realism

Students who heard Mr. Hume Wrong's informal talk to the Political Science Club Saturday night commented afterward that it was one of the most stimulating addresses heard on the campus in the present academic year. It was stimulating in that it fostered in those who heard it a belief that all might not fall miserably in the peace settlement as happened after 1919, simply because people do not expect miracles to occur in the field of international post-war cooperation.

Mr. Wrong described the contrast between people's expectations at the end of the last war and their feelings now. After the Great War there was real hopefulness, what might be characterized as Wilsonian idealism, that international problems might be solved merely by the covenants expressed in the foundations of the League of Nations. Now the prevalent feeling is one of caution, hesitation, even doubt as to the outcome of international cooperation. Widespread apprehension is afoot concerning the outbreak of another war.

Another question being faced more realistically now is that of the structure of international organization. It would seem that the concepts of Grotius concerning the equality and sovereignty of all states are at last breaking down, after holding away over the western state system for centuries, even after the validity of such a concept was destroyed by the end of the First Great War. To pretend that a small weak state is on a par with a large powerful one now appears absurd; it is time that it became recognized that one of the main factors in the game of politics is unadulterated power.

To orient this new preponderance of power in the existing system, it may be necessary to revise the rules of international law. At present international law bars intervention in the domestic affairs of a country, as long as no external act of aggression has taken place. To wait for aggression to be committed may be to delay until war becomes inevitable. This does not mean, of course, that the allies would be justified in intervention in a small country solely because its government is distasteful to them. Intervention should be confined to the countries where a government planning aggression is a menace to world peace.

In similar vein, it has been pointed out that in questions where the large powers have a vital interest, it is of no avail for small powers that have no interest in the matter to try to have their say in the decision. For example, no beneficial result could come of pious moral judgments passed by the small powers of the Americas concerning British policy in Greece, or Russia's settlement with Finland, because these small powers on this side of the ocean simply have no direct interest in the areas concerned, and in any case, no force to back their opinion.

In our opinion the period between the two wars marked a transition in world politics from a system based on the equality of nations before international law, to a system where the disparities in power are so great as to destroy this concept of equality. It is too soon after the event, and the transition is still far too incomplete, for us to be able to discern the causes, although it would seem that the great progress of scientific discovery and the consequent industrialization of the world during the past century have played a large part.

Whatever the cause of the transition, its manifestations are becoming ever more apparent, and perhaps this is the reason for the different approach to the problems of a peace settlement. The League of Nations, though theoretically based on an equality between the states, was in fact from the start heavily under the influence of the great powers. The settlement this time shows every likelihood of being moulded to suit the actual situation.

Tremendous problems still exist, some of them undoubtedly caused by the new way of looking at the relations between great and small powers. The idealist will be dismayed at the new plans which will probably deprive the peoples of the small nations of their proportionate voice in international affairs. The settlement that seems to be emerging from this war is in the form of an institutionalized United Nations, a continuation of a military alliance.

To say that this should not be so is fruitless. The world appears to be in need of such an organization, and no wishful thinking can restore the situation that existed in the past. The fact that peoples and governments are approaching the settlement this time not with an idea of what should be, but with a realization of the facts of power politics as practised today by all nations that are strong enough to do so, is one of the most hopeful indications that a successful peace settlement will be reached.

Ottawa Calling

Family Allowances

By NEIL MACDONALD

Premier Maurice Duplessis of Quebec has served notice on Prime Minister King that he is not prepared to accept the system of Family Allowances as planned by the Dominion Government. Probably for different reasons, he feels with Premier Drew of Ontario that the measure as it stands is an infringement of provincial rights in the matter of social services.

The opposition which the Department of Health and Welfare is meeting from certain provincial governments is nothing, however, compared to the problems it is discovering in setting up its "typical" provincial headquarters in Charlottetown. Here, officials have already discovered, many children's births have never been registered, and there is the fuss and confusion of trying to prove the children's eligibility for the money at this late date. Since the Allowances go on a sliding scale, according to age, the date of birth is important, and is difficult to prove.

Which all goes to indicate that the Department of National Health and Welfare is not going to be able to have the cheques ready for distribution by July 1, 1945, as planned in the act.

AR-MUSIC

The Children's Crusade

Massey Hall

Toronto can lay indisputable claim to one kind of musical prowess at least—its performance of religious works. Last night's performance of Pierre's The Children's Crusade in no way weakened the reputation that Sir Ernest MacMillan and the Mendelssohn Choir have solidly established. Aided by the Bell Singers and the Children's Choir, the conductor led his orchestra and choir to new triumph in a work that called for some very tricky balance. The music is emotional, the words are pietistic; a slight distortion of mood would have resulted in the lugubrious. As it was, the tone was saved throughout by a childlike transparency that remained re-

"We Make You Think"

CHAPTER FOUR

As the green gurgling tide closed over their heads, whirling them towards the sewers, McGeech wriggled free from the grasp of the Fakir Alhellalliova and fumbled about his thigh. For he had come in full frog-sporing panoply, and possibilities lurked in his rubber boots.

In an instant the left boot was unclasped, an instant more and he had peeled it off and stuffed its top into his mouth.

Then concentration knit the harassed features of Dr. McGeech. It was essential that he remember the trick he had been taught as a stripling so long ago in the Orient, as a reward for restoring the Maharajah of Undaware's purloined sacred ear-muffs.

Control of the breath was the essence; and as he concentrated on the manes and blew, he recited an Oriental incantation.

As he blew into the mouth of the rubber boot it filled with air, expanded, assumed a strange shape . . . the trick was working!

In five seconds he had blown it up completely, tied the mouth fast with his garter, and was sitting triumphant on top. He had inflated the boot adroitly into the shape of a collapsible rubber boat!

Humanely hauling the struggling Fakir in beside him, McGeech regained his breath and began his lecture. No professor, even when he has become the Terror of the Underworld, even afloat on the Taddle in a collapsible rubber boat with an arch-criminal, can ever wholly abandon the lecture method.

"Fakir Alhellalliova," he began somewhat pedantically, "I have grasped your evil scheme. In the vernacular, I dig you. I am McGeech. I know you for what you are: the most cunning scoundrel in Canada—the arch-smuggler of precious throggle-pins.

"I know your methods. Your agents are strewn through Hart House. They eat in its Great Hall. They artfully dig those throttle-pins out of the innards of frogs, wherein you have secreted them. Did not the Warden himself unblushingly admit that frogs were served in the Great Hall as chicken?"

"It was that admission that gave away your scheme. Only one accustomed to constant ersatz could tackle Hart House chicken without blanching—only a Nazi—a spy!

"You were clever, Alhellalliova. The Hart House clock's minute-hand you stole for a frog-spear. The cash-register you nabbed, for its mechanism embraces a priceless host of throggle-pins. The Warden's memoirs, the broken pool-cues, you swiped to confuse the trail. But I, McGeech, was unconfused. This is my finest hour."

So ending, he bowed left and right in acknowledgment to the applauding echoes reverberating from the cavernous Taddle walls.

But a smile spread across the inscrutable Hindu features confronting him and the Fakir spoke slowly: "You have divined much, O McGeech, but not all. Soon you may know all, may fit the Memoirs and the Pool-cues into their proper places in this plot which (I may say) has baffled (it prides me to speak it)—has baffled even McGeech. But that fuller knowledge, O McGeech, will come to you in the Underworld, among the souls of your reptilian ancestors."

And the Fakir rapidly made the Thirteen Sacred Paces and went into a trance.

And from the depths of his trance he gestured hypnotically.

And as he gestured a strange thing

HART HOUSE ELECTIONS

FOUR WEEKS FROM TODAY

WEDNESDAY, 7th MARCH

Victoria and Medsmen Lead in Track Honors

Our own Varsity trackmen have sizzled up the big oval in Hart House with some of the fastest and hottest track competition that has taken place on this campus in the past couple of days. As all through the current session of the indoor track meet, students from Meds and from Vic only crowd the winners' lists, but other faculties have single men well up in the placings. This week's events were the junior and senior mile races and the open 220-yard event.

The 220 open had the largest entry and provided the closest competition of the three events. George Lewis of Meds burned up the eighth of a mile in 24.4 seconds, only .2 seconds short of the U. of T. indoor record, which the same runner set last year. Antoni of Meds was a close second, clocking it in 24.7; Kingston of Vic, Fordyce of S.P.S., Fielding of Meds, and Hikichi of Vic followed up, all finishing in less than 26 seconds.

Twenty-one junior runners saw fit to enter the mile event, and Sloan, a Vic man, came to the fore with a time of 4:50. Sloan's runners-up were Mackie of Trinity, Horning of Vic, Emmerson of Vic, McDonough of St. Mike's, and Mowbray of Meds.

The senior mile attracted only four runners. James of Meds came in first with a time of 4:46. Right on his neck was Fordyce of School, 4:46.4 being his time. Cross of Meds and Hamley of Trinity were the other runners.

He Phillips commented that the track meet is progressing just as favorably now as it was earlier in the year, despite

Rifle Practice

The schedule for the rifle practice, taking place at the Psychology Department, is as follows:

WEDNESDAY
2:00 p.m.—Shimizu, Bartlett, Mudrick, Flock, Halperin
2:30 p.m.—Shyloff, Dickson, Shaffrin, Trussler
THURSDAY
2:00 p.m.—Grinalski, Shewfelt, L. Steinberg
2:30 p.m.—Kingdon, Hill, Arnaud, Lewis, Mothersill, Thomson
3:00 p.m.—Gullett, Steadman, Wier, Saba, Flock
3:30 p.m.—Mudrick, Drubacher, Klay, Trussler
4:15 p.m.—Mott, Boivin

the seemingly smaller numbers of entries. The events are longer, more difficult, and require more training than the earlier ones, he explained.

In order that all capable tracksters be prepared, Hec urges them to note that there will be an Athletic Night track meet at the Meds' Athletic Night on Feb. 17. Two open events, the mile and the high jump, will be held, and Vic and Meds representatives are to stage an exhibition relay race.

ATHLETIC NIGHT

of the U. of T. men who are taking instruction in it this year. At 9:15 the second game of the scheduled Intramural doubleheader takes place at St. Mike's A play Jr. School. Then, at 9:30, L/S Max Hurley of H.M.C.S. York will give a comedy display in his own inimitable style. He has been here before and was very well received by those who saw him. After this, Bill Moffat has arranged some preview match competition among members of the swim team which is to represent Varsity at the forthcoming Telegraphic Swim Meet with Queen's, McGill and Western on March 1.

The boxing room will again contain the very popular active games which were here for the first two Athletic Nights. The wrestling room and the lower gallery will be used as sitting-out rooms and lounges under the supervision of committees from Wycliffe, while S.P.S. will take over the fencing room to display some of the mysterious intricacies of their scientific labs.

The tuck shop will also be open for the evening to provide appetizing refreshments between the many events.

Fine Arts Club Meeting

Miss E. B. Snell will speak on the "Problems of Teaching Art in Secondary Schools" before a meeting of the Fine Arts Club tomorrow night at 8:15 in Wyulwood. This will replace the regular meeting of next Wednesday night. Refreshments will be served.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Al Cringan

OBSCURITY IS PURITY . . .

The Varsity hockey Blues and the basketball Blues receive full publicity in both this newspaper and in the larger Toronto dailies. The hockey teams in the interfaculty circuit also get fairly complete coverage. But the combined number of men functioning on teams in these three categories is far outnumbered by the number of men who grace the rosters of the basketball teams in the intramural hoop loop, and the latter get out on the floor to fight just as hard as the former, with little or no chance of ever making the headlines, except for the members of the two teams which reach the finals. This year, those two teams which meet in the finals will have to lay aside 39 other teams each—there are 80 teams of hoopers entered in the fight for the Sifton Trophy, which was won by the Dents A team last year.

The 80 teams have been divided into five groups of four, and twenty groups of three. So far, the schedule has been very favorably run by all teams. Only three teams have defaulted, all in the lower groups.

It looks as if there were very few misfits in the groupings of the larger four-team groups. Leading off in Group I is Senior School with four wins, followed by U.C. I with three wins and a loss. Sr. Meds A, with one and three, and Vic I with none and four, fill out the standing of the top group. There is a three-way group tie in the second group, U.C. II, Jr. S.P.S., and Dents having two wins and a loss apiece. Jr. Meds A are in the background with three losses. P.H.E. I and S.P.S. III are tied for the leadership of Group III, with two wins each, followed by Vic II and Sr. Meds B with one win each. Group IV finds Jr. Meds B away ahead with four wins, followed by S.P.S. IV with two, and Trinity A with one, and St. Mike's A with none. Knox and Wycliffe lead the fifth group, having two wins each, followed by Forestry A with one, and Emman. A with none.

THE WINNAHS?

A mid-season check-up on the whole hockey picture gives us some idea of the teams headed towards play-off spots. In Group One, Sr. School and U.C. I are tied with two wins and a loss, while the Meds I team has two losses. It seems certain that S.P.S. and U.C. will hit the favored play-off spots, and it is probable that they will end up the season tied, as they are now. In Group Two, all teams have played four of their six games, and Meds II should have the leadership clinched with three wins and a tie already, but Vic I, with two wins and a tie, are possible contenders. The third group champions are entirely undecided. S.P.S. III, Dent A and Trin A are in a tie; two wins and a loss apiece (excluding yesterday's game). The Forestry team has Group Four leadership, having three wins, the other teams in the group having one apiece. Likewise, Emmanuel has undisputed leadership of Group Five—three wins and no losses—but Wycliffe, with two wins and a loss, are not out of the way yet. In the last group, Dents B are ahead with two wins, just ahead of Knox B, Trinity B and St. Mike's B, with one win apiece (again, before yesterday's game).

So there it is. Few of the hockey group leaderships are certain, but most of them are probable.

Trinity Teams Capture Hockey Doubleheader

Both Trinity hockey teams defeated scored on a fast breakaway in the first 30 seconds, going right through the Dents' defence and putting a fast hard shot past Shadok in the Dents' goal. Vandervoort of Dents retaliated, taking Dents into the lead again. Page of Trinity tied it up despite stiff opposition, and in the last six minutes of play Higginbotham broke away and took Trinity into the lead again.

Dents put on a desperate effort to even up the score after the final goal, but Appleton succeeded in stopping the many hard shots rained on him. The Dental team lost its chance when Bob Murray was removed in the last two minutes for a misconduct penalty of 10 minutes.

The Dents men outweighed the Trinity squad by 10 pounds although the heavier team hit hard and often. Trinity, being lighter and faster, had a slight edge on Dents A from the beginning.

In the second game, Trinity B scored three points each period. Cudlip, Gillespie and Witton scored in the first term, while Galpin, Gillespie and Anderson notched up the stick in the second. Shepherd was outstanding in the Trinity goal, keeping out the best that the Dents could do. The weak spot on the Dents' line-up was their net-minder.

Trinity A—Bolte, Mitchell, Fage, Ratlman, Clarkson, Appleton, Higginbotham, Clarke, Hillborn, Kingston, Carter.

Dents A—Shadek, Schwartz, Sparrow, Cousins, Minroz, Murphy, Murray, Hart, Langmaid, Shapiro, Vandervoort.

Trinity B—Anderson, Gillespie, Rogerson, Hurst, Shepherd, Hendra, Kirkwood, Cudlip, Whitton, Klahna, Shaker.

Dents B—Coleman, Kennedy, Wachma, Marshall, Tytack, Wallace, Alyuk, Fleming, Richardson, Sills, Swanson.

HEY, BOY!

They've talked about pin-up girls and they've talked about pin-up boys, but now comes the time to talk about the neglected pin-boys. And to be specific, the pin-boys down at the Midtown Bowling Alleys are waiting, pins, diaper pins, and bobby pins all prepared for first year University babes. Those 50 lucky ones who got their bid in first for howling as their elective, can now approach their reps for cards. The games can be dragged out till Easter, but take the warning from one who knows, and don't try to cram all twenty games into one day. There is a shortage of rubbing alcohol, as well as shortages of silk stockings.

AN INTERVIEW . . .

with the manager of the alleys revealed some interesting facts besides a shortage of pin-boys. The most startling was that some students had invested their dollar for bowling cards and had neglected to make use of them. Could it be laziness, lack of interest, or lack of that rationed item—time? If enough interest was displayed to give in to a rep's sales talk, energy to walk some four blocks west on Bloor Street should not be lacking.

As teams for the Easter interfaculty tournaments will be chosen from the information contained on the score cards, it would be convenient if there were some scores on the cards. The ouija board comes in handy sometimes, but this isn't one of them. So, for our sakes, to save our screaming nerves, and your own health, take advantage of the opportunity at hand, as it comes but once. Next year the cards may be more expensive.

THIS IS A CALL TO THE BOWLING EXECUTIVE . . .

to meet at 86 St. George Street on Tuesday, February 13, at 2:30 p.m. If some extenuating circumstance keeps some rep from attending the meeting, a rep of a rep would be welcome. The purpose of the aforementioned meeting is to collect the all-important proceeds from the card drives, distribute new cards, discuss faculty as well as interfaculty tournaments. It is rather important—so don't forget that the place is Loretto College, the time is mid-afternoon next Tuesday.

NOT A DAY TOO SOON . . .

We bring up the subject of Easter tournaments. Due to the increase of bowling enthusiasts over last year, we expect a parallel increase in the call to the colors of each faculty. May we remind you that the S.A.C. will provide the backing for the games, so have no fear if your card is fully used.

A COURIER REPORTS THAT . . .

the latest volleyball score is: U.C. 44, Pharmacy 23. Sally Liebowitz was the star for the latter team, while Betty Osborne, Kay Williams and Joan Davis contributed the distinguished action for the former. There were several factors to explain the large difference, one of which was the lack of coach for Pharmacy. Another was the dearth of players for the potential druggists. At half-time only six players were in the battle; after half-time a seventh player appeared, still leaving the team short one player.

VARSITY REVIEWS "TRINITY REVIEW"

Perhaps we just aren't feeling blood-thirsty these days, but the spick new blue-and-white Trinity Review seems just about the most competent Undergraduate production we've read in a long time. Possibly this is due to the new editorial policy of lumping the most tangled Trinitarian poetry on one double-page spread and for the rest of the book acting as though it weren't there. The scrupulous reader can glue these two pages together.

The Editorial, to begin with, is packed, important, and carries a cumulative conviction. If any better call to the uneasy undergraduate conscience has been composed in this University we should like to read it.

The Review's humor, possibly excepting W. H. B. Robinson's slickly garrulous Hallelujah Hypocrites, is highly civilized. Graham Cotter's An Experiment with Time tends to be facetious rather than witty, and misses much of its effect by being too verbose.

Dave Ker's To the Men of the College is a sophisticated, highly original presentation of the Typical Co-ed theme, in the real collegiate genre that we should like to see more of. Undergraduates are more at home on the campus than in the Mysterious Universe, but when they sit down to write it is surprising how few realize it.

F. T. Kingston's Meditation is a rather forced sidelight on a recurrent editorial woe. Nor must we omit Bob McCormack's joyous little squib, Carlyle in Review, which shows a capacity for letting oneself go that we never dared suspect existed on Hoskin Street. Serious poetry fills the Review to overflowing; there is nothing really outstanding in this department, nor for that matter, excluding the editorial, in the whole magazine; but the general level of competence is upheld. Rose Marie Moore is back with The Spectre and August Week-end, the first unusually fine; Mary McClachlin's lush, The Island suffers from lack of sharpness; Mary McPherson's Mist and C. D. Ellis' Ex Opio are effective if not very exciting. The recurrent failure of poems like E. G. Bruton's In Memoriam is one of the mysteries of the wartime campus. Friends who have died abroad would seem to be the undergraduate poet's chief contact with the heart-shaking side of life; but somehow pieces about cooed dates in Mac's always come off better.

As for the four poems on pages 16 and 17, we offer our readers a last week's Yonge transfer for any remotely intelligible interpretation of the first three; the fourth we can just piece out for ourselves. In the Editorial's words, "we have printed poetry that is significant of the growing mental chaos, and also of escape from any semblance of poetic or human reality."

The harassed Editorial Board of Torontonensis (plug) doesn't quite monopolize the eyebrow-raising advertising quota for Toronto and environs, as witness the display ad in yesterday's other morning paper, headed:

Not to mention Rosby.

Kufkufery, as we have often remarked, bloweth where it listeth, which is why we can't resist scalping this quote from an American paper whose name we disremember:

"No more touching ceremony has been witnessed in Washington these many years than occurred yesterday when Franklin Roosevelt took his simple bath as President of the United States." SORRY, NO PICTURES.

Those Quiet, Please! regulations in Whitney Hall just beg for the feminine mind to unfold itself in subtle and splendid circumventions. One of the denizens was lathering speedily to get under the No-Baths-After-11-p.m. wire, when muffled footsteps sounded down the corridor forewarning her of the Dean on her nightly prow.

"Gad," thinks the bather, "do I get fined in the altogether?" "Naw," chirped a bright companion, "just tell her you fell asleep in the tub." OF BOREDOM, MAYBE?

Taking baths, the same Dean has remarked in discouragement of surreptitious baincourmerie, is a private affair. So one of the freshies, our spies tell us, has delighted to discourage the policing car at the keyhole by performing her Saturday ablutions with the door open. PAGING MR. DE MILLE.

Speaking of bathroom dramas, one of the lads at an adjoining men's residence was shaving before breakfast at what happened to be a mighty late hour of the morning, when a whoop came up from the floor below purportedly summoning him to the telephone.

So, with lather plastered over his face, he dashed down, four steps at a time, swearing doggedly, to encounter three sunny co-eds in the hall.

At the sight of him the fittest one gasped shakily, "Good Heavens! Hydrophobia!"

PLEASE, MAMMA, DO WOLVES BITE?

Night-editing is done under pressure, and two editorial heads in a recent issue came out side by side, like they shouldn't have:

WHY ARE PROFESSORS?
IN POOR TASTE
Quite.

One class we know of has a notoriously absent-minded prof., who gets detained by desperate cuties in the corridors and forgets about his next lecture completely until he has given them the benefit of his advice for a full twenty minutes. From which you will gather that his class is used to waiting.

Came one day, though, when they waited and waited, but he didn't turn up at all.

Next day he was profuse with apologies. "I was dictating letters," he protested, "and the lecture just slipped my mind. It wasn't so strange, you know... I hate listening to myself lecture."

FANCY THAT... as the man said, handing a rhinoceros to the pigeon-fancier.

happened to McGeech. A sticky darkness suddenly encompassed the Terror of the Underworld. He extended his hands, encountered something soft and yielding, black, almost rubbery.

In an instant of horror he knew; he—McGeech—was inside the rubber boot, whither some evil magic had transmuted him! He was trapped!

Dimly came the mocking Fakir's laugh. Somehow McGeech knew that the current was swifter, shallower; that the Fakir was standing on the bottom of the stream, here rapid but only knee-deep; was waving him in his speeding rubber prison on ironic goodspeed.

Then his stomach dropped sickeningly, and he knew more—he knew that the blown-up boot, with himself inside, had plunged down the sewer!

He closed his eyes. It was his darkest hour.

Horror! We warn our readers to avoid Chapter Five — perhaps it may prove too dreadful — too macabre!

Speaks to Society On Communication

Mr. A. Long of the Bell Telephone Co. will address a meeting of the Engineering Society on "Giving Wings to Words—Today and Tomorrow," tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 in the Physics Building.

This talk deals with the development of special communication equipment to meet the requirements of our armed forces in the field of battle. It shows how our men have been given advantages over the enemy, and also demonstrates the role of communications on the various fronts.

Demonstration equipment on hand will amplify heart beats a hundred million times, will let the audience hear the noise that muscles make in contracting, and will show speech and music being sent along a beam of light. As in the past, all interested students on the campus will be welcome.

Dr. Jones, of the Mechanical Department, and Honorary Chairman of the Debating Club, began his remarks with a quotation from William Shakespeare: "Women, God bless 'em, we can't get along with them and we can't get along without them."

As a practical solution it was suggested that the warden of Hart House be married as a first step towards any new co-educational institution advocated.

markedly pure as the work gathered intensity. Even so, the work would not please anyone who finds religious ecstasy repellant.

The cumulative sweep of imagination and spiritual fervor was built up competently through the four parts; the orchestral background was especially skilful, as were the impressionistic interludes. Of these the seascape and scherzo-like road scene were finer than the two Wagnerian tempest. The whole effect of phantasy was heightened by the use of carol and legend forms, used throughout in the children's choruses. The work suffered a little from translation: the unstressed rhythms were not always too kind on the English phrases, and the words chosen were at times quite unsuited to the characters.

All the choirs showed excellent training and sang with sympathy: the only obvious defect was the over-paleness of the "pale voices from out the night" against even the "pianissimi" of violins and harp. Harcourt's legend was well sung; Frances James and Kathleen Busby caught the fragile pathos of the fanatical lover-children. The Hallelujah finale came off splendidly and proved just the needed emotional climax.

DREW APPOINTS PHILLIPS NEW HEAD OF GOVERNORS

Henry Borden, K.C., and O. D. Vaughan, Vice-president of the T. Eaton Company, are Also Elected to Board

MACDONALD SUCCEEDED

Lt.-Col. W. E. Phillips, C.B.E., D.S.O., M.C., has been appointed chairman of the Board of Governors of the University, Premier George Drew announced last night. He is succeeding Dr. D. Bruce Macdonald, whose resignation has been accepted by the Ontario government, although he will continue to sit as a member of the Board.

It was also announced that Henry Borden, C.M.G., K.C., former head of the Wartime Industrial Control Board, and Orville Douglas Vaughan, B.A.Sc., vice-president of the T. Eaton Co., were both appointed to the Board.

Lt.-Col. Phillips was born in Toronto in 1892 and educated at Upper Canada College and the University of Toronto, where he obtained his degree in 1914. Once commissioned in the army, he was one of the youngest officers to receive the high acclaim he did, which resulted in his being awarded the D.S.O. and M.C.

The new chairman, besides being president of the Research Enterprises Limited, which has produced millions of dollars' worth of vital war equipment, holds executive positions in many of the largest concerns in Ontario. He is a member of the Engineering Institute of Canada and a Fellow of the Canadian Institute of Chemistry.

Mr. Borden received his B.A. in Political Science and Economics in 1921 at McGill University, and then attended Dalhousie Law School, where he was named Rhodes Scholar from Nova Scotia in 1924. He studied at Exeter College, Oxford, for three years and subsequently he was a lecturer on corporation law at Osgoode Hall. He was made a King's Counselor in 1938, and is at present a director in numerous large Canadian corporations.

Three Clubs Stage Plays In French

The annual joint meeting of the Trinity, U.C., and Victoria French Clubs was held last night at Cartwright Hall in St. Hilda's College. Three one-act plays were presented to a capacity audience by the outstanding thespians of each college.

The evening opened with the singing of "La Marseillaise," announced by M. C. Kurt Levy. While the scenes were being prepared, Gwenn Mihalco, musical director of the Vic Club, led in the singing of several French Canadian songs and rounds.

The dramatic entertainment began with a romantic comedy, "Ces Dames aux Chapeaux Verts," starring Joan Twose and Jeffrey Adams of Trinity. The setting was the old-fashioned residence of four old maids, who, through the aid of a visiting niece, married off the "youngest" sister to a middle-aged childhood sweetheart.

The U.C. Club presented "Rosalie," a domestic comedy about an exasperating servant-girl, played by Kay Weatherill.

Victoria's "A Louer Meuble," depicted the antics of two youthful criminals, P. Gorman and W. Cross, who duped the police commissioner and his wife (Jack Moir and S. Grunder) into renting from them the country house of L. Zarbrigg.

New Drive for Blood Aims at 3000 Donors

The drive to place the names of three thousand Varsity students on the blood donors list has been launched with satisfactory results this week, according to Pete Aykroyd, director of the University's blood donor organization. The drive will continue for the next two weeks, and all those who have not yet signed will be asked to do so.

As School has a great number of men who have not yet signed up, the main force of the drive will first be aimed in that direction. During this week, School men will be contacted individually in their classes. Murray MacCullough will be in charge of forty groups made up of students from four years in ten departments.

Counsellors In Training

Co-eds and male students are invited to attend a series of four lectures on "Training to be Camp Counsellors," which will be conducted beginning Feb. 20 by the Toronto Y.M.H.A., it was announced yesterday.

The series "has the blessings" of the Ontario Camping Association and has secured as lecturers professional camp instructors from the New York City Welfare Board, Sam Verman, membership secretary of the "Y," explained.

The four lecture topics include "The Philosophy, Aims, and History of Camping"; "The Role of the Counsellor"; "Health and Safety in Camping"; and "Designing a Camp Program."

"The series should be interesting because the United States camping methods are so far ahead of those in Canada," said Mr. Verman. "Canada, which has been away behind the times in this field for many years, only recently is adopting the 'progressive' technique. We are beginning to let the young campers plan their own activities, so developing their own resourcefulness. The counsellor becomes a guide rather than a dictator."

Begin Debates At McGill U.

Montreal—(CUP)—Tonight the preliminary round of the Inter-University Debating Competition between McGill and Bishop's University will be initiated at McGill University.

The topic to be debated is: "Resolved that the Salvation of Canadian Democracy Demands the Implementation of the C.C.F. Program." Two McGill medical students will uphold the affirmative, while representatives from Bishop's College, Quebec, will be the opponents.

This Inter-University Debating Competition has been in existence for the past thirty years, the college winning the debate being presented with a trophy. The finals are to be held on Feb. 22, when the winner of McGill, Loyola, or Ottawa in the eastern section competes with the winner of McMaster, St. Patrick's or Queen's in the western section.

Gen. Dobbie Makes Tour

Lieut.-General Sir William G. S. Dobbie, former Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Malta, is to make a tour of Canadian universities under the auspices of the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship of Canada.

The Student Christian Movement and the Varsity Christian Fellowship on this campus will jointly act as hosts on Monday, Feb. 19, at 8:30 p.m., when Sir William will speak at Convocation Hall. His topic will be the story of God's hand in the defence of Malta.

Lieut.-General Dobbie was born in Madras, India, in 1879, and is the son of W. H. Dobbie, Commander of the Indian Empire, of the Indian Civil Service. His grandfather was Lieut.-General G. S. Dobbie of the Indian army.

Twice honored by King George VI, he was made Knight Commander of the Bath in 1941 and Knight Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George in the following year.

Men Residence Hold Social

An inter-house committee of the University Men's Residence sponsored a social gathering for all members of the three houses in Hart House last night. This was the first function of its kind in the history of the residence and was given as an opportunity for the members of the respective houses to become better acquainted.

Dr. Sidney Smith, Dean of Residence, Warden Bickersteth, and Comptroller Giley of Hart House were the guests of honor at the dinner. Following this a sing-song was held in the Debates Room.

The feature attraction of the evening was two basketball games. North House defeated South House 16-12 and followed this up by another victory over East House, thereby winning the Residence Shield.

Professor C. Feilding Will Address S.C.M.

Professor Charles Feilding of Trinity College is to be the speaker at the University Service in Trinity College Chapel this coming Sunday at 7:30 p.m. This service is the third in a series of five such services being arranged by the Student Christian Movement this term under the general topic "Basic Decisions."

Following the service, a meeting has been arranged in the Provost's Lodge at which students will have an opportunity to meet Miss Ethel Graham, dominion secretary of the world-famous Grenfell Labrador Medical Mission. Miss Graham, who spent a number of years working in Labrador with Sir Wilfred Grenfell, is in Toronto to recruit students for this pioneering medical and educational work. She will discuss the present work of the Grenfell Association and the ideals and purposes which underlie it.

DISCUSS RELIGIOUS POET AT U.C. LITERARY CLUB

MacKenzie Heard Soon On Industry

Rev. Norman MacKenzie will be speaking on the "Students in Industry" project which has been instigated recently. His talk will take place at the regular S.C.M. Thursday noon meeting in Alumni Hall, Victoria College, at 1 p.m.

Norm MacKenzie, a graduate of Emmanuel College, is now waiting to go to Ho-Nan in Northern China. While waiting, he is carrying on the work which has distinguished him in the few years since his graduation. Among his accomplishments is the building up of the co-operatives in Nova Scotia and British Columbia. This pioneer work in the field of co-operatives has equipped him for the position which he now holds.

The Canadian Work Camps Council has set up a committee with the idea of getting the students interested in the vital problems, economic, social and spiritual, which will confront them when they step out into the world. There will be co-operatives from which the students will go out and work in industry, making observations and helping where they can as a body. Many students looking for summer employment which will provide experience as well as good pay will be interested in this project.

Vic Outfences U.C. In Senior Contest

The Senior Interfaculty Foil tournament was run off yesterday afternoon in the Fencing Room before two interested but lonely spectators who came close to outnumbering the fencers.

Feature of the competition was the rise of Vic freshman, Dick Thomson, to force a first-place final with John Rottenberg, only hold-over from previous Varsity fencing teams. Thomson last year was U.T.S. champion in foil, sabre and epee. U.C.'s Rottenberg took the final, 5-3. Third place tie was broken when Winter of U.C. got the nod over Burns of S.P.S. on a slightly better scoring total.

Next Monday brings the annual sabre tournament on to the boards and at the coming Athletic Night the Fencing Club displays its wares in an exhibition of all three weapons at half-time on the big gym floor. Charlie Walters, fencing master, promises a good show.

Eaton's College Street Galleries

One of the most illuminating shows of the season is "Experiment in Abstraction," now on view at Eaton's College Street Galleries. Even if you don't know anything about abstract art, which of course you do, it's fun to stroll about and eavesdrop on the awed comments of those who happened in by mistake.

They who have made up the show draw a pretty distinction between abstract and non-objective art. The first evolves where an artist chooses some explicit subject, derives therefrom what he considers to be its implicit qualities, its abstract nature, and portrays these in a chaste pattern of circles, dots, conical and angular figures. For me, the most reasonable examples in the display are Lawren Harris' Mountains and Arctic Forms; the latter could also be a plastic realization of a Bach fugue.

Non-objective art, then, is art without recognizable subject matter. It occurs when the artist gets some ephemeral idea and proceeds to set it down with what colors come to hand, creating with disciplined emotion. It is art to be seen as music is to be heard. Of this, the Old

Though Favoring Originality, T. S. Eliot Has Condemned Lack of Understanding of Past in Present Literature

DISCUSS POET'S BELIEFS

A total religious culture is, in the opinion of the modern poet T. S. Eliot, the only remedy for totalitarianism, members of the U.C. Modern Letters Club were told last night. Speaking on Eliot's critical works and general essays in the course of a three-way student symposium on the poet's beliefs and art, Ken Peacock, II U.C., laid stress on Eliot's insistence on literature and culture as a vast whole.

"Though culture for Eliot doesn't involve absolute traditions, he calls it the artist's task to be familiar with the past," the speaker went on. "He has condemned modern literature for its lack of tradition and of understanding of the past, and even blames the absence of standards in modern Anglo-Saxon literary culture on the decay of Protestantism during the last 200 years."

No enemy to originality, as his works show, Eliot condemns isolated individualism with its tendency to play openly on the emotions, Mr. Peacock explained. "Eliot points out that none of Hardy's characters come to mind except in extreme paroxysms of feeling. Conflict is an artistic necessity, emotionalism is not. On this account, Eliot approves most wholeheartedly of Yeats and James Joyce among modern writers."

"Though critics say Eliot's verse is too slow for the stage, the success of productions of Murder in the Cathedral shows that it is really intensely theatrical," said Miss Margaret Dale, I U.C., dealing with the poet's famous modern poetic drama.

Explaining how the playwright has cut down the historic plot to isolate atmosphere and centred its structure around the single figure of the great saint Thomas a Becket, Miss Dale called the finished work a magnificent drama and a true picture of the medieval mind.

Dunc Robertson, II U.C., discussed Eliot's poetry in general, with special emphasis on his eclecticism. Arbitrarily dividing Eliot's poetic output into Satiric Verse, The Waste Land, and Religious Poems, the speaker pointed out that craftsmanship and technical ability distinguished the poems in all three classes from such spontaneous outpourings as Whitman and Lawrence produced.

High and Low Professions

In a recent address to the students at Queen's, B. K. Sandwell, editor of Saturday Night and newly-appointed rector of Queen's University, attributed the failings of our social system to the increased profitability of what he termed low professions, while those higher professions, embodying wisdom, respectability and discipline, are being given comparatively little encouragement.

Li-Shu-Ching, a contemporary Chinese professor of political philosophy, said recently that "when changes come about in which low professions become far more profitable than high professions, the people will leave their difficult jobs for easy ones and forsake righteous spirit in favor of material gains, which practice, if allowed to continue unchecked, will bring about social disorder; social justice will disappear and morality will deteriorate; respectable and upright people will be ignored, while unscrupulous and mercenary persons will be highly regarded by society."

In the opinion of Mr. Sandwell, the sentiments of this Chinese philosopher depict the present situation with uncomfortable accuracy. The blame for this state of affairs, he felt, lay in the result of an enormous and highly diversified power of production, which is the chief characteristic of our age. The production of luxury goods in our modern world and the consequent violent competition among producers for consumer patronage, means that the art of persuasion — of persuasion to buy something — has become one of the major professions of the age. His attack was not directed at the advertising profession alone but also that which controls the processes of production.

B. K. Sandwell went on to say that we are prone to value professions far too much by their profitability and that for this reason the profession of commercial persuasion has attracted many men of high learning and respectability. In contrast to this, he cited the profession of education, where remuneration for service is small; because of this relatively small remuneration, men of less learning and ability pursue education as a career.

We suspect that Mr. Sandwell was speaking in an idealistic tone for the benefit of students. It is very true that the calibre of teachers, especially in our primary and secondary schools, would be raised appreciably if the positions were better paid. However, we take objection to his classification of professions into high and low, and contend that the professions that he refers to as low are sometimes far more difficult and trying than so many of the professions that he classifies as "high." These professions require no less "wisdom, respectability, and discipline" than the careers that he respects more highly. Furthermore, these men, while interested in material gain, that is, making a comfortable living, which is basically the fundament of our economic structure, have contributed a great deal toward making the world a more comfortable place in which others may live.

Modern society is not perfect and the relative remunerations in diverse professions is, in part, to blame for the imperfections. But we feel that Mr. Sandwell has missed the solution in his attempted classification of professions into high and low.

Sex Education

A report on sex education, prepared by the Education Committee appointed by the S.R.C. of the University of Saskatchewan, recently appeared in the Sheaf, the Saskatchewan student publication. It was found by the committee that sex education serves the dual purpose of aiding students in their relationships with their environment, and of developing standards and ideals between men and women with the ultimate purpose of promoting a happy home life.

Sex education, a necessity for proper living, has been talked of in secrecy for too long. What better place would there be to get this education than from well-read and willing parents? In a survey conducted by an American university it was found that only twenty-one per cent of the men had received their knowledge of sex from their parents. A determining Hart House has thrust its doors wide open to the co-ed!

Hearing this news early today, Miss M. B. Gerfa, swimming pool, too?" on her bleaching lips.

She soon picked herself up again, however, when offered a co-wardenship of the House, just as the first columns of females began crowding into the pool-room.

A few hours later, the male warden resigned, mysteriously. Fire and Brimstone rained on the campus at noon, as the issues involved were revealed in a letter received by Pepsy Moss-Pav, soft-handed Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity. Titled, "A POET ON THE CO-ED," and composed in hectic diameters, rhyming a, b, c, d, e, f, g, etc., it was a work of great sentiment, its emotional content comparative only to that found in great music, music such as "Pop Goes the Weasel!"

It said with dignity: "I cannot bear This sweater-glammer, Until they swear With better grammar! Signed, Lickerbreth."

Meanwhile, in Hart House, confusion and Gerfution reigned.

The crisis had assumed such proportions that, according to reports from Rushington, D.C., President Ranklin' D. Looselt had already sent Eleanor to probe into the matter. However, the warden was bluntly after hastily forwarding personal regards from General Montgomery and the British Armies, he told her to go back home and not bother him any longer with female matters.

But Eleanor was no sissy, either. "Don't make me any terms," she exclaimed. "I've been through three of them already." And she hurried up into the music room where tumultuous crowds had gathered already, after Miss Lublaw Colossa, noted Toronto Pianist, had been found inside the grand piano, refusing to play in the conventional manner.

"The only way to turn your audience inside out is to turn the piano outside in," she insisted.

Meanwhile, rumbaing to the harpish sounds issuing from the piano, a Spanish stripteaser was watched with goggling eyes by co-wardens Gerfution, who, admitting a novel fancy for cheesecake, overheard saying:

"My, ain't she hot. Jist the stuff for my babies!"

No inquests were held.

Michasiw's off on another bing, so we'll take advantage of his absence to show him how to really mess up a column. They tell me nobody reads it, anyway.

"A" Nights . . .

Despite arguments to the contrary in this column of Tuesday last, the opinion still persists on the campus that the system of Saturday night crowd control could be improved. Either enough of Hart House should be opened up to accommodate all who want to come, or else a limited number of tickets should be sold in advance.

Incidentally, the local high schools might do worse than organize similar affairs on Saturday nights. At least, it would give the kids something more interesting to do than sitting through double features.

Biscuitball . . .

Inoculations prevented Dents from meeting Jr. S.P.S. in their crucial game yesterday. School is confident that when they meet they can reverse their previous defeat at the hands of the molar-men. The presence of such stars on the School club as Swan, Hamm and Hennessey make them a real threat for the Sifton Cup. Swan is one of the three or four members of the Varsity Blues team permitted to play in the intramural league.

Ice Follies . . .

Don't count Meds I out of the intramural hockey picture yet. If they could shake that proverbial Meds' bad luck jinx they might upset both U.C. and School. Their first line of Lawler, Smythe and Grout is the smoothest in the league, although their defence doesn't quite measure up to those of the other two teams in their group. Barring a big upset, the coming champions will be one of the three teams mentioned above, all of whom are in Group One.

Our "Butch" . . .

"Butch" O'Malley, the popular Varsity athletic director, deserves a lot of credit for the results he's been getting from a somewhat inert male student body up there. It will be a long time before Vic will again see his equal as an athletic president. The proposed retroactive change in the method of calculating points for the Reed Trophy hasn't come through yet, but when it does Vic point total should receive a real boost.

factor in juvenile delinquency is the fact that most children receive their sex education from other children on the street.

A knowledge of sex alone is not sufficient to carry a person through this world. It is necessary to encourage the growing child to raise a proper emotional attitude relative to sex. This proper attitude will never be obtained from illicit and incorrect discussions on the street.

By the time children have reached Grade Eight they should have a thorough knowledge about reproduction, malpractice and venereal disease. Sex should be considered as a natural characteristic of life and not as a problem. A proper sex education would give every student a proper sense of values with regards to sex and would prepare him or her for the physical and psychological adjustments concomitant with marriage. In the report it was found that sex education should be early in the student's school life and should be treated as objectively as possible so that sex can be discussed without reference to the prejudices and reservations that exist at present.

At Last . . .

The group schedules are over in the first round of hockey, and at last it can be told. The way the schedule works, we mean. Well, there were three groups, for the sake of argument called A, B, and C. Vic I, U.C., and P.H.E. I were in group A; St. Hilda's, St. Mike's, and P.H.E. II in group B; and Vic II, Meds, and "X?" in group C. This "X?" was a team, or as a matter of fact two teams, who joined the schedule and then withdrew, the second of the two leaving when the schedule was beyond changing. In this C group, then, the points were considered as a default twice to each other team by "X?"

The group standings are: Vic I — 6, U.C. — 2, P.H.E. I, which eliminates P.H.E. I in group A; St. Hilda's — 8, P.H.E. II — 4, St. Mike's — 0, eliminating the Double Blue, in group B; and in C group, Vic II — 8, Meds — 4, and "X?" — 0.

Now, in the next round, each team will play each other team once, eliminating two more teams. Next week, Meds will find itself in group A, pitted against Vic I and U.C., while Vic II will be in group B, against St. Hilda's and P.H.E. II. The finals will match the first teams in group A with the second in group B, and vice versa.

The discrepancy of points in the present standing in group A results from a cancelled game the other day between U.C. and Vic I. These points may be fixed up some way later on.

There are a couple of games to announce. Today, at 12 noon, Meds and U.C. play, while tomorrow St. Hilda's meet P.H.E. II for the third time, at noon. Come out and cheer them on.

Yesterday, P.H.E. II took St. Mike's for a ride, 4-1. Ruth Welstead was outstanding for the Phydellers, while St. Mike's Pat Dewan got the lone Double Blue tally. Despite a good few defeats this year, St. Mike's have been the most cheerful kids on the ice. It is their first time on the hockey cushion for some years, anyway, and we wish they had done well enough to go on and really show people. With a little more practice they might do it next year!

MALTON vs. BLUES

Tomorrow will see the third Athletic Night presented in Hart House for the Saturday evening entertainment of the student body on the campus. Wyckoff and S.P.S. are the faculty hosts for this week's affair, and a very extensive program has been arranged, including basketball, water-polo, gymnastics, speed swimming, diving, fencing, square and ballroom dancing, an Engineering display, and various other features.

The pool agenda has been altered from the way it appeared on these pages two days ago in order to facilitate the setting up of the water-polo goals. The Varsity swimmers will compete in their match races starting at 8:30, the divers will put on their show at 8:45, and L/S Max Hurley will do his comedy act at 9 p.m.

In the big gym the opposition for the S.P.S. All Stars has been changed from the Newmarket Army team to that of the H.M.C.S. York Bulldogs of Toronto, due to the Army outfit's inability to get down here Saturday night. This Navy squad are a top-flight aggregation. In a recent game with Malton Air Force—tomorrow's Blues' opponents—Navy were only beaten 41-35 after a real battle, so the indication is that this first game will be a big attraction in itself.

The Malton Air Force team, which looks up with the Varsity Blues in the main event of the night, has a line-up of men who are veritable veterans among sporting circles around the province. Parsons, the team captain, is a former All-American, achieving that coveted position when he played forward for Akron Goodyears in 1937. Laphan, Gladish, Taube, Sherman, Sterling, Decker and Young are all well-known. Laphan played with Central High in Hamilton, Gladish was with Varsity Intermediates a few years ago, Taube starred for West End Y.M.C.A., Sherman was prominent with Windsor man was prominent with Windsor Grads, Sterling played for that Lizizes team which were Dominion Junior champs, Decker played for Johnny Metras' Western University outfit in 1942-3-4, and Young was with McMaster last winter.

The magazine and book collection is again brought to your attention. The Navy League and the I.O.E. are two of the most worthy organizations in the country. The benefits that the servicemen receive from them are too numerous to mention, and all that is asked of the Varsity student is a little co-operation with the two in this worthy project.

engineering undergrads present papers tonight

Four undergraduates of the Department of Electrical Engineering, of the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, will present papers at the annual joint meeting of the Toronto Section of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and the Engineering Institute of Canada to be held this evening in Room 21, Electrical Building. The speakers will compete for student prizes presented annually by the Section.

The speakers and their subjects are: R. A. Grosskurth on "Cold Cathode Fluorescent Illumination"; P. D. Balmer on "Current Transformers"; R. T. Cavanaugh on "Metalurgical Testing by Electronic Means"; and R. M. Bennett on "Secondary Emission."

sadie's diary

a secret glimpse into the private life of sadie mcfeitelbaum

By Frank Rasky

DEAR DIARY:

I'm so thrilled! My new boyfriend, Joe, who's an engineering student, is taking me to the University Athletic Night tomorrow! . . . just imagine, me—Sadie McFeitelbaum, a mere stenographer—hobnobbing with seniors! And in Hart House, too, the place where girls aren't allowed! . . . Just imagine me meeting up with all these engineers. . . .

Geel! I felt so dumb when Joe phoned to date me up. . . . It was the first I'd heard of these Athletic Nights. . . . I laugh when I think now how suspicious I felt when Joe told me it cost a quarter admittance. . . . I began thinking (to myself, naturally), that maybe he was a tightwad. . . . But then he began talking (and Joe is such a good talker, Diary, for an engineer, real big words he uses) and he told me of the basketball, swimming, wrestling, boxing, dancing, and all the other nice things they do. . . . Now, I can hardly wait!

Joe tells me that the whole "do" will be under the joint supervision of Wyckoff College and S.P.S. . . . like hosts at a big party. . . . And the nicest thing, Diary, is that they've invited me from the Navy, Army and Air Force to have a hand in the sports. . . . Oh, Diary! You don't know how gaga I get over these servicemen!

Joe told me to get dressed in time, for a change, because things are going to start humming early. . . . He requested that I wear my blue skirt and yellow sweater (you know, Diary, the one with the flowers on it—Joe likes my sweaters) and then he'd pick me up at seven. . . . That way we'll be in time for the exhibition basketball game at 7:30 p.m. between H.M.C.S. York Bulldogs and an all-star school team.

And that's not even the half of it, Diary. . . . You know how ca-a-r-azy I am about basketball. . . . Well, at 8:30 sharp there'll be another big game in the main gym. That's when Varsity Blues meet the No. 1 Air Observers School team from Malton. Geel! I won't know who to cheer for. Joe'll want me to cheer for Varsity, naturally. But you know how I feel about Airforce-men. . . .

Joe tells me they're putting on one feature that'll be simply murder. "Simply mill's prose is subject of lecture

"Although liberty will have to be rationed, it is my hope that the ration will be larger than it would have been had John Stuart Mill not written his persuasive essay," said Professor J. F. McDonald in his lecture yesterday afternoon. This lecture was one of the current series of Thursday afternoon lectures on "Representative English Writers and the Theme of Liberty."

Mill's essay, explained Professor McDonald, embodies the social and political ideals of nineteenth century liberal thought, and is a kind of "bible of the new doctrine." The liberty which he advocates is only possible in a democratic state, and should extend throughout the whole realm of human experience. It should include freedom of conscience, of thought and of opinion and sentiment on all subjects and the right to publish these opinions.

In addition to this, liberty should be granted to all men to follow their own inclinations subject only to such consequences as may logically follow. Mill concludes his essay with the challenging statement that unless these conditions prevail, no state is free, said Professor McDonald.

The speaker then pointed out that Mill asserted that men have the right to propound doctrines publicly, however false they may be and that this right is naturally beneficial to the rest of society because it encourages those who are in possession of the truth to produce correct arguments.

In conclusion, Professor McDonald traced the main writings which have appeared since Mills' time in opposition to his theory.

students relate exchange visits

The annual meeting of "Visites Interprovinciales" was held at Upper Canada College last Wednesday under the chairmanship of Professor F. C. A. Jeanneret of the University of Toronto.

Several students, both English-speaking and French-speaking, gave accounts of their visits. M. Rodolphe Laplante, publicist and secretary of the Quebec Farm Credit Bureau, spoke on "les traits franco-canadiens."

A short film was shown entitled "Quebec sous la neige" which was concerned with ski-ing in Quebec.

"Visites Interprovinciales" is an organization which arranges visits between students of Quebec and Ontario. The purposes of the "Visites Interprovinciales" is declared to be "the promotion of better understanding between the youth of the two provinces and the provision of opportunities for speaking both languages." Visits may be made reciprocally or on a paying basis.

drop second straight game to a vastly inferior team; thomson, gibson, spry and swan stand out even in defeat

COMEDY OF ERRORS

In what will undoubtedly prove to be the weirdest basketball game ever played in Hart House, York Belting edged out the Varsity Blues by the score of 63-59 in a farce played last night.

The claron for the three-ring circus sounded early in the second half as Alex Pomer of the visitors was waved off for five personals. Belting representatives requested that he be allowed to remain in the game as their team was short-handed. When Mac McCutcheon concurred, Pomer suddenly decided that in true sportsmanlike manner he should go off according to rules. Three minutes later he was back in the game! He added five baskets to the winners' total.

Minutes later, as Yutman was waved off, he protested that the fifth foul was not called on him. A valiant team-mate substantiated this argument but to little avail. Then came a few knees, elbows, and hips in a modern booms-a-daisy.

The Blues had built up a first half lead of 38-21 when the lid blew off the fun box. The visitors steadily gained ground, mainly through the potent scoring of "Pardoned" Pomer and "Hot-Shot" Sniderman, and with six minutes left in the game the score on the scoreboard read: York Belting, 55; Varsity, 55.

It was very confusin' from then on, but with 90 seconds to go the referee decided things were too dull for him so he blew the whistle almost simultaneously with every step he took. A basket scored a full two seconds after the final whistle gave the winners their final two points.

Murray Thomson, with 15 points, led the Blues but took exception to the antics as he counted but one point in the second half. Don Gibson played his most effective game defensively and ran up 12 points. Spry and Swan were also prominent.

Pomer with 20, and Sniderman with 22, were the leading performers for the visiting conglomerate.

Varsity Blues—Mayzell 5, Himel, Thomson 15, Starr 1, Gibson 12, Cranham 2, Swan 2, Ryan 6, Dewar, Spry 6, Grosman 5, and McReynolds 5. Total, 59.

York Belting—Sniderman 20, Singer 2, Pomer 22, Bowman 2, Kay 5, Dubinsky, Goodman 8, and Yutman 4. Total, 63.

work camps is scm topic at victoria

The idea of work camps is not new. Rev. Norm MacKenzie, secretary of the new Students' Work Camp committee, told students at Vic yesterday. His talk was one of a series of lectures held every Thursday noon by the S.C.M.

Shortly after the last war, said Mr. MacKenzie, students went into Belgium and helped the people build up their country again. In the early thirties the Friends in the United States took up the idea and started similar camps to help in industry, cotton-picking, and farming. It was not until '41, however, that the idea was introduced into Canada, and then it was not accepted enthusiastically. After one summer, popular opinion changed and since then the idea has spread rapidly.

"What is the Work Camp project? It is the work of students who will go into areas of need with the idea of helping people to do what they are unable to do themselves. This last summer, one of our camps was held at Orillia, where there had been a disastrous fire. We helped rebuild their town hall in two weeks."

"Manual work helps the young people to understand why workers don't attend adult education lectures in the evenings, and don't seem anxious to bother with things outside their labor circles. After our first two days of hard work we were tired ourselves," said Mr. MacKenzie.

Continuing, Mr. MacKenzie explained: "Another purpose is to relate the university students to the ordinary man.

sps trim meds in hockey tilt

Sr. School left no doubts as to who was the better team when they knocked off a 4-0 victory over Meds I at the Arena yesterday. School dominated the play from the opening whistle, and the issue was never in doubt. The Engineers are now in first place in their group and the loss eliminates Meds from any chance of a play-off spot.

School scored twice in the first period and twice in the second to make a four-goal total. Murray Walker was the busiest man on the ice, with two goals and three penalties. The other S.P.S. marksmen were Davis and Shand.

The most effective players on the ice for School were Walker, Andison and Shand. The Meds team on the whole seemed to lack the will-to-win spirit but Lawler and Hughes turned in some good hockey at times.

riled editor wants copy

"Everybody compliments us on our current series of ads, but nobody gets any copy in," Hugh Kenner, editor of Torontensis, told The Varsity yesterday. "We aren't fooling with our threats, however, and are negotiating with the Physical Training staff to man our torture chamber for recalcitrant representatives," he added.

Most of the club and activity write-ups and pictures will be integrated into a running section called "Campus Pageant," taking up the second half of the book, Kenner continued. "We hope to get some unity into Torontensis this year instead of treating it as a scrapheap of isolated pages," he explained. "But to do it this way means we have to have the copy all laid out in front of us. One missing write-up gums the works dammingly."

Admitting that labor shortages were slowing up the output of downtown photographers, the editor appealed to representatives to submit their write-ups even if the pictures to go with them weren't immediately available.

art teachers are needed

Graduates of Fine Art are urgently needed as art teachers in secondary schools, stated Miss Blanche Snell, M.A., speaker at the Fine Arts meeting held last night at Wymilwood. Sending out an appeal for more pioneers in this profession, Miss Snell declared that at present art is usually very poorly taught in Ontario high schools.

Until art is made an entrance subject to certain university courses, we will not get a high enough level of intelligence in the art students. Potential artists are being hampered into other professions because the student doesn't see the challenge of the subject.

Most people consider art as unnecessary decoration, and even the inspectors admit that they don't understand the course of study.

The art student is faced with numerous difficulties but these conditions are not permanent, she said. Art will come into its own, if, and only if, the Fine Art graduates come into the teaching profession. It was noted that an average of only one Fine Art graduate a year enters O.C.E.

"The culture of a nation is determined by the cultural standards of the school," claimed Miss Snell. "It never rises higher than the level of the school system."

Thirty Democrats

Yesterday The Varsity gave coveted top-right billing to the views of three first and second year U.C. students on the works and beliefs of the poet T. S. Eliot. We did this because we welcome and approve the principle underlying the Modern Letters Club, at which the papers in question were given.

The brand-new, but by now securely launched, U.C. Modern Letters Club is, to the extent of our acquaintance, the most thoroughly democratic organization on the campus. It is not democratic by virtue of its chastely orthodox constitution, or its strangely amorphous executive. It is democratic because the attitude of its members makes it so.

The index of the health of any society is the amount of unofficial labor that chance members will spontaneously undertake for its good. The thirty or so members of the Modern Letters Club find time once a month, with no coercion, no telephoning, and no publicity beyond one poster and a single advance notice in The Varsity, to attend and mull over literary topics presented, not by learned and acknowledged authorities, but by other members like themselves. The preparers of papers set to work, not because the executive has wielded its club and the thing just has to be done, but because they want to do it. Volunteers buzz in clouds around the president, offering to prepare dissertations for the next meeting. Now all this is a sign of good health; and none of it can be legislated into being.

The wisest and most searching words of all that have been spoken about self-government and the nature of sovereignty are these of Jowett, the late famed master of Balliol: "You cannot have a republic without republicans."

You can not. You can talk about democracy, and shed ink about it voluminously, you can even persuade yourself that you are democratically governed because you have made marks opposite the names of forward and frequently self-seeking characters on voting-slips. You may proclaim that the ballot-box is of all our possessions the chiefest to be prized, because it magically and by its mere presence confers democracy. It does not. You cannot have democracy without democrats.

Our age by its nature tends to oligarchy—that is, the rule of the few, and those not often even the best. It is one of the most disillusioning lessons to be learned from University life, that the campaign determines the election, and that committee-government is generally a labor-saving device for the apathetic mob. The committee governs securely from the top, imposing its will on those too sleepy to care. It is a farce to pretend that a given committee necessarily represents its constituents, any more than a dead fish washed up on the beach represents the sea.

Let no one accuse us of calling representative government intrinsically bad. You can be extremely well-governed by a good committee, or even a good monarch. It can make its decisions wisely, and keep you very happy. But you must not empower an assembly to govern you for a year, and then fall asleep and pretend that you are governing yourself.

The public will maintain under persecution that it governs itself. Yet having made its "x" in the voting chamber, it will in the years that follow be acutely critical of its government: critical, but powerless. Eventually, still thinking it governs itself, it will blame the political machinery. It is not the machinery that needs overhauling, but the public mood.

Well, we have nothing to suggest. We expect with our last expiring glance to see the solemn farce of representative government strongly continuing. But we are convinced that it is farcical only because enthusiasm and spontaneity of such a small group as the voters allow it to remain so; and the inner en- the Modern Letters Club will remind us that even within the dry bones of a constitution and an executive there can be life.

Gamblers Incorporated

The resulting facts of the bomb which burst forth around Brooklyn College a short fortnight ago are but slowly coming into the limelight. Firstly Judge Leibowitz confirmed a sitting of the grand jury in New York City during the middle of March or later. Then various colleges began to clarify their respective stands on the question of professional sport in connection with educational institutions. Now comes news that the University of Akron is through with professionally promoted basketball games.

It was to this same Akron team that the five Brooklyn students were alleged to have thrown a Madison Square Gardens match. Thus this higher pillar of knowledge becomes the first American college to break the leash which held it so securely to the pocketbook of the enterprising big business machines. The current question now is: how many more will follow Akron's lead?

The majority have proclaimed and continue to proclaim the need of the establishment of grand juries, the need for an iron-handed dictator and the need for a means of excluding the professional gambler type. By withdrawing their team from commercial competition, the University of Akron has shown a willingness to forego a goodly portion of annual revenue in order that its players will not be subjected to the natural temptation of gambling.

There has, in the past, always been a certain amount of gambling in this wicked world and, unless some unforeseen catastrophe occurs, there always will be. Britain wisely avoided the possibility of any such scandals by legalizing the bookmakers. Thus a fatherly eye is maintained over the professional gambler and the treasury is subsidized to a comfortable extent.

Why Canada and the United States have not followed this successful experiment is quite puzzling. Surely the good accomplished by this system would overcome the evil. Surely it is better to legalize a business that is here to stay than to let it run amuck, completely unchecked.

Five men on the brink of their careers have had their good names scandalously smeared because their corrupters were allowed to dash around unchecked. Indignant shouts of fraud have been hurled at these five, while the arch gamblers have merely been hailed into court and then hurriedly released on bail to carry on with their traitorous mission in life. The players and colleges alike are scorned while the corrupters are quickly forgotten.

To save face, the prescription for these institutions is three-fold. Not only must they eliminate the tinge of commercialism from their association, but the breed of rules must be improved. Accompanying these must be the third aspect—the improved type of athlete that is to play the games.

Meanwhile, Canadian universities have firstly to worry about regaining the privilege of playing and then can start worrying about gamblers.

Gallery Tops

Hart House Art Gallery

One of the rarest treats in artistic display is assembled in Hart House Art Gallery at the present time. The main gallery depicts the water colors and oils of Caven Atkins, director of the Hart House Art Classes, and the sculpture of Eugenia Berlin; while the print room carries the overflow of figures and heads, and a comparative landscape study from the Courtauld Prints.

In the whole collection of art and sculpture there is a remarkable variety of scenes, forms and techniques. By way of comparison with an exhibition by Caven Atkins of a few years ago, the most striking change is the almost total neglect of abstracts and patterns in this show. One notable exception is, Lady Descending Stair, one of the two pictures brought back to this exhibit. It is an attempt to

jekyll

About this time of year, when the days are getting longer and they've seen their own shadows, frosh begin to get cocky; pretty cocky. Take the case of one Sneckle. Sneckle was getting rather sure of himself. The sophs, it seems, don't like frosh who get sure of themselves. In fact, the sophs don't like frosh.

Yes, Sneckle swiped sweet Susan straight from under the proboscis of soph McTuff and took her to the Varsity Arena to cut "S's." Sneckle was one up on McTuff, who could only cut "7's." Well, this night Sneckle swings scintillating Susan in swooping circles about the ice. Sneckle goes about in the best of circles. Then, who should skim grinsly on to the ice but McTuff, brandishing a very mean set of blades, being outfished, lashed to his football boots with thongs of rhinoceros hide. The 48th Lowlanders' Hot-shots are giving out with a little bling by Strauss when McTuff greases past Sneckles and faithless Susan. Sneckle on the ice is no mean cut-up himself, so he puts on a spurt of speed that leaves Susan slapping in the breeze like a loose scarf.

Soon the bosom enemies are neck-and-necking, gradually increasing velocity till the snick-snick of their skates sounds like the chorus to the Woodpecker song. The musicians give up trying to keep up and the rest of the crowd ostrich-necks to see Sneckle and McTuff do their stuff for fickle Susan. McTuff, who has a long nose, is usually in the lead. They hightail it faster and faster till the spectators' eyes are rolling like marbles in a plate.

Then old McTuff, weak from riotous living, crumbles like a dope fiend's alibi, and buries his nasal appendage in the ice, plowing up a slab of skating space the size of a promenade deck. Sneckle snickers suavely at first, then waltzes back to assist unbuffed McTuff to regain his ruffled wits. McTuff makes the sign of the Zodiac and passes out, saying: "You're a better man than I am Gunga Din."

So Sneckle swishes slickly to his chick Susan, who flicks him off like he's a cigarette ash on her kimono. She ankles across the ice to where McTuff is destroying his nostrils and throws her arms around him, slapping a couple of wetfish kisses right on his neon nose. Sneckle feels so small he has to unlace his skates from the inside.

All of which seems to throw a monkey wrench into Darwin's Theory.

build up a figure against background utilizing color patterns to obtain depth and merging planes. On the other hand, there is a development in water-color, and a great preoccupation with form and color as the chief means to expansion. In the water-colors, such as Lye on the St. Maurice River, there is a certain plastic quality which permits a movement between the forms. This is replaced to a certain extent by structure based on form and color in Marine Connection and Penitentiary.

Pleasing to eye in composition, complete, and telling a story, each piece of Eugenia Berlin's art brings a sense of satisfaction. Verging on the abstract in form at times, the object or motive of Miss Berlin is never obscure. Head forms are individual, perhaps occasionally exaggerated, such as in Boy's Head, but nevertheless revealing inherent traits of character and expression. Many (Continued on page 4) bailey's varsity blues out to torpedo navy

The Varsity Friday Night Hockey League will present its fourth twin-bill of the regular schedule this evening at the Arena. The first game starts at 8 p.m., when the University of Toronto Blues meet H.M.C.S. York Bulldogs in what should be a real test of Varsity's true worth. The second is slated for 9:30 and sees Victory Aircraft and Watson's A.C. trading punches. Watson's have yet to gain their first win.

The Navy team which will display its wares tonight is just fresh from an exhibition game with the Detroit Red Wings of the N.H.L. in Windsor on Wednesday. The final score of this charity benefit game was only 10-6 for the Wings, thus indicating that the Navy at least stood up fairly well against this powerful team. Their first line of Love and Curry from last year's Oshawa Generals, and Schurr from St. Mike's is a threesome which might even see N.H.L. service some day. The Bulldogs' goalie, Ross (Lefty) Wilson, was reported to be so impressive in this game that the perennial goalkeeper-hunting Jack Adams immediately put him on the Detroit lists for future material.

The Varsity team which will oppose Navy has been steadily improving of late, due to constant practice and better conditions than they had for their first few games. Ace Bailey showed a first line of Lawler, Murray and Smythe in last week's game with Victory that was the best forward combination of the team to date. With the usual solid defence support of Wade, Hart, Shand and Bain, the Blues will give Navy some real opposition. This game should attract a large number of students—remember, it's free to all undergraduates on presentation of their admit-to-lectures cards.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

(Editor's Note—Today's column is penned by none other than the Athletic Director of the Little Red Schoolhouse. Along with other accomplishments, Don is vice-chairman of the Athletic Directorate and holds down the centre position on the Blues basketball team.)

By Don Gibson

"A" NITE NUMBER 3 . . .

Tomorrow evening Wycliffe and School join forces to act as host for the third Athletic Night, which will take the form of a salute to the armed forces. Representatives of all the forces will be on hand to compete against our own color-bearers. From the line-ups of the various competitors coming in it would seem that stars, stars, and more stars will flood the place. As usual, a limit will be placed on the ticket sales, so you had better start early, get your girl and a magazine, and come down and join the proceedings.

BASKETBALL . . .

The feature basketball game brings together the Blues and Malton R.C.A.F. Observers, last year's champions of the Toronto Garrison League. Heading the line-up comes Pilot Officer Ed "Hoops" Parsons who brings with him quite a record. During the years 1936-38 he played for Ohio Wesleyan University, distinguishing himself in 1937 by being chosen an All-American forward. Following his college days, he played for Akron Goodyears of the National Professional Basketball League. Nothing more need be said as to how he plays the game. Next comes Glenn Sherman, a veteran Windsor Alumni player. Like many other Windsor boys, he played college ball for Detroit Tech. Set shots are his specialty. Then comes Max Samuelli, Toronto Maple Leafs' baseball pitcher. With these stars and others in their line-up, the Blues are going to have quite a time, and the result should prove a very interesting game.

As a preliminary, an all-star team from School will take on the Navy boys from H.M.C.S. York. Included in the Navy line-up are Annis Stukis, Royal Copeland, and Tommy Waldon. You have seen these boys display their wares on the gridiron and we have it on good authority that they display the same wares on the hardwood court.

IN THE UPPER GYM . . .

the annual interfaculty gymnastic meet will take place. P.H.E. and School seem to be pretty well equally divided this year, and before a winner is declared the competition will be very keen.

AND IN THE POOL . . .

For those who prefer the water sports, a full program will again go on in the pool. As a warm-up for their coming intercollegiate telegraphic swimming meet, some of our best will match strokes against each other. Following this, Navy's famous one-man band, Max Hurley, will put on a little act. There aren't many things that Max hasn't done in the sporting line. In the hey-day of the six-day bike races Max was one of the best. As a goal-keeper for the Navy Bulldogs, he has turned in many a good game. Tomorrow, he comes in his familiar role as a clown diver. To complete the evening, two water-polo games will take place.

Not to be outdone by those faculties who have already put on displays relating to their courses, School intends to follow suit in the Fencing Room. Murray Heifetz has been working hard all week obtaining contributions from each of School's various departments. To the uninitiated, this display should prove quite interesting.

PAY ATTENTION TO THIS . . .

An extra special plea is being sent out this week for more books, magazines and playing cards. According to those in the Athletic Office, the response to earlier calls has not been very good. Down at School we have had the boys bringing them all week and we are beginning to get quite a stack.

Just before you collect that girl tomorrow night, go into the cupboard and drag out an old book or a pack of cards. The enjoyment that those in the services receive from these is so much greater in proportion to the trouble it causes to bring them down here that it truly is a good investment of a little bit of extra energy.

WANT TO SPEND ANOTHER YEAR AT COLLEGE?

Early last term, Phil Shaekleton penned, in no uncertain terms, the jinx that seems to accompany editors of the S.O.S. Phil thinks that anyone who does justice to the job of Sports Editor cannot expect to continue his studies anywhere but in the armed forces.

For the girls it is a little different, because we can repeat a year at Varsity, and who wouldn't like to spend another year here on the beloved old campus? Well, I'll disclose a secret—join a hockey team, and your additional year is guaranteed. As I lie here, cooped up in the "White House," I can truly say to my U.C. team mates:

"To you with failing lungs, I throw the puck,
Be yours to place it in the net."

Seriously, though, the big game of the season is coming next week, when U.C. gets in the second round. How about coming out and supporting your team?—with cheers or anything else you have. I know that the girls on the U.C. team have given up a lot of free—and lecture—time to get in condition, so the least we can do is to come and cheer. Come, even if you have to miss your lunch—they have missed theirs often—and breakfasts and sleep, too!

Both colleges have excellent teams, so come out and give them the support they deserve—and best of luck, U.C.

"WHY IS AN HONOR . . .

to swim in Hart House pool?" was an aside from Joan Campbell as she handed us these facts. Wednesday, Feb. 21, there is the big Prelim meet, and every single one who reads this, and there must be one person, is asked to come out. Saturday, the 24th, at the last Athletic Night, the real interfaculty workout is being held. It should be good, judged in the light of last year's. We trust that all you aspiring swimmers have been out to at least three practices, or are intending to do so. Your honored presence at this number of practices is one Big, Insurmountable Qualification. There is still time to practise at U.T.S. Feb. 12, 13, 14, 19 and 20.

We want as many colleges and faculties out on the big nights as there are colleges and faculties.

SHAME ON U. . .

U.C. girls! Where were you the night of your swimming meet? Everyone has a healthy interest to know, including your swimming rep. Five people from the biggest Arts Colleges is no sort of record. There is a chance to be considered further if you missed this event—come out to a couple of practise periods and have your speeds clocked.

murder!" Joe told me. During the basketball half-time there's going to be a fencing exhibition. It'll be by student duellists, supervised by the University's own fencing master, a fella called Charlie Walters. Joe said Mr. Walters has won fencing awards and championships and everything. . . .

Another fella who's got fame and everything too is Charlie Zwygard. Only he's got fame in the gymnastics field. Joe said that this guy Zwygard'll be around with his boys, and they'll do tumbling and all sorts of things like that in the upper gym. I don't know much about—what you call it?—Calisthenics?—but Joe said he'll explain it all to me. . . . Joe is so clever! . . .

Gosh! There's so much doing that we'll have an awfully hard time scooting around to see everything that's going on. . . . In the swimming pool, ferinstance. . . .

Joe says that at 8:30 we can see the best swimmers from the whole campus, the best from each college. . . . They'll give a preview as the team that's going to represent Varsity against Queen's, McGill and Western on March 1 at what Joe called the forthcoming Telegraphic Swim Meet. . . .

Joe says he's something of a bathing suit expert himself, said we'd probably have a whee of a time on at 8:45. . . . that's when we'll see a diving exhibition. . . . and at 9:00 p.m. a fella from H.M.C.S. York, called Lieut.-Sgt. Max Hurley, will give a comedy diving display. . . . Joe, who says he himself is an expert on making gags, says this Hurley is a regular aquatic Bob Hope. . . . Joe admitted, though, that he himself didn't know quite everything about water-polo, but he spoke highly of the talents of the Senior Meds boys who'll play polo against the Senior S.P.S. fellows. . . . Gee! Joe is so smart!

Well, Diary, I don't know much about sports and such, but I do claim to know a little about—how do you call it?—terpsichory?—terpsichrosy?—terpsichory?—well, I'm a darn good dancer. . . . So I'll probably go for the swing-and-ways in the big gym and the dosey-doing in the top gym. . . .

Though Joe's a divine dancer, he tells me, he says we'll take some time out from our shagging later on to wander into the fencing room. . . . It's here that some School men are going to put on some scientific experiments. . . . Joe acted very mysterious and wouldn't tell me any more about these experiments. . . . Gee . . . ??? . . . He said we'd take time out, too, for a snack in the Tuck Shop, and that we'd sit and talk toward the end of the evening in the lower gallery lounge. . . . Joe says it'll be very, very comfortable there, though he added that recreation there will be strictly supervised by committees from Wycliffe College. . . . ??? . . .

Well, Diary, that's just about all. . . . If you promise to remind me to bring some old books and magazines with me (they'll be contributed to the Navy League and I.O.D.E.) I'll try to remember everything that happens and I'm sure I'll have some very, very, very interesting things to confide to you in tomorrow night's instalment. . . . Goo'-night. . . .

The ordinary man looks upon the university people as capitalistic, useless prigs. We want to disprove that statement, too. Our aim is to show that we have a genuine interest in their problems and that we want to use our education to help them.

He referred to the evening discussion groups the campers held. Several evenings a week they gather together and talk over the problems of the community. Labor group representatives are usually present, and on such occasions the students discuss with them problems of capitalism, unions and race tension. In the marginal rural districts, where many camps are held, the topics deal with the health question, juvenile delinquency, and farmers' problems.

"We want to prove to ourselves and others that we have the guts to do constructive, hard work. Those students who want to work in one of the camps this summer will have several choices," stated Mr. MacKenzie. "One of the projects is the camp up at Christian Island in Georgian Bay, where we will work among the Indians."

Eaton Auditorium

When he was here five years ago, young Lansing Hatfield, bass-baritone of the American vintage, did a much more engaging program than last night's at Eaton Auditorium. Perchance his recent session of singing in the "Rain" on Broadway with Gypsy Rose Lee's little sister has slightly dulled the sensitivity he showed on that occasion. But not very much.

I think he showed uncommon taste in choosing the old Italians to begin with, rather than the Bach and Handel often used by concert singers to break the ice and sample the acoustics. And the Lieder, particularly the Bitter of Franz, were feathily chosen and sweetly sung withal.

Collins Smith, at the piano, was a shade too self-assertive in the early program. But he entertained acceptably at half-time with some extrovert Chopin, some snide Smetana, and a trifle of nondescript Dohnanyi. Come again, Mr. Hatfield.

The Church of the Open Mind

Now, there is one institution that holds and treasures the values that represent what we are defending. It is the liberal church that tends to universalize the values as did Immanuel Kant. Each of our churches represents a strong respect for individual personalities, for the sanctity of the greatest of all institutions—the family, for the courageous, self-effacing, manly development of its young men, for the purity and goodness of its young women, for the benevolence, charity and love of all mankind. These are the heritage of the past, the strength of the present, and the promise of the morrow — values eternal.

J. C. McInnes, English Prof. Passes After Long Illness

Originator of Hart House Sunday Evening Concerts. He Graduated from Royal College of Music, London, Eng.

PROFESSOR J. C. McINNIS

Professor of English at Wycliffe and Trinity who died last Thursday.

WYCLIFFE AND TRINITY

After an illness of several months, Prof. J. Campbell McInnes, of the English Department of Wycliffe and Trinity Colleges passed away at Wellesley Hospital last Thursday.

Born at Holcombe, Lancashire, England, Prof. McInnes graduated from the Royal College of Music in London, and subsequently studied in France, Germany and Italy. Before coming to Canada, he was a member of the Society of English Singers, London, and gave many concert recitals throughout England.

Both in England and in Toronto, he sang the role of the Christus in St. Matthew Passion a number of times, and was well known for his rendering of humorous songs here.

Prof. McInnes was one of those responsible for starting the Sunday Evening Concerts at Hart House, and himself gave the first one. When the concerts had been going for a number of years, Prof. McInnes was asked by the Music Committee to return to give the hundredth.

Prof. McInnes took a prominent part in the development of the music life of Canada, acting as musical adviser of the National Educational Council of Canada, and serving as a festival adjudicator. At the time of the presentation of English operas by the American Opera Company, he went to New York weekly to coach the cast in English and Diction. He served with the Royal Flying Corps in the last war; returning to Toronto at the end of the war.

A few years ago he was made an F.R.S.A., and was also the first president of the Friends of Italy. He was created a Knight Commander of the Crown of Italy in recognition of his contributions to music in England and Canada.

Triangles! Triangles! Triangles! When is Hollywood going to get out of its "eternal triangle" rut?

In "Guest in the House" UPTOWN the same old set-up is "GUEST" dished out to the unsuspecting public in worn-out manner. Ralph Bellamy, an artist, is happily married to his wife when in comes Ralph's brother, a doctor, with his beautiful but mentally ill girl friend. Anne Baxter, as the fiancée, writes in her diary that she loves Ralph and promptly makes goo-goo eyes at him.

Of course the doctor becomes jealous in a feeble manner and the usual rows occur. Finally Ralph finds out about her dishonorable intentions and gives out with the usual trite of a big brother protecting the family small fry.

Hollywood gets rid of Anne in a jiffy. It seems that she is afraid of birds, when she is told that a bird, which is really dead, has escaped from its cage she dives off the nearest cliff. The picture ends with fem splashing against said cliff.

A.A.

The latest in the series of British pictures being shown at the Hollywood is a serious consideration of the family conflict which arises suddenly thrust upon a twelve-year-old girl.

Mine Disaster To be Probed By Five Professors

Five professors from the University's Faculty of Applied Science have been selected by the Ontario government to investigate the causes of the Paymaster mine disaster in which 16 lives were lost when a cable attached to a hoist broke.

In making this announcement over the week-end, Mines Minister Leslie Frost said that the committee will be headed by Dean C. R. Young.

Associated with Dean Young will be Prof. T. R. London, head of the department of Civil Engineering; Prof. E. A. Allcutt, head of the department of Mechanical Engineering; Prof. V. G. Smith of the department of Electrical Engineering, and Prof. Lloyd M. Pidgeon, head of the department of Metallurgical Engineering.

Mr. Frost said the committee will probe the causes of the breaking of the hoist cable, the failure of the safety devices to act, and review the regulations relating to safety of operations on such hoists. Possible improvements in equipment or methods of operation will also be recommended.

Arrangements for an inquest into the mining disaster are proceeding, Mr. Frost said. The fullest information will be placed before a coroner and jury, and an announcement relative to the jury's decision will be made public "very shortly."

Prof. Birdwhistell To Discuss Negro

Professor Ray Birdwhistell, of the Department of Anthropology, will speak on "The Negro" at the third lecture in the Minority Series sponsored by Avukah at 4:30 p.m. today in Room 8, University College.

Professor Birdwhistell was born in the American south and educated in the north. He took his B.A. at Miami University, and two Master degrees at Ohio State University and Chicago University. Minority problems have been his chief study for the last four years.

His connection with Negro questions includes investigations of the Detroit race riots of 1943.

In his talk today, Professor Birdwhistell will discuss the present state of the Negro in various parts of the United States and what is being done by both individuals and agencies to better their position.

Vic Debates vs Western

Following its tradition of entertaining a debating team and of sending one away during each debating season, the Victoria College Debating Parliament will be host to a team from the University of Western Ontario today at 8 p.m. in Alumni Hall at Victoria College.

The motion on the floor is "Resolved That Military Service Should be Continued After the War." The affirmative is being taken by Stefan Stykolt, III, Pol. Sc. and Ec., and Betty Johnson, II Eng. Lang. and Lit., of Victoria College, Sylvia Kolon and Frazier Earle, of Western, are the speakers for the opposition.

Prime Minister Speers, in an interview with The Varsity, stated: "With inter-Varsity debating at its war-time low ebb, the visit of a debating team from Western should be viewed as a significant occasion. The University of Western Ontario has a reputation for enthusiasm and prowess in debating and has chosen a subject of considerable import to Canadian youth."

St. Mike's Club Hears Dr. Pegis

Dr. Anton C. Pegis, vice-president of the Catholic Philosophical Association, was the guest speaker at a meeting of St. Michael's College Thomistic Society yesterday afternoon. Dr. Pegis' topic was "The Historical Function of the Great Books."

Basing his discussion on doctrinal and theological books and on the Republic of Plato, the Confessions of Saint Augustine, and the Summa Theologiae of Saint Thomas Aquinas, Dr. Pegis said that there were two possible approaches to the study of a great book, the Utopian and the Historical approach.

The marks of a great book are its suitability to its own world, its universality of vision, and its historical uniqueness.

In conclusion, Dr. Pegis stated that although philosophy does not exist in books but in men's minds, the human intellect needs to be taught to think philosophically by great books.

S.P.S. & Wycliffe Hosts to 1300 Despite Weather

Despite adverse weather conditions, S.P.S. and Wycliffe were hosts to well over 1300 guests at the Athletic Night Saturday.

"The doors are ordinarily closed at 9:00 p.m. but were held open till 9:15 because of transportation difficulties," stated Ken Carroll of Dents. "There were still many people turned away."

"The magazine and card contributions were very discouraging. Although there was an increase over previous weeks' donations, the turnout was extremely poor, despite the urgent requests that have been made for the servicemen's cause."

The Engineers' display in the fencing room, exhibited models of lift and timber-deck bridges, and the actual apparatus of different scientific experiments used in S.P.S. courses.

Murray Helfetz, IV Aeronautical Engineering, in charge of the apparatus described the show as "Absolutely the most terrific and sensational exhibit ever put on. Thousands of people packed the room all evening. There won't be another show like it till S.P.S. takes over again next year!"

In the upper gym, the square dancing was supervised by Emmanuel freshman Jack Paterson, veteran of many Athletic Nights.

"They're different songs, but you'd never know it," shouted Al Gowans, IV Fine Arts, as he pounded out the barn dances on the piano. "We've been doing this for some time," he said, speaking for his co-players, violinist Doug Sloan of II Vic and George Linton, II Sociology, playing the guitar. Spot dances and a sweater-girl contest enlivened the dancing which took place in the big gym.

Museum Position Given MacDonald

Dr. D. Bruce MacDonald has been appointed to fill the vacancy on the Royal Ontario Museum's board of trustees formerly occupied by the late Sir Robert Falconer, Ontario government officials announced over the week-end.

Dr. MacDonald has been an ex-officio member of the board for the last 13 years as chairman of the University's Board of Governors. He resigned the Board chairmanship last week.

Connelly Discusses Role of Plastics

"Bakelite Plastics Today and Tomorrow" was the subject given by Mr. William J. Connelly of the Bakelite Corporation of New York at last Saturday's lecture of the Royal Canadian Institute.

The speaker first showed a commercial film, "The Fourth Kingdom," which related some of the history of the industry, and illustrated the wide variety of its products. Bakelite, first synthesized in 1907, is essentially the product of two rather common and intensely reactive organic compounds—formaldehyde, a gas boiling at —21 degrees C., and phenol, or carboic acid, a solid and colorless benzene-derivative showing alcoholic properties.

The liquid condensed from a combination of these re-agents, plus a catalyst, is then converted into a compact solid of the same formula but multiple molecular weight, by polymerizing it under carefully controlled conditions. The resulting long-chain molecule, which contains hydrocarbon radicals alternating with single oxygen atoms, is bakelite.

Mr. Connelly cautioned against the popular conception of regarding plastics as being "harder than wood, more transparent than glass and cheaper than dirt," but emphasized their importance as an outstanding contribution to our modern industry. He compared thermoplastic substances, such as beeswax (a natural resin), which soften on heating and thus change physically, to thermoplastic materials, such as soft-boiled eggs, which grow rigid when heated and represent a chemical transformation. It is to this latter group that bakelite and all the other synthetic resins belong.

The speaker then produced a wide display of synthetic resins, among which were samples of a fast-drying protective paint, pieces of cable insulation, a safety glass and a new transparent non-adhesive bandage.

Mr. Connelly finally stressed the wide possibilities which the future will have in store for the plastic industry in almost every field. In conclusion, he said: "Research has brought plastics to you and now it is your job to take them from there."

MacDonald Receives LL.D.

Rt. Hon. Malcolm MacDonald, British High Commissioner, received the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Laws at a special University of Toronto Convocation on Friday evening. Chancellor H. J. Cody conferred the degree on Dr. MacDonald, who was unable to attend the November Convocation.

"The military part of the task of saving civilization is making good progress," said Dr. MacDonald, in an address to the Senate of the University, "but after that will come the more difficult of the work. It is the civil part—the work not only of repairing materially the economic, social and political havoc wrought by years of war, but of creating that intellectual and spiritual revolution in men's minds which will make them capable of maintaining a secure and constructive peace."

ORCHESTRA REHEARSAL

The University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra will hold a full rehearsal tonight in the Women's Union at 7:30 p.m. sharp.

Blues Mop up Airmen in Last Half of Athletic Night Game. Parsons was the Leading Scorer

FOUL LINE SHOTS BETTER

Ed (Hoop) Parson's hapless Malton R.C.A.F. Observers stayed 20 minutes with the Varsity Blues at Hart House Saturday night, then dropped out of the running as Mac Cutcheon's arrant ribs galloped off by themselves for a 59-35 victory.

One way or another, the game exemplified the two extremes in basketball. The first half hit an all-time low in almost everything, scoring included, as but 30 points were scored between the rivals. The second half reverted to the usual type of basketball indulged in by the Blues.

The clubs played on fairly even terms throughout the first half. The Blues lost their lead early in the half but regained it in the dying moments of the period: Parsons was the only airman to display any form and counted half of his team's total in this session. Half time score was 16-14 in favor of the Blues.

From the opening whistle on, the last half was one-way traffic with Varsity dominating every stage of the contest. Again Parsons was the only visitor able to cope with the faster-moving, better-passing, sturdier-checking and better-coached Blues.

Successive baskets by Ryan, Gibson and Mayzel placed the winners in a domineering lead early in the last period. Parsons came right back with two counters but the Blues were not to be denied as they swept through time and again.

The brightest feature of the victory was the improvement in the shooting from the foul line as the winners sank 11 of 19 free throws. Malton's achievement was 11 out of 20.

After a scoreless opening session, Joe Ryan came on with a burst to end the game tied with Harry Mayzel as Varsity top scorers. Each accounted for 11 points. On their heels came Ian Don Gibson with 10. In off moments, Gibson went about his assignment of shadowing All-American Parsons and quite a job it was! Doug Spry played his usual dependable game defensively.

Parsons was the leading scorer of the evening with his 18 points. His support was on the weak side although Young and Decker were quite effective.

Malton—Young 5, McInnes, Parsons 18, Small, Gladish 11, Bentley, Sterling 4, Decker 2 and Sherman 5. Total 35.

Varsity Blues—Mayzel 11, Hime 2, Fountain 2, Thomson 3, Starr, Booth, Gibson 10, Cranham 2, Swan, Ryan 11, Dewar, Turner 2, Spry 6, and Grossman. Total 49.

School All-Stars Swamp Navy

S.P.S. All-Stars scuttled a Navy quintet from HMCS York in the first game of an exhibition basketball double-header in Hart House big gym at the Athletic Night on Saturday. The final score was 30-15, with S.P.S. rapidly drawing away from their opponents at the finish.

School got off to a good start, rapping in several baskets before Navy could get organized, but the sailors fought back strongly and held their own all the way through the first half, emerging on the short end of a 16-12 score. After the long rest, S.P.S.'s passing attack started to click and there was little that Navy could offer to stop them, the H.M.C.S. York men only counting three points in the last half while School piled up 14. S.P.S. showed some good ball-handling and accurate shooting

Pass That Slide Rule, Joe

It's not often that an editor has the dubious pleasure of contemplating for an entire weekend an editorial topic. But consigned to the solemn stillness of our residence through a rigid process called "gating", we have had ample opportunity to contemplate a variety of subjects.

Several possible editorials have passed before us in review this weekend, but they have mysteriously waited back into that unsubstantial area devoted to The Shape of Things to Come.

We recall with appreciative amusement a matter of a week or so ago which would have adequately filled the editorial bill. We went up north to ski and noted announcements of a sermon to be preached entitled "Ski Jump to Hell" designed to firmly denounce Sunday sport. It would have afforded splendid discussion in our columns: is Sunday sport based on moral or social principles? Do these principles come from religious dogma or do they spring from the communal interest of a people who are governed by the general will of their society? Unfortunately we ski-jumped to hell and suffered a slight accident which drove any such lines of reasoning from our head. It did, however, prove that Hell would have none of us, so we returned, after a short sojourn up north, to our residence.

Then, again, we might editorialize on the solid ideas of the man from Montreal whom we encountered on the train. Wait until after the war, he had said, when the returned men hit Toronto the Good. With its liquor laws, banning of midnight shows etc. Toronto had never known what legal measures were good from the point of view of the whole community. The good will of people towards a law that is good or their sullenness towards a law which from faulty premises hinders more than it serves is manifest. Too many people confuse the object of government, he had continued. It is not to enforce moral principles but to manage the affairs of a community according to the general will.

That certainly had potentialities and we resolved to comment on it when we returned. Then came that time in every youngster's life in which a sad series of events befell us which left us completely void of editorials.

As we entered our habitat, the first thing that caught our attention was our name emblazoned on the bulletin board. There neatly itemised under the caption "FINES FOR LATENESS" was a list of our misdoings. Three minutes late on the seventh, plus five minutes on the thirteenth plus two minutes on the fifteenth plus twenty-one minutes on the twenty-second, swelled the total to thirty-one minutes—which in the more comprehensive terms of residence life means that you fork out four bits for every thirty minutes accumulated through the year. Oh well, what with being just back from home, we could afford it.

Still musing on the possibility of editorialising on the framing of laws, our eye lit on our name again emblazoned on another list, "GATED FOR THE WEEK END". Well we were tired anyway and the weatherman had forecast inclement weather.

And furthermore we could sit and contemplate an editorial.

Now let's see, where were we? We were thinking something about the Ontario laws conclusively proving that the average citizen could not be trusted to consume his spirituous drinks in public. If we can do as we please as long as we don't disturb the community, why should the average citizen be forced to conform to such laws? Then, bingo, there it was sitting on my desk. "YOUR ROOM IS BELOW PAR" read the note. With fear and trepidation we realized that we had forgotten to dust beneath the fukwell before we left, and momentarily forgot in the tumultuous circumstances of the crisis just what we thought should be said about the laws of Ontario.

We slunk out of our room and wandered into another room in an effort to regain our trend of thought. "Say" we raised our voice to question the inmate across the hall. Then, bang, it came again. NO VISITING IN OTHER ROOMS AFTER 10.45. Our name was mentally jotted down to be reported to higher authorities. Well, we were in the soup; caught by the Dawn Patrol and us without an editorial. Disconsolate we crawled back to our den seeking inspiration and solace from a projection of ourselves into this business about the framing of liquor laws which assume that all men are equal to the worst. No consideration is made of the average man who wants to drink quietly and innocuously among his friends. The same problem that arose after the last war will again return after War II. The reaction after being held down by such laws based on faulty reasoning will be so great that the returned men combined with the civilian spirit of hysteria which will prevail in the post-war world will cry havoc with our superimposed stolidity which has been legislated upon us.

Well, now, perhaps we can make something of an editorial after all. But no. Darkness and oppression descended upon us as a voice denounced us with one final last charge. "NO ONE ELSE CAN SIGN YOU OUT IN THE LEAVE BOOK SUCH AS YOU ARRANGED TO BE DONE LAST WEEK END". Broken and dispirited we collapsed into a chair where we've been contemplating an editorial for you people ever since.

Of course, we fell on our head last week end.

A Capella

Hart House Concert

The unison of tonal quality achieved by Leslie Bell's fifty young women's voices is truly thrilling. Relying on strict discipline and keen musical intuition he has created a choir whose fame has spread far and wide. An excellent arranger as well as conductor, Mr. Bell has given a refreshing twist to many of the well-known airs, most notable of which was Schubert's Ave Maria.

The performance of each number was of such perfection that selection is purely from personal taste. Perhaps the most striking effect was obtained in Di Lasso's Echo Song, with the echo chiming in from the tower. For amazing harmonic accuracy we remember Bralms' Death of Tenebr and the more modern Song of the Bayon; the group of Negro spirituals, the best of which was Soon Ah Will Be Done, were full of rhythmic vitality.

Singing without accompaniment, the choir retained its pitch with extreme accuracy, and Mr. Bell held control completely within his expressive hands. Miss Muriel Lee, soprano, sang two songs, Solveig's Song of Greig being best suited to her powerful and lyrical quality of tone.

This choir is definitely making a name for itself and we wish it all success for a brilliant career.

Salute to Russia

Toronto Conservatory Concert Hall

The highlight of Saturday evening's all-Russian program of chamber music, given under the auspices of the Toronto Council for Canadian-Soviet Friendship, was the playing of the Shostakovich Quintet by the Conservatory String Quartet with Reginald Godden at the piano. The Quintet is a work of imposing dimensions, and relatively free of the redundancy found in so many of Shostakovich's major works. The Prelude is distinctive for its powerful unison string passage. The Fugue, whose subject is built on a timid scale passage, is delicately haunting and intimate. Much of the humour of the Scherzo comes from the hard xylophone effect in the piano passages, and from the cleverly synopacted ending. A sensitive Intermezzo and a vigorous Finale brought the vibrant quintet to a close.

Mr. Godden's most effective solo numbers included the Three Fantastic Dances of Shostakovich which teem with highly imaginative musical ideas.

Five Engineer Professors Probe Bowels of Stacks, Who Put the Benzidine in Mrs. Murphy's Ovaltine?

DOWN TO THE DEVIL

Led by Dean C. R. Punk of the Engineering Dept., a committee of expert subterranean explorers this week-end probed rumors that something evil lurked deep beneath the University Library Stacks.

First hint of something wrong came with the entrance of a babbling co-ed into Librarian Walleye's office last Wednesday.

"Mr. Walleye," she babbled, "I've been down to the stacks in the elevator." "That's all right, old girl," said the librarian sympathetically. "I've been down myself. We all have to take the plunge some day or other."

"But, Mr. Walleye," she stammered, "it didn't stop at the sixth floor—it went right on down. And when it got to the bottom it was awfully hot and a big man with a pitchfork winked at me!"

"He must have been crazy," said the Librarian, dismissing her.

But the thing preyed on his brain. He called in the experts.

Librarians gasped in awe as the martyrs stumbled in under a fearsome load of scientific equipment, including a leaky lamp, a tuning-fork in case they should want to keep up their spirits by singing "Old Black Joe," a case of spirits in case their spirits flagged, a bicycle (for exercise), and a can of the apparatus at the bottom was an over-size book-worm.

Tastefully attired in an elevator operator's purple uniform with brass buttons, pork-pie hat, and a swad of bubble-gum, Dean Punk ushered the party of experts inside, shouted "All Aboard, Ding-ding," and, pressing a button, sent the cage sinking out of sight.

It reappeared almost instantly to eject a sheepish stowaway librarian.

Two hours later, the cage having passed the stacks, came to rest with a (Continued on page 4)

S.P.S. Defeats P.H.E. For Trophy In 'Athletic Night' Gymnastic Meet

Teams of three men, from S.P.S. and from P.H.E., were the only entries in the Intercollegiate Gymnastic Meet, held in the upper gym at Hart House on Saturday night, which meet was won by the School team. The Schoolmen held a slight edge over the Physical Eds in all four events of the meet, and had in the end a total of 835 points against 760.3 for P.H.E. By winning, S.P.S. took over the tenure of the Wilson Cup held last year by P.H.E.

Ame Pudsey of S.P.S., last year's runner-up for the individual championship, was high man, with a total of 327.3 points, out of a possible 400. Doug Whittle of P.H.E., also a last year's contestant, was second with 285 points to his credit. Third man was Glen Curtis of S.P.S., who ran up 271.4 points. Walt Lane and Mike Fyfe were the other members of the P.H.E. team, and Tom Barry was third member of the School team. All contestants were quite consistent in their showing through the evening, Pudsey gaining top points in every event, and the others ranking accordingly.

The program was broken up into four events—the horse, a choice being given for either the pommel horse or the vaulting box, the high bar, either the mats or the stationary rings, and the parallel bars.

Commenting on the meet, Charlie Zwyg said that it was the best in about four years. Feelings of certain informed persons are that this is due to the carry-overs from last year's gym squad, Pudsey, Whittle and Lane, and to the drive of the Engineers to outdo the P.H.E. men.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasius

A PERTINENT QUESTION . . .

Peculiar to each campus, there is a particular way of life that display the character of the college. This is most noticeable in the fields of competitive sport which are a natural outlet for, and manifestation of school spirit.

While there are faculties, colleges, fraternities and smug cliques which tend to destroy unity, Athletic Nights are one of the few functions born of family loyalty and inspiration—"a household undivided within itself."

If spirit and unity were their goals, the originators must be swallowing a bitter pill. Three "A" Nights have become mere records now and the spirit displayed was practically nil. The peak of enthusiasm has been a polite clapping of the hands the like of which would do credit to boxing and cricket matches in England.

With but one exception, the display at the Friday evening hockey games has been in the same rut. That exception was when George Lewis spontaneously led a small but effective cheering section. Perhaps George's experience of intercollegiate combat prompted this or perhaps he felt a need for a revival of that fast dying spirit.

At the risk of monotony, we repeat our request of a week ago. If the host faculties would appoint a number of appropriate cheer leaders to coax the hesitating and unwilling student body along, we feel certain that a small portion of this unified spirit would return to its rightful place.

MONDAY'S MEANDERINGS . . .

That win over the weekend hoisted the year's standing to four wins and but two losses. . . . It must gratifying to the team officials to see certain members of the team turn in a steady dependable performance game, in game out. Others may put on spectacular scoring spurts on occasions but fellows like Doug Spry and Don Gibson can be depended on to carry on in their capable manner. . . . Not only did Hoop Parsons show a spasmodic flash of the form that earned him an All-American rating but he did an excellent job of holding the crowd's attention through his continual chatter and nugging. His initiation of an injured basketball player caused consternation amongst certain spectators but Referee Harry Mitchell refused to be hoodwinked. Parson's flowing crabbing and criticism of his fellow-players did little to aid his team. . . . In the hockey picture, Navy appears almost certain to clinch the top place. Friday's line-up includes numerous men whose post-war plans consist of playing for N.H.L. clubs. Among these are Olinsky, Wilson, Love, Schurr and Slattery. . . . The battle for the second play-off spot is strictly a Varsity-Varsity affair as the fourth team is surely a debatable third member of the line. . . . While the team is hardly a world-beater, it will form an excellent basis for a team on the return of intercollegiate.

THIRTY SECONDS OVER . . .

. . . but we're not talking about movies, we're talking about hockey games—in particular about P.H.E. and St. Hilda's who played five minutes overtime on Friday trying unsuccessfully to break a one-all tie. The hockey schedule has now entered the second round, so every game counts. Evidently both P.H.E. and the Saints have an eye on a play-off position and won't give it up without a struggle. Whether the game is to be replayed or not depends on the outcome of the next few games of the round. As the score indicates the teams were evenly matched and the play quite fast. Lois Morrison was the P.H.E. scorer and Marg Alexander the one who kept St. Hilda's in the running.

Tuesday noon will find U.C. and Vie. meeting in the first league. Since their last game, higher authorities have taken the interests of the U.C. team to heart, and with the imposing of a ten-forty-five curfew, have hoped to improve the team's condition to such an extent that no mere chick from Vie can stop them. Anyway it ought to be interesting—more than hockey will be at stake.

ACCENTUATE THE POSITIVE . . .

. . . why say "No" to skiing with so much snow on hand and underfoot. Should we eliminate a ski-ing competition just because we lack gasoline? We realise that downhill ski-ing is out, you can't get up speed on the mole-hills in High Park—but there is still plenty of opportunity for a cross-country competition and maybe even a slalom race, or does't that appeal to University skiers?

VOLLEYBALL . . .

U.C. extended its winning streak by defeating O.T. 58-34 on Friday. In this tilt, Joan Davis, U.C., starred with her backline serves. Also outstanding were her team mates Kay Williams and Betty Osborne.

Navy Swamps Varsity 7-2 In Friday Night Puck Series

Varsity Blues at Disadvantage Especially After Wade Hurts Shoulder Half-Way Through Game

POWERFUL NAVY TEAM

Varsity Blues went down to defeat before a very powerful Navy squad from H.M.C.S. York by a score of 7-2 last Friday night in the opening game of the weekly series of doubleheaders at the Arena. In the second game a Victory Aircraft team that showed good organization and individual ability whitewashed Watson's A.C. 13-2. The best crowd of the season to appear thus far saw two well-played hockey games develop from the evening's agenda.

Navy got off to a bad start when they incurred the wrath of the referee and acquired two penalties early in the opening period. Olinsky got the first of these for holding Lawler but the Blues showed very little while they had the extra man advantage. Then Dillon went off for climbing on Murray's back and although Varsity went better this time, they still were not really impressive. Ken Grivel broke ice for Navy when he lifted a short backhand shot to the lower off corner, much to Davidson's amazement, but the Blues came back to tie the score when Hughes parked a pass from Murray behind Lefty Wilson. Shortly before the close of the stanza Love and Slattery combined for a lovely goal Love getting it with a hard shot to the top corner, leaving Navy out in front, 2-1.

Love broke right through early in the second period but Davidson pulled off a sensational stop. Reversing his form a minute later, he let a long shot from Curry's stick bounce off his chest into the net to put Navy in front 3-1. Davidson then again outguessed Love, as Love was really making his presence felt when on the ice.

Bill Wade hurt his trick shoulder near the end of the period as he handed out a couple of stiff body checks. It was a tough break for the already short-handed Blues as he was unable to return to the ice for the remainder of the game.

Lawler put the Blues right back in the game when he finished off a Murray play shortly after the third period opened, to make it 3-2. He then got a penalty for interfering with Armstrong,

Varsity VOLLEYBALL

The initial practice of the Varsity volleyball team that is to meet Navy at the final Athletic Night will be held tonight at seven o'clock. Horowitz, Wade, Salzman, Gibson, Gibbs, Cooper and Brant are requested to turn out along with as many more men as possible especially set-up men.

and while he was off Bain very nearly got a breakaway, just overskating the puck.

However, from there on it was all Navy. Grivel got his second goal of the night with the Blues again at full strength as he stickhandled it alone and let a bullet-like shot go to the bottom corner, giving Davidson no chance.

Lawler then got another penalty, this time for tripping Lukasik, and although Varsity held Navy while he was off with very effective tactics, the Bulldogs got another goal shortly after he returned. Grivel getting his third score on a Curry pass. Smythe was robbed on a Varsity effort as Wilson very luckily got his hand on the shot, and Murray hit the post shortly afterwards.

Navy got two more goals as the period ended. Armstrong from Schurr and Davey and Dillon from Love, on a beautiful play, to make the final score read 7-2.

Bobby-Soxers Beware Dept.—A Floor Street Record Shop was the laboratory for one Meds student's researches into the Sinatra craze. Appearing at the counter and demanding all the Sinatra in stock, the lad shut himself up for two hours in a listening booth with The Voice.

When, at the end of that time, he emerged for air, the proprietor asked him how many he'd take.

"Oh, none," said the Med. "I was just listening."

"And how did you like it?"

"Ah, sighed the Med, "this Sinatra felah has wonderful breathing."

RESEARCH MARCHES ON.

Two weeks after the I.S.S. auction, the committee sheepishly reports a belated gift—a genuine flower-patterned sarong from Dorothy Lamour.

GIVE IT TO THE CLOTHES-FOR-RUSSIA FUND, MAYBE?

Granpappy laughed at these, but the modern generation may be blinking its innocent eyes for the first time at the hoary assemblage of limericks below, assembled for you in convenient pocket form by The Varsity's own expert staff of limerickologists:

There was an old lady of Bloester
Who vowed that no man had e'er kissed her,

But her chin and her nose
Grew together so close,
That if any man tried, he'd have missed
her.

A cynic of much savoir-faire,
Pursued by a horrible bear,
Said, "I'll argue a while
In the feminine style;
No creature could follow me there."

There was a young miss of West Ham
Who hastily jumped on a tram.
When she had embarked,
The conductor remarked,
"Your fare, Miss." She answered, "I am."

An eccentric old person of Slough
Who took all his meals with a cow,
Always said, "It's uncanny," She's so like Aunt Fanny."
But he never would indicate how.

There was a young man of the Tyne,
Put his head on the South-Eastern Line.
But he died of ennui
For the 5:53
Didn't come till a quarter past nine.

There was a young lady of Flint
Who had a most horrible squint.
She could span the whole sky,
With her uppermost eye,
While the other was reading small print.

A benedict youth known as Rutters
Led his bride to the altar, all butters.
"Is there any just cause
Or impediment?"—(pause)—
"I'm all right, but dear Stephanie stutters."

An athletic young lady of Clewer
Once incited a bull to pursue her
But she vaulted the gate
Just a fraction too late
Now when she sits down she says

bump at the 27th level; and singing Rock-a-Bye Baby manfully, the party emerged with caution into a gloomy, rock-lined grotto illuminated with torches and festooned with dripping stalactites and stalagmites about which the flickering firelight played evilly.

Drums, torches, and plenty of brass heralded the approach of a conga-line which had been missing from the Vic At-Home two days before; it wound its bacchanalian revels among the stalactites and vanished into the sulphurous steam beyond.

Led from behind by Dean Punk on his bicycle, the party advanced fearfully, step by step, with toy pickaxes held at the ready. All at once they recoiled with horror from a mouldering, shovelled form on the floor, which was suddenly picked up and carried away by its own enthusiasm.

Further down the passage the heat grew more intense and the brave committee quailed as gibbering forms slithered among the steam clouds. With a shock they recognized the lost souls of executed Torontensis representatives, chief among them those from U.C., Meds, Dents, and Victoria.

Increasing fear clutched at the hearts of the explorers, when suddenly Prof. Cutpoint pointed with a giggle at a figure amid the steam. "Lookit the sooty man with the pitchfork," he chirped. "What's Farmer Brown's boy doing with horns on?"

In a mad rush the party hot-footed it for the elevator, the pitchforker in close pursuit. No sooner had the door clanged when Dean Punk's finger was on the "UP" button.

With ever-increasing speed they rocketed up, past the stacks, past the roof, and when last seen were fading in the statosphere.

Hollywood "children."

The play derives its dramatic significance from the conflict among the attitudes of a conservative, heavy-handed father, played by Wilfrid Lawson, an aspiring and rather unbalanced mother, Kathleen O'Regan, and the jealous, movie-struck sister.

The direction is quite adequate but sometimes rather hackneyed. The photography and sound seem to be technically inferior to most American productions.

The play is worth seeing for its interesting psychological problem, and for the indescribable charm of young Miss Howse.

Eureka!

I have found it!

King Hiero asked Archimedes to find out if the full amount of gold given to his goldsmith had been used in making his crown, or if some silver had been substituted. Water overflowing as Archimedes stepped into the bath suggested the solution. So he dropped the crown into a full vessel of water and measured the overflow of water. A bar of gold of the exact weight of the crown displaced less water than the crown. A bar of silver of the same weight displaced more water than the crown. Then he knew the crown was part gold and part silver. After further research, he gave to the world the law of specific gravity known as the Principle of Archimedes.

THE discoveries made by Nickel research scientists may not be as far-reaching as that of Archimedes, but they have been very important to the Canadian Nickel industry and to Canada. These discoveries are in a large measure responsible for the fact that Nickel is today an important material in nearly every industry.

In the post-war years, Nickel research laboratories will push on their work of discovering new uses for Nickel. As these new uses are adopted by industry, the demand for Canadian Nickel will grow.

The information gathered by International Nickel through years of metal research is available at all times to Canadian engineers and designers.

Research helps to keep Canada's Nickel mines and plants busy and to create employment for Canadians.

Prof. Birdwhistell Outlines Problems of Negro Minority

Negro Held in Relative Peonage in Deep South; in North, Prejudice Against Negro Nearly as Strong

DEMOCRATIC PROBLEM

"You can legislate against discrimination, but you can't legislate against prejudice," stated Professor Ray Birdwhistell, speaking on the Negro problem in the third talk in the Avulak Minorities series yesterday.

Professor Birdwhistell began by explaining to the capacity audience that he was not "a special pleader, but a scientist, an anthropologist, with an objective view."

"The Negro problem is not different from the others. Minorities form the majority in our society and they must defend and aid each other."

The lecturer outlined the development of the problem, stating: "Negro slaves were caught in war on the African coast and sold for cheap labor in the southern coastal States, from where they shifted gradually in to the Black Belt of Missouri, Alabama and Georgia."

"Slavery was merely an excuse for the Civil War," he continued, "but there developed a Negro freedom movement in the north. This was aided by a sincere abolition group and by a group that resold the Negroes."

"The first race riots occurred in Washington in horrible slum conditions of 1870. These conditions have not changed in 70 years. Today there are only 50 per cent of the Negroes in the south as compared with 80 per cent in 1880, and there are perhaps over 30 per cent in the industrial north now."

He explained: "The South is owned by the North—the northern insurance and oil companies, banks, railroads and land corporations, which deliberately maintain cheap Negro and white labor. A southern peonage exists because the ignorant Negroes go in debt when forced to buy at plantation stores and have to stay another year to pay it off."

"It is always a minority which oppresses another minority, as exemplified in Chicago, where the Irish competed with the Negro for the same jobs. The more insecure the group, the more aggressive it is, so that immigrating minorities find America not a melting-pot but a pepper-pot."

"It takes two to assimilate, and there is a constant negative stimulation between groups."

He outlined attempts to remedy the situation on the basis of race, whereas the basic cause is economic. The greatest

To Discuss Coleridge in Vic Council Lecture

Professor K. H. Coburn, of the English staff at Victoria College, will speak on "Coleridge and English Criticism" in the second of the Victoria College Council lectures on Wednesday, at 4:45 p.m. in Alumni Hall.

Professor Coburn has been working on this subject for several years and while in England had access to large private Coleridge collections.

"Much material is unknown and Coleridge hasn't been exhausted by literary research," stated Prof. Coburn, and she added that she would be quoting from these works in her lecture.

Chorus, Ruth Sawyer Make Vic Dance Hit

Eight hundred and sixty-five people attended the Vic At-Home, held Friday evening in Eaton Auditorium. Mart Kenney and his Western Gentlemen supplied the music.

advance has been made by the C.I.O., he said, which lays down the law to union men, using an economic weapon to wipe out race discriminations.

Prof. Birdwhistell suggested: "The problem must be faced realistically not because of a race riot in Detroit or discrimination in Toronto, but because every infringement leads to others."

"This is not a Negro or a Jewish problem, but a democratic problem," he concluded.

EDITORIAL

Suspended Thought

"The time should come when negroes should attend college, fraternize and marry among us." Such were the words which resulted in the suspension of The Flat Hat, student publication of William and Mary College.

The board of trustees have expressed their disapproval and condemnation and directed the college administration and faculty to take corrective and disciplinary action against the twenty-two-year-old editor of the paper.

That such gross intolerance should still exist in a theoretically democratic country supposedly limited at present to one sole purpose is enlightening. Undoubtedly the social structure of the southern section in question has been responsible for the irrational action of the board of trustees. The board of trustees has been conditioned by the principles regulating the society in which they move. That society in turn has found it to their economic as well as social advantage to manifest such class distinction. If we survey any university we should find comparable rigid principles governing its set-up. We can deplore the steps taken by the board of trustees but we cannot deplore them singly. In our own city we have a shining example of intolerance in the refusal of a certain club to receive Marion Anderson when she sang in Toronto last year.

There are degrees of the evil found in the influence of university administrative principles. The most perverted principle yet to arise is that legislating for intolerance. The primary aim of any university is to achieve the very thing which William and Mary College trustees are denouncing. If there is to be any universality about education or the end which it serves, racial tolerance must be inherent in our society.

Aside from the fundamental issue of tolerance, there is also the fact that the University is dwelling on local, petty incidents at a time when all energies should be devoted towards the filling of the tremendous gap in American education. It is apparent that although Americans are lamenting the small numbers which comprise their colleges, more than increased enrolment will be required to obtain graduates adequate to the needs of citizenship. The administration officials of colleges such as William and Mary should practise the principles for which the institution they control stands. These are times when they should be thinking internationally rather than locally.

School Cannon Found! See It At U.C.'s Fiesta

The School cannon, missing since the Mulock Cup final last fall, has been found and will be returned to its rightful owners at the Arts Ball on Thursday night, it was announced yesterday.

The cannon was presented to S.P.S. in 1929 and has figured in every Engineers' function since that date. Some ten inches in length, with a three-quarter inch bore, stationary mounting, and possessing inferior firing characteristics, this vest-pocket howitzer has annually heralded the School Auction Dinner, elections, and football games.

Its loss first became apparent immediately after the Mulock Cup final last fall in which University College was victorious for the first time in some 34 years.

Repeated advertisements in The Varsity failed to reveal the whereabouts of the cannon or the identity of the culprit. After having been furtively passed from hand to hand, the cannon has finally come into the possession of the U.C. Lit, who feel obliged to return this campus relic to the perplexed Schoolmen.

In keeping with the "Good Neighbor" atmosphere that will predominate at the Arts Ball Fiesta, University College will return the cannon, suitably engraved, to a diplomatic representative of the Schoolmen.

Offer New Course In Russian Tongue

The Y.M.H.A. announced last night that it will inaugurate a 15-week course in the Russian language, to be led by Mr. A. Rosenblatt, teacher of languages and social work student.

It was revealed that this course is being started as a result of the interest "different organizations in our country have shown in the language, life and culture of the U.S.S.R., our great and brave ally in the present struggle against fascism."

As a result of this interest, the Y.M.H.A. pointed out, different organizations in the country have begun in various activities to study the different aspects of Soviet culture—its economic structure, art and language.

The course commences on February 15 and will be held every Thursday at 8:30 p.m. at 9 Brunswick Avenue.

Morals and Coquetry

Royal Alexandra

Elissa Landi shattered the theatrical tradition which demands that the first of a cycle of plays is always better than those which follow it, in the moralizing tragi-comedy Romance. Apart from her own sympathetic interpretation of the spirited Italian diva, the supporting actors, especially Alexander Kirkland as the Rector, rendered very satisfactory assistance, although hardly approaching Miss Landi's versatility.

One of the first to adopt the now all too common "Flashback Technique," Edward Sheldon's play comprises the normal reactions of a highly idealistic clergyman of the 1860's towards his first experience in love, told by him fifty years later. Although both Miss Landi and Mr. Kirkland's parts called for an emotional maturing in the course of the three acts, he retained his serious attitude throughout, while she brought a transition from the flippancy coquetry of an erratic prima donna to the sympathetic role of a celebrated but suffering artist. The play, and especially the "Romance" it contains, are fast-moving and omit many unnecessary details, as a good play should.

The last act is dramatically the most tense, but disappointing in its moral conclusion: We have to accept the young

Slight Majority Passes Resolution in Favor of Post-war Military Service; After Debate, Compromise Suggested

STRENGTH FOR PEACE

The resolution, "That Military Service Should be Continued After the War," was passed last night by a slight majority after a debate between representatives from Western and Vic at Victoria College last night.

The negative of the affirmative, Stefan Stykolt, outlined a plan for military training for an indeterminate number of years which would give a basic training to all physically fit men. This, he said, would train them in many useful trades and would give them a better understanding of the privileges of citizenship. He stressed the fact that nations opposing war must have the strength to maintain peace.

Frazer Earle of Western, the leader of the negative, replied that democracy was an ideal reached only by culture and not by means of military battles and guns. By inaugurating the policy of military training we repudiate the very heritage for which men today are spilling their blood. If this plan were carried through, rehabilitation would have to be instituted to help those men to become readjusted. Mr. Earle in conclusion pointed out that this plan, though rational and practical, would not apply to a democratic state.

Betty Johnson, second speaker for the affirmative, said that though being armed to the teeth did not prevent war, still, we need enough strength to back our desire for peace.

Sylvia Kolon, the other speaker on the negative side, showed that military training had never been a preventative of war; for an illustration, she stated that Germany, with a standing peace-time army of one hundred thousand men permitted her in 1920, was easily led to aggression by the Nazi party in 1934.

The debate closed with a lively discussion during which Prime Minister John Speers suggested that a compromise might be effected; have justice and peace, but protect all of this with a people that is prepared to fight for it.

three hours and it seemed as though anything at all made sense. So he said, mildly: "What do you want?"

"Why," said the giraffe, "some room to scratch, of course." He stretched his neck and wriggled his head experimentally. "I'm 18 feet high and it was getting awfully cramped down there."

"No doubt," said Egbert. "Have some tea?"

"I don't care for tea," said the giraffe, "but if you're quite finished with that posited geranium . . ." He took a mouthful. "Thanks," he went on, "it was a nasty color, anyway. I should think you'd be glad you're rid of it."

"Not at all," said Egbert.

"You know," said the giraffe, "your room is chilly. Not that I'm complaining, mind, but it's draughty up my neck. It's so hot in the room below, and I like to be all the same temperature."

"I can't get it any hotter here," said Egbert. "Would it help if I equalized things by turning the heat off downstairs?"

The giraffe said that would do very nicely, so Egbert went downstairs. In two minutes he was back.

"Funny thing," he said, "but I don't see any sign of the lower part of you in the room downstairs. Are you sure you're not spoofing me?"

"Are you sure you looked?" asked the giraffe, suspiciously.

"Of course I looked. I asked the guy who lives there, and he said he hadn't seen any 18-foot critters in his room."

At that the giraffe began to sob softly.

"I'm sorry," said Egbert. "I didn't know you were sensitive."

"It's not my height," moaned the giraffe, "it's just the way they treat me. I've been standing for hours. If only I could sit down . . . Do you suppose if you asked him nicely, he'd pull up an armchair for me?"

Egbert said he'd see, and went downstairs again.

"Well," he said on returning, "we pulled a chair into the middle of the room, but we couldn't find any netter giraffe to sit on it."

"And I can't find the chair," said the giraffe, making a shuffling noise down below as though feeling around for it. "It's a nuisance having my head in a different room. I can't see where I'm sitting."

"Are you sure you're in the right room?" asked Egbert.

"Come to think of it," said the giraffe, "my neck might have kinked round a corner inadvertently. Would you mind taking a squint down this hole and seeing just which room I am standing in?"

"Not at all," said Egbert, coming over and looking. . . . "I can't see a thing."

"That's discouraging," said the giraffe. "I suppose I can't be anywhere, then, so I'd better go back. Good-bye."

"Good-bye," said Egbert, and returned to Finnegan's Wake.

UNE PRÉPARATION SPÉCIALE POUR LA BARBE

Pour les hommes qui doivent se raser tous les jours

NE REQUIERT PAS DE BLAIREAU

La vie moderne exige aujourd'hui qu'un homme se rase sur 7 se rase chaque jour. Aux médecins, avocats, hommes d'affaires et soldats, il faut surtout un rasage propre.

Malheureusement, le rasage quotidien irrite souvent l'épiderme. A chaque rasage le rasoir écorche un peu l'épiderme, et quand vous rasez chaque jour, cette couche extérieure de la peau n'a pas le temps de se reformer d'un rasage à l'autre.

Mais il y a une crème à barbe faite spécialement pour résoudre ce problème. C'est la Gilder, une crème riche et douce qui a le pouvoir d'adoucir la surface rugueuse de l'épiderme en même temps qu'elle amollit la barbe. Alors, votre rasoir peut glisser facilement sur la peau sans l'écorcher. La Gilder vous permet de vous raser proprement avec confort.

Et Gilder est facile d'emploi. Lavez-vous simplement le visage à l'eau tiède et au savon; tandis que votre barbe est encore mouillée, étendez de la crème Gilder et laissez reposer pendant que vous brossez vos dents ou peignez vos cheveux—puis, rasez-vous!

ESSAI GRATUIT.—Demandez un tube gratuit de Gilder, vous permettant au moins dix rasages. Envoyez vos nom et adresse à la compagnie J. B. Williams (Canada), Limitée, dépt. TV4, Lasalle, Montréal.

To Ski or Not to Ski...

That is the question this winter. With the prevailing travel restrictions against any mass university skiing activity, solidly backed by the strong so-called public opinion which forbids too much social life for the student, and advocates hard work in large gobs for every course (including that "cinch" Pass Arts), what can one do in order to keep his elongated snowshoes from warping out of shape? Well, we'll tell ya. Toronto is practically surrounded by enough good skiable terrain to satisfy the expert and novice alike. We admit that the sport was originally designed to remove mountains and give out with all the thrills that mountain-removing can provide, but until the war is successfully won and the skier's paradises are again available to the town-dweller, much enjoyment may be derived from a little practice in the environs of our Queen City.

The expert can sharpen up his gaudesprung and get the timing on his various turns down to a science, while the novice can fall on smaller instead of bigger hills and not injure his pride and dignity to such a great extent. There's snow galore and lots of ideal skiing weather, so whether you stay at home and think about it or go out and have yourself a whopping good time is strictly up to that individual—yours.

Skimming the Surface...

The Junior Swim preliminaries are being run off this week in the pool, and very successfully, so it seems. Mike Beer, of first year U.C., is emerging as the best aquatic prospect around our campus for quite some time, as his times are approaching the collegiate records in several departments. The Junior finals are slated for this Thursday, with the preliminaries extending through yesterday and today. The senior prelims are also scheduled for this Thursday with the finals at the Athletic Night on Saturday. . . . Hec Phillips' track and field program is still favorably progressing every night. This week finds the shot put, high jump, and the 440 heats on the agenda. With all Hec's enthusiasm behind this scheme, the results are shaping up as something really amazing this year and "a good time is being had by all." . . . There will be no Thursday night game for the Blues this week. Mac figures that solid practice will do more to pull them out of their slump than anything else.

Women

By Janice Murray

Look, fellahs...

There has been an awful amount of apathy shown by the girls of our fair University in several fields.

I. SWIMMING. When U.C. has only five—count them, five—people out to a meet, and the other colleges are like unto them, there is a time to start action. You can redeem yourself by getting out to the practices for the rest of this week. Today, at U.T.S., from 7:00 to 8:15 p.m., there will be a general practise on diving starts and turns, followed by speed until 9:00. Tomorrow, there will be speed, followed at 8:15 by style and ornamental. Monday, the 19th, at the same times, speed and, later, diving, starts and turns; Tuesday, the 20th, style and ornamental, followed by diving, starts and turns.

II. SUPPORT. For your teams in all fields. When there is a hockey game in the feminine circuit there is absolutely no one out to cheer; and if a person does come out it usually is a boy.

St. Hilda's derived a lot of support—but from Saints? Naw! from U.C. girls who cheered better than the St. Hilda's girls probably could have, even had they been there. Incidentally, St. Hilda's defeated Vic II 3-0 when Marg Alexander and Mardie and Joan Fletcher turned in some nice team work. Vic has a great goalie on that Second team! Miss Lee of the Athletic Office in Hart House tells us that the attendance is falling off lamentably in the Friday Night Varsity Blue hockey games. There are only a few girls out at that, too. There's a place that might be made for YOU if you would only turn out to cheer. Femme cheer leaders are suggested, but these are generally useful to guide and direct enthusiasm, not to create it.

Then, at the Athletic Nights, this University is becoming noted for the best of such entertainment and for the best apathy and disinterest in this entertainment in Canada.

Well, Fellahs?

Compulsory Sports Favored By S.P.S. In School Parliament

Right to Play Sports the Privilege of Amateurs as Well as Experts says Prime Minister Al Milling

GOVERNMENT WINS 14-2

The motion, "Resolved that sports should be made compulsory for all students," was carried by a 12 vote margin at a debate held by the Engineering Parliament yesterday in the Engineering Building.

The Prime Minister, Al Milling, I Chemical, stated that participation in athletics was the privilege of all and not of an expert minority, that it fostered a beneficial character built on a sound, healthful mind and body. He stated that sports prepared one for business by helping to quicken the mind.

The leader of the opposition, Ed Frankel, II Aero, stated that university was a place where one learned to plan one's own time. All students were not of the athletic type and he pitied the poor hapless individuals, unsuited for P.T., who suffered torture and agony on the P.T. floor. Why, then, have mass murder of these individuals on a rugby field? He added that sports would suffer a flop in enthusiasm through being compulsory.

Bill Duma, I Chemical, next speaker for the government, said that the army was compulsory because the country's good was furthered. Athletics should be compulsory for the good of all students. He added that the team spirit in sports increases the broad-mindedness of the participants and that sports are outlets for energy which otherwise might find an outlet in a less laudable manner, such as in committing criminal offences.

He further remarked that the whole purpose of sports was to steel the man for life's struggle, that many had tried to further interest in sports by giving trophies for the faculties who displayed most interest in sports. He stated that the reason that Trinity was leading the T. A. Reed Trophy race was that they had practically all of their students out fighting for them.

Cyril Fry, II Metallurgical, stated that the opposition was not against sport but opposed the government's motion because of lack of facilities, elimination of voluntary sports, lack of time on the part of the students, and the danger of regimentation.

It was remarked from the floor that the place for compulsory sports was in high school, not in university. The Prime Minister replied that sports were not compulsory now in high school and that we have to deal with the present situation. He added that a chain is as (Continued on page 4)

Free Tuition At U. of Sydney

The University of Sydney announces that it has offered free tuition to Canadian students who travel to Australia after the war. The university believes it will help promote a peace-time interchange of students across the Pacific.

While on this side of the Pacific, Richard Kcane, Australia's Customs Minister, urged Canadians and Americans to visit Australia and expressed the hope that Australians will come to this side and see how things are done in Canada and the United States.

The University of Sydney will open its courses, whether for a term, a year or for longer periods, to Canadian students, without fees. A school of Pacific Studies is being developed and may seek a Canadian historian as the next holder of the chair of American history, which is soon to be begun.

Kenney to Play At Pharmacy Ball

Pharmacy's graduation ball will be held this year in the Crystal Ballroom of the Royal York Hotel next Friday evening. There will be dancing to the music of Mart Kenney and his Western Gentlemen from 9:45 to 1:45.

The senior executive who have charge of the ball expect a large crowd. They report that students of other faculties are very welcome.

There will be door prizes, and favors for everybody, many of which are cosmetics and toilet sets. Tickets are available at the School of Pharmacy and from any Pharmacy student.

Prof. McDougall To Discuss Acton

Prof. D. J. McDougall will discuss Lord Acton in the sixth lecture in the series, "Representative English Writers and the Theme of Liberty," in Room 8, U.C., at 4:30 p.m., Thursday, Feb. 15.

"Lord Acton was one of the most important Liberal historians of the nineteenth century, making the development of liberty his central theme of investigation. He was Regius Professor of History at the University of Cambridge from 1895 till his death in 1902," Prof. McDougall explained. He was the founder and editor of the Cambridge Modern History.

Applications For Exams Due March 1

A late fee of one dollar will be charged all art students whose application to write the final exams are not in by March 1, announced the Registrar. These forms include an application to write exams and two forms of application for the succeeding year, listing the subjects in which the student plans to enroll. Forms of application may be obtained at the office of the Registrar in Simcoe Hall or at the office of the Registrar in the student's own college.

So far, only two hundred applications have been received in the office of the Registrar, he reported. This is a very small fraction of the students in Arts and it means that there will be a last minute rush.

Examination fees are included in the academic fees and there is no other fee. However, there still remains the late fee for those who haven't got their applications in by the first of March.

Public Relations Is Answer To The Problem Of Marketing

"Public Relations and Marketing" was the subject of Mr. Lee Trenholm in the second lecture in the series "Effective Marketing—the Key to Tomorrow's Job."

Mr. Trenholm is the Director of Public Relations with Underwood Elliott Fisher Ltd., and vice-president of the American Public Relations Association.

As an introduction to the subject, Mr. Trenholm emphasized that there was no precise definition for public relations but that its meaning varied with the conditions under which it was used. He stated that its importance arises from the public's new attitude towards business. This change was due mainly to the effects of the depression upon the people and upon the businessmen themselves.

At the present time, he went on to state, effective public relations fit into the regular marketing schedule, but in the period following the war, marketing methods will fit and develop around an extensive program of public relations.

Mr. Trenholm warned the audience that the "Take It or Leave It" attitude shown on the part of most business organizations and their salesmen would boomerang back on them when the present seller's market is again changed to a buyer's market. People who are rudely treated do not easily forget, and in the future they will take their business to those firms carrying on effective

President Of Dalhousie Resigns Post

Halifax—Dr. Carleton Stanley, president of Dalhousie University, resigned last night because of a quarrel with the Board of Governors, bringing to an end 14 years as head of the university.

A joint statement by the president and the board said: "There exists, and has for some time existed, a fundamental divergence in viewpoint between the president and the board as to their respective functions in university government."

"As it appears that on this and certain other administrative questions the board and the president are not able to agree, he president has submitted his resignation, stating that he cannot see how the interests of the institution can be adequately served with the present impasse between 'myself and certain members of the board.'"

The points at issue were not stated. President Stanley's resignation becomes effective at the end of the current academic year.

German Musicale Given by Club

An all-German musicale was presented last night at the regular monthly meeting of the German Club, held at the Women's Union. Composers of the works played were Schubert, Brahms, Strauss, and Mozart.

Frances Richardson, pianist, played Mozart's Sonata in C Minor, Schubert's Hark, Hark, the Lark, and Brahms' Lullaby.

Prof. Robert Finch, flautist, accompanied Hans Bender, who sang Never Forgotten from "Marriage of Figaro," Registerrair from "Don Juan," and songs by Schubert, Wolf, and Strauss.

Cellist Kurt Levy, violinist Paul Seron, and pianist Robert Finch played Mozart's Trio No. 5 in G Major.

The meeting was opened by a short sing-song in German, and refreshments were served after the musical program.

Senior S.P.S. and U.C. to Meet in Final Hockey Game Next Week to Decide Winner of Group One

SHUTOUT FOR DAVIDSON

By Jack M. Fine
U.C. I regained their first-place tie with Sr. S.P.S. in Group One of the intramural hockey tournament by trouncing winless Meds by a 9-0 score. The Artsmen and the Engineers are virtually sure of gaining play-off spots as the top two teams from their group go on to the upper brackets.

Meds, who looked weak in losing 4-0 to School last week, appeared even weaker today as U.S. waltzed through their defence with ease. U.C.'s second line scored its first goals of the season as MacIntosh and Fyfe each tallied one. Freddie Bryans in Meds' goal fanned on several shots but was by no means the main reason for the walloping.

Goalie Doug Davidson, netminder for the Varsity Blues, racked up his first shutout of the season as he successfully held Meds off the scoresheet. His namesake on the forward line helped him materially by popping in four goals and gaining an assist.

Forward Davidson opened the scoring festivities early in the first period when he picked up Wade's rebound and parked the disc behind Bryans. The game promised to be close until halfway through the stanza, when Davidson came in on a breakaway and scored again.

Bill MacIntosh scored his first tally of the year and was followed two minutes later by Mike Fyfe's marker on passes from MacIntosh and Purcell. Davidson banded in his third goal of the frame twenty seconds before the bell while Harvey Bain was in the penalty box for tripping, to give the Arts boys a 5-0 lead.

Veteran Lyall Furry opened the scoring in the second period, taking a pass from Davidson and skating in right on top of Bryans to shoot the rubber into the top right corner. Wade was put off right after this goal and the medics put on a determined effort to hit the box-score, but were unsuccessful.

Davidson hit the jackpot when he shot the puck over Bryans' prostrate form in front of the goal, after recovering Bain's rebound to make the scoreboard ring seven. Hart and Hughes were sent off together for roughing, and Ferguson took Furry's pass for another goal.

Wade put the finishing touches on the game by hitting the twine near the 13-minute mark, to push the final score up to 9-0. Callahan and Bain were sent off together just before the end of the game (Continued on page 4)

...Ivories or Scalpel? ... Another Medsman Can't Decide

Eighteen-year-old Ross Johnson is making a good job of combining music and medicine. Yesterday, he played in Hart House, in the East Common Room, for the first time and to an audience that more than filled the seating capacity of the room.

In an interview with The Varsity, he said that he had found it exceedingly hard to decide whether to go into medicine or music. He feels that medicine is "a little more practical," and said: "I'm thoroughly satisfied with the course. I have an idea what I'd like to specialize in, but since I'm only in second year, I may change my mind when I learn more about it."

Ross won his A.T.C.M. at 16, and two scholarships from the Conservatory.

He has been teaching music for the last three years as a source of revenue. He intends to give all the time he can to music as long as he can keep up with his courses and afterwards.

He likes popular music to listen to and to dance to, although he has no wish to play it; the "super-rhythm" of jive appeals him, he says.

After the concert, the piano was gone over thoroughly and without result in a search for a squeak which had persisted throughout the recital. Ross said he didn't hear it anyway, since he had a cold and couldn't even hear very well what he was playing. "I guess it was all right, though," he said, "because the audience was very decent."

SEQUITURS WHICH HAVE LOST THEIR NONS DEPT:

The Varsity's own kuklofer, which is as ubiquitous as any grasshopper, hopped from our columns again Monday and did this to the C.R.C.C. orders:

"MILITARY LAW

"Recruits, including those assigned to their field of precocious and unconvincing Ambulance Procedure, will report to Room 327, O.C.E. . . ."

"ESS,OO ITTY BITTY WECUIT, THAT MEANS OO"

And talking about the militia, a former C.O.T.C. friend of ours, who now works with the Army (for some obscure bottom-half reason) as a clerk receiving candidate's qualifications for officerships, reports this entry:

"My three years of experience as funeral director qualified me, I'm sure, to handle grave responsibilities."

KNOWS HIS OWN SKULKING

ABILITIES, NO DOUBT.

Even in February, young men's fancies turn to you know what.

Not hearing a sentence from a professor's lecture, one conscientious student leaned forward to see if his two chums, busily writing in their notebooks, had got it down.

It turned out that one of them was composing lyrics for a song, and the other was doodling with: "June Dear, WILL YOU BE MY VALENTINE?"

ANOTHER campus agency which perennially having its illusions shattered is the naive old S.A.C. office.

The other day a woman advertiser telephoned and glowingly painted word-pictures of a three-room, apartment—'really, m' dear, wonderfully furnished and situated for any student who'd like to rent the adorable place'.

Lenten Sacrifices Just a Joke According to Poll of Students

"Forty days to spend in Lent, Weep and wail, relent, repent."

Today is Lent and many students at the University of Toronto are going to adhere to its rules in a practical manner. Jack Irwin, I M. & P., said, "I hope to give up my Tuesday morning 8:30 lectures in English during Lent. That would help me to stay out later on Monday nights."

If Alice Acal, I Pass, had her way, she would do a chapter of Psychology every day during the next six weeks. "I intend staying in a lot more often," she added. "Who knows but I might even catch up on my work in that subject."

Marg Johnston, II House, Ec, intends to read more Plato in lieu of the detective books which usually find their way into residences.

The only person of those polled who is going to go on as usual during Lent is Ruth Dearden, IV Biology, who stated, "I don't approve of giving up things for Lent because there is little enough left in life as it is."

Gordon McCaffrey, III Pol. Sci., is going to give up whistling at red-heads on the campus, "because it doesn't get me anywhere."

Joan Western, I House, Ec, broke down and confessed that she is going to give up drinking "Rum and Coca Cola" for Lent.

"I plan to give up studying," replied Barbara King, II Hon. Sci. "It would give me time for more beauty naps."

Careless Thought

When a student feels himself adequate to the requirements entailed in attending university he should have more than merely academic qualifications. It is generally accepted that he must be imbued with a sense of responsibility towards other members with whom he comes in contact as well as the property with which he is surrounded.

Within the last few weeks two minor thefts have occurred which may at the time have resulted merely from thoughtless actions. The Faculty of Pharmacy placed a poster in Hart House announcing the advent of its annual dance. The notice had hardly been posted a day when some eager soul carried it off without further thought. Pharmacy students had gone to great trouble to design the poster and place it properly. As a result of its disappearance, ticket sales for the dance have not met with the success expected. The theft was unknown to committee officials who realised the loss too late to replace the advertisement.

The other incident of "lifting" is of a more serious nature. When Forestry hosted at Athletic Night, a display of stuffed animals was obtained from the museum and was exhibited at the dance. Again some eager soul walked off with part of the display. The co-operation of the museum in lending the Faculty of Forestry this display to further the success of Athletic Night is not something to be abused. Students attending such affairs should respect not only the spirit in which the property was lent but also the property itself. The Faculty of Forestry was very definitely embarrassed at being unable to return the display to the museum intact. The student who took the animal in question should have discrimination enough to return the missing article to the proper authorities promptly. Such thoughtless actions are unwarranted on the part of students who theoretically have an element of rationality to guide their desires.

Both Pharmacy and Forestry committees placed respective properties on display on the assumption students would not abuse the faith placed in them. It is just such students who act without realizing the consequences that bring down the heavy hand of authority on the heads of innocent and guilty alike.

Ottawa Calling

By Neil MacDonald

ANYONE CAN WIN

The by-election in Grey North is now ancient history, and even the interest focussed on it in Ottawa is beginning to die down. The results were something of a shock to all parties: to the Liberals because they felt that their candidate had made a very strong impression on the electors, to the Progressive Conservatives because the seat was less than certain, and to the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation because they thought that they had developed a much stronger campaign than the event proved.

The by-election reaction among the populace of Ottawa was typical of the various elements in the city. The Civil Service can be divided in many ways, but the most valid break-down is that which takes into consideration three main categories. The biggest group in the Service are the stenographers, typists, and junior clerks; then there is the large number of "bright young people" who hold more or less responsible positions; and finally there is the senior hierarchy of more important executives.

I don't think that two per cent of the workers in the first group, the routine services, cared a damn which way the by-election went. Although the issues, charges and countercharges, had been fully aired in both local papers, this group had not become interested, a fact which might be attributed to the length of the campaign as much as anything else.

The bright young men and women, who do most of the spade work in the initiating and implementing of policy, were interested as a group in the by-election. Most of them did not expect the Progressive Conservative candidate to win and they felt that the C.C.F. would have made a much better showing.

The senior Civil Servants, many of them permanent, were vitally interested in the result of the by-election, as a reflection of public opinion on the policy of the government. No Civil Servant in a responsible position can ignore the implications in a by-election such as Grey North.

What happened was that perhaps 30 per cent of the potential electors in Ottawa cared two hoots what happened in Grey North and were able to base their own thinking on an intelligent grasp of the situation.

Looking over election prospects, a total of 34 per cent of the electors (according to a recent nationwide poll) do not support any of the three major parties. Twenty-one per cent are still sitting on the fence, an increase of almost 20 per cent from previous figures.

It will be this doubtful group, this 21 per cent, which will decide the outcome of the next election.

Murder In The Brass Section

Massey Hall

Some day some kind benefactor to Toronto's music-lovers will summon up sufficient courage and money to buy a gun and with a few precise shots demolish the brass section in the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. Admittedly, that is a bloodthirsty and somewhat messy process. But it is quite possible that Toronto music-lovers will rally around this conceiver of a cause celebre, and we, for one, would cheerfully help pay the fine, assuming, of course, that the magistrate were a music-lover himself and would not hand out a more drastic penalty.

The T.S.O., by Canadian standards, is recognized as a superior unit: its woodwind section, technically speaking, is very fine indeed. Unfortunately, there are times, such as last night at the Secondary School Concert at Massey Hall, and a good many other nights during the year, when both the Orchestra and the woodwinds lose a hopeless battle against their steel foe.

The conflict emerged in William Walton's satire, Suite From Facade, a charming if somewhat flimsy piece, as the brass began raising its banners, merely anticipating the first foray. The debacle stirred with Delius' normally graceful tone-poem, On Hearing The First Cuckoo In Spring: the brass did their bit, but they succumbed to the woodwinds.

There was a brief recess as Jane Harkness, soprano, sang an aria. Then the battle raged gathered its forces and the sound and fury raged in, of all

THE VARSITY SERIAL

"We Make You Think"

Readers will recall—how can they forget?—that Dr. McGeech, incensed in an oversized, sealed, inflated rubber boot, has just shot into a subterranean manhole and is being borne by the current of the Taddle down a precipitous sewer. . . . Now read on.

CHAPTER FIVE

Dr. McGeech, apparently helpless, encased there in the dark by rubber walls, knew suddenly that he was falling vertically. He knew this because he was seized with that principal symptom of descending elevators, the discomfort known technically as Examination Stomach.

He knew more than that. Anxious ever to let no particle of useful knowledge escape him, he had long ago swotted up the details of the Toronto sewage system, and he knew that if once he reached the bottom of the drop there was no further hope. For he would be borne on by a torrent through subterranean pipes, filtered through a grating, treated with chemicals, kneaded with choppers. He must not reach the bottom.

His only hope was to arrest and reverse his precipitate descent: but what chance was there of that? It was like asking a canoe to swim up a 200-foot waterfall.

Moreover, a quick calculation in 7th-dimensional algebrametry showed that time was pressing. He had less than nine seconds in which to save himself. At the end of that time he would plop with a splash into the lower stream, and be wafted far away from the shaft down which he was falling and up which, to escape, he must re-arise.

Nine seconds—one gone in calculation—he must act in eight!

He acted. For he was McGeech, the Terror of the Underworld, the slippery, the unkillable, the infinitely resourceful. He fished for an instant in an inner pocket and produced six cigars.

Bravado? Not at all. They were not common El Stinkos. They had been compounded by McGeech himself, long ago, and stored on his person for such an emergency as this.

He stuck all six in his mouth and groped for a match.

Horrors!

He had no match.

But McGeech would not die for want of a match. He thought for an instant of his enemies, and his eyes flashed. That flash was enough. The cigars were lit.

Six seconds to go.

He puffed on the six cigars for all he was worth. More than any tuppenny politician, he must save himself now by lung-power.

Five seconds to go. The rubber boot was filling with greasy smoke, and its descent was slower . . . slower . . .

Very good, dear reader. You are catching on. These special cigars were emitting a buoyant gas. . . . But could they emit enough in the four seconds remaining to overcome the weight of McGeech and the rubber boot, and send them rising to the top of the shaft?

Three seconds. The boot was barely drifting downwards now, slithering like a feather reluctantly down, buffeted by

Track Meet Features High Jump

High Jump, Novice Quarter-Mile, Shot Put Run Off; Less Entries, Better Competition; Vic, Med, SPS Share Honors

HIKICHI WINS 440

The high jump, the shot put, and the 440-yard novice were on the program of this week's indoor track events. No events were packed with entries, but all three provided excellent competition. The highlight of the week's meet was in the high jump event, in which Art Jackes of School set a new Varsity record.

Hikichi of Vic continued on his streak of winning running, coping the 440 title with a time of 57.5 seconds. Sixty-two men tackled this novice quarter-mile event, and right behind Hikichi were Baron of Vic, Dyer of Meds, and Shaw of S.P.S., tied for second place at 58.2 seconds.

Seventeen Varsity jumpers turned out to soar for recognition, but two men, Jackes and Kerr of S.P.S., dominated the picture. Jackes was the top man, and he jumped to a record height of 6'0 1/2" to gain distinction. Kerr was in second place with 5'10" to his credit. Shaw and Todd, both of School, ended up in a deadlock for third place.

A novice shot-putter, Haslett of Meds, aroused comment by taking first place in the shot put event. All of the twenty-four entrants in this event showed good form and ability, and Haslett's toss was taped at 38'11". Mahoney of St. Mike's was a scarce foot behind, in second place, tossing it 37'10 1/2". Palmer of Meds and Lye of School ranked third and fourth respectively.

At next Saturday's Athletic Night, track exhibition will be carried further, and in the high jump event Kerr and Jackes could easily come up with some three-star competition.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Al Cringan

THE ARTS OF SELF-DEFENCE

Boxing and wrestling seem to getting the brush-off from the heads of the Athletic Directorate at Hart House, judging from the response which the entry lists to both the Junior and Senior tournaments have been getting. Wrestling, in particular, seems to be suffering. At two of the Athletic Nights held so far, wrestling matches it was hoped to take place in the upper gym, and even though have been run off, one in the 165-pound class and one in the heavy-weight class.

The reasons for the failure of the other bouts to have been run to hold even one match, while in other classes the failure has been due to the fact that either one or both of the wrestlers didn't turn up. This slackening off of the response of the campus actors may be due to the men themselves, or else due to the actions of the Directorate and the P.T. staff in the past year.

We can't eat our cake and have it, too. That is, we can't include enough wrestling and boxing instruction in our P.T. classes to drum up enthusiasm in these lines and at the same time include sufficient track training, as is now being done, to maintain the enthusiasm in that sport. It is an unfortunate situation, and the best possible compromise that can be arrived at is to allow the students themselves to choose, so that the devotees of both lines of sport may obtain all of the instruction that they wish as part of their routine Physical Training periods.

RUMORS

Differences of opinion arise in the management of any sport. Sometimes, as in the assault situation, they arise over unavoidable chains of events, in efforts to reach a better balance between different sports, and can be settled with a little judicious finagling.

But there are rumors afloat—that we haven't been able to check, but believe from observation—that there is a dissension in the ranks of the Basketball Blues, between the players and the coach, that is much more serious than a mere difference of opinion. To be precise, Grossman and McReynolds, players on the second line—good, reliable hoopers with all of the potentialities of most of the first line players—have been played, all too sparingly by Mac McCutcheon, and are none too willing to continue being, in reality, non-playing members of the Varsity Blues.

Come on, team and coach alike, see if you can't regain that spirit of '44 which seems to be lacking this year, by playing every man fairly, squarely and to the limit of his possibilities.

The Sportswoman

QUICKLY GLANCING

Over the ice happenings yesterday we see that Vic I were able to top U.C. by the score of 3-0. This game was a hard-fought bout, and although Vic I, those old and tried champs of yesteryears, and many more yesteryears, came out on top again, it doesn't mean that U.C. lacked the spirit to fight. Starring for the U.C. aggregation were Mary McMillan, twice-minder, and Liz Kennedy; while Vic I was aided and abetted by Leone Eunson, Shirley Pearse and Joan Chalk.

The pieces of this puzzle are slowly falling into place, and it won't be long before the finals are gaily in progress. And that final should be really something to see. The teams left are all of fighting calibre, and no one can (or will, as far as we're concerned) try to pick out the winner.

6'0 1/2" NEW MARK

"There have never been two such exceptional high-jumpers at the University of Toronto in all its history," said track coach Hec Phillips last night, speaking of Bill Kerr of S.P.S. III and of Art Jackes of S.P.S. II.

In the past year of track competition, these two men have been the two principals in a series of record-breaking high jumps, climaxed on Monday afternoon by a 6'0 1/2" leap by Jackes in the indoor competition at Hart House. Jackes' leap beat all previous Varsity records, indoors and out, and beat the Canadian intercollegiate outdoor record of 6'0 1/4", held by A. W. Munroe of Varsity for a number of years.

Last fall, these two stars met for the first time in the Senior interfaculty outdoor track meet. Bill Kerr was jumping in top form and edged out a decision over Jackes. Kerr soared to the 5'11 3/4" mark, to beat Varsity's old outdoor record of 5'10" held by R. O. Brett, a past Denfistry student. After out-jumping all competition, Kerr declined to try and extend his record jump any further.

It seems as if these two are fated to go on competing against each other, taking turns winning out and at the same time setting new Canadian records, for they met again this week in the indoor faculty meet, and Art Jackes came out the new-crowned champion. Yes, he sailed over the bamboo at the 6'0 1/2" mark, to break all previous Canadian college records. As with Kerr in the fall, Jackes was unable to keep on jumping to extend the height because of a pressure of time.

"The high jumping competition which has just finished is probably the greatest athletic performance which has ever taken place inside Hart House," concluded Hec, "and the jumpers have had little opportunity since the fall to practise. We hope that we will be able to provide encouragement to jumpers in the future, even with as little as one or more hours of actual practice each week."

Despite What You Don't Hear

From us, the volleyball games are going merrily on every evening. We have made a concentrated effort on many occasions to find out the scores, and winners, of these games; but for no reason at all, despite the fact that the exams lurk in the too-near offing, in about 50 days, the teams seem to corral their opponents, managers, referees and all casual spectators, and disappear into the depths of the earth. A few days later they ask us why there were no results. Well, they, from the depths of the earth, or of a movie, or food or something, should know better than we do. They just aren't to be found. A volleyball player is as elusive as any proverbial old hen's tooth you want to mention.

Last night, though, we captured a ref and got the results of the Dental Nurses-Pharmacy and P.H.E. "B." O.T. games. In the first tilt, Dental Nurses whipped Pharmacy by 42-31, while in the second header of this double ditto, P.H.E. B. copped 62 points from O.T., edging only 24 of their own.

Chief Tailfeyers for the teams were not readily found, but Pharmacy played Dents with only 6 players.

As far as playing went, or goes for all this year, the play was pretty scrappy (as opposed to the meaning of fight, generally meant by "scrappy" in this column). Team play hasn't characterized this year's volleyball as a whole; but relax, girls, it's better than that of any former year in the last ten.

To Date . . .

We have received one list of suggestions for an all-star basketball team. (Continued on page 4) the merest breezes.

Two seconds! . . . The angry rapids roared in McGeech's ears, not ten feet below. . . . The boat was almost stationary now—or was it falling—or rising?

It was rising! He was safe!

And McGeech puffed valiantly on the six cigars, and the cloud of grey smoke thickened, the rubber boat rose first languorously, then like a rocket, and bore the Terror of the Underworld up to the higher levels of the Taddle.

Then with a thump it came to rest, bobbing grotesquely against the Taddle roof. It could rise no further.

McGeech unfastened his tie-pin, and jabbed. With a hiss the boat collapsed, deflated, into a calm backwater.

In three seconds more he had slit it open with his frog-spear, and stepped out, ankle-deep in mud, but safe.

He was safe—but his quest had apparently failed. For the Fakir Aillhell-allova was nowhere to be seen. The quarry had flown.

With an oath, McGeech waded back to the foot of the slippery stairs that led up to daylight, and ascended, to blink in the sunlight of a deserted campus. There was no sign of the Fakir anywhere. There were no footprints. Nothing on which to base his renewed pursuit.

He swore softly once more and dropped like a bloodhound, snuffing the ground.

"If it's so adorable," suggested the practical S.A.C. official, "how is it that you haven't rented it before this?"

There was a perceptible silence. "Well," we'd the would-be landlady, "the facter-you-see is that I do metal work in my home."

"Wouldn't that hammering be noisy for the boarder?"

Another perceptible silence.

"As a matter of fact, it is," muttered the woman brusquely, "BUT IT DOES NOT BOTHER ME ANY MORE."

"Well-furthered with running water and avel chorus."

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY CAMEOS:

As a College street car, packed even to the last inch of its treads, trundled along the other day, a feminine voice screamed shrilly from up front: "Ohhh! Someone's got hold of my leg!"

"Would the gentleman kindly return the lady's leg?" instructed the conductor in bored tones.

He obliged.

The woman blushingly fought her way down the car, using the conventional elbow movement, a sure way of interlocking arms with someone else. So it came as no surprise when she screamed again: "Ohhh! Someone's got hold of my arm!"

In the confusion that followed, the conductor rasped wearily, "You know, this is beginning to sound very much like the story of the Three Bears."

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO SAROYAN?

Meekly sliding up before an imposing St. George Street Reference Librarian last week, a spindly-looking student asked where he could find a copy of Mon, Master of Women.

The librarian lowered her lorgnette an inch and briskly replied: "That, young man, you will have to find in the fiction department."

The other night, to the strains of Brazil, a co-ed was being initiated into the noble art of dancing—the South American way. So, with fervor, she was making like a combination of Carmen Miranda and Betty Hutton. Which, as you must admit, would be quite a combination.

So her little chum gallantly remarked: "Not bad, kid, not bad at all."

And she blushingly replied: "Thanks, but the trouble with me is that I always shake in the wrong places."

IT MUST BE JELLY, 'CAUSE JAM DON'T SHAKE LIKE THAT.

strong as its weakest link, and that, in view of the existing situation, the university should take the lead. It was also remarked from the floor that good health was an essential in business and that sports were the most pleasant way of attaining that health.

The motion was then put to the house with the following result: Ayes, 14; Nays, 2, plus a number who did not vote.

At the end of the debate, Dr. Jones, the honorary chairman of the Debates Club, suggested that debates should be judged on the merits of the speakers, not on the convictions of the members. There was an executive meeting after the debate to discuss this motion.

It was pointed out during the floor discussion of this proposal that the vote represented to the outside the opinions of the students. A compromise was put forward suggesting two votes, one based on the opinions of those present on the subject discussed, and the other on the merits of the speaker.

This would be fair to the debaters and would also represent student opinion on the subject. No decision on this matter was reached.

selections, Cesar Franck's Symphony in D. Poor Cesar Franck. His composition was in the middle. The woodwinds lost from the outset, and the brass, their barrage of pots and pans well supplied with further ammunition, won the field. The worst injuries, as usual, and woefully enough, were sustained by the audience.

As you might suspect by this time, the concert was not singularly rewarding; though the audience, youngsters from high schools, who braved last night's storm for the sake of higher art, seemed to enjoy the musical battle as well as they might any movie Tarawa.

Probably the most interesting bit on the repertoire was Watson's offering. His Facade, though providing a sample of his imaginative resources, is not as satisfying to the sensibilities as his symphony or concerto. The last we heard of him, incidentally, he was driving an ambulance for the British army, and, quite probably, whistling experimentally the notes for a coming creation.

Ettore Mazzoleni conducted in a workmanlike and conscientious fashion; he also exhibited cool restraint, which was all right, depending on whether you like conductors theatrical or calm.

Here's one dollar ready toward the Fund to buy pistols for the man who'll wipe out the machine gun nest in the brass section. The line, gentlemen, will form on the left.

FRANK RASKY

Contrasts

Convocation Hall

George Coutts, well-known organist and teacher at the Toronto Conservatory of Music and Walmer Road Baptist Church, was guest performer at the sixth recital in the present series. His program was arranged to contrast between Bach, the greatest composer for the organ, and two modern Frenchmen and a Belgian.

Finger-work, on the whole, was clear-cut, and the demands of Bach's Pasacaglia and Fugue in C Minor were met with ease. One of the most celebrated of Bach's organ compositions, the Pasacaglia shows Bach's genius for weaving the most complicated contrapuntal devices into a satisfying melody. It is, perhaps, a symptom of the rushing age we live in that we find long passages of running triplets, unrelieved by any alteration of rhythm or dynamics, a bit tiresome. It may be a reflection of an untutored taste in organ music, but certain passages in the Bach Pasacaglia, claimed to be one of the outstanding masterpieces in all musical literature, tend to pall.

Dubois' Toccata in G Minor was, as the name implies, written to display technique, and Mr. Coutts played it admirably. His pedal work, however, was exceptionally brilliant in the cadenza of Bonnet's Variations de Concert. The simplicity and tunefulness of the two short works of Bach, Sonatina from Cantata "God's Time is Best" and the Sinfonia, "I Stand Before the Gates of Heaven", made an excellent foil to the teasing Cantabile of Jongen, a work which abounds in subtle harmonic devices; it would make a wonderful arrangement for string quartet.

The next recital will be given on Tuesday, February 27, by Mr. John J. Weatherseed, F.R.C.O. Let us hope we will see you there.

Philosophy Found In Coleridge Work Discussed in Talk

Versatile Poet Ahead of His Time in Metaphysics, Medicine and Psychiatry, Declares
Speaker

Professor K. H. Coburn delivered an address yesterday afternoon on "Coleridge, and English Criticism" at Alumni Hall, Victoria College. Prof. Coburn described Coleridge as "unique for his varied, precocious, and unified thought" on subjects ranging from metaphysics to medicine, from philosophy to psychiatry. He expounded psychiatric theories long before psychiatry ever became recognized in the field of medical research.

Himself a profound metaphysicist, Coleridge denounced those who showed contempt of the four elements (solid, fluid, gas and flame), said the speaker. His prime interest in the field, however, was the imagination which he did not consider a faculty in the old sense. To Coleridge, the imagination was "the whole personality in a state of multi-consciousness; the laboratory where essence is transposed into existence. It operates according to, and not contrary to, natural law," said Prof. Coburn.

Coleridge regarded vital unity as the prime requisite in poetry rather than mechanics, the speaker continued. He criticized all the great contemporary poets, including Shakespeare, Scott, and Wordsworth, introducing such terms as "polarity," "statuesque," "genial," and "anaesthetic" to the field of criticism, he explained.

His works were never systematic, seldom complete, and usually full of omissions, thus giving a distorted impression at times of his theories, the speaker declared. But in spite of this there is no doubt that he had one of the great seminal minds of England, Prof. Coburn concluded.

Concrete and Abstract

Conservatory Concert Hall

Yesterday's "five o'clock" was another delightful hour of chamber music performed by the Conservatory String Quartet, whose members are, to refresh your memories, Elie Spivak, Harold Simberg, Harold Carter, and Joyce Sands. Their performance was, on the whole, very good. Perhaps the dynamics might have been a little more interesting, but the two essentials, synchronization and a genuine feeling for quartet ensemble playing, were certainly present.

The first half of the program was a two-movement quartet fragment in F major by Greig which wasn't found or published until after his death. Greig, whose short lyrical works are his best, has a definite Nordic flavor in his melodies, and his rhythms are often reminiscent of rustic dances. The emotional effect of Greig's harmonies, which are often stark, especially in the first movement, is like tramping through a winter forest: cold, but with occasional glimpses of breathless beauty. Greig has tried to do a little too much in this quartet, giving a general effect which is choppy rather than musically satisfying. This fact, however, is a direct outcome of his characteristic talent of painting pictures in music.

Of complete contrast to the picture-painting Greig is the purely abstract music of Beethoven. The name "Harp" has been attached to Beethoven's Quartet op. 74 because of the relatively insignificant arpeggios in the first movement. The sublime beauty of the adagio is the outpouring of the majestic but lonely soul of Beethoven, and this movement, along with the rest of the quartet, is so typically Beethoven that no further comment is necessary. The co-ordination in the performance of the last movement variations, especially the concluding one, was particularly outstanding.

The eighth and final concert will be given in two weeks on February 28, when the Conservatory String Quartet will play a Bach Prelude, Beethoven's Mourner—Ballo Tedesco, and Beethoven's Quartet in B flat major, op. 130. It will be a concert well worth the attention of musically-minded students.

In the faculty of Dentistry, the James Branton Willmott scholarship of the third year will be awarded to R. E. Breen, and R. D. Colman will receive the Dental Students' Parliament prize of the third year.

Hands Across The Pacific

The recent announcement of the University of Sydney, in Sydney, Australia, regarding its intention to offer free tuition to Canadian students travelling in Australia after the war may be heralded as the beginning of a valuable project to promote wider global understanding in the post-war era.

Australia's Customs Inspector, Richard Keene, who has urged Canadians and Americans to visit Australia, and expressed the hope that Australians will come here, realizes the immense value of first-hand information in understanding the ways and customs of peoples in countries separated by large geographical distances, and the mutual benefit to be derived by studying the manner of business, life and government in other lands.

The opening of the universities by free or reduced tuition, or the establishment of scholarships for students in other countries, is an excellent incentive for such inter-travelling.

The University of Sydney's announcement opens a broad vista for the post-war planners who realize that one of the major problems that has to be faced is the lack of knowledge which breeds extreme nationalism. Student exchanges, on a small scale, have been tried very successfully in the past, but these exchanges were open only to a very limited number of students because of the expense involved. If, however, a concerted effort were made to encourage all universities to follow the example set by the University of Sydney, a very workable exchange plan could be mapped out, at a comparatively small expense for each country, and for the individual student.

Correspondence

The Editor,
The Varsity.
Dear Madam,

Your report of the poll taken of student reaction to Lenten sacrifices is, to say the least, in poor taste. After reading the article, an outsider would be led to believe that we, at the University of Toronto, think nothing of Lent. It is true that those you interviewed made foolish or farcical replies, but this does not represent a true cross-section of student opinion.

There are many of us who realize that one way to make life easier for us all is to make a determined effort to put an end to our habits and qualities which are displeasing both to God and to men. Obscene language is an example of prevalent habit which all of us would do well to curb. In no society do such performances gain for us respect or admiration, least of all on a supposedly educated and mannered campus.

Understand that I do not mean we should give up all our pleasures but surely we can make a concerted effort to improve ourselves during Lent. Anyway, it is an idea worth remembering.

Yours truly,

W. REID DONKIN,
I Law, Trinity.

(Editor's Note.—The Varsity can make no attempt to moralize in its news columns; our object is to report the facts as ascertained by our reporters in an accurate manner. However, we feel that the remarks of those interviewed were perhaps purposely flippant in an attempt to be humorous, and that those students actually take a more serious view of the Lenten season and its significance. We should like to point out, moreover, that the opinions expressed by students in a poll printed in our columns do not necessarily represent the opinion of The Undergraduate Newspaper, and, in consequence, The Varsity is not obliged to justify these sentiments.)

Research Papers To be Presented

There will be four twenty-minute papers on original research presented at the 107th meeting of the Biochemical and Biophysical Society, which will be held in Room 13 of the Medical Building tonight at 7:45 p.m.

The work on the first subject, "The Influence of Choline Homologues on the Micro-biological Determination of Choline," will be done by Dr. C. S. McArthur, Miss J. M. Lang, and Dr. C. C. Lucas, all of the Banting-Best Medical Research Department.

Dr. H. A. Lardy of the University research department in Organic Chemistry has studied "The Lipid Metabolism of Spermatozoa." Mr. J. E. Goodwin and Dr. G. F. M. Smith, also of the Banting-Best Medical Research Department, will give an "Example of a Statistical Approach to a Biophysical Problem."

Dr. A. W. Hain, of the department of Anatomy, and Dr. G. H. W. Lucas, of the department of Pharmacology in the University, have prepared a paper on "The Effect of High Fat Diet on the Toxicity of T.N.T."

The Society meets on the third Thursday of every month, and undergraduates, graduates, and professors interested in the subjects may become members.

Prof. C. Best Is Lecturer

This year's memorial lecture for the anniversary of Sir Frederick Banting's death will be given by Professor C. H. Best on Friday, March 2, in Convocation Hall, President H. J. Cody announced yesterday.

Professor Best, who was Sir Frederick's close collaborator and at present holds the Banting and Best Chair of Medical Research, will speak on the topic, "Insulin and Diabetes—In Retrospect and in Prospect."

Since Sir Frederick's death, the University of Toronto has every year commemorated his services to humanity by a memorial lecture. In past years this has been delivered by Dr. C. J. MacKenzie and Dr. J. R. Williams, both specialists in the treatment of diabetes.

Overseas League Hear McDougall

D. J. McDougall, associate professor of History at the University, spoke to members of the Overseas League on Tuesday regarding "Canada's Part in the Evolution of the Commonwealth."

He claimed that the British Commonwealth of Nations is a living example of the efficiency and efficacy of co-operation, and has been brought to its present stage of development under the leadership of Canadian statesmen representing the English and French speaking groups of both the old parties.

Professor McDougall added that they were aided by "British statesmen who could see further than the letter of the law," but he said, "the pace was set and the beginnings were established here in Canada."

He went on to explain that the result has been an empire unparalleled among empires recorded in history. This has not been thoroughly understood by the people living within the empire, and often has been a cause of confusion among other nations.

Prof. McDougall gave credit to both French and English speaking statesmen for solving the initial problems of responsible government for Canada in 1837 and for developing and advancing the idea of co-operation and equal partnership in the Commonwealth.

When asked whether or not there was danger of the province of Quebec seceding from the Dominion, he asserted that such a move would be impracticable economically, referring to Lord Dufferin's report which originally recommended responsible government for Canada and contained an even stronger recommendation for the Anglicizing of French-Canada.

Prof. MacCallum Analyses Plato At Classics Clubs

Guest Speaker of U.C.-Trinity
Classics Club Outlines Plato's Theories in Characteristics of Art Activity

"Art is only the opinion of opinion, the shadow of a shadow," stated Professor H. R. MacCallum, speaking to the U.C.-Trinity Classics Club in the Women's Union last night.

Confining himself to the two main ideas of the distinctive characteristic of art activity and its relation to other activities, Prof. MacCallum suggested that "the aesthetic distinction made by Plato is a classification of the functions of the human mind, not condemnation of imitative arts. This does not include sex."

"The painter," he continued, "doesn't try to make a duplicate or a facsimile of an object, but something else. The criterion of art is whether it succeeds in agitating us. This also does not include sex."

He explained that a work of art has not the intention of being an object of utility. For example, he told of an artist who was once criticized because his horses looked as though they would fall apart if sat upon.

Outlining Plato's stand, Prof. MacCallum pointed out that the quarrel between poetry and philosophy is a simple conflict between intellect and animal passion.

"Art is the result of emotion, that which is unmeasured and chaotic in our minds. The value of a work of art depends on its relation to the world of usable objects, although the scientist does not compete with the artist."

"Plato's condemnation of art arose from a fantastically exaggerated idea of the power of art, far subtler than the face that launched a thousand ships," concluded Prof. MacCallum.

let's go places

After a rather lengthy absence, our old favorite, John Carradine, has returned to the screen, starring in one of Hollywood's most interesting recent releases. The word "interesting" is used advisedly since it never for a moment allows the audience to drop their attention, yet it lacks some of the gusto which could have easily been prevalent in such a dynamic story. It tells of how an artist is disillusioned by women and as a result spends the rest of his unnatural life killing them. And then, towards the end, according to the fine Will Hays fashion, the villain meets his deserving death by drowning in the very river where all his victims were found.

The other picture, "The Town Went Wild," was, to our surprise, very entertaining, being quite unlike the usual Freddie Bartholomew-Linmy Lydon combination.

Elissa Landi Describes Toronto As 'Friendly City--Save for Slush'

"I find Toronto a very friendly city," said Elissa Landi. "In fact, I love everything about Toronto except the dirt and slush in the streets."

In a special interview with The Varsity yesterday, Miss Landi reminisced about her experiences at a teachers' college in Pennsylvania.

"I was spending the night there, having to deliver a lecture on the following day, but was awakened by loud whoops and screams. To be sure, they were some of the 'teachers of tomorrow' coming in from a party; really, some people never grow up!"

Miss Landi, who is the daughter of a countess, was born in Venice, but spent five years of her early youth in Vancouver. She started school in England, speaking the language with a mixture of a Canadian and an Austrian accent, modified by some Russian. But she acquired new accents whenever she went on a theatrical tour. "I can already imagine my friends in Britain receiving me back with something like 'Good gracious, Elissa dear, what an American accent you have acquired!'" she said.

Although Miss Landi has played the lead in several movies, among them "Koenigsmark" and "The Sign of the Cross," she remains loyal to the legitimate stage. Of the four plays in the present Toronto series, she is still undecided as to which one is her favorite, but Candida is her choice for characterization, whilst she is enthusiastic about Berkeley Square for its idea.

"It is really impossible for anybody to decide on a favorite play. I used to be enchanted once by the English version of a long-forgotten Chinese drama, The Circle of Chalk, but I believe that one of the greatest comedies ever written is Shaw's Pygmalion."

Toronto readers will remember Miss Landi for her column, "Mostly for Women," which appeared regularly in the magazine "The New World."

"My husband has told me a great deal about the University of Toronto," she said in conclusion, "and he is a great admirer of Professor Douglas Busch, who is Toronto's loss and Harvard's gain."

The Walls Have Ears...

Rumors are disastrous. At times they can be worse. The recent rumor that all is not well in the camp of the basketball Blues can only be attributed to the malicious meanderings of persons unknown. However, in due fairness to those involved, it is an excellent idea to spike it in the infant stages.

The events leading up to this rather sudden blow-off were a few mediocre showings by a few members of the team plus a quality which can only be considered due to temperament.

Competition between men has been prevalent since the time of Adam's sons and apparently is still in full force. Temperament seems to run as parallel to the athletic field as it does to the movie industry, and so it is not surprising that Coach McCutcheon is running into a bit of disagreement. And with a squad of fifteen to nursemaid it is still less surprising. Every member of the club thinks his services are indispensable. And rightly so!

On the other side of the ledger is the fact that McCutcheon is bearing the brunt of any resentment quite needlessly. When Warren Stevens departed for the services, all hopes for the maintenance of the Varsity basketball club flew out of the proverbial window. With grim determination and in face of insurmountable tasks, he undertook to fill those big shoes. All his spare time is devoted to the team.

Under his reign the Blues' record has been thirteen victories against but three setbacks. That speaks for itself!

We don't profess to know the inside of the machine that makes the Blues tick, but do those that commenced the ugly rumors? If they do we'd be only too tickled to hear the inside facts. That is no idle challenge!

If there is any legitimate criticism to be levelled at McCutcheon, it is only that he maintained his squad at fifteen men. We say this because we do not think that there are fifteen men at the University of Toronto who are worthy of the honor of sporting the famed colors. And if there are fifteen men, where are they hiding?

What is This?

In a ridiculous game played yesterday, Dents A outclassed an outclassed U.C. II by the unbelievable score of 16-0. This marks the fifth straight loss, and all by six goals or more. While this may give the fellows a workout, it accomplishes little else. In fact, Bob Murray only thought it worth his while to come out for half the game. Chalk this one up to the inaccuracies of pre-seasonal strength predictions.

The courts of St. Paul's Church, Bloor Street, shook beneath the onslaught of skillful sneakers last night, as the 1944-45 University badminton tournament got under way. Before we plunge into the vital statistics, we'd like to hand out a few bouquets all round. The turn-out was perfect. All faculties and colleges concerned had their entries on hand to fight to the finish for dear old "Snaf U." There were absolutely no defaults and everyone gave of her best.

Good organization resulted in an exceedingly smooth running tournament. We saw some pretty fine badminton both in the semi-finals and, of course, in the crucial final games. In the first semi-final, D. J. Sanders of St. Hilda's finally succumbed to the superior might of Janet Hughes of U.C. The second semi-final was strictly P. & H.E., with Doris Clark winning the decision over Helen Sheppard.

The superb defence of U.C.'s Janet Hughes against P. & H.E.'s ace, Doris Clark in the finals gives us the courage to predict great things for her in the coming season. The scores for the finals were 11-5, 11-2.

In the doubles, P. & H.E. again supplied the winners. The first semi-final game between Claire Carew and Ruth Margeson (U.C.'s representatives) and Carol Traw and Betty Macdonald (of St. Hilda's) ended in the survival of the latter combination. In the second semi-final the P. & H.E. stars, Doris Clark and Helen Sheppard, eliminated Meg Dandenau and Jacqui Samson of St. Michael's.

The final doubles game was a treat for the badminton fans, with hard smashing drives, amazing pick-ups, and all-round championship form. Doris Clark and Helen Sheppard carried off the traditional laurels.

As can be seen from the above results, P. & H.E. won the tournament with an overwhelming total of 23 points. St. Hilda's ran second with a 16-point total, and U.C. placed third with 13. It was one of the finest tournaments we have seen, and highly commendable was the friendly spirit which reigned throughout.

Blues Meet Trenton RCAF At Next Athletic Night

Meds and School of Nursing are Hosts on Saturday; Girls' Basketball is Added Feature on Fourth "A" Night

BE THERE EARLY

Meds and School of Nursing will play hosts to the University at the fourth Athletic Night in Hart House this Saturday. George Lewis and his various committees have planned many feature attractions for the evening, and they promise that this will be the best one of the five this year.

The big gym will be the scene of the main event when Mac McCutcheon's Blues take on Trenton RCAF in a basketball game slated for 8:30. The Trenton team is composed of a group of athletes about which adequate information is lacking, but they are reputed to be a very smooth squad. Ken Bundy is the only name that means anything around the campus as he is a former Vic man. The others are Ingham, McCahill, Chote, Zeaton, Chornor, Hoyle and McGregor.

The Varsity team will be picked from among fourteen dressed players, Doug Spry being out of competition due to an injured ankle. The first team will likely be composed of Gibson, Ryan, Thompson, Mayzel and Grossman, with Swan, McReynolds, Starr, Craham, Dewar, Booth, Turner, Himmel and Fountain providing the replacements.

Before the big game, a combined team from Meds and S.P.S. (one gal) will play P.H.E. in an exhibition game of girls' basketball, and at half-time Hec Phillips will stage a track and field display with his intramural material. Both of these events and the dancing which will follow the game will help to really put the big gym into the limelight for the evening.

A Red Cross display, augmented by some movies, will be shown in the fencing room, while the boxing room will again have the active games. The wrestling room and lower gallery are to be used as lounges and sitting-out rooms.

The Senior Boxing and Wrestling finals will be run off in the upper gym, starting at 8 p.m., and at 9:15 the floor will be prepared for spectator volleyball, something which was very popular last year. At 10, Jack Patterson and his student music-makers will give out with

Three Power Peace Is U.C. Parliament Topic

The U.C. Parliament convenes today at 4:00 p.m. in the Junior Common Room to debate the resolution: "That an organization of the Big Three Nations would be a more effective means of preserving peace than a general international organization."

The government will be represented by the Hon. Bredin Stapells and the Hon. Gordon McCaffrey, while the Hon. Al Porter and the Hon. Wolfe Goodman of the opposition will attack the issue. The Hon. Benson Orenstein will act as Speaker of the House.

"Because of the failure of the federation of nations, we must turn to another method, which is an enlightened and liberal central executive which could be embodied in an organization of the Big Three," said the Hon. Bredin Stapells, the first speaker for the government. "Our thesis is: Place the power to act and to keep peace where the power is."

The Hon. Ed Safarian, leader of the opposition, says that the nation states have been playing the game of power politics for the past two hundred years, causing war after war. Only a general organization insuring all nations against aggression is the answer to such institutionalized power politics as the Big Three would form, he said.

FACULTY OF ARTS

All students who wish to write at the annual examinations must apply to write before March 1. Application forms may be obtained at the offices of the College and University Registrars.

Liberty Historian Lecture Subject

"Lord Acton was the Historian of Liberty," said Professor D. J. MacDougall, speaker at the fourth of the lecture series on English Writers on the Theme of Liberty, yesterday.

Although he wrote very little, in his writings he formed a distinct and important concept of liberty. This concept has spread throughout Europe, and must be a closely guarded part of our inheritance, continued Prof. MacDougall.

Perhaps the most important factor, determining the quality and tendencies of his work was his deep Christian faith, said Prof. MacDougall. He had the true historic method combined with an encyclopedic knowledge.

Lord Acton was educated at the University in Munich, following which he returned to public life. He won a seat in the House of Commons and became closely connected with the Liberal movement under Gladstone. Later, becoming a peer, he went into the House of Lords, and finally, seven years before his death, became Regis Professor of History at Cambridge, said the speaker.

Liberty was regarded by Lord Acton not merely as a primitive element but as the final product of an advancing civilization which is accomplished after much pain and strife. In this way the people finally come to appreciate the liberty which they ultimately achieve, said Prof. MacDougall.

There is a great store of wisdom contained in the few works of Lord Acton, concluded Prof. MacDougall.

School Theses Awards Given

At the annual Students' Night of the Engineering Institute of Canada, held last evening in the Debates Room of Hart House, H. H. Todgman of IV Year Civil won first prize for the presentation of his thesis, "Continuously Moving Forms." Second on the list came D. E. Beck, Mechanical, who spoke on "Cavitation in Marine Propellers," while third prize went to R. T. Cavanaugh, whose subject was "Metallographic Testing by Electronic Methods." The judges were Mr. A. H. Hull, chief engineer of the Ontario Hydro, Mr. C. E. Hawke, of the Marine Division, McNamara Construction Co., and Bob Moore, president of the Engineering Society at the University.

The meeting got under way with the presentation of the E.I.C. prize to Werner Buchholz for proficiency in his third year at S.P.S. Mr. Cavanaugh then presented his paper on metallurgical testing. He pointed out that metallurgical control was quality control. By electronic metal testing, all articles on the line could be tested without destruction.

Second speaker was Mr. Todgman, who gave a graphic picture of the use of continuously moving forms in concrete construction. The advantages claimed for the system were speed and full employment of all men on the job.

The final speaker, Mr. Beck, described how the first experiments on propeller cavitation were carried out at the behest of the British Admiralty, and how the destructive effects of cavitation were observed on ship propellers.

Reasons For Dismissal Reported From Halifax

Supporters Claim That Academic Freedom is Menaced by Board of Governors' Action

In a newspaper article yesterday, the Halifax correspondent of the Toronto Daily Star quoted "off the record" comment on the resignation of Dalhousie University President Carleton Stanley.

The retiring president's supporters were quoted as saying: "this is a question of academic freedom, as apparently presidents of universities are to be fired because they do not do the bidding of economic royalists who try to dictate the manner in which the president should act in matters concerning staff and curriculum."

"President Stanley antagonized two governors when he refused to dismiss a professor and to promote two lecturers at the governors' request. Even these two governors could find nothing to criticize as regards the president's academic qualifications, except by saying that he was unpopular, not mentioning with whom."

Quoting the other side of the dispute, the Star reports, "Dr. Stanley is too concerned with the classical side of education, and there are strong personalities involved on both sides."

The Star reports further that Viscount Bennett, former Prime Minister of Canada, intervened on behalf of Dr. Stanley with a 400-word cable. In it he is said to have threatened not only to withdraw all financial support from the university, his Alma Mater, but was hoping to get back all of the three-quarters of a million dollars he gave a few years ago, should the situation not be rectified.

Sadies Diary . . .

By Frank Rasky

DEAR DIARY:

You'll never guess who phoned today! . . . It was Joe, my new boyfriend who's an engineer at college. . . . Of course he wouldn't come right out and tell me (Joe is such a kiddie you know, with all those real big words of his), but after talking about this and that for about an hour, he admitted at last that since we'd had such a good time last week, he wanted to date me for the University Athletic Night tomorrow. . . . Gee, I'm sure going over big with him, eh, Diary?

Anyway, Joe tells me there'll be different kinds of people acting as hosts tomorrow. . . . Looking after the big do will be Meds and the School of Nursing. . . . In case anybody faints or something like that there'll be 20 student nurses in uniform. . . . I wonder how I'd look in a nurse's uniform? . . .

Joe says the slogan of the affair tomorrow will be "Wear your faculty colors." . . . Joe says that'll encourage school spirit. . . . Naturally I don't belong to any faculty, and haven't got any ribbons. . . . But Joe says that if I bring some old books and magazines along, that'll be just as well. . . . They'll be shipped to men in the services, which is a good thing. . . . I wonder if I still have that copy of "Gone With the Wind" around? . . .

Joe says he'll pick me up early again this time, so we'll be in time for the opening basketball game at 7:30 p.m. . . . I've never seen girls play this game before, so it should be very, very interesting to watch girls from Physical Health and Education play against a joint female team from Meds and School.

There'll be some more basketball, too. . . . At 8:30 p.m. there'll be the big game, Joe says, between Trenton R.C.A.F. and the Varsity Blues. . . . Then we might take time out, too, to watch the track display at half-time which is about 9:05. . . . Joe says there'll be two famous high-jump record-holders there, fellow called Bill Kerr and Charlie Jackson. . . . then there'll be a mile race between Vic and Meds, with such famous fellows as Mouse Fielding and Jack Forde.

The whole thing there will be looked after by another famous guy, a fellow called Hec Phillips. . . . Joe says Hec's the best track coach in Canada and has won the track championship of the armed forces and everything. . . . Gee, it must be nice to be famous. . . .

Gosh, I don't know how we can make it, but Joe says we'll just have to peek into the swimming pool at 8:15 p.m., so we can get the lowdown on who'll win the men's senior Interfaculty Swimming Meet. . . . And Joe says the nicest and thrilling thing'll happen at 9:15 p.m. when they're going to introduce Spectator Volleyball in the upper gym. . . . That means they'll pick fellows and their girls from out of the audience and have them play an informal volleyball tourney.

Well, Diary, that's just about all. . . . Except I might let you into a secret. . . . I think Joe is a very, very, very nice fella. . . . Goo'night, Diary. . . .

Malta Bombing Is Dobbie Topic

Lt-General Sir William G. S. Dobbie, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., D.S.O., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Malta during its siege of two and a half years, will speak in Convocation Hall on Monday evening, Feb. 19, at 8:30, on "Malta—The Most Bombed Spot on Earth."

General and Lady Dobbie were invited to this continent as the guests of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, and their visit to the Toronto campus is being sponsored jointly by the Varsity Christian Fellowship and the Student Christian Movement.

General Dobbie first saw active service during the South African War. In World I he served on the staff of Lord Haig at general headquarters in France. He retired in 1939, and in 1940 volunteered for active duty in World War II.

Malta was a key position for the British defence of the Mediterranean, entirely dependent upon outside support for food and supplies. This island, the most thickly populated island of its size in the world, was the first part of the British Empire to experience air attack in its modern form.

During the Malta siege, the General's unwavering faith and his firm Christian testimony won the respect of his soldiers and Malta civilians. Even during the most severe bombing he held regular Bible classes for his men.

King George VI conferred the George Cross on Malta in recognition of the loyalty and spirit of its people.

In addition to his visit to the campus on Monday, the General is speaking at Metropolitan United Church at 7:45 Saturday evening and at Massey Hall at 8:30 Sunday evening.

R.C.I. Subject Is Metallurgy

"Magnesium—Lightest Commercial Metal" will be the topic of the lecture to be given this Saturday evening at 8:15 in Convocation Hall by Dr. L. M. Pidgeon, head of the Department of Metallurgical Engineering, University of Toronto. The talk is sponsored by the Royal Canadian Institute.

Dr. Pidgeon, well known for his development of a process for practical production of magnesium from Canadian dolomite, was recently awarded the McCharles $1,000 prize for his work in this field. Graduating from the University of Manitoba in 1925, he received his B.Sc. and Ph.D. degrees at McGill University. From 1929 to 1931 he attended Oxford University as the Sir William Ramsay Memorial fellow of Canada, receiving his M.Sc. From 1931 to 1938 he was assistant chemist at the National Research Council.

Magnesium, although the third most plentiful element in the earth's crust, is nevertheless one of the most difficult to extract from its ores. Dr. Pidgeon will illustrate this fact by experimenting contrasting the simplicity of copper and iron production with that of magnesium.

In addition to these experiments and samples of magnesium, the address will be illustrated with lantern slides.

Mayzel and Ryan Save the Game for Blues Against an Evenly Matched "Y" Team; Blues' Fourth Win

UNSPECTACULAR

Varsity Blues liming up their fourth win of the season last night when they took West End Y into camp 47-39. The game was not well attended, as very few students knew about it beforehand, due to the fact that it was just arranged at the last minute.

Play was fairly even throughout the whole game with both teams putting on short but sporadic scoring sprees and the lead changing hands quite often. Varsity seemed to show just a little more scoring punch, however, and were drawing away from their rivals at the finish.

They led at half-time 23-20, but were down 28-23 after the first minute of the second half as West End disorganized the Blues for an instant. After this the Blues settled down to good steady basketball and outplayed their opponents from here on in.

Rangy Don Gibson had a very decided off-night. He couldn't seem to get going at all with either his set shots or one-handed push shots from the corners, and his check was repeatedly left uncovered around the basket. He only counted three points during the game, a rarity for him considering his usual efforts in the teens.

Harry Mayzel was the high scorer for the Blues with seventeen points. His aggressive style of play and very accurate shooting was the highlight of the game. The way he breaks through and tips a pass away from an opponent's outstretched hands to go in for a dog shot is really a treat to watch.

Max Grossman saw a lot of service last night due to the injury to Doug Spry's ankle, and he turned in a very good game at guard. His eleven-point effort tied that of his defence partner, Joe Ryan, and this pair very effectively worked the ball around and through the zone end of West End Y. The whole team showed an improvement over their last outing, exhibiting very little of the loose ball that they did then.

West End are not a team of stars but seem to be well-coached and well-practised. Their ball-handling was good, and a couple of them in particular showed up well on that underhand lob shot that All-American Parsons displayed so remarkably last Saturday night. Ager and White played the best basketball for them, notching twelve and eleven points respectively. Hal Axon gave this pair solid support at guard, and still found

Initiative

The current series of public lectures on Minorities sponsored by Avukah, has set a precedent which other student organizations might seriously consider. For the first time on this campus a lecture series of this kind has been planned, organized and presented to the public and to the students of the university as a whole by the students themselves.

The huge attendances at the lectures have justified the choice of subject as one in which students are actively interested. So much has been said concerning minorities and the attitude which university students as an educated, and presumably civilized group, hold towards the problem, that those who planned the lectures could easily have been discouraged before they started. Actually, instead of being an outworn and overworked problem, it is one which is becoming every day more immediate.

Nationality is not something which is going to disappear in Europe as soon as hostilities cease or the peace treaties are signed. There is no such thing as the international man, regardless of post-war planning, and this fact will have to be taken into consideration particularly in dealing with the dispossessed national groups already complicating even a temporary settlement in Europe.

Obviously Canada has a problem of her own to face, and the more information we have on the subject the more intelligent our approach to it will be. Many aspects of the Negro problem in the United States have been accentuated and aggravated by the war, so that this continent has no right to consider itself exempt from this particular social responsibility.

We commend the students who have brought this subject to the attention of the campus and congratulate them on their follow-up plan of publishing the text of the four lectures in a pamphlet, making the information available to all who are interested.

Nationalism

At a recent luncheon meeting of the Book and Author Club in New York, Air Marshal William A. Bishop declared that unless we effect a radical change in outlook, World War III is assured before we have even signed the peace bringing to a close World War II. This is a bold statement, but the startling thing about it is that the Air Marshal has definite facts to base it on. Nationalism is the bogey in the case.

In his book "Winged Peace", Bishop proposes "a world aviation company which will control and operate all aspects of international flying." Criticizing our leaders for refusing to recognize the full implication of the air age in which we are now living, he goes on to declare: "We are now at the gateway of an era of human movements in which it will be possible to fly from America to Europe in five or six hours . . . How can you expect to run this kind of world through the medium of political or economic nationalisms? It is not a matter of what we as nationalists think. It is a question solely of what is feasible and what will work in the kind of world in which we find ourselves." Going on to reiterate his favorite theory of serial nationalism, Bishop stated: "If we permit global aviation to develop on a catch-as-can basis, some people are going to outrun others. The United States will probably outstrip the rest of the world in developing aircraft for peaceable uses. But somewhere else people less idealistic will outstrip you in the development of flight as a weapon of destruction. If that happens, God help you! . . . The way we are heading, and mark it well, it is the United States and my own British Commonwealth who are leading the procession, we are literally asking for trouble from some quarter. The first thing you know, other nations are going to be annoyed because one of us has skinned off the cream."

Aviation is but one aspect of this renewed surge of nationalism. At the World Trade Union Congress in London, the Russian delegates have been urging the political and economic isolation of the Argentine, Spain and Portugal. In the United States recently, there has been a great deal of adverse criticism of Russia.

We must look the facts squarely in the face! Nationalism is not dead. On the contrary, it is an active and growing force in the world of today. And at the peace-table, there is no doubt that it will rear its ugly head again in the guise of the Polish frontier, British influence in the Mediterranean, and similar controversies. The frightening thing about it is that it is not dead because we have not wished to kill it. Clarence Streit's "Union Now" and H. G. Wells' proposals for a "world brain" aroused keen interest when they were first suggested, but national antagonisms proved to be too strong for them to be effectual. We have clung to nationalism under the mistaken notion that it was a means of preserving our individuality.

It is absolutely essential that we realize and make others realize that nationalism, although it may still have an extremely potent influence on world thinking is actually outmoded. One may point back to 1848 and assert that it was a tremendous force in aiding countries like Germany and Italy to emerge into modern nations. However, this is 1945, not 1848. The average man is always lagging behind developing tendencies in outlook. The world is in a constant state of flux and we must change our thinking to suit the times. We can no longer afford to enter into petty disputes about national boundries or set up protectionist tariffs, which are liable to boomerang on us! Unless we polish up our thinking, we shall find ourselves in a third world war which, to use Air Marshal Bishop's words, will "simply polish off civilization."

Undergraduate painting, representative of the art enthusiasts of University College has been on exhibition in the dining rooms of the Women's Union.

There seems to be no doubt that the neophytes have enjoyed their labors for the keynote is expression with restrained abandon. Discussing the oils in no particular order—Issa is extremely preoccupied with the different ways of applying paint. Little Boy on Chair appears to have been painted with a palette knife, while Blue Booties introduces the butterfly stroke. Ev. Swartz races through a number of scenes applying color to simple forms but in an effort to fill the white spaces forgets to suggest the true nature of the subject matter—Red Barn seems most representative of her approach.

Anne Nicholson shows a grasp of forms and their relationships in a Snow Scene, but in not seeing all

CHAMPUS CAT

WHO COPPED THE CANNON

Hmmm?*

Here is a Quite Startling Scoop

Skule was frantic. Skule raved. Skule ranted. Skule wept. Skule wailed. Skule threatened. Skule pleaded. Skule even advertised. But all to no, as the saying goes, avail!

For Skule had lost game, face, the Mulock Cup, the cannon, and numerous side bets. (Are you listening, Brooklyn?) Skule's humiliation at defeat in the finals was surmounted only by indignation that their precious, vest-pocket howitzer had been mysteriously pilfered from the Varsity Stadium playing field. From 'neath their collective probosci, you might say. Well, don't pussyfoot. Go ahead and say it!

At University College, their victors, Skule pointed an accusing finger. "Shame! You cannon abductors, you!" This was Skule's charge.

"That's a nasty allegation you're alleging, you old allegators," replied U.C.

Time limped on. Fall fell. We staggered inter winter.

And then—! Oh, day of jubilation! Oh, day of glee! Oh, utter bliss! Oh, I might even say, boy! The announcement! The glorious, thrilling, divine announcement!

"The Skule cannon . . . has been found . . ."

. . . and will be returned."

Champus Cat straddled a stool in the Slops-on-ya Beancrater and consumed her dinner. She was eating sardines on toast—a pygmy, piscatorial parade lined up lengthwise in oily and decapitated splendor on a piece of toaster-banned bread, to get rid of a phrase that's been bothering me for months.

"You know I'm not one to spend money like deau," Champus was protesting to Ickey Mygawshwho. "But living these days seems to cost more." Here Champus harpooned a sardine—resplendent in rigor mortis—and guided same to her mouth.

"Things are tough!" agreed Ickey. "I'm even still using the 1944 model Yo-Yo! Even!"

"But I didn't know! Things have been that tough?" Champus sympathized. "Oh, yes," Ickey mourned. "But that's not the half of it. Look at these fingernails. Wretched? Just wretched! I haven't been able to afford a manicure for weeks."

"But I wouldn't have dreamed," breathed an astonished Cat.

"And the money I got for the cannon, it was—"

"Ickey, you didn't—?"

"Yes—I DID!"

"But what a low blow to Skule and Varsity as a hole!"

"But—I was desperate. Desperate, I tell you. I needed money. Needed it bad, see? And there it was. This fine cannon—$1.49 worth of scrap iron staring at me. Taunting me. Laughing at my poverty. U.C. had already cinched the game. Skule wouldn't need the cannon. Stealthily I crept through the grass—"

"Enough, Ickey! Enough, I say! Enough, I say, I say! Do you now realize what a cheap thing that was?"

"Indeed, I do. Yes, indeed. Imagine—just $1.49 for that! Hmmm. Wonder how much I could get for the fence around Whitney Hall?"

SPEAKING OF SPORT

(Editor's Note—George is a past president of the Meds Athletic Association and is well known around the campus for his activities in many sports. Boxing Rugby and Track are perhaps the most prominent of these, although the fact he has just graduated from Meds is the most important to him. He takes over for today in order to tell you what goes on tomorrow at Hart House.)

By George Lewis

ATHLETIC COLOR NIGHT

Are you proud of your faculty colors? Here's your chance on Saturday night to show that Meds, in their red, black and white and School of Nursing in their smart-looking uniforms, aren't the only "best" faculties on the campus. There may be other contenders for the crown—who knows? We'll all know on Athletic Color Night when the most dazzling and colorful couple is presented with the Royal Goose that's on the loose from Riverdale zoo. The Schoobmen have been chasing it for weeks. Maybe they'll "get the bird" yet, but let's all come down in sweaters, letters and colors to make it a real fight for the Royal Goose on Athletic Color Night.

THE BIG ATTRACTION

At 7:30, on the nose, a game which promises to rock you with chills, spills and tearing of hair will feature the Meds-S.P.S. girls going all out to avenge a previous close defeat at the hands of this year's basketball champs, the P.H.E. freshmen. The game will be a thriller and worth a hasty supper, so get there early and snag a seat.

Then, at 8:30, is the main attraction of the evening as the fighting Varsity Blues play host to the Airmen from Trenton. Our boys are hot—red-hot! Let's rekindle the fire by oscillating the old bellows to the tune of some lusty, rafter-shaking Varsity and Faculty yells. We'll get a good lead from the Beautiful Belles from Meds and the Muscle Molls from P.H.E., but don't just stand there with your mouths open—give out with some noise!

ANYTHING ELSE?

You bet there is—lots else to see—lots of fun for your girl and thee! In the little gym upstairs the Senior Boxing and Wrestling boys promise you blood and gore all over the floor, for those who had no time for supper and those who wish they hadn't—and for the girls! This will be followed by a half-hour or so of Spectator Volleyball, when all and sundry can share in the fun.

In the pool we have the Senior Swimming finals followed by two flashy and splashy water-polo games—the first between the Meds-Nurses team and St. Hilda's, and the second between Senior Meds B and Dents. These dunking parties are really murder and good for the laughs, so drop around—not in!

In the Fencing Room those who delight in the depths of darkness may be entertained by movies brought to us from the Red Cross Society, with special added comedy and sing-song attractions.

Then there is the Games Room and Lounge for those battle-worn individuals forced to retire from the heat of dancing in the big gym, or square dancing in the upper gym from 10 to 12 p.m.

DON'T FORGET

- (1) Wear your faculty or school colors.
- (2) Bring books, magazines and playing cards.
- (3) Be there early.

MAD SCRAMBLE

Yesterday, Vic I hockey team proceeded to unmercifully shellac the Meds team, tallying 6 goals to the Medicos' goose-egg. In fact, Meds didn't manage to let the puck hit the Vic goalie's stick. A sad state of affairs. Not saying that they were stars in such a "mad scramble," the scorers for Vic were Leone Eunsou, Ruth Hutchinson, Joan Chalk, and Betty Fullerton with one scalp each, and Shirley Pearce with two more decorating her belt.

Meds' top player was their goalie, who had a hard time of it throughout, and Mickey Barnett, who did a lot to hold off the determined Scarlet and Gold squad.

This seems to leave Vic I and U.C. in the two top positions of their league, sweeping into next week's semis.

Today, St. Hilda's meet P.H.E. for the fourth time, and, judging from the past three games, it will hang in doubt all the way through. The contest takes place at 12 noon and—remember—both teams simply thrive on lots and lots of cheerers.

VOLLEYBALL . . . SPORT IN SHORT

Yesterday, Meds defeated P.H.E. A at Lillian Massey by 38-35, while U.C. whipped St. Hilda's B team 39-23. Neither game was quite as good as the best games should be.

SWIMMING . . . ONE LONG SPLASH

This year, for the first time in acouple of years, there has been added to the swimming event the Long Plunge. It was deleted several years ago, but having come into favor again is being reinstated with full honors.

The purpose is thusly: The contestants take a big breath, launch themselves, more or less in the belly-flop cum racing dive, towards the water and thence towards the other end of the pool. No kicking, flipping of the flippers or other undulatory movement is required, or allowed. The team of each college is allowed two (2) of these long-plungers, and it should be fun. Oh, by the way, this long plunge can only last one minute, after you have held your breath of three-quarters of a minute you might be glad of this little regulation.

Next Monday and Tuesday nights, at U.T.S. pool, there will be the usual swimming practices. They start at 7:30 and last well on into the night. Right till 9:00 p.m., in fact.

These are the last two chances.

Wednesday, the prelin big meet comes off, while next week's Athletic Night patrons will be overjoyed to hear that the final meet will be held then. Last year there were about two hundred observers of this event, and they were well satisfied with the good swimming and diving form shown. Otherwise, no comments!

NORTHWAY'S FASHIONLAND is showing some smart three-piece outfits; they come in checks or solid colors, and make a very stunning outfit complete or can be used and purchased separately, the suit alone and the topcoat alone. Some of the shades are the new high pastels which are very flattering, as well as "high fashion" this year. You'll also be delighted with a collection which Northway's are featuring of new jumper dresses which come in printed silk jerseys with little short-sleeved blouse.

THESE DAYS When you have to develop most of the talents of a mountain goat to climb over snow-piles and ice-floes and glaciers on a simple stroll down Bloor Street, it is the time to remind you that a bottle of Sloan's Lintiment safely stored in the medicine cabinet is insurance against the results of many a sidewalk casualty. Sloan's is recognized as the Lintiment with the quicker, more effective, deep action, as well as being more soothing where complaining nerve centres shout "help." Send Sloan's overseas with your next parcel. Whether he's still in training or out there slugging, he'll consider the gesture indicates a high order of intelligence on your part.

hoedown accompaniment for the square-dancing which is to take place here for the more energetic among the dancing crowd.

The pool is crammed with activity all evening, starting with the Senior Interfaculty Swim Meet at 8:30. This will be followed by a girls' water-polo exhibition between Meds Nurses and St. Hilda's residence girls. Then, at 9:30, a men's exhibition will take place between Meds and Dents to finish out the activity in the pool.

Magazines and books are still badly needed for the Navy League and the I.O.D.E., so everyone is requested to dig down a little deeper and bring a real pile tomorrow night.

The Athletic Office has announced the advance sale of tickets to all those who are admitted by pass tomorrow night. Each person can buy two additional tickets there any time today and tomorrow on presentation of his admission ticket.

The Varsity Friday Night Hockey League will present another twin-bill at the Arena this evening, the first game starting at 8 p.m.

Navy and Victory Aircraft hook up in the opener while the Blues and Watson's play the late contest.

Varsity will have an eleven-man squad out there tonight in an effort to gain their third win of the season. The Blues have broken even, so far, losing two games to the powerful Navy Bulldogs, 7-1 and 7-2. Bob Murray will be absent from the line-up due to illness, but his spot at centre on the first line will be filled by Griff Pearson of first year Meds. Griff has been playing good hockey with Meds 11 in the Intramural League and coach Bailey has chosen him to take over from Murray for this game. Bob McCombe will be in goal in place of Davidson and Jim Boa will be also playing, having sufficiently recovered from his various injuries. Bill Wade's shoulder is back in shape again, so he will be there tonight to bolster the defence.

If Varsity win tonight, and take the measure of Victory next week, they will finish the season in second place with four wins and two losses.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

the color in the snow, for instance, forgets the obligations of a simple composition. A smoothie in presentation Jeanne Wornith says most of what she has to say at first glance in her oils, but paints some lovely water-colors. One of these, Derick, a shipyard scene, combines pleasing color contrasts with appreciable movement. Flynn and Daly have some attractive flowers. In his landscapes, Flynn weakens his color effects, which are worked through with care, by forgetting the importance of some color underneath the color, to give body to the pictures.

M. Horan, slightly busy in some compositions, nevertheless does some very fine brush work to get the desired effect. The Creator, one of a number of pencil pattern abstracts, is worked through in interesting fashion and is one of the most thoughtful glimpses in the exhibited material. A religious theme by Al Gowans savors of the dramatic and smooth technique. Scene of Embarkation might have turned out better if the artist had omitted the faces of em-barkers who are precisely munching sandwiches in an Eden-like valley. Most promise is shown in the water-color section though distinctions can also be drawn among the oils.

UNITARIAN CHURCH

The Church of the Open Mind

The Unitarian Church is unique in embracing within its fellowship, people with the most divergent views, from theists to humanists. This is achieved not by maintaining a balance or tension between opposing groups on the right and on the left but by a synthesis and harmonizing of the diverse elements into a unified fellowship.

R. P. VIVIAN ADDRESSES MEDICAL GRADS

"The practice of medicine is more than a science; it is also an art," stated the Honorable R. P. Vivian, M.D., Minister of Health and Public Welfare, at last Friday's special convocation held in Convocation Hall, at which the 116 members of the graduating class were presented with their Doctor of Medicine degrees.

The specialty of public health is just as attractive as the other medical specialties, stated Dr. Vivian, adding that the provincial government was planning to set up 70 county medical units. Mentioning the need for prevention in medicine, the Minister of Health said the government would give grants of money for postgraduate work.

In closing, Dr. Vivian declared: "Give yourselves up to the broader interests of your community, politically or otherwise."

"I do want to assure you that the University of Toronto is proud of you and of the service your faculty has rendered," said Chancellor H. J. Cody, addressing the convocation. The graduates, he continued, should always feel that the University is their medical home.

Mentioning the improvements planned by the medical faculty and wishing the graduates every success in their future careers, Dr. Cody declared: "The greatest reward you can ever have for your hard work is the great and glorious privilege of having more work to do."

Four graduates, J. V. Basmajian, K. F. Clute, W. R. Harris, and H. Kalant, obtained honors. In addition, Dr. Clute won two prizes, including the Cody gold medal; and Dr. Kalant also won two, including the Cody silver medal. Other prize winners were Drs. H. O. Barber, Edith V. Duggan, and

"Old Dob Dob", Raid Veteran Will Tell Of Heroic Malta Stand

The General . . .

Lieutenant-General Sir William G. S. Dobbie, former Commander-in-Chief and Governor of Malta during the two and a half years in which the island suffered 2,300 air raids. He will speak tonight at 8:30 in Convocation Hall.

Lieutenant-General Sir William Dobbie, former Commander-in-Chief and Governor of Malta from April, 1940, to May, 1942, will speak in Convocation Hall tonight at 8:30 p.m. on "Malta—The Most Bombed Spot on Earth."

The visit to the University is jointly sponsored by the Varsity Christian Fellowship and the Student Christian Movement on the campus. Sir William and Lady Dobbie came to this continent to lecture under the auspices of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

In a statement to the press, Chancellor Cody said, "Sir William Dobbie, known affectionately to the people of Malta as 'Old Dob Dob', will tell the story of that redoubtable isle, which holds the uncoveted honor of being one of the most bombed spots on the face of the earth."

"Since the tides of battle have turned and Germany itself has been invaded, Malta has slipped from the headlines, but only two years ago its heroic stand stirred the Empire and America."

During the period that Sir William Dobbie commanded Malta, the island suffered 2,300 air raids, an average of more than three raids a day.

General Dobbie, born in Madras, India, in 1879, was educated at Charterhouse and the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and saw service in the Boer War and World Wars I and II. The General's eldest son, Major A. W. Dobbie, was killed in Italy last June, and a second son, Major C. C. Dobbie, is at present with the British forces in Italy.

Lady Dobbie is a relative of the late General Wingate.

Awarded the D.S.O. and C.M.G., Sir William was mentioned in despatches seven times. He also received the French Legion of Honor and the Belgian Order of Leopold in addition to the French and Belgian Croix de Guerre.

General Dobbie will illustrate his talk on Malta with authentic sound films recording the resistance of the island's people during the two years of enemy attack.

Since the attendance at the lecture is expected to be very large, a special area has been set aside in Convocation Hall for Varsity students. Students must show their admit-to-lectures cards in order to gain admittance, and are advised to be on hand early.

. . . And His Wife

Lady Dobbie, who was with her husband during his term of office at Malta. Lady Dobbie is also scheduled for special meetings during their tour, which is under the auspices of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

TRENTON RCAF SCUPPERS BLUE CAGERS

Two historically famous events—Wolfe's capture of Quebec, and the Riel Rebellion, were re-enacted at Hart House Saturday evening as an unavaunted Trenton R.C.A.F. gang steamrollered the hapless and helpless Varsity basketball team. The 32-22 loss was the third defeat of the season as compared to five victories, and was the lowest scoring game played in Hart House in at least two years.

The losers were less than a reasonable facsimile of the team that whipped Tip Tops and Uplands R.C.A.F. and then bowed gallantly to Wayne. Without exception a general lack of enthusiasm predominated among the Blues who condescendingly had put aside their press clippings for the scheduled encore.

Second-string guard Max Grossman, substituting for the ailing Doug Spry, was the only player showing the smallest portion of ability although Joe Ryan was noticeable spasmodically.

Three successive baskets by Chote, Bundy and Moores plus two foul shots started the visitors off in an auspicious manner. Grossman scored the first Varsity basket but Chote and Zetson further increased the lead. Half-time score was 21-12 for Trenton.

The cagey visitors employed delaying tactics throughout the entire second half as they craftily kept possession of the ball for seconds on end or slyly managed to knock the ball out of bounds. With these forces against them, the Blues were helpless and yielding were outscored 11-10.

Ant Chote was the high scorer of the night with 17 points. He received potent assistance from Ken Bundy with five points to his record and from Zetson and Moores each with four.

CAMERA CLUB COLOR NIGHT

Members of Hart House are reminded that this is the last day for submitting transparencies and movies for the Color Night on Wednesday, 21st February. Entries should be handed in, to the hall porter.

University College was today mobilizing her limited numbers of 4-P's to meet in armed conflict the School of Practical Science following outbreak of hostilities between the two faculties late Friday.

Formal declaration of war on School was made in the U.C. Parliament after the hallowed chambers had reverberated to the explosion of a bomb allegedly planted by School outside the U.C. Junior Common Room.

This unsuccessful Guy-Fawkes-like plot to blow up the meeting place of U.C. Parliament was termed "an unprecedented, sneak attack on an unarmed group of civilians."

It was at first believed that the explosion had been the discharge of a shot from the much-publicized School cannon. Following earlier happenings involving the contentious cannon, this incident salted a deep U.C. wound. Theft of the miniature howitzer from the U.C. Arts Ball, where it was to have been formally returned to School, and assorted other outrages, led to the declaration of war.

Wolfe Goodman, second speaker for the opposition, had the floor. With methodic, melodic rhetoric, he was presenting the case for a world federation of powers in peacetime.

Suddenly Parliament resounded to a deafening explosion. Momentary panic gripped the startled audience. Mingled shrieks of "Is it V-22?" "Duck, it's Pistol Packin' McSlidrool!" rose above a cacophony of inarticulate screams and yells. Confusion reigned.

The audience's scattered attention was slowly brought back to focus on the prospects of a world federation by the undamned opposition. Meanwhile, Ham Menden and Aub Lent, spectators to the raid, rose silently to their feet, bowed to the Speaker, and swiftly left in the (Continued on page 4)

China Vast Trade Market Says Major Richard Brown

"China holds vast potentialities as a prospective trade market," said Major Richard Brown, in an address to the English Speaking Union Thursday night in Emmanuel College. "However, a give-and-take basis must exist in all our relationships," he continued.

Major Brown, who is a graduate of the faculty of Medicine of this University, recently returned from China, where he has served in various capacities for seventeen years. When last heard from, his wife and daughter were in the Manila.

The Chinese question has been perpetually misinterpreted by one-sided newspaper propaganda, he continued. Our most sincere approach must be to understand the Chinese as allies to overthrow our common enemy, the Japanese.

Major Brown described the three major divisions of China, the central government headed by General Chiang, the Japanese-occupied territory, and the Red Triangle area. The latter, with a population of 60 million, has its own government and system of taxation, as well as a university that stresses political organization, explained the speaker, but it is recognized by the central government and by Great Britain.

China will never return to the status quo but will work and die to better what she has already accomplished by her prolonged struggle, concluded Major Brown.

Lecture Outlines Pidgeon Process

Dr. Lloyd Pidgeon, head of the department of Metallurgical Engineering, University of Toronto, addressed the Royal Canadian Institute Saturday night on his discovery of a new process for magnesium production.

He explained that while magnesium is the third commonest metal in the earth's crust, its production has always been negligible because of the extreme difficulty of abstracting oxygen from the dolomite deposits in which the metal is found. By combining the ore with silicon under fire, the new method facilitates production and brings production costs down considerably.

The "Pidgeon process" of extraction now widely used in the United States is of particular importance in wartime. Because of the rigidity and extreme lightness of magnesium, it is used to great advantage in aircraft production.

Dr. Pidgeon concluded his lecture with the statement that Canada is well equipped with both the power and raw materials to make it a leading producer of magnesium in years to come.

Former Varsity Staff Members Killed In Overseas Service

Lieut Wilmer James Armstrong, 4T2 graduate of Victoria College, has been reported killed in action with the Canadian Army in Holland on Jan. 26. Lt. Armstrong, who was active on the campus as assistant news and exchange editor of The Varsity, belonged to the Sociology Club and was president of the Press Club in his third year. Joining the army the November following his graduation, he went overseas one year later, and arrived in France two weeks after D-Day. He was reported wounded twice last summer.

Lt. Armstrong was born in Montreal, the son of Rev. R. W. Armstrong, minister of the United Church, Merrickville, Ont., and Mrs. Armstrong. He was married in August, 1943, to Dorothy Brown of Midland. Surviving besides his wife and parents are three sisters, one of whom, Jessie Armstrong, is in first year Social and Philosophical Studies at Victoria College.

Private First Class Henry C. Eichhorn, a graduate of St. Michael's College, died of wounds received in action in Luzon early in January, according to word received by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Eichhorn of Utica, New York.

Private Eichhorn, who completed St. Michael's College Western Course and two years of Pass Arts, volunteered for active service with the United States Army in June, 1943. He was awarded a Bachelor of Arts degree in the June convocation, 1944.

Private Eichhorn took his basic training in Camp Wheeler, Georgia, and was sent overseas in December, 1943. He was stationed in New Caledonia, New Georgia, New Zealand, and New Guinea before being sent to the Philippines.

Private Eichhorn was a member of The Varsity staff.

Hillel Director To Discuss Jews

Rabbi Joseph Rhenov, director of the Hillel Foundation at Queen's University, will be the guest speaker at the meeting of the Jewish Student Fellowship to be held tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. at the Women's Union.

Hillel Foundations exist on 18 campuses in the United States and Canada, and branches were recently established at McGill, Queen's and the University of Manitoba. Their aim is to closely acquaint Jewish students with the Jewish cultural heritage and Jewish life while they are at college.

"The purpose in bringing Rabbi Rhenov to the University of Toronto campus is that the Hillel program may be outlined to students interested," said Ben Ornstein, president of the J.S.F. "The possibility of a Hillel Foundation at the University would mean the establishment of a house on the campus and the services of a full-time director."

Rabbi Rhenov, a native of Louisiana, studied engineering in the United States, but switched to the study of the Rabbinate in Chicago, taking his degree as a rabbi there. Becoming interested in youth activities and Jewish student life, he chose to work among students rather than from the pulpit, and took a position as youth leader in the Hillel Foundation.

President Cody has announced that a special five-months session for ex-service men and women will be offered in the faculty of Arts, commencing about April 2 and continuing till the end of August.

By obtaining standing in four of the five subjects of the first year of the Pass Course, ex-service students may qualify for admission to second year Pass next September, or to the second year of those Honor Courses which accept first year Pass subjects in lieu of Honor work.

Special first year Honor Courses in classics, law, mathematics, physics, chemistry, and science are proposed, if sufficient applications are received; and second and third year Pass subjects will be available to ex-service students if there is sufficient demand.

The President has also announced that the faculty of Applied Science and Engineering will conduct a summer session for ex-service students commencing April 2 and continuing until September. Those who complete the course satisfactorily will be able to enter the second year in the session 1945-46. Thus, ex-service students entering the faculty in April will have an opportunity of obtaining the degree by the spring of 1948.

Courses will be offered in all departments in the faculty provided that sufficient numbers of students present themselves for enrolment.

GHOULS FROM SCHOOL

By Al Cringan

S.P.S. repeated its last year's performance of having more winning senior boxing and wrestling champions than any other faculty or college on the campus, in the Senior Tournament held in the upper gym at Hart House on Saturday night. In the wrestling tournament, two championships went to School, one to Dents and one to U.C., while in the boxing, a Medsman gained the only title, P.H.E. and Dents splitting the other boxing decision.

Sklar of S.P.S. and T. McDonough, in the 155-pound class, tangled in the first wrestling match. They fought on an even basis through the regulation time, neither wrestler taking an edge. After one round of overtime, Sklar was awarded the decision. A 135-pound bout followed between Drohan and Smith of S.P.S. Smith gained falls over his opponent in both rounds and Drohan ended off further advances very well, but the match went to Smith.

Pugliese of U.C. met and was defeated by Sayers of Dents in the next match, a 155-pound bout. Pugliese took the offensive early in the first round but when the two wrestlers got down on the mat, Sayers took and held the top position. The best wrestling of the evening was provided in this bout, most of it being crowded into the second round. To wind up the wrestling, Guild of U.C. met J. McDonough of St. Mike's. The two regulation rounds were even—most of the time the two were engrossed in identical holds, and an extra bout was necessary, in which Guild showed enough skill to win the 165-pound senior title.

Boxing entries for the evening were few—only two tournament bouts, along with one exhibition bout. Myers of P.H.E. and Murphy of Dents fought to a draw in an effort to win the 145-pound title. Myers opened up the first round strongly, only to have Murphy finish it just as keenly. Both fighters really slugged hard all through the second, and in the third Murphy seemed to hold a slight edge at the end but it wasn't enough for a decision either way. An inferior show of boxing followed when Wilson of Meds beat out Thornton of School, gaining the 155-pound title.

AESTHETIC NIGHT

Well, that was some basketball game Saturday even. Yessir, the referees put on a damn good show. From the moment the girl in the fluffy pink sweater gurgled, "Oh, look, here comes that darling little umpire," till George Lewis swept the floor and cried, "Let's dance!" those zebra shirts played the rippiest game we've seen since Selective Service caught up with us.

Doubletalk Lowes (the curly-haired blonde) was top scorer for the night; 13 Varsity players also ran. Ref-mate Harry Mitchell, however, just couldn't put his heart into such a game and is reported to have spent the time looking for Gravel Gertie's mandolin.

Even the Trenton players were disappointed; they thought they were up against our second string. Maybe it was just an off night but the much vaunted Varsity Blues looked very poor to us. Of course, this was the first time we've seen them this year, so perhaps we shouldn't pass judgment. Nothing seemed to click. The Blues shots went everywhere but the right place. Basketeering tactics were thrown away at times. Their plan of attack was indeed a mystery for the better part of the game. And it wouldn't be a bad idea to have the boys brush up on their free throws.

We may be prejudiced, but we'll give Hec Phillips' half-time track show a bigger hand than the basketball game. The jumping team of Jackes and Kerr was pretty to watch, and Bill Kerr's unofficial record will look better in the books than will the second-rate game the Blues put up. Again comes the old lament, "Too bad there are no intercollegiate with such track talent on hand."

SWIMMIN' AGAIN (OR STILL!)

Guess by now everyone knows that the final interfaculty swimming meets are going to be on Wednesday, February 21, at 7:30 p.m. at Hart House (spectators are welcome, very welcome—and it's a treat, meet we mean). And on Saturday, February 24, at 8 o'clock.

We find that we have eight teams this year—U.C., Vic, St. Hilda's, St. Michael's, P.H.E., Meds and S.P.S., Nurses and Physiotherapy. Last year it was rather a close fight between Vic (the winners), U.C., and P.H.E. This year we understand that Physiotherapy are all prepared to rake in the honors. We also hear that there are quite a few excellent swimmers among the freshies of the various colleges and faculties too.

There is the Robertson trophy for the individual winner of the meet and a cup for the winner of the diving. But for us us's for whom that sort of thing is hopeless, it is lots of fun, anyhow!

The Wednesday Prelim Meet consists of deciding upon the five best people in the diving style and ornamental swimming, and in our new addition, the long plunge. Then the final winners are chosen on Saturday night along with the winners of the speed events and, of course, we mustn't forget the novelty race. (Anything can happen, just anything.) Then an added attraction that will please all, and some diving and ornamental display by the evening's winners.

AND JUST A GENTLE REMINDER to all ye participants—Don't forget your medical check-ups! And that's and order. Tuesday or Wednesday for the Wed. Meet and Friday or Saturday morning for the Sat. Meet. Yes,—and you have to go both times!

And we hope that all the swimming reps will be at the meeting tomorrow at 12:30 in the L.M. gym, as planned.

And don't forget those practices! There are just two more up at U.T.S.—tonight and tomorrow night from 7:30 to 9:00. And then there are Thursday and Friday afternoon up at the L.M. pool, so there's still a chance for us procrastinators that still want to get our three practices in.

CLEANING UP

In Friday's hockey game St. Hilda's defeated the P.H.E.'ers 3-0. Liz Stark, the Saints' star goalie, managed to shut-out the P.H.E. bombardment by Gwen Earle, Ruth Welstead and company. Mardie and Joan Fletcher and Marg. Alexander starred for the Saints, but the whole team was excellent.

ATHLETIC NIGHT

In the basketball game, Meds-S.P.S. easily defeated P.H.E. by a score of 30-14 in what Pat Flynn of P.H.E. called poor basketball.

Meds beat St. Hilda's 2-0 in the water-polo, a particularly splashy game in which each team was surprised to find how long the Hart House pool was.

VOLLEYBALL

Vic I beat U.C. in a hard-fought game, the final score being 60-26. Meds licked St. Hilda's B 46-36.

"Dull Game" Says Scribe But Varsity Triumphs 5-1

Navy Bulldogs Turn Back Victory Bid for Win; Blues Now in Second Place Tie With Aircrafters

SUSPENSE AT DEFENCE

In a dull, listless game that lacked the usual hockey thrills, Ace Bailey's Varsity Blues plastered a 5-1 defeat on the hereto winless Watson's A.C. at Varsity Arena last Friday evening. The victory placed the Blues in a second place deadlock with Victory Aircraft.

In the early part of the doubleheader, Navy Bulldogs came from behind to salvage a 7-5 win over Victory. The two points gained in this game gave the tars undisputed possession of first place with four wins and but a single defeat.

The Blues made a determined bid for the game in the opening minutes and hemmed the helpless Watson's squad behind their own blue line, but poor shooting, coupled with dull passing, kept them off the score sheet. Hughie Smythe hit the twine at the five-minute mark after having snared a loose puck in front of the Watson goal. Three minutes later he grabbed a pass from Jim Boa, drew out Goalie Meredith and neatly planted the disc back of the prostrate netminder. The period closed before the pressing Blues could increase their lead.

The middle stanza featured scramble shiny with little organized passing on the part of both teams. Johnson scored the visitors' only marker from a scramble in front of the net. McComb had no chance on the shot. Some six minutes later Bain carried the puck down the entire length of the ice and slipped the rubber over to Hughes, who had little trouble in scoring from the uncovered side.

Finding the proceedings on the dull side, the Varsity defence commenced to liven things up with rousing cheers plus a number of knees and elbows. These tactics quickly discouraged the meagre Watson attack and the play was centred in the losers' end of the rink.

Wade and Boa combined for the fourth Varsity goal, which was counted at the three-minute mark. Midway through the stanza, Hughes garnered the final goal from a goal-mouth shot. Hart and Bain were chased by the referees after their doings became too prevalent, but Watson's could do little more than take an occasional weak shot.

Hughie Smythe and St Hughes shared the scoring honors, each with two goals, while Boa picked up a goal and an assist. Wade and Bain picked up assists.

The absence of Bob Murray left the Blues without a serious scoring threat and while Griff Pearson turned in a creditable performance for a freshman, he appeared lost at times and missed a number of goal-mouth opportunities. The return of Murray will be awaited with open arms for the Friday night engagement with the Aircrafters.

The frightened freshette pushed open the door and tiptoed timidly into the already-begun English lecture circa 8:40 the other morning. Prof. proceeded with "St. Joan" as the late lass gurned seawards.

"Sit down, Joan," he read from Scene VI of Shaw's play. "You look very pale today. Are you not well?"

"Oh, no sir—" interrupted the freshette, whose name also happened to be You-know-what (we'll swear it on a stack of Ripley cartoons). "I feel fine; just tired, thank you."

And that's called keeping up with the Joans.

Vignette has the usual ingredients. Dramatis personae includes one boy, one girl. Aforementioned pair are observed strolling slowly down romantic St. George, their destination strictly 7-ish. They walk through a private paradise. The legend of love entrances them.

Coyly coos girl to boy: "Oh,—let's talk about somebody besides me. For a minute."

The soph's much-thumbed nose was buried in an equally much-thumbed University directory as he window-shopped for a date. Five previous phone calls had been fruitless. Suddenly a soiled digit landed on a familiar name—one with sex appeal. She was a flaming, locked freshie with whom he had a nodding acquaintance. Nodding to it.

Hoisting receiver to ear, the sweating soph dialed an unspecified number. Getting his party, he lunged into Line No. 1,035.

Reply was negative.

"Red heads," the disgruntled soph muttered as he hung up, "ought to have their heads read."

Fashion Footnotes: A campus-crossing co-ed topper day was halted by a photographer leering at her from behind his camera lens.

"I wonder, madam," he began politely, "if you would mind posing a moment for a picture?"

"Why, er—no," the flattered young lady replied with the expected becoming blush. Forthwith she dove for her com-

Record Jump For Bill Kerr

The high-jumping match between Bill Kerr and Art Jackes of School was the feature event in a program of three indoor track events held at Hart House on Saturday night, under the guidance of Hec Phillips. The other events were the mile race and a four-man relay, one lap per man.

Bill Kerr was the top man in the jumping. He reached a mark of 6'1", setting an all-time Canadian college record, indoors or outdoors over top of 6'0", which had been held by Jackes since last Monday. Kerr and Jackes began jumping on Saturday night at the five and a half foot mark. At six feet both cleared the pole to stay in the running. At 6'1" Kerr missed his first leap but made his second, while Jackes was unable to go the half inch over his last week's record mark in two tries.

On the upper track the relay race was held first, teams from Vic and Meds competing. Vic's team of Hickey, Kingston, Masterman and Hart, all freshmen, won the event in a time of one minute, eleven seconds. The Meds' runners were Antoni, Fyfe, Wilford and Dyer.

Five runners entered in the mile—Felding and Cross from Meds, Fordyce of S.P.S., Hamley of Trinity, and Vincent of St. Mike's. Until the second last lap, all runners were grouped together, the lead alternating on every lap. Then Frank Fordyce spurred, to gain a half-lap finish over Mouse Felding. Cross and Hamley were tied for third place. Fordyce's time was 4:48.

direction of the departing plotters. Outside, Minden and Lent faced a group of unidentified, unmistakable Schoolmen and engaged them in a snowball skirmish.

Parliamentary proceedings droned on. Within 25 minutes Minden and Lent returned.

Then Lent rose and asked permission to address the House. Declared Lent: "I demand a formal apology from School for both this episode and for the Engineers' unsportsmanlike attitude at the Arts Ball."

Instantly alert to the situation, U.C.'s Hon. Ralph Shepherd, Minister without briefcase, sprang to his feet and declared excitedly: "This constitutes a state of war!"

Stirred to action, the House immediately bristled with angry agreement. Cries of revenge were heard. Speedily Parliament passed a motion formally declaring war on School. This document now awaits ratification at an imminent joint U.C.-"Lit" meeting. It is not known what the "Lit" time-cooled decision may be.

Last night, conciliation with School was deemed unlikely. U.C.'s demand for an apology must be answered, officials said. Meanwhile, Dogpatch style warfare is expected to rage.

Previous alleged School misdemeanors which had kindled the blazing U.C. rage included the silencing by the Schoolmen of the U.C. bell, which summons U.C.'ers to Parliament.

OPEN EVENINGS

Mr. Herbert Mowat will speak today on the subject, "The Jewish Problem," in the last of four lectures of the Minority series sponsored by the Avukah.

Mr. Mowat is the executive director of the Canadian Palestine Committee, a non-Jewish organization. He is a writer and lecturer, contributing to Canadian magazines, and was instrumental in the construction of the Alaska Highway. In connection with his work in the Canadian Palestine Committee, Mr. Mowat prepared several briefs for the Canadian government on the Canadian majority opinion regarding the Palestine settlement.

His lecture will be prefaced with an address by Dr. Sidney Smith, who is himself a member of the Canadian Palestine Committee.

SPEAKING of SWING

There is a sign outside the Palais Royale upon which Bert Niosi is referred to as "Canada's King of Swing." That statement is no idle boast. Bert and the boys play lots of jazz and lots of good jazz.

The Kirby-styled band within a band is really fine, and gets lots of attention from Jimmie Lunceford's men during intermission. Bert's clarinet and alto and Phil Attanachi's terrific tenor share solo honors.

Tony Ferranto does a very capable chore in the ensembles but some solo trumpet work would help a lot. Next time you catch the band on one of its CBY air shows, listen for the neat arrangement of Runnin' Wild. It's really something.

The current Lunceford group, one trumpet short of top power, puts on a good show but a show which suffers in comparison with those put on by the Lunceford band of old. There are no informal blues at intermission and very little of the flash and showmanship that was once a Lunceford trademark.

Stand-by Joe Thomas still plays that frantic toneless tenor and sings in his groovy manner, but the star of the sax section is diminutive, bespectacled Kirt Bradford. His jumpy alto was a stand-out on everything from Outskirts of Town to Pistol Packin' Mama.

The rhythm section has improved considerably since the last time the band was in Toronto. Drummer Joe Marshall is no Crawford, but he seems to realize that his job is to push the rest of the band along, which he does to good effect.

Time For Action

Perhaps it was the conference of the Big Three last week, perhaps it was the realization that February is half over and that the election is getting closer, that brings this problem up. The war is getting finished and we may expect action on the fighting fronts to move rapidly to a climax; the government which will start Canada off on the ways of peace is going to be elected shortly; the problem is, "What are the young men and women of this country going to do about it?"

Particularly in the thinking of university students, there must be an awareness of the problems facing Canada and an attempt made at their solution, if the students are to offer anything constructive towards the development of a peace which has some probability of permanence. The responsibility has been thrust upon young men and women in the universities because, although they have been hampered by government restrictions and senseless controls, they have been allowed to continue their education in the comfort of Canada. Their security has been purchased by the blood of the young men who have fought and died.

I am now in the middle of a business trip across Western Canada, where I have the opportunity of meeting a large number of young men and women from farms, from businesses, and from schools and universities. These young people seem one and all to have realized the problem which they face: how to make the voice of youth count in the period of reconstruction.

But while the problem is evident, the answer is not so easily apparent. Where can the young men and women find an outlet for their ideals, an outlet where they can put the energy of youth to useful work?

One answer alone exists: political action. It is not enough for young people to stand aside and criticize negatively the deeds of any political party. It is not enough to criticize destructively the Liberals, the Progressive Conservatives, the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, or the Labor Progressives. The action by young people must be towards the positive implementation of their own high ideals, and this implementation must be in the political sphere.

Take the House of Commons. The average age of members there is close to 60. No one that year of age has the ideals of 25, or the dynamic energy to see those ideals put into effect.

I would like to see all three major political parties so dominated by young people that they would truly represent the ideals of young men and women and honestly seek after their energetic fulfillment. If we can get that kind of domination, we will see a complete rejuvenation of the Canadian political scene.

And that change will only come when every young Canadian is ready to take his active part in Canadian politics.

Of Time And . . .

Royal Alexandra

Diving into the past and constructing an image of it somewhat along the lines of eighteenth century comedy, "Berkeley Square" has a winning charm and gracefulness in its setting and idea, without being fraught with any deeper content. There is, indeed, a touch of disillusionment in the picture of the age of Dr. Johnson, Sheridan, and Sir Joshua Reynolds, but most of "Berkeley Square" is a delicate web of fancy, building up a story of pure escapism on the idea that all time is absolute, and the past therefore still existing, if you only know where to look for it.

Obsessed with the vision of a perfect, gracious past, which is symbolized to him in his newly-inherited house in Berkeley Square, Peter Standish, from New York, immerses himself in his mansion and re-enacts (imaginatively?) the coming of an ancestral namesake of his, likewise from New York, in 1784. Since the past is already fixed, he has to act exactly as the older Standish did, and tries to do his best, moving in the London society in the age of the Georges, and being engaged to his cousin Kate. Yet inevitably he cannot keep to his role, but forecasts the future, and in the end emerges from his dreams, a wiser and a sadder man.

First honors, in our opinion, go to Fletcher Bramwell as the now nervous and distraught, now self-assured and debonair Peter Standish, always lively and engaging. Miss Landi has a somewhat ungrateful part as the rather passive though pleasant and sensitive Helen, the younger sister who understands Peter and over whose love for him is cast a wistful spell. Memorable were the spirited performances of Earle Grey and Dennis Murphy as the eighteenth century dandy and the dissolute brother, respectively, both very well recreated from the comedy of that age. The costumes were dazzling and added to the sprightliness of the acting by the rest of the cast.

CAMPUS POLL

'Teen-Age Dumb' Says Small Majority Rejecting Vote For Eighteen-Year-Olds

SHOULD 18-YEAR-OLDS BE ALLOWED TO VOTE IN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL ELECTIONS?

YES—41.2%
NO—58.8%

In a poll regarding the lowering of the voting age to 18 carried out on the campus of the University of Toronto yesterday, a slim majority expressed opinions against the measure. There were no clear-cut differences in opinion on the basis of age, sex, or course in the poll covering a complete cross-section of the undergraduate students.

Quoted below are some opinions, typical of campus thought:

Royce Frith, III Law, Vic.

"No, there is absolutely no doubt that persons of that age aren't equipped at present to exercise intelligently the privilege of franchise."

Ex-serviceman S. Ezrin, I Pass.

"No. The average voter of 35 usually isn't capable of an unprejudiced vote, let alone the 18-year-old."

Ex-serviceman M. Mudrick, I Pass.

"No. The idea that if you're old enough to fight you're old enough to vote is sheer nonsense. The 18-year-old is not politically conscious, except for the bigoted, prejudiced ideas of the local historians in the high schools."

Dave Berenstein, IV Meds.

"Yes. In my estimation 95 per cent of the population are not capable of voting correctly anyway. If the 18-year-olds were allowed to vote they might develop an early interest in the government and its control, especially during their school days, when they have the opportunity to read and to discuss political problems."

Yolande Powell, IV Philosophy and English, St. Hilda's.

"Yes. It's a good thing for these young people to vote because the older people will be afraid they won't vote the right way and that will get everybody out to the polls to counteract it."

Ruth Cornfield, II Law, U.C.

"Yes. Men in the services are old enough to have something to say in the government which sends them to fight. All through high school, students are told that they will make the future, but it is four or five years before they can vote. One is as capable of voting at the age of 18 as at any age."

John Speers, IV English, Vic.

"No. Twenty-one is young enough to take on such a responsibility. Canadian 18-year-olds aren't very grown-up."

Harold Minden, III General, U.C.

"Yes. Eighteen-year-olds are as intelligent as 21-year-olds and know as much as do many adults who vote. If they feel justified in fighting for their country they are old enough to vote in its elections."

Stan Sandler, II S.P.S.

"No. They are too easily influenced, especially by their families. Besides, the average girl of 18 or 19 cares little and knows less about politics."

Al Eisen, II P. & B.

"No. We get a false impression of 18-year-olds at the University. They are not representative of the average youth whose interest in politics is almost non-existent."

Bill Smith, R.C.A.F. student.

"No. Women should not vote under any circumstances at any time. They are too emotional."

Trudy Ching, IV Biochemistry, Vic.

"Yes. Eighteen-year-olds are not influenced by life as much as their elders. They are not prejudiced and therefore see the two sides of the case more clearly."

Murray Jose, II Theology, Emmanuel College.

"No. Even though the boys have been

Camera in War Is Dinner Topic

"The Application of Photography to the War Effort" was the subject of an address given by Prof. K. B. Jackson at a dinner marking the opening of the third annual Photographic Salon last night.

Professor Jackson discussed the aspects of photography as applied to training, research, industry, and operations. He mentioned the application of the camera to detecting camouflage, in blueprinting, photostats, photo-lifting, measurement of deflections and in the creation of maps, illustrating his talk with lantern slides.

Dean Young also addressed the meeting, mentioning one of the first Civil professors at the University, Peter Gillespie.

"Calculations" by J. O. Broadway, was announced the best print in the show. Other winners were P. H. Gibbs, D. W. Cornell, M. Lanion, and Mac Brown.

The Salon is now open to the general public, in Room 33 of the Engineering Building, until February 22.

Meet Will Hear Rocket Lecture

Professor T. R. Loudon of the department of Applied Science and Engineering will lecture on the development of jet propulsion to the Royal Astronomical Society tonight at 8 p.m. in Room 18 of the Physics Building.

Lantern slides will be used to illustrate his talk, which is to show the progress made in this field and to indicate the possibilities of rocket travel in the future.

When asked about the history of jet propulsion, Professor Loudon said: "I suppose it can be traced back to the time of Hero." Although secrecy will not permit him to mention the work which is being done at the Bell Aircraft Company, he said: "I will use the Robomb for purposes of illustration."

Although this meeting is primarily for the Royal Astronomical Society, any interested students are welcome.

Old Gun Barks For New Session

The School cannon will thunder again this afternoon when the third session of the Engineering Parliament opens in Room 25 of the Engineering Building. Officially convened to sponsor the annual impromptu speaking contest, it is rumored by the executive that other business will be covered.

The Rt. Hon. Mr. Bill Tamblyn, Prime Minister of the House, when interviewed at the School yesterday, said: "The session is called today to consider the usual important matters relative to the various and diverse functions of School. A report will be given concerning the recovery of the School cannon and the resulting occurrences, and if considered worthwhile, by the members of the House, any misinterpretations occasioned by the local press will be rectified."

"After the more important business has been discussed, and if time permits, the ludicrous proposal of the U.C. Parliament will be brought before the House, if it has not already been settled by a subcommittee."

"Visitors from other colleges, especially U.C., are cordially welcome," said Miss S. B. McDonald, Speaker of the House. "However, the Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. A. C. McDonald, will be present to eject any undignified characters."

"The heroic stand of Malta contributed greatly to the advancing armies on the coast," stated Lieutenant-General Sir William Dobbie in his address last night at Convocation Hall.

Commenting on a film showing the everyday scenes of Malta during the siege of two and a half years, he declared that Malta was held at first for defensive purposes only, but later on it had to be defended because the safety of Egypt depended on it.

Mowat Lecture Closes Series

"If we wish to understand the Jewish problem we must go outside of Canada, for it is a world-wide problem," said Mr. Herbert A. Mowat, executive director of the Canadian Palestine Committee, speaking on "The Jewish Problem" in the last of the Minority lectures series.

We have to study and interpret the pressures that have been exerted on these people as a whole during the last few years, especially in Nazi Germany, he said. The Jewish people were least popular in Germany because the World War in 1921 placed them on the side of the victors. Thus they were the first object of the German hatred in 1939.

Mr. Mowat went on to say that in Poland, in 1939, there were 3,500,000 Jews. In a recent estimate of the number of Jewish people within the geographical borders of pre-war Poland it was discovered that there were only 100,000 left.

There are three major Jewish problems, he continued; the problem of the Jew as an individual, the problem of the Jew as a refugee, and the problem of the Jew as a person without a national home.

Concerning the problem of the Jew as an individual, we have in Europe today a huge population who are on the verge of starvation and are homeless. The tragedy of the situation is that Canada and other countries are not prepared for large scale immigration.

When one thinks that these people have been without a national home for 2,000 years, they certainly have the right to a country of their own, continued Mr. Mowat.

In the English-speaking countries, he continued, our general spirit towards these minority groups is shown very clearly in employment, where some positions are closed to Jews. This precipitates a situation in which a great many Jewish people are forced into a limited number of occupations.

Principal Sidney Smith of University College, who introduced the speaker, said that he was especially interested in these lectures since they were a student venture.

NEWSFRONTS

Paris—Scottish troops capture Goch, in Siegfried Line; Germans forced back to Rhine steadily. Canadians fighting savagely in Rhine valley at Calcar.

Pacific Front—Yankee forces pushing inland on Iwo Jima, against strong resistance from Japs. Superfortresses raid Tokyo on gigantic scale, aircraft factory among the targets.

Eastern Front—Nowe, 47 miles south of Danzig, taken by Russian troops. Capture of Guben reported by Nazis. More suburbs of Breslau fall.

"When the offensive started," he added, "Italian communications were to be attacked from Malta, and the naval and air units stationed at the island took a big toll of the enemy trying to supply its forces on North Africa."

During the latter part of the siege of Malta a large part of the German Air Force, which was badly needed in Russia, was kept busy at the island, and many were shot down.

"At the time that Italy went into the war," stated Sir William, "England was alone, and as she was expecting an invasion she could not send any troops to protect Malta. We had at that time four ancient Gloucester Gladiators, which we got by accident. For the actual protection of the island we had sixteen obsolete anti-aircraft guns, and five battalions altogether to patrol over thirty miles of beaches."

"I am very happy to say," said Sir William, "that on two occasions every ship in a southbound enemy convoy was sent to the bottom. On one proclamation that the Italian government put out," he continued, "the enemy stated that they had destroyed a coal-mine on Malta. The funny part about this proclamation was that there were no coal-mines on the island whatsoever."

"The only time we saw the Italian navy," he declared, "was when they sent over some E-boats and one-man submarines to sink our shipping. Not one ship got into the harbor, and not one ship got away."

Of Sir William, Chancellor Cuddy said, "I do not introduce but I welcome to this University the great soldier and Christian, Lieutenant-General Sir William Dobbie."

Pearson Honored

His Excellency, the Honorable L. B. Pearson, O.B.E., Canadian Ambassador to the United States, will receive the degree of Doctor of Laws (honoris causa) at a special convocation in Convocation Hall on Friday, February 23, at 8:30 p.m.

A graduate of Victoria College in 1919, he received the Massey Foundation Fellowship to Oxford University, and returned a year later with his M.A. to join the staff at the University of Toronto as a lecturer in Modern History. He had gone overseas in 1915 as a private, had received his commission in the infantry, later becoming attached to the Royal Flying Corps.

While assistant professor of History, he was appointed first secretary of the Department of External Affairs in 1928. In 1932 he acted as press liaison officer for the Economic Conference at Ottawa, and in 1934 was appointed secretary to the famous Price Spreads Commission. When its work was finished, he was transferred to England as secretary to the Canadian High Commission in London.

At the outbreak of the present war, Mr. Pearson became liaison officer between the War Office and the Canadian (Continued on page 2)

UNE PRÉPARATION SPÉCIALE POUR LA BARBE

Pour les hommes qui doivent se raser tous les jours

NE REQUIERT PAS DE BLAIREAU

La vie moderne exige aujourd'hui qu'un homme se rase 7 se rase chaque jour. Aux médecins, avocats, hommes d'affaires et soldats, il faut surtout un rasage propre.

Malheureusement, le rasage quotidien irrite souvent l'épiderme. A chaque rasage le rasoir écorche un peu l'épiderme, et quand vous vous rasez chaque jour, cette couche extérieure de la peau n'a pas le temps de se reformer d'un rasage à l'autre.

Mais il y a une crème à barbe faite spécialement pour résoudre ce problème. C'est la Glider, une crème riche et douce qui a le pouvoir d'adoucir la surface rugueuse de l'épiderme en même temps qu'elle amollit la barbe. Alors, votre rasoir peut glisser facilement sur la peau sans l'écorcher. La Glider vous permet de vous raser proprement avec confort.

Et Glider est facile d'emploi! Lavez-vous simplement le visage à l'eau tiède et au savon; tandis que votre barbe est encore mouillée, étendez de la crème Glider et laissez reposer pendant que vous brossez vos dents ou peignez vos cheveux—puis, rasez-vous!

ESSAI GRATUIT—Demandez un tube gratuit de Glider, vous permettant au moins dix rasages. Envoyez vos nom et adresse à la compagnie J. B. Williams (Canada), Limitée, dépt. IV-6, Lasalle, Montréal.

Champus Kitty

Whithering . . .

"There is no possibility of error," stated Professor E. J. (call me Jack) Spratt of the Vic English Department at last night's regular meeting of the Bronte Society in the Queen's Park bandstand. "The Champus Cat is beyond doubt a direct descendant of the famous Bronte cat."

This greatest literary discovery of the century (exclusive of the fact that Lorna Doone cookies have sold) was greeted with frantic screams: "Why, oh why were the Kittens' four brothers drowned? They were worth at least $10 apiece!" A subcommittee set out without delay to dredge the Don.

Revealing that careful measurement of Champus had reinforced his conclusion, Prof. Spratt said, "To any reader of Wuthering Heights, the height of Champus' Wuthers is unmistakable. I am astonished that this discovery should have been delayed so long."

After the address, members joined in singing Anne Bronte's fourth last poem, and certainly her merriest: "Why Weak Men Cry and Strong Women Laugh Their Heads Off." This was accompanied by Miss Tankwater and her zither. The last verse was interrupted by the departure of some 25 people who had thought it was a C.C.F. meeting.

Cookies in the shape of Emily Bronte's favorite style of dome-faster served as refreshments.

The rest of the evening was given over to several topics: the sale of Bronte quilts, methods of attack on the Jane Austen society, and the finding of a suitable weaning formula for the kitten. The meeting adjourned with the singing of Charlotte Bronte's melancholy translation of Racine's du Recevoir, and departed in various directions, looking for the four missing Bronte kittens.

Intercollegiate Night . . .

This Saturday's Athletic Night has adopted this moniker as its distinguishing feature from the rest of these events this winter in an endeavor, vain perhaps, to bring back or stir up some of that old intercollegiate spirit. We only say "vain perhaps" because we were in attendance at the Athletic Night just past and, in spite of a really swell effort by the Meds and George Lewis, there was the most anemic of anemic cheering during the evening that was ever heard within the walls of Hart House.

The Varsity Blues players' bench was as good a place as any to look for an example of this apathetic attitude. Here was a solid row of deadpan faces with heads moving in perfect unison as they followed the play up and down the floor. They didn't seem to have anything to say to each other throughout the whole game—no kibitzing or even beeping about raw decisions of general refereeing. What an attitude for a college basketball team!

Mac McCutcheon comes in for a lot of criticism about the way he handles this year's Blues but he really has tried to make them get out and fight. Granted they were losing on Saturday, but our opinion is that team spirit alone would have turned this defeat into a win. Why is it lacking? We seem to blame the war for so many things these days that possibly this also can slip in under its spacious cloak. We've been without college spirit for so long that we don't feel right about throwing ourselves wholeheartedly into the thing before the return of true intercollegiate.

Well, Assumption College of Windsor are the visitors Saturday night. They have a real basketball team, and if Varsity is going to put up anything like last year's battle (they eked out a close win in the best game of the season), they had better change their tactics. Assumption has a nine-man squad that packs plenty of power, and only one man under six feet. Bill Coulthard is the best-known to us, as he will be remembered for that classy exhibition of fast-breaking one-handed pop shots that he staged when he was here with Detroit Tech last winter. Gino Sovran, the team captain, has a long-handed set shot that is reputed to be deadly accurate, and he holds a record around Windsor and Detroit so far this year of 26 points in one game. The rest of the team is made up of Jack Solway, Joe Fraver, Pete Mudry, Ralton Wade, Ado Rora, Bernard Hogan and Sid Katzman, all reputed to be top-flight basketballers.

Let's show Assumption a fighting team and an enthusiastic student body Saturday night. And, remember—it's your last chance to bring those nanananas and books.

Flash! . . .

wasn't the word for Vic I or any of its generally flashy players when it met P.H.E. II yesterday at four. They had a hard time even holding up their end of the 1-1 score against the hard-fighting Physed Freshies. This freshie team is the better of the two P.H.E. teams, but was called a second team because, to fit the games into their timetable, they had to stick together, and, naturally, being freshies, were called a second team, but natch!

Anyhow, it happened pretty quickly. In the first period Fran Lee, on a fast rush, put the little rubber pill behind Helen Stewart, while that worthy was still looking for it. At the end of the first period the score stood just that way, Fran's 1 against Vic's 0.

The second period stiffened the Vic team up a bit, and fortified by oranges, a rest, and Shirley Pearce they rallied up the tying tally. Shirley's goal was assisted by Leone Emsun. From there on it was just a see-saw battle up and down the rink. Each team was pretty lagged out and neither pulled out that winning play.

It looks as though Vic has met the first terrific competition of the year, as all the rest of the Scarlet and Gold's final scores have looked pretty fair. We quote from back files. Against P.H.E. I, 4-0, 1-0; against Meds, 6-0; against U.C., 3-0, 7-1. Only one tally against Vic I in five games, and a total of 21 for Ontario's pridel' Not bad, until yesterday; but they will have to give a real hitch to their scarlet and yellow socks to beat P.H.E. II in the return encounter.

The only star rating we got was Fran Lee for P.H.E., while Vic's coach seemed particularly reticent. However, from where we sat, Shirley Pearce was her usual spark plug, seconded by Leone Emsun, and Helen Patrick, who did a steady defence job.

He joined the Royal Canadian Air Force in 1942, and was killed in a training accident in October, 1943, just two weeks before he was to receive his navigator's wing.

The trophy is to be offered annually for competition in the 200-yard breast stroke, the event in which Winston represented the University of Toronto. His first presentation was made on Saturday at the Athletic Night to Michael Beer, 1 University College.

Faculty Of Medicine Entrance Standards Revised At McGill

Adoption of Carnegie Foundation's Graduate Record Examination Announced by the Faculty

A WIDELY USED EXAM

Montreal—(CUP)—Dr. J. F. McIntosh, secretary to the Faculty of Medicine at McGill University, has informed the president of the Pre-Medical Society of a change in the entrance requirements to the Faculty of Medicine.

In Dr. McIntosh's letter announcing the change, he brought out the following information: "After careful consideration it has been decided that students applying for entrance to the Faculty of Medicine should be asked to write the graduate record examination sponsored by the Carnegie Institute. This examination is widely used in the selection of students for the graduate schools of many institutions. I have been instructed by the Dean to advise you that applicants for admission should make arrangements to write this examination at a suitable time."

Continuing in his letter to the Pre-Medical Society's president, Dr. McIntosh said that: "For the purposes of writing the exam, applicants are considered in three categories. Firstly, students presently in their second year who plan to make application for the classes which commence in September, 1946. Secondly, students who have already made application or plan to make application for admission in September, 1945. All students in this category, whether graduates or undergraduates, are advised to take this examination. The results will be given considerable weight in the selection of students for admission to the Faculty of Medicine. Lastly, students who have already been accepted for admission are also advised to write the examination for their own information and for the information of the Faculty. Failure to take this examination will not prejudice their position as applicants, unless the individual forfeits his status by failure to maintain his academic standing."

The Pre-Medical Society has called an emergency meeting to be held this afternoon to describe to its members the purpose and scope of this examination.

Big 3 Conference Is Underhill Topic

"We are like an excited group of football supporters," stated Professor F. H. Underhill of the History department at the meeting yesterday of the International Affairs Society in the Women's Union, speaking on "The Big Three." "They only see the ball occasionally," he continued, "they don't understand the play, but they are supposed to cheer their heads off at the proper moment."

Prof. Underhill continued his simile by saying: "We don't know what has happened recently at the Crimea Conference, and yet if we are to believe the journalists, we are supposed to cheer wildly. What happened at the conference over which we ought to cheer?" he questioned.

He then pointed out how truly general the report of the conference was, emphasizing that no solution to the problem of what was to be done with Germany after victory was offered. He further stated that some decision must be made on how Nazism is to be eliminated.

As another example of the generality of the report, he pointed out that only Russia has made any concrete suggestion for war reparations, which are, in her case, possibly take the form of forced labor. "What is America's and Britain's stand on this problem?" he questioned. "We should be getting light and leading from the Three Wise Men."

"I am deliberately painting a blue picture," Prof. Underhill explained, "but it is dangerous to leave all these questions open when our armies will soon be in Berlin, and action will have to be taken." He then went on to show that only by the formation of a stable, genuinely international organization, not a fake one, could any hope of a lasting peace be obtained.

Professor Underhill then recalled Walter Lippmann's plan of the world under spheres of influence, in which there is the whale power on the Atlantic and the elephant power in Europe, and that peace will reign according to the theory that whales and elephants don't fight. "However," the speaker stated, "the only way we can be sure that whales and elephants won't fight is to know that these powers intend to make a sincere settlement for at least the next twenty years."

"One of the greatest questions marks in the future is the economic position of the United States. All the world is watching the United States anxiously. She holds the key to many important and vital questions," he concluded.

Dr. Smith Speaker At Victory Party

In a plea to the men of North House, University of Toronto Men's Residence, Dr. Sidney E. Smith, principal of U.C., and president-elect of the University, called upon them to ponder afresh the age-old question, "Why have I come to the University?" Dr. Smith, who is also dean of residence, was an honored guest at a celebration commemorating the victory of North House over East and South Houses for the shield donated for various sports between the houses of the men's residence.

Seeking to allay any self-conscious fears which they might have because most of them found themselves in civilian clothes while their contemporaries were fighting on land, in the air, and on the sea, Dr. Smith said: "I ask you not to have too much anxiety about it. Your government, knowing all the relevant circumstances, has decided that a certain number of students should remain in universities throughout the Dominion for purposes which cannot be regarded as too remote either from the common and national resolution for victory or from the future development of our country."

"You spend, in the university, among the best years of your lives," Principal Smith told the group, "and you should take full advantage of those years."

Replying to the question he had deliberately put at the beginning of his address, Dr. Smith declared: "I am at the University that I may earn a living." In some quarters, Dr. Smith said he would be condemned as a heretic for putting that as the primary objective. But, by the very nature of their society, "we have to live before we can learn to live well," he observed. That was not the whole story. They were at the University to educate themselves so as to be able to develop and cultivate their personality, to appreciate the good, the true, and the beautiful. In this way, a good university training could help equip them to live a life.

Concluding with the appeal that university men take a more active part in the affairs of their country, Principal Smith said that was also another reason for coming to the university—that they might play an intelligent part in democratic government. The abiding values and ideals they were taught in their homes and churches should not be discarded by virtue of any new ideas or theories they might learn at the university. "Have faith in the good life and hold fast to that which is good," Dr. Smith concluded.

FACULTY OF ARTS

All students who wish to write at the annual examinations must apply to write before March 1. Application forms may be obtained at the offices of the College and University Registrars.

Business Course Open to Veterans

A Certificate Course in Business, opened this month for ex-service men and women, has received sufficient registration to warrant its founding by the department of University Extension. Admission requirements are determined by a staff committee that takes into consideration the applicant's academic standing, maturity, and experience.

The ten-month course is divided into two sections with examinations at the end of each. Accounting, economics, Canadian government, commercial law, business administration, corporation finance, economic history, and statistics will be covered.

In order to accommodate returning service men and women, the course will be started twice, and possibly three times, during the calendar year. Prior to enrolment, applicants are advised to consult their rehabilitation boards to make sure that tuition fees and maintenance allowance will be paid by the government.

On the completion of the course the University will award certificates to successful students.

O.A.C. A University New Gov't Proposal

Rumors that Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, may become a university have again come to the fore. This statement was expressed in an address from the throne at the opening of the Ontario legislature.

Their aim is "to provide a co-ordinated plan of administration for the Ontario Agricultural College, Macdonald Institute, and the Ontario Veterinary College, to make the utmost use of all their educational, research and other facilities." It is likely that, if the three colleges are consolidated, a president will be appointed with power over the whole group. Under him would be a dean of agriculture, a dean of veterinary science and a dean of household science.

Officials of the O.A.C. have been considering for some time the broader course of instruction which would be possible under this new system.

To Ask Dents, Vic For Donors

The attendance at the St. George Street Blood Clinic has improved in the past two weeks because of the steady influx of Schoolmen, said Pete Aykroyd, chairman of the University Blood Donor Service. These men were recruited during the past two weeks by individual contacts under the direction of Murray McCullough.

Victoria College and Dentistry are the next faculties to be enrolled under the University Blood Donor campaign. Bob Clappison will contact the 179 Dents who still have not attended the Clinic, while Bob Russell will organize the drive in Vic, where there are 500 who have not filled out their donor's cards.

Members of S.P.S. Parliament Overwhelmingly Rise Up To U.C.'s Challenge To Fight, Following Four-days' Silence

"AN INFAMOUS ACT"

Rising as one man to the battle-cry, "School must defend her rights!" the S.P.S. Parliament yesterday afternoon capped a tumultuous session by a formal declaration of war on University College.

Whoops of joy greeted the first flash communiqué from the front, stating that at 1730 hrs. two S.P.S. (Secret Practical Service) agents had posted a diplomatic note containing the School proclamation of hostilities in the U.C. rotunda without mishap.

("Now that School has plucked up its courage the phony war may be considered at end," stated U.C.'s president, Bob Bell, reminding reporters that U.C. had declared war on S.P.S. four days ago, following an engineer-engineered explosion in the Royal College Parliament. "Now that they've awakened up, our forces can swing into action.")

School's official resolve to fight followed a cabinet crisis in which the motion of Prime Minister Bill Tamblin, that the U.C. Declaration of War be ignored "as an insidious reflection, beneath this Parliament's dignity," was overwhelmingly defeated by the twenty-five members present. Perceiving the unpopularity of the scriptural "soft answer," the government hastily went into coalition with the opposition, called for and won a desk-thumping vote for war.

Summoned by the boom of the great School cannon and ceremoniously opened with the Procession of the Most High Slide Rule, Parliament listened in awe as Prime Minister Tamblin traced the development of the crisis.

Describing the theft of "our beloved cannon" at last fall's Mulock Cup game, Tamblin cried for vengeance on "one of the most infamous and treacherous acts of aggression ever perpetrated against a peace-loving faculty."

"For fully three months," he declared "our cannon was hidden by one of the cabinet members of this treacherous people. Not once was it used according to our custom, for the pleasure and (Continued on page 4)

Rabbi Rhenov Outlines Hillel Foundation System

Rabbi Joseph Rhenov, at a meeting of the Jewish Student Fellowship at the Women's Union last night outlined briefly the program of the Hillel Foundation and the position of the Jewish students on camp in the United States and Canada.

"Hillel is trying to do a job of revitalizing values, of bringing to the Jewish student opportunities they have not had. It provides for the apparent need of Jewish students on campus by a program whose purpose is to acquaint them with their cultural background and heritage," he said.

On camp where Hillel Foundations exist, the program has been threefold—social, religious, and cultural, he continued. The facilities of the house are open to all university students, both Jew and non-Jew. A full-time director supervises the program. In that it is a student organization, the student executive is given complete autonomy to institute any program desired by their members, he explained.

A question period followed the discussion, and refreshments and dancing closed the meeting.

Ex-U.C. Scholar Killed in England

F.O. Herbert George Christie, 21, of the R.C.A.F., ex-student of University College, has been reported killed during aerial operations over England on Feb. 10.

Christie was born and educated in Toronto. At Parkdale he was awarded an I.O.D.E. scholarship given each year to a student of high scholastic attainments and outstanding qualities of character.

He enrolled in English Language and Literature at U.C. in 1941, and in his second year was Curator of Hart House library. He was also active in the U.C. Parliament.

In March, 1943, he enlisted in the R.C.A.F., and in April of the next year he went overseas as a navigator.

He preached as a student minister in many parts of Ontario, and also in the mission fields in Saskatchewan and Truro, N.S.

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Christie, and a brother, Edward, 1049 College Street.

Jet Propulsion is Topic Of Prof. T. R. Loudon

"Jet Propulsion" was the subject of a lecture given to the Royal Astronomical Society by Professor T. R. Loudon of the faculty of Applied Science and Engineering last night.

Professor Loudon explained that there has been a steady tendency in aviation toward a more efficient way of obtaining high speeds, where new problems of resistance are encountered.

He explained the principle of the aeroplane by a lantern slide made from an Airforce Training diagram, showing (Continued on page 4)

Book Donations Are Far Too Few

The last Athletic Night this year is also the last chance to bring the book donations up to last year's standard, said Ken Carroll, of Dentistry, whose faculty is one of the hosts for this Saturday's show.

So far, less than 1,000 magazines have been contributed, he said, as compared with last year's total of 7,000. The proportion of books and playing cards is about the same.

The contributions are sent to the Navy League, where they are distributed to such places as hospitals and canteens. To collect the required number of contributions, said Carroll, every student will have to bring five magazines and one book or pack of playing cards. Pocket-books and Penguin editions are especially requested.

Later, boxes will be placed in every faculty to receive the contributions of those who don't get into this Athletic Night; also for those who forget to bring them.

Varsity Reviews the War; Cannon Causes Controversy

As the U.C.-School war goes into its fifth day, The Varsity attempts to review the facts leading up to the outbreak of hostilities between the University's two largest faculties.

November 23: Date of the fateful Mulock Cup clash between School and U.C. School startled by mysterious disappearance of treasured cannonette. Downcast Engineers blame U.C., begin to plot revenge.

November 24: Cannon now missing 24 hours. School frantic.

November 30: School pleads through public press for return of precious piece of armament, now missing one week. Advertise School: "Lost, stolen or strayed—One Skule cannon. Finder please return to Miss O'Toole. This ad. will guarantee safe passage to finder."

December 1: Cannon conspicuously absent from scene of School Nite. Engineers unveil new weapon—utilizing jet propulsion. In The Varsity columns of this forlorn Friday ran this taunting classified: "Borrower of Skule cannon desires to know amount of powder required to load same." (This is direct refutation of a School charge made in Parliament yesterday that the mechanism of the cannon was "too elaborate for . . . University College . . .")

February 13: University College announces importantly the intention to return the howitzer at Arts Ball. School agrees to have representative present to receive cannon.

February 15: Peace-minded U.C. caught napping at Arts Ball; School caught cannon-napping. Theft of gun incenses U.C. officials.

February 16: U.C. Parliament and School's unsuccessful "gunpowder plot" to destroy the U.C. Junior Common Room. Parliament declares war on School.

February 18: First publication of U.C.'s move. School is silent.

February 20: S.P.S. Parliament in stormy session accepts U.C.'s bold challenge.

Intolerance

It is difficult not to be struck by the extraordinary intolerance of the continued action of the faculty of William and Mary College. Its latest pronouncement is that "The Flat Hat", student publication of that college, can be resumed as long as the editorial board will consult with a faculty councillor on any material "of a doubtful nature".

Just what subject matter is considered of a doubtful nature by the faculty certainly covers an elastic range. But the actions of William and Mary College leave no doubt in our minds as to the extent which "The Flat Hat" will be left uncensored. Censorship of the press when properly used is a necessary instrument for the insurance of accurate reporting. In the perverted form which will be utilized by the Virginian College, curtailment of opinions is indeed incompatible with the democratic principles of student self-government. The publication will merely become an organ reiterating the thoughts of the social structure controlling The College.

Also to be considered is the reason which precipitated this unwarranted punishment of the paper. If the editors had been guilty of a universally recognised misdemeanour such as an overly indiscriminate "Jazz" issue, the faculty would have been justified in demanding faculty supervision of the paper in the matter of printing distasteful material. But when the faculty representative oversees all editions in order to perpetrate gross intolerance, then a legitimate deprecation can be made.

Merely because the faculty of William and Mary College do not find it to their economic or social advantage to practise human fellowship, is no adequate reason to suspend those individuals who have reaped the benefits of university education and contacts. When we survey the so-called advance of civilization, it is difficult to comprehend such dictatorial uncivilized methods.

It must be remembered, of course, that the southern states have been free of slavery for less than seventy-five years. The problem of entirely eliminating a racial prejudice which has been inherent in a society for generations is tremendous. But the first place that one would expect tolerance to be practised is in an institution of learning. That a university should be dictated to by influential sources from without, can result only in complete denial of academic freedom which is the very essence of true education. It may be, however, that the faculty of William and Mary College does believe in the intolerant principles on which it has been recently functioning. It may be that it has been uninfluenced from without. But if such is the case, the faculty is not adequate to the ideals necessary to guide a university.

It is somewhat ironical that last week a negro battalion given $1,000, in recognition of its bravery, has turned the money over to the "furtherance of better racial relationships." The University of William and Mary appears to contradict the very aim for which it is fighting in the present war. We talk of an international fellowship or a resumption of a league, but how is such planning to be achieved unless our own stage is relatively set for the local enactment of a principle which we wish to carry out among nations? The very keynote of present discussion throughout the allied nations is that of tolerance—of sacrificing petty prejudices in order to devote our energies towards the establishment of a greater world-wide order.

The students of the College in question would be wise if they remained firm in their former decision of resigning in a body as a potent form of protest against the actions of their faculty.

Correspondence

To the Editor of The Varsity:

Dear Madam;

A few months ago there was considerable discussion in The Varsity on the subject of broadening Science courses by the inclusion of various Arts subjects. The dual advantage of this policy was pointed out; not only would Science students be saved from the danger of thinking that all the problems of Life can be solved by the liberal application of the slide-rule, but, more important still, the mental discipline of Science courses would be more widely applied than it is at present. It is in the realm of Science that the controlled use of intuition has had by far its greatest development. We must use this development more widely, for we are now sufficiently powerful technically to make nearly complete self-destruction possible.

Many of your readers might be interested to know that Science workers as a whole are very much aware of their responsibilities to Society, and that an important step has been taken to fulfill those responsibilities, namely the formation of the Canadian Association of Scientific Workers. Until now, no organization existed in Canada to unite workers from every field of Science in the dual but related tasks of ensuring the greatest use of their accumulated knowledge, and of securing such economic conditions as to give the greatest impetus to the broadening of that knowledge. The C.A.Sc.W. has the accomplishment of this as its goal.

The C.A.Sc.W. differs very widely from some of the "Scientific Societies" in our midst. In fact, one of its stated aims is to "expose the pseudo-Scientific theories" of super-Scientists, and to make sure that Science is not misrepresented by well-meaning but ill-informed people, or by charlatans in quest of personal gain. It is patterned very much after the British A.Sc.W., which has at present over 15,000 members.

An opportunity is being given for students on the campus to become better acquainted with the form and aims of the Association through a meeting to be held on Thursday, February 22, at 7.45 p.m. in room 138 of the Medical Building.

Yours truly,

R. A. Staal,

Massey Hall

The featured work of last night's symphony concert was the Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 3. Although the concerto is new to Toronto, it is an old war-horse to Reginald Godden and one that he handles particularly well. Mr. Godden was quite up to the technical difficulties that the concerto imposes. His interpretation was both accurate and musical. Mr. Godden's ability combined with Sir Ernest MacMillan's vehement accompaniment resulted in a decisively impressive first performance of the concerto.

The improvement that has come over Mr. Godden's playing in the past few years is striking. It is probably not a coincidence that this improvement occurred when Mr. Godden became a disciple of the great French teacher, Robert Schmitz. I doubt if any other "system" could cope with the difficulties which

REFUGEE UNVEILS WARLORDS

Skule Nite Rocket Ship, Eyebrow Tweezers, Links in Titanic Plot, Says Battered Razbry: "Not a Hero"

CERTAINLY NOT

Last civilian to leave S.P.S. before war-lords barred the doors, Varsity reporter Hank Razbry (author of Last Train from Berlin, Last Pushcart from Paris, Last Scooter from Stalingrad, Last Kiddy-car from Kiev) flouted notes hastily jotted on the back of his last rejection-slip from The New Yorker to prove that the Engineers have been secretly arming for months.

"No doubt about it," said Razbry. "Their frosh have been holding basement slide-rule practice since last fall. It is perfectly obvious that they armed till they felt strong enough, then provoked an incident. Their strategy was calculated to deceive future historians into writing that U.C. started this war."

Summoned to a conference of U.C.'s Big Three at an undisclosed strategic headquarters on the north side of Bloor Street, Razbry advised against offering a soft peace.

"They should be exterminated to a moron," he said. "Otherwise our children and our children's children will be menaced." He added that he intended to call his children's children Mutt and Jeff.

"Through a keyhole," he continued, "I saw their naval minister night after night planning stratagems with celluloid ducks in his bathtub. I saw their cold-hearted youth mobilized into Panzer divisions, calmly practising on Victorian dummies the deft removal of Artismen's panz.

"I saw their surveyors last fall nosing around vital defence installations. I heard their women hysterically offer their eyebrow-tweezers to Mars, the better to equip a pincer movement. I saw them inject Kultur into their courses, the better to infiltrate U.C. with agents."

Explaining that he did not escape unscathed, Razbry removed his glove to exhibit a gruesome fractured nanngall. "For three hours," he stated, "I led them (Continued on page 3)

Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerry Ewins

AN ANSWER TO OUR CRITICS . . .

Popular belief seems to be rapidly developing these days that this column is written purely to pan any and every thing that comes along in sport. We are losing our friends of yesterday one by one as each day's editorial appears to step on somebody's toes. Public opinion has turned against us.

We do not profess to be perfect by any means, but the ideas that we endeavor to get across through this medium are strictly in the department of constructive, not destructive, criticism. A praiseworthy event usually receives just as lavish a compliment as a poor show which we toss in the ashcan does in the other direction.

At the first of the Blues' basketball season we thought that we had something this year and began building them up to the sky. What happens? They forthwith go into a slump that has dragged on for a couple of weeks. Anything that is said here is only meant to help put them back up on top again. We think as much of this University as anyone does, and we want to see it have the best possible sporting representation of any on the continent. If spirit and wartime conditions are all that is holding us down, we want to do everything in our power to correct them, and will, too, until this job is taken on by the men to follow us in this thankless position.

SKIMMING THE SURFACE . . .

The Hockey Blues have that all-important game coming up with Victory Aircraft this Friday night at Varsity Arena. If they lose it is their last game of the year. If they win they enter a two-game series with Navy Bulldogs, to take place on the two succeeding Fridays. If they tie, they will play another sudden-death game with the war-workers. Ian Hart, one of the defence mainstays, has gone active with the Navy, so it's uncertain how much longer he will be with the team, but if Bob Murray quits they really are sunk. They looked rather forlorn against Watson's last Friday without him. He seems to have that knack of keeping the fellows organized and instilling a bit of fight into them when they need it most. By the way, the team is asked to turn out in full for today's practice as photographs are being taken.

The Basketball Blues practised yesterday in their silks as they also posed for the yearly photo. Doug Spary was the only absentee, due to his still-ailing ankle. It is hoped that he will be ready for Saturday's big game. . . . The Wrestling Tournament is still unsettled in one weight class, the 155-pounders. Sayers, Sklar, and Solomon will wrestle off in the near future to determine the champion in this division. . . .

That Telegraphic Swim Meet with Queen's, Western and McGill is growing closer. It is slated for March 1, a week from this Thursday. The boys are working hard these days to get themselves into shape for their various events. There will be six in all, a 300-yard three-man relay medley composed of 100 yards breast, back and free, a 50-yard free style, a 100-yard back stroke, a 100-yard breast, a 100-yard free and a 200-yard free style relay. The only stipulation about the meet is that no man can take part in more than three events. There is no limit set for the number of men swimming in the meet. The times of the first two men will be recorded by each university and comparison of the results made by telegraphing communications to the other three members.

THE BATTLE WAGES . . .

On the volleyball front things are drawing slowly to a close as the schedule is run off. Frankly, from where we sit, a final winner will be hard to pick. All the teams show such fine ability and fighting spirit that to attempt a prediction would be almost a shot in the dark. The games are well-played, exciting encounters well worth going up to the gym to watch. . . . Let's see more of you cheerer-oners and helper-outers, eh! These next few games should be something to see—it's really good volleyball these femmes play, and lots of fun for the spectators.

This past week several more games of the schedule have been run through and Vic defeated O.T. earlier in the week by such a staggering score that we blush to print it here. Never let it be said! The fighting Pharmacists went down to defeat by the extremely close and exciting margin of 47 to 44 at the hands of St. Hilda's B. P.H.E. A evened the score on behalf of the smaller faculties by, in turn, knocking over St. Hilda's 49-33 in a much more decisive encounter yesterday.

AND ON THE ICE . . .

The finals are approaching. Vic I and P.H.E. II play off today for a spot in the finals. When we say play off, we mean again, because the game was called at half-time last Monday in order to accommodate some eager public-schoolers, who had priorities. At any rate, the struggle will be resumed today at 4 p.m. for those who are interested in some pretty fair women's hockey. U.C. and St. Hilda's, the other half of the play-offs, will no doubt be there in full force, paying strict attention to such very pertinent things as their opponents' weaknesses. All in all, the coming play-offs should be rather exciting both from the players' and the spectators' point of view. This afternoon, at 4 o'clock is the time, and Varsity Arena is the place. . . . See you there.

A FINAL SPLASH . . .

do we give to the Varsity swimming meet. It is to be held tonight in Hart House pool—the first of two such meets—and will have entries from all the colleges and most of the faculties, large and small. Swimming-speed and style, diving, ornamental, et al are the events to be run off. And a better showing you couldn't see in Billy Rose's Aquacade, for it's a proved fact that Varsity girls do know how to swim. The final swimming meet, featuring the winners of tonight's meet, will be held in Hart House pool at the next "A" Night for all to see. Don't forget to look in on the proceedings this Saturday night.

Vic Team Wins Relay Race in Field of Nineteen Teams: Hamley Captures Novice 2-mile Title

TIMES GOOD

The novice two-mile race and the half-mile relay, teams of six men, were the two events run off this week in the Indoor Interfaculty Track Meet. The completion of these two events yesterday marked the finish of the seventh week of track competition. So far, men from Meds and from Vic have taken most of the honors, with men from School, Trinity and St. Mike's also placing well.

Hamley of Trinity, who has been cutting a prominent figure in track circles around here for the last two years, led the field of two-milers. Hamley's time was 10.34, a good speed for a novice runner, but considerably behind Goering's record of 10.21.2, set just a year ago. Emerson of Vic was close behind in second place, followed by Vincent of St. Mike's, Heney of S.P.S., Ricci of St. Mike's, and Wheeler of Vic. 114 men, constituting 19 teams, ran

Running for Vic's winning team were Hikichi, Masterman, Kingdon and Hart, the champion relay-men at last week's Athletic Night, along with Pearce and Findlay. Their time was 1.48.4, much better than average for the event but not a near-record time.

general welfare of humanity. Perhaps the mechanism of our proud symbol was too elaborate for the citizens of University College to comprehend."

Jeers greeted Tamblin's account of U.C.'s "cowardly" plan to return the cannon publicly at the Arts Ball. "Don Gibson, our foreign secretary that evening, was to be subjected to the delight of these barbarians. That was their plan," he taunted, "only one Schoolman and hundreds of Artsmen."

"However, our government was also making plans," Tamblin continued, describing the Engineer's feat in re-swiping the miniature howitzer. "There was no fever or furor as described in the allegedly impartial foreign press."

(Analysts believe that this could only refer to The Varsity, since the School-controlled organ, Tolke Oike, has not published since the outbreak of hostilities.)

"Our agents closed in and softly whispered 'Skule,'" Tamblin continued in his account of the Arts Ball incident. "The effect was startling. The cannon was hastily dropped. The U.C. mob dispersed with shrieks and yells, and our agents promptly descended the backstairs to as not or disturb any more nervous Artsmen."

Tamblin also described last Friday's Guy-Fawkes attempt to blow up the U.C. Parliamentarian's meeting-place, stating that the explosion came from the contentious cannon, not from a small bomb as reported in Monday's Varsity.

"The Varsity also omitted to mention the half-hour snowball fight that ensued," he charged. "We threw one snowball, but the door closed before it could get in."

("A miniature snowball skirmish" was The Varsity's only reference to the affair.)

the Prokofiev concerto presents with the same marked degree of success. Mr. Godden's performance will probably have the effect of interesting more of Toronto's pianists in the Schmitz method.

The orchestra gave a subtle and sympathetic interpretation of Ravel's Mother Goose Suite and a confident, familiar rendition of Rossini's Barber of Seville Overture. However, its playing of Mozart's Symphony No. 39 was methodical and listless. One writer in this column attributed these sporadic uninspired displays to union interference. However, that writer was misinformed. The union has been very co-operative and the maximum of three rehearsals per concert was set by the orchestra management rather than dictated by the union. It cannot be blamed if the standard of orchestral performance in Toronto is low. The orchestra performed coherently last night, but a professional group should be able to do more than that after three rehearsals. Not only did Sir Ernest fail to dominate while performing Mozart last night, but he lapsed into apathetic interpretation. The orchestra has been playing more often than ever before this year and one wonders if this extra work is the cause of its poorer performance.

A fact that emerges clearly is that the orchestra is not as proficient as it might be. One of the results has been the shifting of the centre of Canadian musical activity to Montreal. The cure would be the injection of new life into the group, a task almost impossible to accomplish in wartime. But it is something that must be done after the war, or Toronto will forever remain relegated to a secondary position in the musical world.

Hats off to Mr. David Niven who comes through with flying colors in what is one of the best non-propaganda war pictures to be shown to the public so far.

UPTOWN "THE WAY AHEAD" The plot is woven around a group of Englishmen, from every walk of life, who find themselves drafted into the army. David Niven, as their officer, finds them rough and unwilling to co-operate at first, which gives the movie-makers a chance to lose themselves in some delightful, unadulterated and down to earth humor.

Finally the regiment is molded into a formidable fighting force, and is sent into action. Hollywood could not hope to attempt such realistic and dramatic actions as are pictured. The scenes of the men on the torpedood troopship, and fighting against the enemy, are remarkable. There are no dashing young men in unruined uniforms, gallantly taking on the enemy alone. There is mud, and sweat, and blood pictured on the faces of these fighters.

There are no holds barred in these scenes, and they certainly will make the public realize that war is not as nice as they picture it to be. Again we say, well done, Mr. Niven, let's see you again soon.

R. K. ARNOLD REVIEWS NIETZSCHE

William Nietzsche's works were mainly psychological, though he would be credited with a great deal of research in both the psychological and philosophical fields, said Professor R. K. Arnold in a lecture sponsored by the Victoria College Council in Alumni Hall yesterday afternoon.

Nietzsche, according to the speaker, enjoyed many varied reputations, such as The Great Liberator from Outworn Moral Traditions; The Prophet and Lawgiver of New Ages; The Ecologist and Instigator of Wars; The Greatest Moralizer of the 19th Century; The Greatest nihilist; The Pascal of Criticism; The Great Nihilistic Cynic; The Man who Completed Christianity and Led Beyond It; The Martyr of German Stupidity; The Forerunner of Hitler and Leader of Herrenvolk; or The Hero of Experimental Thought who sacrificed his life and sanity to his diabolic task.

Prof. Arnold outlined the childhood of Nietzsche as spent largely among women. At the time he was very earnest and religious, and soon won a scholarship at Schulpforta, where he made few friends. In 1867 he was drafted into the German army, where he became incapacitated, mounting a horse. Two years later he became an associate professor at the University of Basel. At 25 he was made a full professor.

In 1870 he returned to the classroom again, after the Franco-Prussian War, but broke loose from the bonds of German nationalism, which he began to criticize. It was then that he decided to become a philosopher instead of carrying on in his role as a teacher, Dr. Arnold said.

In his second philosophical work, entitled "Thoughts Out of Season," he attacked Strauss, Schopenhauer, Wagner and the study of history. The main theme of his philosophy concerned nihilism, leading into a psychological study of personalities both collective and individual.

Hart House Elections Used As War Weapon

By Reg Herman

Bursting like a bombshell on the "war-tense" campus yesterday came the ordinarily innocuous announcement: "Nominations for Hart House Elections open 9 a.m. Friday, February 23, and close 6 p.m. Wednesday, February 28. Election Day, Wednesday, March 7."

A terrible weapon has been thrust into the hands of the two warring faculties of S.P.S. and U.C. In the battle to the death resulting from the notorious Cannon Incident, these two campus bodies have been searching for just such a murderous and humiliating weapon as has been offered them in the Hart House elections.

In widespread espionage activities, S.P.S. (Secret Polling Service) agents uncovered the following facts from the "foreign press" about past elections: "Two years ago the thoroughly undemocratic and incomprehensible 300-vote rule resulted in Engineers' control of 50 per cent of the committees, with U.C. warriors on only two committees."

The report in The Varsity, the "foreign" press, continued: "Each of four major committees is composed of ten men, neatly providing (in theory) one man from each of the ten voting faculties. Because of the light vote two years ago, the 300-vote system was replaced last year by the rule that each candidate must poll half the vote polled by the top man for that committee before standing any chance of election."

War Problems Are Outlined

The young victims of war on the home-front, the "door-key children" whose mothers are working, often feel that society rejects them, and they soon develop a bitterness towards others, said Mrs. F. H. Crowther of the University Settlement. Mrs. Crowther spoke on Tuesday at the University Women's Club tea on "Social Needs Arising from the War."

There may be tragedy in the future for many Canadian children, said Mrs. Crowther, as she pointed out that adolescents, regarded as children in pre-war days, were now looked upon as grown-ups. In their new role as adults they are fighting, marrying, working and spending money, all of which confuses them and adds to the turmoil in which they find themselves.

Mrs. Crowther also spoke of the excessive drinking practised by some women, left behind by men overseas.

Eisenhardt Tells P & H E Of Lack of Instructors

Major Ian Eisenhardt, National Director of Physical Fitness for Canada, in an address to the Physical Education students last night, stated that there is great need of trained instructors in the field of physical education.

"Both the federal and provincial governments are looking for qualified leaders and there is indeed a crying need of direction and leadership in the whole field of recreation and physical fitness," he said.

Major Eisenhardt outlined the general program, now under way, for the construction of recreation and community centres.

agents as they read further: "By this system all candidates above the half-way line are chosen by faculties in order of rank. Even if 20 S.P.S. men head the poll, candidates from all other faculties over the half-way mark determined by the votes polled by the highest candidate would have to be elected before a second Schoolman can be considered."

The agents discovered last year's glorious results: In the nominations the Red Schoolhouse sailed ahead with 21, whereas several faculties had only three nominations, one less than could ensure representation on each of the four major committees.

The elections were a smashing victory for School, listed by committees as follows: House—2 S.P.S., 1 U.C.; Art—3 S.P.S., 1 U.C.; Library—2 S.P.S., 1 U.C.; Music—3 S.P.S., 1 U.C. Other faculties were fairly represented.

Shocked by the facts of the report, the U.C. commanders immediately began an investigation and uncovered the following facts: The election campaigns of the last two years have been light and insipid, lacking all the color and imagination that ran riot with previous elections.

Despite the 35 per cent vote of 0.087 voters last year, the campaign lacked color—even the blotters were only black and white. The only true spirit was defeated with the infamous one-vote McGeehee of The Varsity, who "haunted" mammoth posters in paper-strewn corridors.

Frightened and shaken, the grim U.C. general staff faced the facts: The heritage of spirited pandemonium of bygone years is going to return in a more sinister manner than the back-slapping, sand-bick boards, clanging bells, hoarse barbers, and cigars.

The Cannon Incident and the bitter war between two great bodies hangs as a pall over what promises to be a contest that will sizzle far above even the pre-war high of a 50 per cent campus vote.

EDITORIAL

Get Ready!!

Tomorrow morning at 9:00 a.m. the nomination of candidates for the several Hart House committees will open. This will be the opening section of a test that will indicate whether male students at the University of Toronto are willing, in the midst of the stresses of wartime study, to take their democratic opportunities and make an effort to put an ideal into practice, or whether they intend to ape their elders in that peculiar sign of decadent democracy, an over-acute alertness to the faults of administration combined with apathy in regard to their own efforts to correct them.

Before a democratic body can be effective it must have able members, and the best way to obtain the most able men is through strong competition amongst them so that the voters will bargain for the best their votes can obtain for them. The healthiest early sign that the Hart House elections can show this year is a flood of able and willing candidates. That there are able young men on the campus still is seen in the activity that has been shown this year by team managers, organizers and student administrators of all sorts whose work has often been reflected in the news stories of The Varsity although they themselves have received little direct credit. Many of these will graduate, but by no means all of them are in their final year now. It has been customary for each generation on the campus to believe that it was the race of giants and that those who come after are bound to be nothing but ineffectuals. This will be true of the class of '45. It is up to the classes following them to prove that this is not true. Their first major opportunity is now offered them.

Justice Riddell Honored by Brown

Dr. Wallace T. Brown, president and vice-chancellor of Victoria University, spoke Tuesday at the funeral of the late Mr. Justice William Riddell, of the Ontario Supreme Court. He declared that society gave Mr. Riddell "but one thing, the opportunity to make good." Dr. Brown said he gained success because he was a "prodigious worker" and used his many talents.

Dr. Brown remarked on the way Mr. Riddell began life, with no social or pecuniary advantages. He added that "whatever the changes the future may bring in our national and social life, I pray God that we may ever preserve this vested right of the human soul to surmount difficulties and to have the opportunities of development."

Hart House tripled its staff and prepared for a grim old time late yesterday, after U.C. President Bloeb Gell's casual announcement that every man registered in the Royal College will turn out as a candidate in the Hart House elections.

"Total war," said Gell, "demands total nomination. School has dominated the Massey Mansion far too long. Gilhooley is a Schoolman. Cowcatcher is a Schoolman. The Warden is positively lyrical about his old School tie. These men are hangers-on from early School-dominated committees."

"On election day," Gell continued, "every U.C. man will be in the running, and every U.C. man will get out and vote."

Asked as to what would happen when four hundred U.C. candidates figured in the returns with one vote each, Gell blushed slightly and pointed out that they would not, of course, all vote for themselves. "This is democracy," he stormed. "The people will elect their choice—me, for instance."

Instant response came from the Little Red Schoolhouse, where Prime Minister Phil Tablet announced that every Schoolman would run in the elections, not once but twice—under his own name and another. "We know a thing or two about running elections," he hinted. "Every man jack of us must vote, and those who do not must sit on the committees. That'll larn them."

Three Hall Porters were trampled to death as hysterical line-ups of prospective candidates formed outside the Warden's office to procure nomination papers. In and out of the line-up weaved

Hollywood has presented the major problem of the post-war world—what to do with the German people—in the picture, "Tomorrow the World." They have not, however, solved the issue. They have presented the situations that arise when a 12-year-old Nazi youth is taken into an American home. But it must be remembered that the boy is in a democratic environment and it will be, of course, impossible to create the same circumstances for a whole nation.

Emil is at first an incorrigible, hardened Hun who is devoid of all emotion except hate and fear. He tries to break up the marriage of his guardian (Fredric March) and the local school teacher, who is Jewish (Betty Field) with insult and craft.

But when, after cruelly injuring the small daughter of his host when she refused to promise not to tell her father that he had been searching a desk for military papers, Emil is still offered a birthday present from her, he breaks down and cries. This shows that the thorough job that the Nazis have done on the boy is finally breaking.

Slippery Homer, as Emil, gives a magnificent portrayal of human emotion. Though not solving the important problem of what to do with Germany, the movie will give food for thought to people who believe that the German people are inveterate criminals, explaining as it does that it is years of training to this end that have made the German what he is today. It suggests that, through perseverance and interest, we may be able to transform him into a human being.

Award Prizes For Speeches

Two shiny silver dollars each went to E. M. Rumney and B. Stoicheff, co-winners of an impromptu public speaking contest for first and second year Schoolmen at the S.P.S. Parliament yesterday afternoon.

Called to order by Speaker Sally MacDonald after the uproarious declaration of war upon U.C., the Parliament heard speakers on diverse topics, and voted that the first prize be split.

Rumney spoke on the subject: "It is Better to Have Loved and Lost Than Never to Have Loved At All." His main point was that, once having lost a man still had room for a second chance.

Stoicheff, the co-winner and only sophomore in the contest, won with his subject, "Bicycling." He told of his experiences travelling by cycle through Quebec and Ontario, where he met at first hand the people of French Canada's capital.

Modelling in Clay Demonstrated at H. H.

"Three-quarters of the work is observing, creating a mental impression," said Miss Eugenia Berlin before commencing a demonstration of modelling in clay in the Hart House gallery yesterday.

On a stick, called an armature, in a wooden base, she built up a form in clay of a shape roughly like a head. By adding small amounts of clay at a time she brought it to resemble one of the audience. This likeness was modified later by taking away small bits of the completed form, and the resulting bust bore a resemblance to Comptroller J. R. Gilley, who was in the audience.

No Private Lives Led By Varsity Students

By Virginia Fox

Tucked away in one corner of the Registrar's office is a miniature detective bureau—officially known as the Records Department. And if you're the type who naively maintains: "I've a private life to lead," don't read any further. Your illusions will be shattered.

For, at the Records Department, the would-be Hawkshaws keep not one but three records of each student. The first, a sort of master card, concerns itself with conventional information such as your name, year of birth, address, phone number, high school you attended, father's name and occupation, and the degrees you obtain. It also records your jumps from course to course, and college to college. And when you graduate this information is repeated and carefully filed in a cabinet marked "Year Cards."

But it is after graduation that the Records Department begins to enjoy its sleuthing. In one case are thousands of "geographical" cards. Thus, as you travel over the country you are filed under the name of the city you alight in. The number of U. of T. graduates now resident in the southern states might be a criterion of Torontonians' opinion of Canadian weather.

The reason for this careful recording of addresses—indeed, the reason for the department's existence—is the Senate election every four years. As each member of the alumni has a vote, it is essential that he can be contacted easily. Telephone directories of many cities aid in tracking down addresses.

The occupations of graduates are also noted, as are their marriages and deaths. The three Toronto downtown dailies, Saturday Night, The Varsity, and other publications, are scanned regularly for this and other information about former students.

"While we are primarily interested in addresses, marriages, and occupations of the graduates," said Miss M. Thompson, Records clerk, "we like to embroider

Co-host representative of the forthcoming Athletic Night, Ken Carrol promises that Saturday's program will be the finest of the year. To back up this bold statement, he gives his reasons, "the three best faculties on the campus are sponsoring the entertainment and we have had ample opportunity to incorporate the better ideas from the four previous events into our plans together with a number of original brainwaves."

Hosts for the night are Dentistry, Trinity, and St. Mike's, and they are concentrating their efforts on the collection of books, magazines and playing cards for the Navy League.

To equal last season's high contributions, every student attending must bring five magazines plus a book or pack of playing cards. Later, boxes for receiving any related material will be distributed among the various colleges and faculties.

The highlight of the night will be the basketball game bringing together the Varsity Blues and a team representing Windsor's Assumption College. The game promises to be a battle royal as the visitors threaten to avenge the defeat plastered on them a year ago.

The warm-up game at 7:30 p.m. last year's intramural basketball championship Dentistry team against an army team from Borden.

A long stag line will form in the pool gallery to view the display of feminine pulchritude as the annual women's inter-faculty swim meet is run off.

The upper gym will be the scene of a volleyball game between the St. Mike's A and School IV.

Come ten o'clock and both gyms resound with merriment as the dancers throng onto the polished surfaces.

"And that isn't all," claims Carroll, "we have a number of surprises in store. We have even considered turning off the lights at half-time, but this might not be popular with the students."

our records as much as possible."

This "embroidery" has yielded a long row of cabinets in which are filed folders containing all clippings about the University's ex-students. And the folders bear such names as W. L. Mackenzie King, Sir William Mulock, Dr. H. J. Cody, and Sir Edward Beatty.

Also prominently displayed is the cabinet containing the records of the University's 9,947 former students and graduates now on active service.

Working in close conjunction, the sleuths of the Records Department exchange information with the sleuths of the Alumni Federation in a sort of personalized scheme of Lend-Lease.

So, when you graduate, you need not feel that you are severing a connection. For the work of the Records Department assures you that wherever you go and whatever you do will be strictly "on the record."

Camera Club Meeting Features Color Night

Although criteria in judging color photographs are different from those used in black and white, the rules of composition are fundamentally the same, explained Professor A. F. Coventry, when opening the Camera Club Color Night in the Music Room of Hart House last night.

Eight and sixteen-millimeter color movies were shown, illustrating that much more detail can be recorded on the larger sized film.

In the still section of the exhibit there were many effects and defects which the exhibitors explained, excused, and criticized as their slides were shown.

Several Ansco color transparencies were shown, demonstrating the remarkably true representation of colors which it is possible to obtain with this new process.

Any time's SHOPPING TIME!

FAIRWEATHER'S "CARDIGAN SUITS" in Shetland type fabrics at 16.95 and 19.95 make good winter-into-spring talk these days when you're hunting for that certain something to lift your mind out of that merely studious level to which a girl is apt to descend if she isn't careful. They come in colors to make you prettier, and the prices, as has been stated, are pleasant news. Fairweather's blouses too are in gala array to gang up with you against winter mentalities, and you can pick a winner around the comfortable 2.98 to 3.98 price range.

MORE SKI-ING WEATHER AND ALSO, doubtless, more bumps and sprains and painful muscles. Sloan's, however, being handy in the medicine cabinet or locker-room, is "sprain insurance." Sloan's is a quick worker, relaxes those painful tie-ups in muscular co-ordination, and sets the circulation flowing more easily, brings your aching parts back to ease and comfort with a pleasing lack of fuss and fussing.

MATCH IT... lady, don't go off in a rust-colored sweater with a mauve tinted lipstick... take a look in the mirror first, then another one at the Three Flowers assortment of Rouge and Lipstick colors and pick yourself the right shade for your own "right" color tone. There's Royal Red and Carmeen, and Crimson and Rose Cerise, all in as competent a set of flattery as you'll find these days when Color Counts. Three Flowers products are made by Richard Hudnut, which tells a quality story in seven simple words.

ALSO WE LIKE TO TELL YOU ABOUT those three-piece outfits, suits and topcoats in checks and plain colors, smart as a subscription to your favorite fashion magazine, and on view for you at Northway's Fashionland where you may glean other Springtime fashions at your leisure. There's nothing more practical for wearing right now than a well-made suit, and you can add the topcoat later if you like. At Northway's Fashionland there is also a new idea in a jumper dress in printed jersey with short-sleeved blouse which will intrigue you.

SHE WAS A SMART GIRL, but she'd been carrying around the same old accessories for the past three years. The handbag, for instance, used to be black but had now faded to a kind of gunmetal grey. Although the rest of her costume was well chosen, it took its entire cue from the look of that battered handbag. Well, after a while, she got wise to it and went over to the Evangeline Shop on Yonge Street, near Bloor, picked herself out a good square-edged bag with a lot of honest black oomph. Funny what some self-reliance will do for a girl. Now she's thinking of dating one of the faculty...

Lost and Found...

Turn backward, turn backward,
O time in thy flight,
And make me a youth again
Just for tonight.

Wistfully they skated on to the once renowned ice lanes. Their hearts were young and their heads were grey. Their bones creaked as the old mill had never creaked. Grizzled veterans were wringing the last drop of play from their day. Childhood heroes called back for an encore.

Amidst much pro and con-fusion some thirty oldtimers skated on to the Gardens' ice surface under the aliases of the Maroons of 1934 and the Maple Leafs of 1932.

Time has flown by but too swiftly. Press agency has surpassed the names of great athletes who have come and gone. Here were the famed of old, carrying a bit of extra baggage but gamely carrying on.

Many memories were revived as Joe Primeau and Hooley Smith faced-off. The famed "Kid Lane" was back with the team of Clancy and Horner on defence. This was reunion night.

Some of the participants tumbled along. Some made a hit with the fans but didn't cause a home run. Some showed form which would justify the flogging of N.H.L. scouts. Fellows like Primeau, Cook, Boucher, Biluco, Bauer and Colville were little short of being in terrific form. Brother Lionel showed up the younger Charlie Conacher in form, but Chuck's shot is still there as Goalie Paul Hutzulak will swear. The rest? They missed always and all ways but the crowd loved it!

The staging was perfect as the players were re-introduced while skating under a giant spotlight. The ovations were deafening, but little compared to that which ensued when Conacher's goal was announced as "Conacher from Primeau and Jackson." That almost brought down the house.

Then there was Shore's rushing, Clancy's defensive tactics, Day's fight and Worters' goal tending. The patter of feats can still be heard today.

P.H.E. II Has Had It!

Yesterday, the Phys-Ed Freshies wound up their fighting career by turning in some of their best play against Vic I. The Scarlet and Goldsters did some of their best playing to pull out the 3-0 victory over the hard-playing youngsters. From the first, P.H.E. played a strong game which by the end had become a demoralized attempt to stave off the Vic squad and put a couple over on Helen Stewart. By that time, despite a couple of close ones near the Vic home base, it was too late.

Vic this time really played. They had lost a little of that confidence built up during the period when they acquired 21 goals, with only one scored against them, and turned in a top show, with no holds barred.

About the play. The passing was much better on the Vic side. Here some years of past experience shows. The defence on the winning team is tops, and perhaps the best around the campus. There are few that can compare with Helen Patrick or Betty Fullerton for that matter, in this defence job. On the forward line Leone Eunson and Shirley Pearce were outstanding, while Joan Chalk played up to her usual standard. Vic is certainly a team with power to burn.

P.H.E. II wasn't slow in the hockey tactics arena. They are perhaps faster but lack the ability to outstickhandle their checks, while they took their hardest beating from that squeeze-play between Vic players and the boards.

Math Society Is Told Fifth 'Athletic Night' Closes '44-'45 Season M & P To Be Enlarged

Chemistry to be Major Subject in First Year of New M.P.C. Course; Students Favor Arts Subjects

PETITION DISCUSSED

At a meeting of the Mathematics and Physics Society yesterday afternoon, Dr. S. Beatty, Dean of Arts, discussed past and future changes in the M. & P. course. Afterwards the president, Isobel Struthers (IV M. & P.), announced the results of the Society's recent questionnaire which revealed a strong majority in favor of adding more liberal arts subjects to the course.

Dr. Beatty explained that chemistry would now become a major subject in the first year course which, renamed Mathematics, Physics, Chemistry, will contain an additional chemistry laboratory period. Students majoring in chemistry will henceforth take the first year of this new course and not first year Honor Science as heretofore. To compensate for this increase in chemistry, the number of lectures in calculus and English is to be slightly reduced. M.P.C. students will take English as a separate class, but will cover the same prescription of books as at present.

In the discussion that followed, Dean Beatty stated that no changes were contemplated in the past options.

At this point the president revealed the results of the recent M. & P. questionnaire, answered by 75 per cent of the course. To the question, "Do you think that other liberal arts subjects should be included in the M. & P. course?" the results were as follows:

	Yes	No	Undecided
1st year	40%	35%	52%
2nd year	70%	10%	20%
3rd year	60%	40%	—
4th year	70%	—	30%

It was significant that students in the higher years were more strongly in favor of an increase in liberal arts.

Students especially desired philosophy. (Continued on page 4)

Chem Club Establishes Scientific Fellowship

Films on the developments in Soviet Science were shown at the last official meeting of the University Chemistry Club, held in the Women's Union last night.

During the business meeting which preceded the films, it was decided that the U. of T. Chemistry Club establish a fellowship of $75 or more a year. This would be given to the student obtaining the highest academic standing in First Class Honors in third year and proceeding to fourth year.

The executive for 1945-46 was elected as follows: President, Laurie Woodruff; vice-president, Harold Neal; secretary-treasurer, Margaret Vanstone; graduate representative, Daphne Lane; staff representative, Dr. D. J. LeRoy; honorary president, Prof. W. S. Funnell.

"Glimpses of Soviet Science," the first film shown, presented resumes of recent investigations in various scientific fields. The second film reviewed the two discoveries of liquid air and the use of cerebro-spinal fluid in the treatment of shock.

The meeting was concluded with dancing and refreshments.

Debaters Argue Secession Issue

At the Interfaculty Debating Union at St. Mike's yesterday the resolution "That Canada should withdraw from the British Empire" was upheld by a sweeping majority of 59 to 19.

First speaker for the affirmative, Bill Lyon, of St. Mike's, stated: "It is extremely humiliating that Canada is bound by formality in having to ask Westminster for permission to change its constitution. Canadian independence would have a sobering effect on Canadian racialism, which will exist as long as each Canadian has two countries—one in North America and one in Europe."

Speaking for the negative, Ted Christie of Vic began with the hypothesis—Because Canada already has political, economic and social independence, there are only two possibilities of withdrawal: one, union with the U.S.A., and two, as an independent nation.

Enlarging on the subject, he explained that our parliamentary system stands as a barrier to union with the United States. As for the second, he continued, Canada is essentially a trading nation, and depending on staple products, is one of the least self-sufficient of nations. By remaining in the British Commonwealth, Canada can retain its position as a balance between the United States, Russia and England, he declared.

Marguerite Delaney of U.C., continuing the debate for the affirmative, explained: "Canada's geographic position encourages a natural flow of trade north and south on this continent, to supplant exploitation by Great Britain. Canada is not a nation if it merely acts as a mediator between other countries."

Concluding for the negative, Patricia Heighington of St. Hilda's argued: "The Commonwealth is an astonishing example of free association of nations, and membership does not commit Canada to England's treaties and obligations. This is more important than short-sighted and arrogant nationalism."

Post-mortem: After a temporary lull of three weeks, the International Student Service has suddenly gone over to the offensive again. I.S.S. officials, convinced that their final objective will materialize yet, explain that they are now fishing for dollars with a new and alluring bait. In a few days, 1,500 raffle tickets will be sold all over the campus for a dine each, and any one of them may bring a rare prize.

This is how it came about. Just when the portals of Convocation Hall closed behind their temperamental auction sale in January, the I.S.S. received a strange-looking trunk. It came from Hollywood. When they opened it frantically, a letter fell out, which stated that the writer didn't smoke a pipe, the only one he used being the property of Universal Studios. The letter was signed: "Basil Rathbone."

Pictured above is Lester B. Pearson, O.B.E., Canada's Ambassador to the United States, who is guest of honor at the University of Toronto, where he was a student and later a Staff member.

The Varsity Reviews

ACTA VICTORIANA

Perhaps, after all, they could use us as editor of Acta. Under our persistent tutelage it has improved quite remarkably. Perhaps it's just that we're growing educated to accept Acta's premise, that write-ups deserve as much place as creative literature; or perhaps it's the return of such too-long-absent contributors as John Speers; but the current third issue is the best of this year's crop, and stacks up very well against the offerings of former seasons.

We will gobble up write-ups avidly, as long as they're sugar-coated like Mr. Speers' breezy summary of Wynmool musicals. And we tip our hat politely to Miss Hare, now that she has abandoned the feeble mock-hitherish Incidentally for a cleanly-written round-up of Activities at Victoria.

Nan Rowland's Looking Back recounts the voyages of last November's Pinafore just a little too back-slappingly, while Morley Clarke's piece on the World Student Christian Federation is thoughtless and interestingly factual while just lacking that needed punch.

Indeed, journalism doesn't seem to be Vic's long suit. The W.S.C.F. could be made mightily interesting, and so, judge by the material included in Eleanor Coutts' sketch, could the career of Dean Bennett. That the latter piece falls short of being brilliant is really not so terrible an incident, seeing that the information included is so copious and interesting. But readers of Rex Wilson's brilliant profile of Dr. Pratt in an Acta of two years back can compare and judge for themselves how many opportunities the current writer has missed.

The sports write-ups are back, and so are book reviews, this time fairly timely. Earth and High Heaven and A. J. M. Smith's News of the Phoenix are the works treated in the latter department, the second much the more interestingly. In the Creative Literature Department, Phyllis Bloom is back with another poem, full of her passionate lyricism. (Continued on page 4)

Outstanding in Sport During College Years

"Mike" Became Famous at Varsity as Player, Coach and Supporter Until Appointed to Diplomatic Service

ORGANIZED LACROSSE

In many accounts of Canada's new ambassador to the United States, Lester B. Pearson, O.B.E., today's guest of honor at the University, there has been little mention of his earlier days as an undergraduate and as a member of the staff of the University. Affectionately known as "Mike" to his intimates, he made his bow to University athletics on the Victoria interfaculty rugby, hockey, and basketball teams in 1913-14. In the following year he represented the University, and in 1919 was granted his first Color for basketball.

During his sojourn in England at St. John's College, Oxford, he organized and coached a lacrosse team. When he returned to Canada he was appointed to the staff of the University in History, and resumed his interest in Varsity athletics. For three years he was coach of the Senior Intercollegiate hockey team.

Together with Dr. W. A. Dafeo, he endeavored to revive lacrosse, which had slumped badly, and if he had remained at the University there is no doubt he would have met with success in that sport. As it was, the team visited Buffalo and renewed relations with the Crescent Club of Brooklyn, N.Y. Before the 1929 season, however, his appointment to the Canadian Diplomatic Service deprived University athletics of an enthusiastic supporter and an energetic coach.

Among the illustrious line of distinguished graduates who have done so much for the development of athletics in this University, none hold a higher position or are more affectionately regarded than "Mike" Pearson. As an ambassador of the Empire he has done much to make Canada known in various parts of the Commonwealth and in the republic to the south.

UNIVERSITY STAFF DINNER

A dinner in honor of President and Mrs. H. J. Cody will be given by the Staff of the University of Toronto and of the Federated and Affiliated Colleges in the Concert Hall of the Royal York Hotel on Tuesday, February 27, at 6:30 p.m.

Foresters' Club to Hear Professor J. M. Gibson

The annual banquet of the Foresters' Club of the University of Toronto is being held at 6:45 this evening in the Great Hall at Hart House. The banquet is put on by the Forestry undergraduates and is for all persons connected with the Foresters' Club.

Professor J. Miles Gibson, head professor of Forestry at the University of New Brunswick, is to be the guest speaker.

Following the banquet, a dance will be held in the Music Room, recorded music being provided. During the dance an interlude of entertainment has been scheduled, when the Forestry Quartette will sing a short program of appropriate numbers. Bill Clipperton is conducting the quartette, which is made up of Vince van Vlymen, Jack Carr, Tom Ryan, and Bill himself. Walt Giles will accompany at the piano.

BLUES vs. ASSUMPTION

Tomorrow night the curtain will close on the fifth and final "A" Night of the season. This will be the last chance the students will have this season to come to support the Varsity Blues in an exhibition game. It will also be the last chance that they will have to make up for all the books, magazines and playing cards that have not been donated as yet.

The Athletic Night, sponsored jointly by Dentistry, Trinity, and St. Mike's, promises to be one of the finest of the year. The feature of the evening will be the basketball game at 8:30 in the big gym, pitting the Varsity Blues against a team from Assumption College in Windsor. The Blues will be out to repeat their victory of last year over the Windsor team.

Organized cheerleaders will do their best to stir up some of that old intercollegiate spirit so sadly lacking in recent years. They will be in action during the main basketball game.

From 8 to 10 p.m. the pool will see action as the annual women's interfaculty swim meet is held. There will also be a diving display.

The feature basketball game will be preceded at 7:30 by another game between a Borden army team and last year's intramural basketball champions from Dentistry.

Things start popping in the upper gym at 7:30, when a basketball team from Trinity meets the St. Mike's A team. At 8:30 an all-star Varsity volleyball team will meet the team from H.M.C.S. York.

The boxing room will be used for games as on other Athletic Nights. For the evening, the wrestling room will act as the intercollegiate room.

At 10 o'clock the decks will be cleared for dancing, both in the main gym and the upper gym. Jack Patterson will, as (Continued on page 4)

Dr. Lovell Will Discuss Conquest of Robot Bomb

"The Gun Director's Conquest of the Robot Bomb" is the topic of the lecture to be given under the joint auspices of the Royal Canadian Institute and the Toronto Section of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers in Convocation Hall tomorrow at 8:15 p.m. by Dr. C. A. Lovell of the Bell Telephone Laboratories Incorporated at Murray Hill, New Jersey.

Dr. Lovell graduated from the Mississippi College in 1922 and later received his M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania. In 1929 he joined the technical staff of the Bell Telephone Laboratories Incorporated to engage in loud-speaker design in the Acoustic Research Department.

As a result of his work on the electrical director for anti-aircraft guns, he was selected by the army to visit anti-aircraft installations in Great Britain and France during the summer of 1944. As an indication of the accuracy and effectiveness of the electrical solution, Dr. Lovell will relate the story of the action against the flying bomb.

Lantern slides will be used to illustrate both the technical and non-technical aspects of the lecture. As an added interest, Dr. Lovell will show a sound motion picture entitled "V.I." which is now being distributed by British Information Services.

Hart House Committees

Nominations for the various Hart House Committees open at 9:00 a.m. today and will close at 6:00 p.m. next Wednesday. The annual elections will be held one week from that day, on Wednesday, 7th March.

In order that candidates and voters will have a full knowledge of the work done by the various committees, the Varsity publishes herewith the customary outline of the duties of the committees. It is based on an editorial written for the Varsity in 1940 by J. B. Bickersteth, Warden of Hart House, who has again taken up his duties as Warden in the House after an absence of four years, during which he has been prominent in the organization of Army education, serving for some time as Director of Education for the Imperial Army.

The House Committee

The House Committee is concerned with the general management and social activities of Hart House, including the annual All-University Fall Dance. They are responsible to the Board for seeing that the structure itself and lab equipment are maintained in good repair. They deal with all matters that make for the comfort and convenience of members. The Tuck Shop, Billiard Room, Barber Shop and guest rooms come under their supervision. This committee is also directly concerned with the operation of the Great Hall, both as regards the daily meals served to members and the large number of special functions and dinners. The House Committee is represented on the Board of Directors of the University Settlement, and members of the Committee visit the Settlement regularly. They are also responsible for the management of the annual committee elections in March.

The Library Committee

The Library Committee controls the library, being responsible for the purchase of all books, which include biography, novels, history and general literature. Its object is to build up and maintain what is rapidly becoming a first-rate collection of books chosen for leisure reading. This committee is making a valuable collection of private press books which are shown in a display case. This committee also selects the periodicals for the reading room.

The Music Committee

The Music Committee supervises all the musical activities of the House, the chief of which are the series of eight Sunday Evening Concerts. The musicians of this city most generously make themselves responsible for these programs as friends of Hart House. The Committee arranges mid-day Sing Songs each Friday, which are a popular feature, and informal piano recitals by members are held from time to time.

The Art Committee

The Art Committee arranges fortnightly exhibitions in the Print Room. It organizes weekly art classes and informal discussions on art in the gallery. The Arts and Crafts Room comes under the supervision of this Committee, as do the purchase of prints and art books, and in conjunction with an Advisory Committee of Artists the purchase of pictures for Hart House.

The Camera Committee

The Camera Committee is in general concerned with the encouragement of photography among members of Hart House. It controls the use of the camera quarters, the valuable equipment in these quarters and the arrangement of exhibitions.

Squash Racquets Committee

This Committee controls the use of the squash courts, arranges individual tournaments, and is in touch with the intramural Squash Racquets Committee regarding the tournament arranged by that body. This Committee also arranges matches between other clubs and Hart House.

The Hart House Ideal

The ideal which should inspire the committees and all members of Hart House cannot be more nobly expressed than in the Founders' Prayer of Hart House, which is as follows: "That Hart House, under the guidance of its Warden, may serve, in the generations to come, the highest interest of this University by drawing into a common fellowship the members of the several faculties, and by gathering into a true society the teacher and the student, the graduate and the undergraduate; further, that the members of Hart House may discover within its walls the true education that is to be found in good fellowship, in friendly disputation and debate, in the conversation of wise and earnest men, in music, pictures and the play, in the casual book, in sports and games and the mastery of the body; and lastly, that, just as in the days of war this House was devoted to the training in arms of the young soldiers, so in the time of peace its halls may be dedicated to the task of arming youth with strength and suppleness of limb, with clarity of mind, and with a spirit of true religion and high endeavour."

ART-MUSIC Drama

No Holds Barred

Toronto Art Gallery

Last night was "Open Night" at the Toronto Art Gallery. I believe it was the second or third one of the season. The feature of the evening, at any rate, was a demonstration of water-color painting by W. A. Winter. Now here is an artist who is uninhibited in style and crisply integrated in technique. He is a genre painter, like Franklin Arbuckle or R. York Wilson.

For last night's demonstration he chose to do a back-yard garden scene in North Toronto—a subject which would demand no mere smattering of imagination. He sketched the design lightly in charcoal, flooded his rough rag paper with water, and went to work. In something under half-an-hour he had completed a neat, vibrant little water-color. As he proceeded, he explained to a fascinated coterie of watchers some of the intricacies of color harmonies and design. He made it all sound easy.

Another feature of the entertainment or essay in education, was the showing of a film "The Plough that Broke the Plain", directed, I believe, by the American Pare Lorentz. (I didn't see the titles.) It was an epic of intense, subjective photography, with very second-rate musical background, and some sort of moral about dirt farming in the Middle West.

But the best part of the show was a room, where crude easels had been set up, with lots of big brushes and buckets of brilliant poster paint. There was a model—a negro girl with intriguing facial planes; and there was a still life group—a haphazard collection of ski equipment. And anybody might sit down and splash away to their heart's content on huge sheets of paper. Six little boys were busy in one corner drawing aeroplanes and battleships. With something of the same perversity, I sat down and tried to copy a kaleidoscopic Monet. And finished it. Well, that gives you an idea of "Open Night" at

"We Make You Think"

CHAPTER SIX

Dr McGeech was too old a hand to give up because of a cold trail. He sniffed for a moment and caught from the north-north-east the odor of frog. That way lay his quarry, Fakir Althell-allova, the frog-spearer.

From an inside pocket he whipped his portable motorcycle, emptied his cigar-lighter into the gas-tank, and in an instant was off in hot pursuit.

(Ah right, reader, we heard you. You were saying that only last week, when Dr. Geech's life depended on a light, he had no match? And now he has a lighter. Quite so. If your life depended on flame, would you toy against time with a balky lighter? McGeech's doesn't work either.)

The trail led him straight to Victoria College, red, squat, unhandsome, an affront to the eye. As he careened putting up the sweeping drive, he noticed a phenomenon that gave him furiously to think. The light was out.

Over the doorway of Victoria College there burns night and day what Victorians call the everlasting flame of youth, but Schoolmen a 60-watt bulb. It was not burning now.

It was unthinkable that the lamp of knowledge should have burned out, more unthinkable that it should be turned off through parsimony. There could be only one explanation—some criminal agency—obviously this quarry, had cut off the power.

Why? You can't guess why, and blessed if you can. But McGeech was McGeech, the Terror of the Underworld, the anticipator of the criminal's every move. In two seconds the ghoulish scheme stood complete before him, in all its details. He knew.

He ran his motorcycle up the steps and into the long main hall, which stretched dim and deserted to the left and right, wide enough to drive three Oldsmobiles abreast.

He saw what he had expected to see. Down that hall three Oldsmobiles were being driven abreast, at breakneck speed. In their wake followed a humble Ford. As they came to the end wall, they stopped with a screech of brakes, a shower of rubber and splinters, and went into reverse. These ears were shutting up and down the hall, the main hall of Victoria College, coming at each end to a screeching, splintering stop. Why?

It was obvious. Every time they stopped, a layer of floor was scraped off by the protesting, scraping tires. The enemy were trying to dig holes in the hall floor—one at each end!

Why, again? Plainly, because something lay buried beneath the floor, something these desperate men desperately wanted. And McGeech had half an idea what that something was.

Why, though, were they digging holes at both ends of the hall? Because they had no idea at which end their treasure lay. That pointed to inadequate clues—a map with directions left off, for example, or an intricate calculation with the final sign uncertain, minus or plus.

Now McGeech knew of a man who had been in his youth a brilliant mathematician. At one stage he had corresponded with Steinmug himself, develop-but this time (is it that we're getting hardened?) not quite stealing the show. Another of Howard Lacey's Parodies on Horace does a glib job with the celebrated Integer vixit.

Fran Zelman's Up to this Point, a sardonic bird's-eye view of human affairs, makes its despairing point brilliantly, but on the other hand the same author's Eaton's for Christmas seems rather desperate filler. Three short poems—W. E. Hunter's Silence, J. D.'s Lines, and the morceau by Dorothy Sigmund—are above the filler class. Lines in particular is vivid and pointed.

Peter Moore's Gold is a finely disciplined outcri; but in a close race we award the poetic palm to John Speers, whose Eucition is one of those swinging, symbolic affairs that leave a piquant question behind. The mood is Browningesque, but much of Browning's average poetry is less good.

Nora English misses her intention in Winter Tale. The dialect stands like a screen between the reader and the effect, and in addition has usurped too much of the author's attention.

From all of which you may gather that Acta this month is well above average. Keep plugging, folks, you'll pass the last Trinity Review yet!

ing in collaboration with that high genius a proof that the world was actually flat, and seemed round by illusion. At the last minute, after years of toil, he had gone mad, discovering that on the first page of his manuscript the crucial starting formula had a plus where a minus should have been.

He knew the later history of this man—he had turned his warped genius to the underworld, where he went under the name of "Q"—the arch-fiend!

The intuition of McGeech divined the hand of "Q" in this mess. Without an instant's hesitation he stepped forward and held up his hands in a warning gesture, ordering the cars to stop.

They did not stop. Evil faces leered from behind the windshield the Oldsmobiles bore down toward the end of the hall full tilt, rushing straight for McGeech, threatening to flatten him against the wall.

Then, with a tremendous crash, all three went through the wall; and where McGeech had stood was only a grease-spot.

Alas! Is this indeed the end of McGeech? What's that? You hope so? Bah! Read Chapter Seven.

the telemet—a fast team and a pacing team which was to keep the gals on the first team working hard enough to make a good record. But the most amazing thing about it was that the second team won! Yes, these kids swam with such energy that the pacing team of Clare Hatton (Vic) and Bobbie Beaton, Ruth Woollett and Francis Lee (P.H.E.) completed the 200-yard free style relay in 2 minutes and 20 seconds. No slow time, that!

SWIM RESULTS

Telemet results will be reaching us next week some time but we think the other colleges will have to go some to beat that time. In the long plunge Sue Gray of P.H.E. came out victorious with a plunge of 54 feet. Clara Hatton of Vic and May McKinney, U.C., tied for second place, followed by Eleanor Coutts of Vic and Ruth Woollett of P.H.E. Barb Hinchcliffe, Vic's accomplished star, carried off the honors in the ornamental swimming, with Helen Desjardine, P.H.E., in second place, and Marg Dale of U.C., third. The style swimming went to Helen Shaw of Vic, second place to Irene Martin of P.H.E., and third to Carol Manning, Trinity.

The finals of these events and the speed contests will be held as we said before, on Saturday night in Hart House pool. But for those who are going to swim, there is still one duty you must perform. Don't forget to go to the Medical Office for your medical recheck before the final meet. Dr. Mulock has emphasized the importance of this, so don't delay—do it now!

And on the volleyball front—there will be a game between St. Hilda's and U.C. on Monday at 3:30 p.m. Drop around and see it—it's well worth the time and energy since these two colleges seem to be rivals for honors in most respects.

economics and psychology, and amongst others mentioned were political science, geography and German.

The poll also established that an overwhelming majority thought that actuarial science should be made optional in second year and that Christmas examinations should be held in all subjects in all years.

The number of students intending to do research work after graduation decreased from 60 per cent of the first year class to 20 per cent of the fourth year class, while the proportion of prospective teachers increased from 5 per cent to 40 per cent, and the "don't know" increased threefold.

minutes of end-to-end play, Boa passed the puck to Shand in the U.C. end, who neatly parked it behind Davidson. There was a dispute on this opening goal, but it was declared legal by referees Murray and Lawler. As the period ended, U.C.'s first line of Davison, Furry and Ferguson were carrying the play deep into the S.P.S. end.

Right after the second period began, Davison of School was given a penalty, and while off, the Schoolmen kept U.C. away, largely by frequent icings of the puck. With Davison back on, team-mate Andison scored School's second goal, on a pass from Jim Boa. S.P.S. held the play for the next few minutes, but seemed to be weakening and, half way through, U.C. broke, Furry notching their first on a pass from Davison. Less than a minute later, Davison scored after being set up by Wade. From then on, the U.C. forwards were held up by a strong School defence system, while the School forwards had most of their plays broken up before even getting into the Artsmen's zone.

For their performance in the game, both goalies, Davidson and McCombe, deserve credit, as do defencemen Hart of U.C. and Davison of School, and forwards Davison of U.C. and Shand of S.P.S.

Final Sociology Talk To Hear La Violette

Professor Forrest La Violette of McGill University will discuss the social psychological problems of evacuated Japanese today at 4 p.m. in the Big Hall of the Economics Building. This lecture will be the last in the Sociology series. Professor La Violette obtained his doctor's degree at the University of Chicago. His thesis, not yet published, was a study of the second generation Japanese family in the United States. Having worked for years on this problem in the States, he is now making a study of the question of the evacuated Japanese in Canada.

Awarded LL.D. at Alumni Federation Open Meeting, Pearson Warns National Isolation Now Impossible; Upholds International Organization with Control Realistically Distributed; Canada Must Insist on National Unity

"DIFFICULTIES OF CO-OPERATION" IS TOPIC

Lester B. Pearson, Canadian Ambassador to the United States, was awarded the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws as a special convocation held in conjunction with a meeting of the Alumni Association, Friday night in Convocation Hall.

After a short opening ceremony, President W. T. Brown of Victoria University outlined Ambassador Pearson's career at Toronto University and as a civil servant.

President H. J. Cody then conferred the degree of Doctor of Laws, honoris causa, on the Ambassador, who signed his name in the book honor.

In his following address on the topic, "Difficulties of International Co-operation," Mr. Pearson declared that national isolation is no longer possible. "The danger is that we cling to dogmas and ideas that are outworn; but the formulae of yesterday will not do," he said. "The peace after the last war was to be the fulfilment of everything European liberals stood and hoped for; but we were deceived, or, rather, we deceived ourselves. There was a vacuum waiting to be filled in some countries Nazism filled it."

Liquid Air

Frozen Fish, V-2 Rocket Featured

For two hours previous to Professor John Satterly's liquid air lecture last Friday an estimated 600 students were filing into the big lecture room in the Physics Building in order to get seats.

The lecture, which is primarily intended for first year students in physics, has been attended each year for several years by students of all faculties.

The liquid air is made in the MacLennan Laboratories. After emphasizing the dangers of carelessness with this fluid, the temperature of which is -300 degrees Fahrenheit, Prof. Satterly sipped some of it from a beaker and blew the vapor from his nose and mouth.

When he poured some of the liquid air in a tea-kettle and set the kettle on a block of ice, the liquid began to boil, thus demonstrating further its low vaporization point.

The professor did a number of experiments simultaneously; he connected a balloon to a flask of liquid air and left its expansive power to inflate the balloon before the apprehensive audience while he froze and then shattered like glass a succession of fruits, vegetables, eggs, flowers and a goldfish. One goldfish was immersed for a short time only, and recovered after being replaced in water.

He made a pop-gun by stuffing some cotton into a brass tube, pouring in some liquid air, and fixing a cork in the open end. When he released a valve, the pressure ejected the cork like a bullet, to the consternation of the students in the gallery. Those same spectators were (Continued on page 4)

Dr. La Violette Discusses Case Of Evacuated Japs

"We shall never know the psychological aspects of the restrictions placed on the Japanese," stated Dr. Forrest La Violette, of McGill University in his address on "The Social and Psychological Problems of Evacuated Japanese." When the war started, the government restricted fishing licenses, labor at the timber works, and the Japanese franchise, he declared.

Much illegal immigration and the boycotting of Japanese goods because of the war with China was the ultimate cause of the Japanese evacuation, he said. According to R.C.M.P. figures, 21,000 Japanese were evacuated, among which 3,500 were sent to settlement camps, 2,150 were sent to road camps, 750 were interned, and 3,000 evacuated voluntarily.

"These people were highly sensitized to the attitude in Canada," stated Dr. La Violette, "and the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor was a shock to them." This caused a renewal of hostilities in the community. Although the U.S.A. and Canada claim that no sabotage has been done on the part of the Japanese, there was fear that they would become the 5th column of the country and try to "smash the white man."

The speaker explained that hostile reaction was only natural on the part of the Japanese. Their boats were sold by compulsion at prices far below their estimated value. Their life work was ruined, and unemployment was inevitably increased.

The plans for evacuation were "fantastically slow." The Japs, declared the speaker, "manifested very clearly the feeling of persecution."

The camps were set up to obtain (Continued on page 4)

MacCutcheon's Team Recover Former Spirit To Trouble Strong Opposition; Close Season with 45-39 Loss

PENALTIES APLENTY

Assumption College, fresh from convincing victories over Canisius and Niagara University, had trouble turning on enough power Saturday evening to hang a defeat on a fighting Varsity basketball squad. The Blues bounced back after two mediocre showings to register a battling crew who, in spite of dropping the game by a 45-39 count, closed the season with the endearment of all the spectators.

The defeat was the fourth of the year for the Blues as opposed to five victories. The Assumption triumph was their eleventh straight this season.

The visitors, playing their third game in as many nights, were handicapped by the absence of their high scorer and captain, Gino Sovran, who aggravated an ankle injury at Niagara Falls, N.Y., last Friday.

After Joe Ryan opened the scoring with a single from the foul line, Assumption ran up thirteen points before Murray Thompson sank the first Varsity field goal. This margin was maintained throughout the entire first half as the Blues strove desperately to break through the stone-wall defence of the men from Sandwich, Ontario.

At half-time the scoreboard read: Assumption, 29; Varsity, 18. A rejuvenated Varsity team took over the offensive from the opening whistle in the second half. After spotting their opponents two baskets, the Blues came through with three by Grossman, Mayzel and Gibson. Wade and Mudry were right back with counters but Gibson sank another set-shot followed by baskets by Grossman and two foul shots by Mayzel. With ten minutes left, the Blues had crept to within five points, but this was as close as they ever came.

The fight displayed by the Blues was something to behold. In direct contrast to the game of a week ago, every man (Continued on page 4)

Slash Blue Laws, Throw City Open? Newman Debaters Waver, Say 'No'

At the fourth Newman Debating Parliament held last night in the Club Room the motion of the undergraduate government "That Toronto should be declared an open city on Sunday," was defeated by the Alumni opposition by a vote of 57 to 49.

Harold O'Brien, Prime Minister, opened the debate by citing the moral and economic benefits which would be the result of an open city. He indicated that it was only conservative and reactionary factions which held tenaciously to the Blue Laws.

Kay McLean, Leader of the Opposition, discussed the moral laxity and juvenile delinquency which would be brought about by an "open city." Speaking for the affirmative, Sam Legris, Right Honorable Minister of Justice, noted that in Montreal, Blue Laws were unheard of and no one appeared to be suffering for the lack.

The final speaker for the opposition, Arthur Maloney, after surveying the audience, expressed the idea that many of the members present would be physically unable to undergo more than six days of social activity they were accustomed to.

After discussion from the floor, a vote was taken and the Government was defeated and forthwith resigned. Mr. Justice Kelly, in summing up the arguments, indicated that the house vote was truly representative.

MEDICAL EXAMS COMPULSORY

Every student attending the University is required to have a yearly medical examination. Without this they will not be allowed to write the final examinations.

All women students who have not yet been examined must make their appointments at 44 Hoskin Ave. this week. The names of those who have failed to do so will be given to the Registrar at the beginning of next week.

Battling Blue Cagers Drop Match To Assumption College; Victory Aircraft Eliminate Pucksters From Playoff Picture

Blue Icemen Put Up Game Fight in Farewell Appearance, But Bow to Better Squad 2-1

GAME VERY CLEAN

Victory Aircraft eked out a 2-1 win over the Blues on Friday night to give them a first-place tie with H.M.C.S. York Bulldogs and eliminate Varsity from the play-offs. The game was the last appearance of the Blues this year as the regular schedule of the Varsity Friday Night Hockey League is now complete.

Varsity put up a game fight but went down before the better team on the basis of Fridays performance, although the Blues had beaten Victory in their previous meeting this season by a score of 6-2. They lacked the polish to cash in for goals from their attacks, Victory playing a good game defensively but getting the breaks on their side, too. Dinsdale played sound hockey in the war workers' nets, turning aside all but one that came his way. Varsity broke the scoring ice early in the game when Lawler tipped Bain's long-shot into the bottom corner of the net. Play ranged back and forth for a while after that with Victory having a slight edge in the shots-on-goal department, and Davidson being called on to make some nice saves. The Aircraft sextet were finally rewarded with a goal late in the period when Buxton sunk Montgomery's pass and tied up at one-all.

Victory went ahead when this same pair combined on another goal, this time Montgomery getting it from Buxton's short goalmouth pass at the nine-minute mark of the second period. End-to-end rushes were featured for the rest of the period with Varsity having the advantage but not being able to capitalize on their chances. The third stanza saw much the same type of hockey in evidence, Varsity's poor organization showing up badly in their efforts to put power play into operation.

Thomist Society Studies Liturgy

A discussion of the meaning of the Liturgy, its decline during the Reformation and its resurgence during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries was given by Sister Jean Marie, O.P., addressing the Thomist Society in Brennan Hall yesterday afternoon.

Sister Marie Jean traced the life of man from creation to the Birth of Christ whose Passion and Death is the centre of the Liturgy. The Liturgy, she explained, is embodied in the Mass, the sacraments, sacramentals and the Divine and Liturgical office of the Catholic Church.

The Liturgical movement in Europe declined slowly until the Reformation. In the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries the movement again began to forge ahead, especially in Belgium and Holland, until 1903 when Pope Pius explained his position in saying "that the primary and the indispensable source of true Christian spirit is in the mysteries of the church and the official prayer life of the church."

Intelligence and Behaviour

Two thoughtful letters which appear below arrived at our desk over the week-end. They may appear unrelated in content but their tenor is such that restores a former faith in the calibre of university students. It is to be expected that in the sixth year of the war, the general character of those student who attend university will not be on a par with those leaders and guiding lights of the pre-war era.

It is satisfying to know that there are students who can condemn the indiscriminate attitude and actions of their fellows. Such immature and thoughtless acts as the throwing of a snowball at Dr. Satterly when he was in the midst of his experiment speak ill for the manners of those of us at The University. There are certain ideals to which the men on the campus have been exposed. Hart House, fraternities and even the various colleges and faculties themselves with few exceptions have sought to place a certain set of values before us. Even if we do not consider such principles at face value, any person who is qualified to attend university should have enough taste and politeness inherent in him to realise the outrage reflected on The University by such indiscrete horseplay.

But realisation of reflection on The University is merely a superficial sounding of the problem. Lying at the ultimate roots of these thoughtless actions, is a lack of decency and self respect. Many students seem to hold with the idea that they must go to extremes in order to give vent to their youthful boisterousness. Some probably feel that they can recapture the spirit of pre-war days when similar events were tempered with good taste. Unfortunately the student of today appears to have forgotten the accompanying virtue of traditional university play. Throwing aside any discrimination in the expression of their feelings, they are too intent on gaining once more the atmosphere rather than the essence of university life.

The second letter which appears below raises a very debatable issue of which we should like to hear more discussion. Although we are rather dubious as to whether true culture is spiritual, the dilemma suggested by Newell's plan is a common one. But there are two sides to the question. A supervised discussion group combined with a pass course would certainly eliminate the tendency to almost mechanised mass education which we find in our pass subjects. Classes of 60 or 100 are far too large to permit effective assimilation of a lecture. As a result students often miss classes, which in turn creates an impression of disinterest in the subject. It is only natural that if a course is not well attended that the lecturer will likewise lose interest. Personal contact, however, between staff and students (such as would be brought about by Newell's plan) would stimulate discussion and interest heretofore lacking in large classes.

On the other hand, to what extent does the honour student, in Science or a non Arts Course, taking a pass subject need this so-called culture? Is it possible that they expect more from their two years of pass options than it is possible to derive? In expanding on the first question we might point out that in many cases a student becomes so aware of his 'lack of culture' that the extra studies he pursues often provide him with a more stable footing than a graduate in Arts. There is opportunity in the numerous literary clubs on the campus for development along cultural lines by discussion.

In expanding the second question, the fact arises that the tendency of the last few decades has been towards specialization. University subjects are becoming so specialized that it is virtually impossible to obtain more than a superficial knowledge of two or three pass subjects allowed in the early years of a Science Course.

Madam Editor:

One of the highlights of the University year is Dr. Satterly's annual "liquid air" experiment. To witness this entertaining, yet scientific, demonstration, students must arrive an hour or so before it starts. During this period the audience indulged in such emotional outlets as dart tossing, and spirited faculty cheers. Unfortunately, however, there were a few individuals that mistook this gathering for the final rugby game, and acted accordingly. A couple of these childish characters, quibbling over a seat, engaged in a brief, but quickly squelched round of litanies, which at one point threatened to damage a section of the equipment assembled. The climax came just as Dr. Satterly commenced his address to the capacity audience. From a balcony doorway some unbelievably uncouth student heaved a large snowball, which to the shock of the audience, struck the esteemed professor on the side of his head and dropped to his shoulder. Needless to say the audience was highly incensed and embarrassed.

Under the circumstances we could have reasonably expected Dr. Satterly to dismiss the assembly. Not so, for he paused, mentioned the increasing lack of manners and polish of the present generation, and continued his lecture. He realized that the audience before him was mortified by the incident, and his graciousness in overlooking the insult placed him even higher in their estimation.

Dr. Satterly, as we have mentioned, commented on an apparent lack, in present day University students, of those qualities considered essential in ladies and gentlemen. He was not generalizing, rather he was stating a fact which, as an intelligent observer, he realized. Perhaps he had in mind the standing ladies and seated young men in street cars and buses, or was it the thoughtless students who disturb lectures, —yes, it is such inconsiderations and the countless other discourtesies that have appeared. Notwithstanding the general trend, there are, of course, many who know and practise politeness, courtesy and those other reasonable factors in cultured living.

As we will be the parents of a new generation, it is apparent the type of children that must needs result from such an environment, where there is a breaking down of those social customs which should characterize Canadian life. Since our children, in a large measure, will imitate our behaviour, we must now recognize our responsibility to establish an intelligent pattern of attitudes and actions in our social relationships.

Such an incident as that which occurred on Friday, happily is an exception rather than a rule. It would be of little consequence to attempt to trace the unfortunate individual who was the author of this insult, or to identify him as a member of any special faculty. Suffice it to say, that the audience, and those who have heard about his conduct, consider his action entirely unworthy of a University student.

It is to be hoped that this moment of carelessness will cause us to reconsider those ideals for which we should stand in this so-called Christian society. We must evaluate again our set of values for intelligent, democratic citizenship, and attempt to live with these in mind. Perhaps such expectations seem idealistic to some, but it is to be hoped that we may pause to think and consider the problem of acceptable social relationships.

In conclusion, on behalf of those who were present at the time of this unfortunate affair, I should like to apologize to Dr. Satterly and thank him for his consideration of the audience by continuing his demonstration.

Yours truly,

Sherman J. Taylor,

The Editor of "The Varsity".

Dear Madam:

For several weeks, a feeling held by members of such highly specialized courses as the honour science courses has been making itself felt more openly. Meetings held by more than one group of students have brought to light the fact that a very high proportion of those enrolled in such courses have long believed themselves to be slipping into a too one-sided frame of mind. One by one, fellow students came forward with remedies for this "lack of cultural expression."

Some sought a more general curriculum in terms of liberal arts, while others sought only an extension of pass subjects. A very few appeared to forget Science and to project themselves into an almost Bohemian outlook. However, the vast majority were (Continued on page 4)

Whoops, My Dear Exams Are Near

"It is difficult to say," reflected Hepsy Mothballs, Varsity editor, when interviewed over station WCTU yesterday regarding last week's development. Asked for her opinion, she repeated that it was difficult to say.

"I doubt, however," she went on from her customary pontifical position beneath the table, "whether anyone realizes how serious the situation is becoming. How many, for example, realize that 400 people out of 500 people..."

Interrupting to point out that things were even more serious than that, John Edward Squires, IV Vic, pointed out that within a few weeks at the present rate of increase, 500 people out of 600 people. "There is a cloud on the horizon, no bigger than a man's fist," he stated. "It is a man's fist," suggested an announcer.

Informed sources, according to Paul Rooker, IV U.C., inclined to the opinion that it was an extinct mastodon of the lower orders. "Or possibly a bifurcated hippogriff," he added. "Science is not yet sure."

Quoting from a Varsity editorial to prove her point, Miss Mothballs took sharp issue at this juncture with the other three speakers. "Whatever anyone may say," she read slowly, "nobody can doubt that on the other hand and by processes yet undreamed-of, the seed, or germinal sperm, of this unprecedented sunrise may be watered by the fires of self-determination to burgeon or even blossom into what on the other hand may be described without prevarication at an exaggerated synthesis of the inferior reaches of pre-digested prestidigitator."

"Heur, heur," said Mr. Squires.

Spealing for the affirmative, Q. Q. Dimout, IV Vic, pointed out that it was not so at all. "It is not so at all," she emphasized. "These S.A.C. employees pile up for weeks in the locker room at the Union Station, where they quickly go bad."

Asked whether she were not confusing S.A.C. employees with rotten eggs, she said that she was.

"The Liver Pill controller will take care of that in short order," said Mr. Rooker reassuringly. "I have inside information to the effect that a directive may be expected within the next three weeks controlling the littering of our streets with partly-used liver-pills. The dial telephone on the other hand is a miracle of ingenuity."

Mr. Squires seconded this motion, adding that it was his practice to knock twice and ask for Joe.

Summing up, Miss Mothballs recited a short poem with the co-operation of the WCTU announcer, the two of them reading alternate lines. A transcript of the poem follows:

"The essence of infinity
Hangs tenuous o'er the terra firm.
Its height is its divinity.
The essence of infinity,
Misunderstood by Trinity
Is that which ne'er will reach its term.
The essence of infinity
Hangs tenuous o'er the terra firm."
"All this is unbelievably difficult to understand," concluded Miss Mothballs. How much more difficult to utter!"

Full of these thoughts, and much relieved by their expression, the audience contentedly filed to bed under the direction of the Mattress Controller (Directive 8-11-9999, for release not earlier than June 11, 1872).

Three cheers were voted.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasiv

PROTEUS . . .

The life of a sportswriter can be hell at times. Of all the queer quirks, he is considered the strangest of the lot. He is a self-styled critic, a cynic, a philosopher, a psychologist, and a fabricator of fables.

He always has ready-made for him a hero and a villain—his side and theirs. He prefers the boost to the knock, but still remains friendless except among his own guild.

Biased? Well, every human being is biased. If he doesn't sit on pins and needles throughout an exciting game, he isn't a true sportsman, and conversely.

The trick to the trade? There isn't any. He goes to the game a good half-hour early. In lone-wolf fashion he roams around, picking up bits of stray information and gossip gleanings. He shadows the coach or the players for possible clues on pre-game instructions. He watches the teams as they warm up for possible tattle-tale signs. Using a mental recorder as well as a pencil, he makes notes furiously all through the game. In the dying moments of the match he gropes around for a lead. With the final whistle he is at a typewriter reporting who won, why, where, how many people were present, the progress of the game and countless incidentals which make for good reading.

Along with these troubles is the confidence-story-bug. He encounters a slithering individual who always starts off: "If you don't tell the coach and if you don't publish this . . ." He in honor bound not to break the story. Yet an opponent whilst digging in the gutter uproots a sensational scoop while he innocently and honorably stands by. Frustrating, isn't it?

Within the space of twenty-four hours he may see two of his pet teams knocked off their perches into the realms of records and obscurity. He may see them expired in heart-breaking games. He may see and feel countless things—seniors playing their last game and fighting for their last opportunity at fleeting athletic glory, good players loafing, poorer players playing well above their heads. He may see bonehead plays; he may see masterful merging. He may boost a lowly team or player; the fans call him a dumbkopf. He may knock a good team; the coach and players cold-shoulder him.

Now all that is water under the bridge. His two teams are gone and he sadly and silently (and hopefully) awaits the next season, with its new faces and new opponents. The maddening cycle continues. He still remains friendless and alone.

The Women's Swim Meet was the feature of the last Athletic Night, with the second-bill features being the basketball and volleyball games of the men. Vic carried off top honors, 37 points, followed by P.H.E. with 18, and U.C. with 12. Individual champion was Barbara Hinchliffe with 10 points. In second place was May McKinney of U.C. with 6 points, while Helen Shaw, Irene Martin and Sue Gray tied with 5 points each for third billing. Helen Shaw is from Vic, while Irene Martin and Sue Gray hail from P.H.E.

Long Plunge.—Sue Gray, P.H.E., 61 feet; Eleanor Coutts, Vic, 57 feet; Claire Hatton, Vic, 56 feet.

Style.—Helen Shaw, Vic; Helen Malcolm, St. Mike's; Carol Manning, St. Hilda's.

Ornamental.—Barb Hinchliffe, Vic; Helen de Jardine, P.H.E.; Dorothy Jackes, Vic.

The Diving Events will not be held until after the meeting held today. They could not be held at the meet because the diving board had something wrong with its little self and couldn't be used.

The Novelty Race, which consisted of swimming in pajamas, was reputedly won by Vic.

These times have been sent to the other colleges to show Varsity's top efforts in the limpid liquid, and we think that they will take a beating by the other teams. And so, until the final results come through, ends our part in the Telegraphic Meet.

Camp Borden, Irish, Take Cage Tilts; Varsity All-Stars Capture Volleyball

Camp Borden Basketball Marks-men Lead Dents From Start: St. Mike's Edge Trinity in Four-man Game

SCORES: 51-40, 18-14

Camp Borden and St. Mike's won their respective basketball games at Saturday's Athletic Night by scores of 51-40 and 18-14. Both games were well received by the large crowd in attendance, with the Borden-Dents game in the big gym getting perhaps the most attention, as it preceded the Blues-Assumption contest.

Camp Borden led from the start in their game with last year's intramural champion Dents team, showing a smooth-working and very accurate shooting squad.

St. Mike's and Trinity put on an exhibition of four-man intramural basketball in their game in the upper gym. It was close all the way, St. Mike's edging out in front towards the end of the affair. O'Brien led the Irish in scoring with eight points. Agro and Mackron each got four. The Trinity points were more evenly distributed, Hendra counting the most with his five.

Shorthanded Seamen Bow to Picked Varsity Squad, Losing Two Games of Three; Wade, Copeland Star

TOTAL, 42-36

The Varsity All-Stars downed a short-handed Navy team from H.M.C.S. York three games to one in a volleyball exhibition in the upper gym at last Saturday's Athletic Night. Two of Navy's best players were in North Bay with the hockey team, but the team that did appear gave the University of Toronto's picked squad a good battle before succumbing to defeat.

Varsity won the first game 15-6 as Navy had trouble getting organized and left Toronto several opportunities for driving net shots. They also took the second, but Navy made this one fairly close, only going down 15-13. Then Navy won one 15-12, due mainly to Royal Copeland's magnificent rallying of the sailors' offence. The fourth game decided the exhibition, however, as Toronto swamped them 15-8.

Bir Wade was the individual star for the All-Stars, while Royal Copeland played exceptionally well for Navy.

Should Canada Seek U.S. Union? Four Students Hold Radio Debate

Senior Students Argue Pros and Cons of Amalgamation Over KEY: British Traditions Stressed

NO DECISION

Four University students were guests of station CKEY last night, on the program, "This is Democracy." Debating the question, "Should Canada Become the 49th State in the Union?" were Paul Reece, IV Poli. Sci., Margaret Albright, IV Mod. Hist., John Speers, IV Eng. Lang. and Lit., and Betsy Mosbaugh, IV Phil. and Eng.

In favor of the union, Reece pointed out that Canada and the U.S. are one geographical unit and should not be separated artificially by artificial boundaries. "Canada has been and is dependent on the U.S. from a military, naval and air-force point of view," Reece said. "The Monroe Doctrine demonstrates this practically."

Margaret Albright stated that union would bring a higher standard of living as well as the resulting gain in culture. Furthermore, she said, it would be an interesting experiment in international relationships.

"There must be some way," she argued, "by which Canada can maintain her relationship with the British Empire and still be a part of the U.S."

Canada's role is needed as an intermediary between Britain and the United States, said John Speers, arguing for the negative. We would also lose British convention, with its traditions and unwritten laws which no man-made statute can reproduce. Our system of education and justice are essentially Canadian, he said, so that any change in our present political ties would be unthinkable.

Speaking for the negative, Betsy Mosbaugh said that loss of responsible government, loss of the advantages of the B.N.A. Act, and loss of the advantages of Empire trade connections as well as the distinctive British culture would not offset the advantages of a union.

discipline and because the Japanese were considered a "threat to the security of the state." Psychiatrists, declared Dr. La Violette, were what these people needed.

There was a feeling among the evacuated Japanese that they would fit into post-war Japan, and rumors that Japan would pay each Japanese the sum of 10,000 yen when they won the war increased this feeling. Factional disputes and quarrels arose among the Japanese and caused a state of neurosis.

"The children are a great problem," continued Dr. La Violette. "They are confined in schools headed by English-speaking Japanese, their education is based on the Japanese way of thinking, and the parents insist that they be taught the Japanese language." The children, as a result of this, have become shy and react strongly to the dominance of their parents. These reactions, stated Dr. La Violette, are mostly self-defensive.

The speaker said that gradual feelings of persecution are now quite evident. The main influence, he declared, is the uncertainty of the Japanese social status, and their mistrust in the Caucasians.

BASKETBALL . . .

on the floor came forth with that old college try. This added spice plus the anticipatory whistle-blowing by Barry Lowes caused numerous fouls to be called, both earned and otherwise.

Bill Coulthard was the high scorer of the night, with 15 points. Team-mate Pete Mudry was close behind with 12. Wade stood out defensively.

Assumption—Mudry 12, Frayer 1, Hogan 10, Solway, Roral 5, Coulthard 15, and Wade 2. Total, 45.

Varsity Blues—Turner, Mayzel 7, Ryan 3, Booth, Spry, Grossman 9, Thomson 7, Fountain, Gibson 7, Swan, Dewar, Cranham 6, McReynolds, Hime, and Starr. Total, 39.

governments, power has passed to a few strong ones. Although that does not remove the integrity of a country like San Salvador, it would be nonsense to give the latter equal powers with Russia in an international union. It is likewise of no use to give Luxembourg the right to veto a decision on which 40 nations have agreed. This paradox will have to be solved after the war.

"International co-operation would best be insured by an international organization, but it is also something in which we must play a part," continued Ambassador Pearson. "In history it has been incidental, in cases even accidental, that a nation went to war in order to help others; really we mainly help ourselves."

The co-operation between allies in wartime has always been stronger than the co-operation of friendly nations at peace, Pearson warned, and we might lose the peace through deception, just as our deception in 1939 led to the war. "If we display in peacetime that co-operation which the armed forces have shown throughout the war, no one will have to whisper that most terrible lament, 'They died in vain,' the speaker said in conclusion.

Following the convocation, a reception was held in Victoria College in honor of Ambassador Pearson and Mrs. Pearson. President W. T. Brown and Mrs. Brown were hosts to the guests, who included President H. J. Cody, Lieut. Col. W. S. Wilson, Dean S. Beatty of Arts, and Comptroller J. R. Gilley.

Announce Program Of Annual Concert

Miss Margaret Sargent, organist and pupil of Mr. John Reymes-King, will play Handel's Organ Concerto Number 1 with the orchestra at the annual University Symphony Concert to be held at 8:10 p.m. on Wednesday, March 14, in Convocation Hall. Miss Dorothy Thornton, the other guest soloist, will sing Dido's Lament by Purcell.

The orchestra's program includes The Unfinished Symphony by Schubert, The Gluck Ballet Suite, A Morsching Song by Holst, and The Barber of Seville Overture by Rossini.

George Arnbrust, chairman of the orchestra committee and organist of the University orchestra, announced that Hannus Gruber, associate conductor of the Symphony last year, expects to be back to take part in the evening's performance. At present Gruber is working in Ottawa with the Army Intelligence Corps.

Medicos to Debate With Engineers On Federal Control of Education referees saw nothing which warranted their handing out penalties. Both teams seemed to realize what was at stake on the contest and played very close-checking hockey as a result.

The Blues would have done well to take an object lesson from the Victory Aircraft Junior B team in the first game of the doubleheader. These kids ranged in ages from 15 to 18 years but they showed the best organization, fight and individual ability of any team to appear at Varsity Arena for quite some time. They bottled up Watson's so effectively that in spite of the fact that Watson's were at full strength all game they kept play inside the Watson's blue line for at least half the regulation time. This was especially true in the third period. With their regular goalie in the nets it is doubtful if Watson's would have scored upon them at all.

They all played good hockey, and back-checked particularly well, but Fry, Day, Allowell and Logan stood out especially. They skated their hearts out, even though the game meant nothing more than just a game of hockey to them, and certainly deserve a lot of credit for the way they filled in for the absent Navy team.

Something new in the way of debates will take place tonight when Robin Bell-Irving, Meds V, and Bill Walker, S.P.S. IV, hook up with Bill Dimma, S.P.S. I, and "Bun" McCulloch, Meds II, at issue. "Resolved, the Education Should be Under Complete Federal Control."

Sally MacDonald, chairman of the S.P.S. Debates Club, pointed out that while Meds and S.P.S. have debated against each other before, the combination of one upper year man from each faculty debating against a pair of lower year men, one from each faculty, is an innovation.

John Toogood, chairman of the Medical Arts and Letters Society, added, "The purpose of this interfaculty debate is to promote friendship rather than rivalry between the two faculties, and also to introduce coherent discussion of a very controversial issue. We hope not to arbitrarily settle the question but to induce discussion among other students on this all-important matter."

Bill Dimma and "Bun" McCulloch, interviewed separately, both expressed the opinion that the complete central control of education is the first step in the founding of a Nazi state and would constitute a threat to the Canadian way of living.

Bell-Irving and Walker both declined comment.

LIFE IN HOLLYWOOD WITH FRANK TRASHKY

A month or so after the L.S.S. auction sale, belated contributions are still pouring in from Hollywood luminaries.

The most disillusioning note, though, is sounded from Basil Rathbone, who was asked to contribute a curved-stem pipe. Rathbone enclosed this revealing note to the L.S.S. people last week.

"I don't smoke a pipe. The only one I use is in the Sherlock Holmes pictures and it is the property of the studio."

LIQUID AIR . . .

forced to duck again a little later when cotton waste and liquid air, put in a cylinder and touched off, exploded with a glare and wound up in the lap of a student.

He demoralized the students on the main floor by carefully preparing and aiming a cardboard rocket which he shot among them.

He showed how the liquid froze all ordinary thermometers; then by freezing some mercury in a mold the professor made a hammer out of the mobile metal and used it to tack up a notice of an R.C.I. lecture. A hook made of mercury was able to support a weight of twenty pounds.

Liquid air, which had stood until much of the nitrogen had evaporated, leaving a high oxygen content, when applied to a package of soda biscuits or breakfast cereal, caused the box to burst into flame when ignited, with intense color, light and smoke. At this point the balloon exploded.

Rubber tubing and a rubber ball, when frozen, were easily shattered. Rubber regains its flexibility when thawed out, but a daffodil, when similarly treated, wilted when it thawed.

Observers commented on Prof. Satterly's showmanship, which included everything from Bible quotations to quips at the expense of engineers.

It happened down in the library stacks. A graduate was grubbing around for an ancient text the other day when he listened in to the conversation of two of the maintenance staff.

"Come over and we'll work on this shelf," said one them. "It's already been dusted."

QUESTIONS THAT WILL NEVER BE ANSWERED:

We don't know whether assassins are converging on the chemistry department of the Economics Building in view of the explosion the other day, but students up there are still talking—and wondering—about the sharp, brand-new axe somebody left in the hall there last week.

This one happened while boys of the U.N.T.D. were at sea the other summer. Two of the bell-trousersed moppets were staring moodily out onto the Atlantic when one pointed a finger toward a green, desiccated object floating on the water far-off, and inquired: "I wonder what that is?"

"Probably a nervous wreck," the other said.

ADD PUERILE POEMS:

Here's to the happy bounding flea,
As happy as any flea can be.
One cannot tell a flea from a she,
But he can tell, and so can she.
OH YOU KID, TSK, TSK.

ROTUNDA DIALOGUES:

"Been doin' much readin' lately?"
"Yeah! Just bought that new novel they say is so good."
"Did it take ya long to read?"
"No. Took about two lecture periods to finish it."

Editorial

agreed that they very frequently found themselves inadequate in matters of common concern outside of the field of Science. All felt that some change in the distribution of their academic work would improve the situation.

When a scientist is asked why he is so inactive in extra curricula activities, he usually replies that he has no time for such things. This claim of too heavy a course seems in conflict with the demand for more liberal arts through the medium of pass subjects.

So very often one finds a student taking such and such a pass option because it is reputed to take less time or, perhaps, claiming that he cannot put more time on his English "much as he would like to." This is not laziness. Many a pass subject of an honor course is denied worthwhile effort because the student feels that an honor subject is infinitely more important. It becomes a source of worry not of uplift.

In this dilemma, the need for specialization fights against that of spiritual expression—for true culture is spiritual. Surely we will not petition the designers of our courses to decrease the effective presentation of that tuition we particularly seek in order to give us more secondary knowledge? Already many of us tend to neglect our secondary subjects. A way can be found to satisfy the thirst for culture without disrupting the primary work!

May I, while adding my voice to the cry for a better balanced student life, suggest that the "pass subject method" as used today is too rigid and does not get its point across? Is it not possible that by a supervised discussion group, based perhaps on some particular study by each student, the real and justified need for culture may be better met?

Yours sincerely,

Hart House Committees Nominations Led by Engineers, University College

Yesterday evening, four days after the opening of nominations for the coming Hart House elections, there was a total of 24 nominees for the six various student committees.

There are only two days left for further nominations, and although this year's early campaign for candidates has resulted in a larger-than-usual number, there are as yet not enough candidates to insure a competitive pre-election campaign among the aspirants for any one committee. Last year's nominations ran very low until the final day, when more than half of the total number were filed.

Few of the colleges and faculties on the campus seem aware of the election system employed, which leads to as broad a faculty representation on each committee as possible, regardless of the size of the faculty represented by the candidate. Only S.P.S. and U.C. have sizeable numbers of candidates at present. School is first with eleven, and U.C. has six. All other campus factors have either lack any representatives or have very few, as Wycliffe and Dents with two apiece and Vis, Trinity, and St. Mike's with one each. Entirely delinquent faculties and colleges are Medicine, Forestry, Pharmacy, Knox and

Every student attending the University is required to have a yearly medical examination. Without this they will not be allowed to write the final examinations.

All women students who have not yet been examined must make their appointments at 44 Hoskin Ave. this week. The names of those who have failed to do so will be given to the Registrar at the beginning of next week.

H. H. Art Show Open to Public

"When reviewing a show of this kind, both the exhibitors and the public must be taken into consideration," said Professor E. J. G. Alford of the department of Fine Art in his discussion of the Undergraduate Show in Hart House yesterday.

He explained that in order to obtain some standards by which to judge the exhibits, he divided them into four general classes: Those which were mainly representations of some subject and as such were purely imitative; those which expressed some deeply-felt emotion by the use of colors; those which represented an effort to produce a pattern or composition by the orderly arrangement of objects on the canvas, and those which integrated all these into a true piece of art.

There were very few of the first group in the show; of the second there were a good many examples, though only a few predominated in it. The third group contained many pieces, while the fourth contained only a few.

Representative of the first class was Lake O'Hara by D. C. Elvey; in the second class, Cathedral, a pastel by W.R. Beny, was considered outstanding. In the third type, two paintings by E. F. Cooke, Black Creek and Urban Desolation, were pointed out by Professor Alford. Also praised in the exhibition were two pieces, Windy Point and Arbutus Trees by R. G. Calvert, which obtained a strong rhythm by repetition of forms.

The fourth class was illustrated by Hall with the painting of a shell on the shore.

Campus Government---First Phase

Every year this campus is given the chance to show its belief in democracy, when the elections for the six Hart House committees are held. On election day the student voters go to the polls and indicate in the microcosm of the University what their conduct as adult citizens of a state ruled by its citizens is likely to be in later years. There is at present a strong movement afoot to give the vote to 18-year-olds. One criterion by which to judge whether this is a desirable measure will present itself on election day, when it will be made known just what proportion of the student voters here went slightly out of their way to cast ballots.

But there is a far more important matter which demands prior consideration. Before an election can be held there must be an adequate number of interested, willing candidates—interested in and qualified to perform the work of the committees, and willing to devote the time. There is not much doubt that on the campus there are many candidates that are qualified by experience for the tasks required of the members of the House, Music, Art, Library, Squash, and Camera Committees. But whether they will come forward and compete for the job is another question.

One of the most deplorable results the war has had on the students remaining at college is that most of the student spirit that overflowed so abundantly in days of peace has been effectively squelched. Whether it is because the application of the "Upper Half" rule last spring made undergraduates too one-sidedly preoccupied with the academic side of their university career, the fact remains that student enthusiasm for extracurricular activities has shown a sharp drop since the rule was applied.

This year the first activity in nominations has been slightly more gratifying than the extremely sluggish preliminary response last year, but with only two more days to go until nomination lists close, the number of nominations so far is so small that no election is yet possible. The House Committee response has been the best to date, since just barely enough nominees have come forward to fill that committee. In contrast, only two men have been nominated for the Music Committee, and eight are to be elected.

Elsewhere in this issue the nominees and their college or faculty are listed. With S.P.S.'s total of 11 candidates and U.C.'s effort of six, it can be seen that the remainder of the total of 24 is scattered widely. The other three arts colleges have nominated only one candidate each.

The main purpose in adopting new rules last year was to give the smaller faculties a wider representation on the committees. The results showed the success of the new policy, for on three of the four open committees (Library, House, and Music) no faculty succeeded in electing more than one new representative. The only exception was the Art Committee. Here S.P.S. elected three representatives because only nine men contested eight seats on the committee.

We would point out, therefore, that the opportunity to be represented on all the Hart House committees exists for all faculties, even the smallest. If they fail in this first phase to find candidates to contest the election, then for their lack of adequate representation they will have only themselves to blame.

I.S.S. Gross Proceeds Are $2,570 But Still $500 Below Last Year Total Pops Concert Poorly Attended.

Bad Weather Blamed for Low Net Profits; Further
Contributions Expected

The Campus Committee of the International Student Service has announced the results of this year's publicity drive, as they stood up to the week ending February 24.

The gross total derived from the tagging, Skit Nite, Auction Sale, Mile of Pennies, Pops Orchestra, and contributions, stands at $2,571.16. According to Henry Alsberg, treasurer of the campus committee, the money has been transferred to the Canadian Committee of the I.S.S., which handles the distribution of books, money, and other necessities to students in distress.

The main expenditures incurred in the drive run as follows:

Skit Nite and Hart House Dance (this includes rental of pianos, P.A. System, building up of stage and lighting) ... $154.38
Tags ... 35.10
Publicity in The Varsity ... 71.49
Posters and other publicity ... 93.19
Postal and other expenditures ... 22.23
Total expenditures ... $376.39

The Pops concert in Massey Hall was at first expected to boost the total by a thousand dollars, but owing to a preceding cold spell the sale of tickets fell to 50 per cent of the calculated amount, so that no profits were realized.

Further contributions as well as the sale of raffie tickets are expected to raise the gross total of the drive to an amount in the neighborhood of last year's intake, which was $3,131.25.

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

Tradition Shattered

Hart House

Shattering a tradition which had been maintained ever since the Sunday Evening Concerts began, Sunday night's concert was given for the first time by two undergraduates, although both of them have previously attained recognition as concert artists.

It was a successful establishment of a precedent, too, for this last concert of the Hart House season was the best. The music chosen for the program was admirably suited to the taste of a student audience, and the manner of performance did nothing to detract from the genuine sympathy that Robert Graham and Jim MacDonald created in their audience.

The latter played the fugal second movement of Bach's Organ Toccata in C with such a surge of theme upon theme, powerfully yet unharshly, as to make this first number the highlight of the evening.

Robert Graham was perhaps at his best in the Wilhelm arrangement of Schubert's Ave Maria which, though so simple in form and though played so frequently, nevertheless remains one of the best media for an artist to show his capabilities.

It is no small honor for two students to perform in a Hart House concert. It is an even greater one that the program they gave surpassed the previous ones of this season.

Mechanical Club Hears I. M. Bodine

The young graduate engineer is advised to choose his position carefully before reaching for the large paycheck, stated Mr. I. M. Bodine in an address at the annual Dinner Meeting of the Mechanical Club last night. Mr. Bodine is executive engineer of the Canadian Ice Machinery Co., and graduated in mechanical engineering from Pennsylvania University in 1935.

After an introduction by Les Elliott, chairman of the club, Mr. Bodine delivered his address on "Engineering Leadership in Industry." He stressed the present great need for leadership in the profession and added that decisions would have to be made by the young engineer, who should prepare himself early to make them.

He indicated that due to wartime conditions, very large salaries were available to the young graduate, but that before reaching for the large paycheck he should find out the possibilities for advancement, the various benefits available, and the type of work involved in taking a position with a certain firm.

"Study and instruction are very necessary for the budding technical graduate before he might properly call himself accomplished in his profession," he declared.

Professor E. A. Alcott, head of the Department of Mechanical Engineering, replying to the toast to the faculty, expressed the desirability of closer personal contact between staff and students, and indicated the various steps which were being taken to bring the Mechanical Department up to, and maintain it in line with, the latest educational practice. In conclusion, he stressed the function of the University in broadening the undergraduate mind.

Banting Memorial Lecture on Insulin To be Delivered by Dr. C. H. Best

The Banting Memorial Lecture, delivered each year on or near the anniversary of Sir Frederick's death, will be delivered this Friday afternoon at 4 p.m. in Convocation Hall by Professor C. H. Best, head of the Banting and Best Department of Medical Research. A former close collaborator of Sir Frederick Banting, Dr. Best's topic will be "Insulin and Diabetes—in Retrospect and in Prospect."

Dr. Best, born of Canadian parents in West Pembroke, Maine, attended West Pembroke High School and Harvard Collegiate Institute in Toronto. He received his B.A. degree at the University of Toronto in 1921, his M.A. in 1922, and his Doctor of Medicine degree in 1925. He also won his D.Sc. at the University of London in 1928.

Serving with the 70th Batters, C.F.A., and the Second Tank Corps from May, 1918, to January, 1919, Dr. Best was elected fellow of the Royal Society of Canada in 1931. In the same year he

S.P.S. - MEDS DEBATE EDUCATION

The motion, "Resolved, that the education should be under the complete federal control," was carried by a 15 vote margin at a debate held by S.P.S. Debates Club and the Medical Arts and Letters Society yesterday evening in Wymlywood.

Instead of having S.P.S. debating against Meds as before, the combination of one upper year man from each faculty debating against a pair of lower year men, one from each faculty, was an innovation.

The Prime Minister, Bill Walker, IV S.P.S., stated that there were three faults to the teaching system. First, the present curriculum does not answer the needs of the Canadian youth of today. Secondly, there is an inequality in the chances of education, which is bound to bring about disunity. Lastly, the teachers are underpaid and ill-treated. Complete federal control would mean the establishment of a Dominion Board of Education plus a regional Board. In this case the British North America Act would have to be changed. A complete federal government would standardize courses and equalities across Canada.

The leader of the opposition, Bill Dimma, I S.P.S., stated that if the government would take over and enforce its laws all we would have is Socialism and mass education, as in Germany.

Robin Bell-Irving, the Minister of Education, emphasized the need for a multitude of courses, higher education for all, better health conditions, better buildings and books, better vocational guidance with trained men, special classes in radio and other hobbies, courses for exceptional students like the blind or deaf. The main thing was better and more specially trained men. Bun McCulloch, II Meds, second member of the opposition, said that small schools had different problems than a Board in Ottawa could not solve.

Playboy Professor Freezes Liquid Assets

Experimenters drafted from the Connaught Laboratories wearily mopped their brows last night as attempts to defrost the inert form of Tangent McShirood, IV S.P.S., went into their 90th hour. McShirood was petrified at the Liquid Air lecture Friday morning when the short-sighted lecturer, deceived by the gleam of his watch-chain, mistook him for a gold-fish and popped him into a vat of the deadly brew.

Declining to offer sympathy, eye-witnesses recalled that McShirood had brought it on himself. "He was precipitated on to the lecture platform," said one student, "when he forgot to let go of a spitball he was hurling, and crashed head first into the gold-fish tank. Dr. Slattery made a very natural mistake. I would have done it myself."

Interviewed on College Street, where he was taking his faithful assistant out for an airing, Dr. Slattery commented that it was too bad. "It's too bad," he said, "but, really, the manners of the younger generation! That booby absorbed almost our entire reserve supply of liquid air. When I pushed him into the tank, somebody in the front row commented that it looked queer. McShirood apparently thought it was 'hooked beer' and began to swallow like mad until numbness overtook him. The presence of so much liquid air in his stomach increases the defroster's difficulties."

Habitués of the labs were not slow to recall a previous incident, when, in 1937, a pop-gun constructed by Prof. Slattery lodged its pellet square in a gaping student's mouth. The increasing bluntness of the suffocated student's face inspired a neighboring Fine Art Student, who seized a resentful friend's pencil and began to sketch madly.

In the skirmish that followed the chandeliers collapsed, 17 benches became matchwood, goldfish fluttered about the floor, the telephone began to ring, factory whistles blew all over Toronto, lightning struck the U.C. tower, four planes collided at Malton, Hitler seized Austria, and a procession of flunkies from the Superintendent's office streamed in over the debris to read the gas meter. Greatcoats were not worn.

Men

By Jerry Evans

The Best on the Continent...

Our intramural system has been described time and time again as the best on the continent. This statement has come from the men at the top in the various athletic associations throughout North America—those who are in the true position to know the actual facts. They consider our organization as it now stands to have the greatest possibilities of any in effect today. Even the post-war influx of veterans into the many faculties of the University can be swallowed up in the present set-up with very little expansion, no matter how great the registration, for the facilities and the nucleus of a good supervisor and instructor corps are both in evidence in our magnificent Hart House.

With this as an incentive there should be an organization in each faculty capable of producing close to one hundred per cent participation among their male undergraduates. The organization is there in every case, but who besides Trinity and Forestry (and possibly Meds and School) take full advantage of their opportunities to win that coveted award, the T. A. Reed Memorial Trophy, which is offered in yearly competition on a point basis?

Trinity got away with murder right under the respective noses of the other faculties, no one putting out a hand to stop them, especially this year. They have not won a major championship this semester, tennis and the Junior Harrier (excepted both of these individuals were residence men from other faculties also), yet they have such a commanding lead in the current race that it is very unlikely that anyone will overhail them.

Instead of increasing their own faculty organization to get their men into the many available sports, the various representatives talk about enacting measures that will cut down Trinity's points, producing what they call an equality among them by this method. The fault is not in the point distribution. The faculties themselves are entirely responsible for the fact that Trinity is out in front.

Faculty spirit is another topic of discussion these days, but as far as the intramural system goes there is no complaint on this score. The tendency is to lean over backwards in the other direction, thereby detracting from the already much-depleted store of intercollegiate spirit. The cheering at Saturday's final Athletic Night gives good evidence of this. The School yells got a bigger response than Toronto cheerleaders could call forth from the same body, augmented by all the other faculties present.

The remedy for this is unequalled intercollegiate sports. They're just around the corner, so keep your fingers crossed.

Who Has Had It?...

Well, it's not apparent yet which team will pull into the finals against Vic I in the hockey play-offs. The game between U.C. and St. Hilda's yielded an indefinite score of 1-1. This was the result of the five-minute period of overtime. All through the game it was evenly divided. St. Hilda's plays a more open, less scarily game than do the Royal College girls, but these last had all the fight necessary to stop the clean breakaways of the two Fletchers. In turn, U.C. had as many shots on the St. Hilda's goal, if not more at the first, but these were delivered not on breaks but after a mad scramble in most instances. The star of the whole game was Liz Stark, the Saints' goalie, who showed the best among all the goal-tenders of the girls' hockey circuit.

The two goals were scored by Mardie Fletcher and Aileen Cameron. In the first minute of the overtime the Saints' first forward line, the "kid line" of the last two years, broke away and swept down the ice to break the tie. Almost immediately after the face-off the U.C. line, paced by Aileen Cameron, swept down like so many wolves on the fold and slipped the goal neatly between Liz Stark's feet.

And after these two outbreaks the game settled down to a more or less saw-saw back and forth on the ice.

The return engagement will be played today at noon (from 12 to 1). It should really be something to see. When we could spare the time from watching the game ourselves, from our various strategic and less strategic positions, we noticed that no one was sitting stolidly in their seat. Most people were yelling their heads off. Maybe they are not of the phlegmatic type, but we suggest that you come up and see how good your control is for yourself.

Ever Popular

Royal Alexandra

Those who heard the nostalgic melodies of Sigmund Romberg's operetta, The Student Prince, pronounced them good. The production was effectively staged and satisfied nearly everyone.

The Student Prince has a strong cast, with only one unhappy choice, and that was very unhappy. Prince Karl Francis, played by Frank Farrell, was very weak, perhaps even "hammy." He had no stage presence, and very little acting ability. Despite this major handicap, the presentation that is now at the Royal Alexandra is one of the best. Outstanding in their leading parts were Laurel Hurley as Kathie and Alexander Gray as Dr. Enrol, the tutor of the Prince, while the comedy roles were effectively carried by Detmar Poppen as Lutz, the Prince's valet, Nathaniel Sack as Gretchen, and Maida Reade as the Duchess Anastasia.

Undoubtedly the wonderfully effective sets and the careful staging made the operetta the success it is. The lighting was planned to heighten the effect of the sets, and succeeded to make the whole realistic.

Sigmund Romberg's music will always be popular. The rousing "Drinking Song," "Come, Let Us Be Gay," and "To the Inn We're Marching" brought encore after encore, as did the nostalgic "Golden Days" and "Deep in My Heart." The plot of The Student Prince, despite what we privately feel is an unsatisfactory ending, is strong and carries the songs without the feeling that it is merely a vehicle for them. As they left the theatre, everyone hummed.

RETIRING PRESIDENT FETED AT BANQUET

HANNAN CO-OP SPEAKER

Mr. H. H. Hannan, president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, will speak on "Co-operation in a Capitalistic Society" at 7 p.m. in the Women's Union tomorrow, Thursday.

Mr. Hannan, born on a farm in Grey County, is a former school teacher and a graduate of O.A.C. He was formerly secretary of both the United Farmers of Ontario Co-operative Company and the United Farmers of Ontario.

This meeting has been arranged by the Campus Co-operative Residence Incorporated, and it is the first time that this student body has organized such an event. Murray Cunningham, education convener of the C.C.R., said, "It is high time to tell the campus that an increasingly important and dynamic element of our economic life, co-operation, is embraced by a large body of Toronto students. Mr. Hannan is the best man to expound the ideals and problems of modern co-operatives."

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, of which Mr. Hannan is president, is a unification of most of the major farm organizations in Canada.

Spanish Club Meeting Hears Mexican Songs

Mexican songs, including the Mexican national anthem, rendered with guitar accompaniment by Miss Anne Alcroft, were featured at last night's meeting of the Spanish Club at the Women's Union, and a duet from "La Traviata" was sung by Miss R. Lira and Senior T. Fondus.

Students from various Latin American countries gave brief talks on the history, geography and culture of their homelands, and the meeting closed with refreshments and dancing.

Sign Up or Pass the Buck Official Order for Today

By Ian Alger

"It gets me down, having to think about exams this early in the year!" "What gets me are the two little cards you have to fill out, too. I don't see any sense in that at all."

Two weary Arts students, who really have much more to do than many people think, pushed open the doors of Simcoe Hall after having registered for the coming examinations.

They were two of the 2,912 students enrolled in Arts who are supposed to register for the April examinations by today at the latest, under a penalty of a $1.00 fine for failing to do so. Of all the years, it seems that 1945 is going to lose the least money in fines, for over 75 per cent of the seniors have already registered. Third year comes next with about 60 per cent of all students registered.

Just about now it looks as though people learn to be more and more reliable as they continue their university education, but this hope is violently shattered when we notice that first year has registered about 50 per cent, while the sophomores have only come through with 40 per cent, leaving themselves in the bottom rank.

Altogether, unless the delinquents hurry in just under the deadline today, about $1,500 is going to leave the pocket-books of some rather careless undergraduates before long.

AH that there is to this registration is the filling out of a single form, and two small application cards for next

Expanding Buildings--Research Is Theme Of Speech To Staff

Professor E. F. Burton Makes Presentation to Dr. Cody on Behalf of Whole University Staff

500 PRESENT

More than 500 staff members of the University and of the federated and affiliated colleges were present at a dinner in honor of retiring President H. J. Cody in the Royal York Hotel last night. Professor Bain acted as chairman, and tributes to Dr. Cody's character and achievements were voiced by Professors E. F. Burton, W. R. Taylor, and William Boyd.

Dr. Cody is retiring in June from the Presidency of the University, to which he succeeded in 1932. He will continue to hold the office of Chancellor, to which he was elevated last fall.

In making on behalf of the staff a formal presentation to Dr. Cody of two large red leather arm-chairs, Prof. E. F. Burton of the Physics Department paid tribute to the tremendous variety of work now being undertaken at the University under the President's leadership.

Prof. W. R. Taylor in a brief address contrasted the shrunken purses, the blighted hopes of the University at the time Dr. Cody became president in 1932, with its present condition of "bursting its coat at the seams."

"Our only trouble today is growing pains," he declared. "Dr. Cody has shown sound judgment of educational standards and has saved us from a morass of useless experimentation."

"But, like Moses, he has only seen the Promised Land; it is the task of another to administer it," Prof. Taylor concluded.

In proposing a toast to Dr. Cody, Prof. William Boyd deplored the fatty degeneration of the intellect so common these days.

Two Presidents

President-elect S. E. Smith and retiring President H. J. Cody are seen together at the banquet given by the staff of the University in honor of the latter, who is retiring after thirteen years as President.

Today is Deadline For Nominations For All Hart House Committees

S.P.S. and U.C. Still Leading in Number of Nominees: Knox, Forestry, Medicine, Pharmacy, Emmanuel Have None

6 P.M.—NO LATER

Yesterday, the second last day open for nominations of students for the Hart House committees, the total number of students chosen to run in the coming elections jumped from 24 to 40. Despite this response, only two of the six committees have a large enough number of candidates to make elections necessary.

The House and Library Committees each have eleven prospective members—enough to make an election necessary, but not exciting. The Art Committee has eight nominees, enough to just fill its quota; while the Music Committee, the only remaining open one, is lagging with only six candidates.

As to the two closed committees—Camera and Squash Raquets—there are only four nominees among the photographers and none among the squash players.

No representatives from any additional colleges and faculties appeared yesterday on the nomination sheets.

S.P.S. and U.C. still lead in the number of candidates, but a third faculty, Dentistry, has nearly caught up with U.C. S.P.S. has fourteen nominees, U.C. has ten. Dents has nine, Wycliffe three, Vic two, and Trinity and St. Mike's have one each. Forestry, Medicine, Pharmacy, Knox, and Emmanuel have as yet no candidates.

Nominations close at 6 p.m. today, and the elections take place on Wednesday, March 7. Below are listed all of the nominations up to date:

House Committee—D. A. S. Fraser, III Trinity; L. S. Garmsworthy, II Wycliffe; J. G. Matheson, III S.P.S.; C. B. Morrow, IV Dents; D. F. Mullin, II U.C.; W. A. Neale, III S.P.S.; C. S. Ramsay, III S.P.S.; J. C. Rife, IV Dents; J. P. Stanley, III U.C.; J. W. Storey, IV S.P.S. (Architecture); G. T. Sulberg, III U.C.

Future Problems of University and Its Post-war Function in the Community Suggested by Dr. Cody

CO-OPERATION STRESSED

By Hugh Kenner

Replying to the toast at the dinner given in his honor by the staff of the University last night, President H. J. Cody surveyed the University's achievement and offered broad advice regarding its future growth.

"The problem of every citizen of the future will be how to be conservative but not reactionary, progressive without playing with dynamite, liberal without compromising sound principles," he warned. "Civilization is tending to be decivilized by materialism and selfishness."

"I cannot understand," said Dr. Cody, "why leaders of industry in Toronto, unlike those in Montreal, have so largely failed to realize the services a university renders to the whole Dominion and the Commonwealth. We must go on making the community realize the worth of its great servant, a loyal and inspiring university."

"We need more buildings, and great expansion in all forms of research," continued Dr. Cody. "We must stress not only the physical but also the social sciences. There is grave danger in pressing civilization too far."

"We must give the men who will be coming back a good broad basis for liberal education," he emphasized. "A central board of advice should be set up to aid them. Nothing must be superficial, and our high scholastic standards must be maintained."

The humanities and the sciences are not opposed, said Dr. Cody. "They must

DEBATE FINALS TONIGHT

The final Red and White Night of University College will take place tonight, starting at 8 p.m. in the Women's Union. The theme of these nights is "Come Single, Go Home Double." Admission will be allowed upon presentation of the student's University College registration card.

The main event of the evening will be the finals in the Robinette Debating Tournament. Gordon Stulberg, III Law, and Gordon McCaffrey, III Political Science and Economics, will debate against Telford Georges, II Law, and Monty Simmons, II Pass Arts. The trophy will be awarded after the debate, together with "suitable" individual prizes for the debaters.

The Players' Guild of U.C. will present a one-act play under the direction of Jack R. Shapiro, who is withholding the name and subject of the play. The program includes dancing and refreshments.

Nomination Speeches Made by Candidates

About thirty aspirants for the various executive positions in S.P.S. paraded themselves, their pledges, and their reminiscences before a critically appreciative audience in the Physics Building yesterday at the Engineering Society's annual nomination speech meeting.

The voting will take place from 12:30 to 2:00 p.m. on Friday, preceded by a march to the Election Dinner at Hart House led by the Pipe Band. A usually reliable source stated that the results will be announced later in the afternoon at a well-known Queen Street retreat.

Treatise of SPS Student Cited by Mines Minister

When we asked Bob Cavanagh, 4TS Electrical, whether he had heard anything of the Minister of Mines' reference to his work on cable testing theory, he replied: "Yes—two minutes ago." Mr. Frost, the Minister of Mines in the Drow government, made his remarks Monday in the Legislature in connection with the Paymaster Mine tragedy, which is now under investigation by a committee of School professors, headed by Dean C. R. Young.

Cavanagh's rather laconic answer seemed to set the pace for the rest of a rather hectic interview. He said that, so far as he knew, no cable had been tested by electronic methods for commercial practice, so far in Canada, and that the simple explanation of this fact is that cable testing in particular, and electronic testing in general, is more or less in its experimental infancy, and that so far only the basic theories have been developed.

However, he had a few illuminating sidelights to give. First, of course, being an electrical student, he is in constant touch with electronics, and spent his summer period of employment doing electronic testing with a Toronto firm. Due to wartime deficiencies, cables have been produced which are lower in standard than the pre-war quality, he said, and this has resulted in several incidents of cable failure in the mining districts lately. Actually, the president of the Paymaster mine had been in the fatal cage very shortly before the disaster, and the cables had been inspected by a government inspector only two weeks before. Cavanagh does not wish to advance any theory as to the actual cause of failure—"there are far more capable men on the job at present," he said.

Asked how the investigators would go about testing a cable by electronic methods, he gave us a very simple answer. "You simply take a coil in an oscillatory circuit, pass the cable through it, and measure the V-drop across the coil, and by correlating this characteristic with those obtained from a cable of known quality, one can find out the properties of the specimen, even to the extent of internal stresses, metallurgical analysis, and grain structure."

"In other words, you just shoot a stream of magnetic flux through the cable, read that meter in front of you, and if it says 3.66 x 10,000,000, you know it is .56 C steel in the rope, and there is no ferrite on the grain boundaries. Very simple."

"Did you always want to go into the electronics game?" we queried. "Sure," was Cavanagh's reply, "why, the very first words I spoke on this earth were 'I want to be an electronic engineer!'"

Open Sunday?

The old problem of Toronto's Sunday prohibitions has again received some publicity on the campus, and we take this opportunity to review it here once more: It appears that the Lord's Day Act, which passed legislation a hundred years ago, in 1845, is still the basis for our Sunday laws.

According to this code, it is forbidden on Sundays to sell or publish anything; to do worldly labor, work at any business, including one's own; to attend public meetings, hunt or shoot, "except in defense of his property from any wolf or ravenous beast, or bird of prey," or to catch fish by any method. It is further unlawful to drink, allow others to drink, swear, create riots, or "annoy Her Majesty's peaceable subjects;" to play skittles, ball, football, racket or other noisy games; also to "bathe in exposed situation," hold races by foot, horse carriage or other vehicle or to advertise any of the acts prohibited above.

Thus, it is a sad truth that, whilst the desire for an open Sunday becomes more and more evident among the citizens of Toronto, we still cling to a Sabbath rule which is older than Victorian Morality itself. Canada's second city is turned into a graveyard every seventh day; delinquency is possibly fostered by offering sleep, dinner and church as its only alternatives in a 24-hour period and many a visitor has exclaimed: "I once spent a month in Toronto, on a Sunday!"

Surely, it would not detract from this city's respectability, if on Sunday its younger generation could play some ball-games or watch a contest, instead of playing cards and watching their relatives gamble away a perfect afternoon; surely it would serve better to let people listen to a Symphony performance than to their friends yawning, caused by idleness, or to allow tired war-workers to pass their evening in a good movie instead of a bad restaurant.

The opinions raised against abolition of these Sunday laws, are usually based on the claim that six days of pleasure are enough, that anything but a pious behaviour on Sunday is "immoral" and that the pleasurable activities indulged in during the week lead to delinquency, if they are not counterbalanced by religious influences.

All these arguments are derived from an attitude that attaches different moral standards to one day of the week, from those of the other six days. But why should a dance performed on Sunday be different from one at 11.59 o'clock Saturday night? The issue is not whether the average man or woman should have six days of pleasure or seven, because pleasure is not a physical quantity to be rationed on Sundays. The issue is whether people should be allowed to spend their day of rest in as pleasant a manner as they desire, or not.

Most of all, we must learn to approach this problem with greater tolerance than we have usually practiced. Toronto's population includes groups of many diverse interests and it would be a deplorable state if one part of the community could not enjoy its day of rest without incurring criticism from the others. Tolerance requires us to permit any citizen to attend his or her church during any part of Sunday, and, it should also require us to grant the right to engage in any other activity during the rest of the day.

Thus, if we come to consider it, there is no one in Toronto or the other "blue" cities, who profits from our present situation. Shall we continue to be regarded as "the most monotonous town in Canada?"

(The following is an editorial from The Winnipeg Free Press. President Stanley's resignation has aroused considerable comment on all Canadian camps. The Free Press treats the matter in a very sound manner, bringing to the fore the essential points of academic freedom as well as the ethical right of the Dalhousie Board of Governors to force the resignation of Dr. Stanley.)

Carleton Stanley Resigns

The resignation of President Carleton Stanley of Dalhousie University would under any circumstances be an event of importance, but the particular circumstances that now lead to his departure are such as to warrant an investigation, the conclusions of which could be made public.

Dr. Stanley, a distinguished and able classical scholar, had been head of Dalhousie for 14 years. To an outsider there seemed no reason why he should not continue to occupy that post for the rest of his life, did he so care to do. There is reason to believe that he wanted to stay, and that the carefully worded announcements of "resignation" had behind them a deep-seated quarrel between him and the board of governors which eventually led to his choice being that of resignation or dismissal.

In some quarters it is considered that the principle of academic freedom is at stake. Without more facts it is impossible to come to any conclusion as to whether this is true or not. Academic freedom usually connotes freedom on the part of a teacher to express his own views. In this case what seems more likely is that there has been a clash between the president and the board over policy, and that the former refused to yield, in certain matters, to the latter. Whether this involves the principle of academic freedom or not is highly debatable. In such a case, such a controversy could arise only through sharply differing interpretations of the relative functions of the president and the board, and this is what makes the case of Dalhousie so extraordinary.

It is generally understood—and the understanding is soundly based—that there should be security of tenure in university circles. Only in circumstances of the most exceptional sort should there be any departure from that rule. It has its weaknesses, but its merits outweigh them. What therefore arose at Dalhousie that, after 14 years of service, its president should thus "resign"? Was it just or fair of the board to allow a man to serve them with 14 of the best years of his life and then see to it that he resigned? What issues, or what controversies would justify so drastic a step? We do not know and nobody outside the principals in the case do know. But it represents a precedent of very great importance to every university in Canada, and an independent investigation of the facts would, we know, be welcomed on every campus. It should not be kept a private matter as between the president and the board.

The Lighter Side

Convocation Hall

The sad part about the University Organ Recitals is that such a wealth of wonderful music should be shared by so few.

It isn't that we aren't given variety as well as the very best of performances that can account for the small attendance. That such apathy should exist is rather appalling.

Nearing the completion of its 32nd year, the recitals of this season have been given predominantly by the University Organist, Dr. Healey Willan, while the balance of the programmes were given by

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasius

FRAILTY. THY NAME IS WOMAN . . .

Last Monday the bit of femininity that forms our counterpart elsewhere on page three stated—for the benefit of the flatterable feminine fledglings—that "The Women's Swim Meet was the feature of the last Athletic Night, with the second-bill features being the basketball and volleyball games of the men." This brought about a gargantuan grumble from a number of masterful males who, under heat of argument, insisted that the challenge be taken up.

After due consideration on this worldly subject, we arrived at the conclusion that it may be more advantageous to be diplomatic. What if women have invaded the sanctimonious fields of men? What if they have half-heartedly feminized masculine games? Certainly they have invaded most sports—hockey, basketball, tennis, golf, badminton, bowling, shooting, baseball, skiing, flying, canoeing, rowing, fencing, riding, driving, skating, track, angling, swimming and diving. They've even tried their hand at wrestling and boxing!

Luckily, however, the morose male holds little monopoly on these sports. The weaker sex has always made good news copy wherever it went and whatever it did. The sporting fields are no exception to this rule. The aforementioned incident can hardly be classed as an exception to the rule either.

Yes, girls are really an attraction to sports. With them, ability supposedly comes second to composure. This is heartily seconded by the spectators who follow these gals around.

Saturday was no exception. That beauty chorus of swimmers and plungers! Those close-fitting swim suits! Our secret observers are drooling yet.

Whether by coincidence or not, those water-maids all have powerful shoulders. All good swimmers should have. And those feet! Never saw a good girl swimmer with small feet. Clementine was by no means alone in that class.

Yet it is these same features that drive home the fact that they are real girls and not mere women trying to become imitations of men. These revealing facts, plus their childish enthusiasm, illustrate that they are participants for the love of playing and not for the sake of those ancient feminine traits—the spectacular and the sensational.

Women's place in sports has always been laughed at. When Gertrude Ederle proclaimed her intention of swimming the English Channel she was met with a series of jeers and jibes. Babe Dedrickson was scoffed at because of her masculine ways and her masculine ability. Time has changed most of this.

True, fellows still wander down to the Arena at noon to laugh at the comical capers of the gals on skates. They still gape with awe at these strange muscle molls, especially the pretty ones.

The women have invaded and have securely fortified themselves. They are in sports to stay. The fellows in School realized this and quickly adapted themselves to the situation. Now they are the most staunch supporters the girls have. In fact, on Friday they make an annual hike in a southerly direction to the local emporium where they can cheer and whistle and howl as the girls do their stuff. Ah, yes, women's sports are great!

U.C. HAS HAD IT . . .

Well, it looks as if St. Hilda's are slated to play that final game against Vic I. Yesterday's tussle up at Varsity Arena saw the Saints emerge the victors in a rather torrid game against U.C. with a score standing 2-0 at the end of the third period. From the spectator's bench it seemed as if St. Hilda's had the slight edge over the Royal College girls. We have seen U.C. play better games in the past, but they just didn't seem to have that essential something to hold back their opponents. But more than once we saw the U.C. defence do a neat job of checking the fast breakaways of the St. Hilda's squad.

Joan Fletcher sank the elusive puck past U.C.'s goalie, Mary McMillan to give the Saints their two-goal margin. There was certainly no end of body-checking and high-sticking. In fact, in our opinion there was too much of it. Granted that there is room for it in any game; but yesterday's fray resembled a fight to the finish. The outcome of the onslaught was that U.C. were obliged to lay a player off on a penalty twice, and once the Saints' player, Mardi Fletcher, took a penalty shot—which she missed. Both these penalties were a result of tripping a St. Hilda's player as she went in on the opposing net. The slashing and the high-sticking was not all one-sided. Let's lay it down to the fact that the game was important, since the winning team would earn a berth in the finals.

There were highlights in the game. St. Hilda's has some fast skaters, and we think this is where they had the edge over the Red and White. Mary Eleanor Kaufman did a nice job of back-checking and her skating was outstanding since she more than once out-skated her opponent, to retrieve the puck. The two goalies made some tricky saves during some mad scrambles in front of their nets. Liz Stark, the Saints' goalie, seemed very cool and collected during the thirty minutes of play.

From the result of yesterday's game it means that U.C. can hang up their skates for another year, but the Saints did not come out on top without a hard fight. The Red and White were out to win and it was a heart-breaking game to lose. This means, then, that St. Hilda's and Vic are slated to face-off on Thursday in the final game for the hockey championship of the University. The game promises to be close and exciting and, we hope, a good brand of hockey. So how about the cheering section coming out en masse? You want your college to win, don't you?

SPORT IN SHORT . . .

O.T. defeated Dental Nurses by approximately 8 points, while U.C. defeated St. Hilda's 42-38. The game? Volleyball, of course.

DIVING . . .

The diving competition which was not held last Saturday night will be held tonight at 7:30 at U.T.S. pool. It's a big event, so—Everybody Out!

Vic, Meds Deadlock 4-4 In Hot, Heavy Hockey

Vic Takes Initiative With Two Goals in First Five Minutes: Meds Put on Pressure to Tie in Second Period

FAST FINISH

Vic I and Meds II remain deadlocked for the leadership of Group II hockey after a 4-4 tie game between these two teams at the Arena yesterday. The game was a hotly contested one but cleanly played throughout. Vic started to press from the opening whistle and kept Meds bottled up in their own end for the first few minutes of the game. Their efforts were rewarded when Don Barron drove the puck into the Medical goal at the five-minute mark. Hamilton rapped in another goal twenty seconds later to make it 2-0 for Vic. Play was more or less even for the rest of the game after this. Meds got their lone tally in the first period from the stick of Butt at the fifteen-minute mark. With only seconds remaining in the opening stanza, Butch O'Malley stickhandled his way through the entire Meds' team and beat Loughheed cleanly to make the score 3-1 for Vic at the end of the period.

Meds turned it on in the second period

Run Off One-Mile Relay

A new event, the one-mile relay race of four-man teams, was the only one run off in this week's indoor track meet. The event is new only to Varsity and as a result the winning time constitutes an intramural record.

Meds' first team of Fielding, Antoni, Cross and James walked away with first place, running the mile in 3 min. 41.5 sec. In second place was Vic with a time of 3:49.9. Running for Vic were Hildich, Barron, Kingdon and Horning. Vic's second team of Masterman, Pearce, Hart and Finlay came third with a time of 3:53.4. Three teams from S.P.S. finished fourth, fifth and sixth.

There are only two weeks of inter-faculty indoor track competition remaining. Next week the 50-yard low hurdles and the two-mile senior race are to be held.

and scored three straight goals in the first seven minutes to take over a 4-3 lead. Pearson, Smith and Paul were the marksmen. Vic played desperately in the closing minutes and with only 40 seconds of play remaining, Barron scored his second goal of the game to give his team a tie.

Readjustment Problems at Varsity Is Subject of Psychology Club

"Ex-service Men Will be More Mature, More Serious, and More Critical," Says Principal Smith

PLANS REHABILITATION

Some of the problems of readjustment to be faced by the University in the post-war period were discussed by Principal Sidney Smith, speaking to the Psychology Club in Cartwright Hall on Monday evening.

Principal Smith discussed the effect that the anticipated influx of discharged personnel would have on this University in particular from the point of view of finance, staff, physical accommodation, and special sessions. He pointed out that, because they have been on active service themselves, many potential staff members have not had the experience which would normally have qualified them to join teaching departments which will have to be enlarged to take care of ex-service students.

Little graduate work has been done during the war in the physical sciences which has not been directly related to war research projects, the speaker continued, and in the fields of pure science and arts the demands of National Selective Service have prevented graduate work.

Principal Smith mentioned the problem facing men discharged at different times during the year, and the advisability of offering three entering dates. He advocated the establishment of an advisory committee. Efforts should be made, he said, to secure counsellors who have been on active service in the present war. Such a group would be more certain to understand the problems of fellow-ex-service men and be better able to advise them.

Principal Smith discussed the question of whether ex-service students should be segregated as is being planned in certain American universities. While it is impossible to avoid this separation in classes in special sessions for discharged personnel, it should not be done wherever it is possible to prevent it, he said. Ex-service men cannot make a satisfactory return to civilian life if they are kept by themselves.

"Ex-service men will be more mature, more serious, and more critical. We must offer them something true and valuable. We cannot treat them as adolescents," concluded Principal Smith.

NOW FOR SOME YONS

The police in a small mid-western town received the following note: "The guy who lives next to the police station is a crook and ought to be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. I cracked his safe last night and found it full of black-market gas coupons."

HONOR AMONG THIEVES?

This one, though battered around a little, still provokes a grin. It seems that it was a typical, hot, sultry, day and the bus was packed until it bulged with passengers, predominantly Navy men. Everyone aboard was tired and just a little irritated until the resigned voice of a person in the back boomed out loud and clear: "Will some pretty girl please get off the next stop so about fifty sailors will leave?"

AH, FOR A BACHELOR'S LIFE!

This one comes from a roundabout way, so we can't vouch for it. A certain young Miss phoned to a certain department and asked how many people were registered in a certain course. "I'm not quite sure, offhand," stated the professor, "but you might try the Registrar's office."

"Oh," came the plaintive cry, "this is the Registrar's office."

"These days, men want to reform everything," he pursued. "We shall have to be as watchful as ever after the war, to guard truth and freedom—the free pursuit of truth."

Thanking the staff members present for "this outward and visible sign of friendship and fellowship," President Cody said that the assembled members of various courses and schools were meeting happily as members of "what is really one big academic family."

"Even if the President had to retire to demonstrate this fact, it would be worth while," he chuckled.

Adding to the evening's "already extensive fund of scriptural quotation," Dr. Cody observed that "it is better to be a living dog than a dead lion." It is therefore good that I should step up to the office of Chancellor while still in good health and vigor," he said.

"But I shall not be a merely ornamental Chancellor," he said. "I hope to travel the length and breadth of Canada to visit students."

Perhaps one might be permitted to say that the organ in Convocation Hall is not the best that one might wish for, but the acoustic effects of the hall are particularly good for the organ. Generally in the lighter vein, Mr. Weathersed chose a well-balanced and pleasing program. The Bach Prelude and Fugue in D major, regarded by organists as their "tour de Reviewing his connection with the University, Dr. Cody recalled that in 1885, the year of his entrance to the University, the staff consisted of nine professors and eight lecturers, and the buildings were two. Today the staff numbers 1,023, and the two buildings have multiplied to 62.

In the depression years, at the time of his elevation to the Presidency, the million-and-a-half dollar government grant had been cut $900,000. "At that time the staff made it possible to carry on by taking salary cuts," he recalled.

"We incurred deficits, but we didn't close our doors. It is you I want to thank, for what you have done."

Passing on to the University's wartime mushroom growth, Dr. Cody outlined the material expansion and the speeded-up research program of recent years. He also referred to the 10,000 enlisted alumni, and to the outside activities, "pruned with the general consent of the student."

Referring to his successor, Dr. Sidney Smith, Dr. Cody told the staff, "I know that you will help and stand by him. He is worthy of your help and your cheer."

force," was handled with competence. One of the most interesting numbers was the ingratiating scherzando from a Haydn harpsichord in which a wealth of tonal color is obtained by using various stops. Founded on a fifteenth-century tune, Walford Davies' Jesus Dulcis memoria was full of the mystical and lonely beauty so typical of this great man. The last movement of Edward Elgar's first organ sonata in G was a rousing climax to an inspiring program. The last recital of this series will be given on March 13 by Dr. Willan, at which he hopes to play some of his own compositions. Don't be a sad sack and miss this one!

Vital Power Of A Critic Is To Perceive From Within

Philosophy of Descartes and Kant Contrasted: Idolatry of Reason During Renaissance Shown

CROSS OF ETERNAL ORDER

Criticism is considered a valuable and fruitful procedure, said Prof. J. Line in an address yesterday on "Higher Criticism Versus Highest Criticism," delivered in Alumnae Hall, Victoria College.

However, he pointed out, men have acquired a keen zest for objectivity, only to find it a barren procedure. Such criticism has rightly enriched literature, he said, but it has not enriched the meaning of the Bible itself or even produced conviction.

Moreover, the speaker declared, taking sympathy and understanding as the basis for criticism, it is an admitted fact that to be creative is greater than to be critical. The vital power to perceive from within is the vital power of the critic, he said, but in doing so the writer exposes himself as giving a basis for judgment of the critic. In turn, our judgment of religion is our own self-judgment. This is higher criticism, he stated.

The real church must challenge the world as well as be challenged by it, and this again, said Prof. Line, is higher criticism. Our appraisals become nothing beside the Divine appraisal of us, he stated.

The philosophy of Descartes and that of Kant were contrasted by the speaker to show the importance of the rational element in man, who tended toward idolatry of reason during the period of the Renaissance. Kant tended to destroy the analogical knowledge of God, Prof. Line pointed out. A similar nemesis awaits Biblical knowledge in the light of higher criticism. The moralist version of the transition emerges in Kant's rejection of speculative theology and his acceptance of ethical theory, he said.

Referring to modern historians, the speaker quoted from Clark's "The Cross and the Eternal Order," which advocated a divorce between philosophical and theological thought. At a point where higher criticism meets highest criticism a knowledge of God consists in a knowledge of God where he deals with man, he said. Higher criticism embraces science and philosophy and beyond this highest criticism, which is confrontation by that which transcends reason. Prof. Line concluded by saying that highest criticism does not annul higher criticism but rather lends it new purpose.

EDITORIAL

Get Set . . .

Yesterday the nominations for the Hart House elections closed. Over 100 male undergraduates will contest the 37 vacant seats on the six committees. Last year, when nominations closed, only 71 candidates stood for election and the Squash Racquets Committee failed to secure enough nominations to make an election possible. This year, the strong and broadly representative slate of nominees for all committees indicates a healthy and growing political consciousness among the male students at this University.

Now that we have the candidates, we may as well ask what qualifications these men have. Have they ability, as shown in their past extra-curricular efforts, which will be applicable to the problems of House Administration with which they will be concerned? Have they observed outward evidences of current problems and applied some thought to possible solutions? What have they to offer the permanent administrative staff, and thus, indirectly, the members who elect them, in the way of thoughtful co-operation, faithfulness to at least the minimum duty of attending as many committee meetings as they possibly can, understanding of the necessary limitations put upon their real direct power, and resolution to do all that they can to use this limited power for the improvement of the House and its administration? There should be something more to their campaigning than mere balldash and repetition of a name until it is so worn in the voter's mind that he marks his X by the prompting of a conditioned reflex. We suggest that within the limit of his five dollars expense limitation, each of the 100 gentlemen who are standing for election concentrate on attaching some solid significance to his name.

To promote a more thoughtful attitude toward the election, The Varsity is again willing to help spread this information. We therefore agree to publish daily the names of candidates plus a 25-word statement of facts concerning himself. These should include such details as faculty or college course, executive positions held, and hobbies or other special interests which may seem relevant background for the position sought. Copy for this list should be handed in to the Students' Administrative Council Office or Room 42A, University College, as soon as possible.

(Those desiring extra publicity in The Varsity will find that agreement to pay certain modest charges will gain them the full co-operation of the business staff in the S.A.C. Office.)

The Varsity realizes fully the limitations necessarily placed upon the scope of a committee's work in these times, but we feel that in such times as these it is most important that the best men serve on committees and that they be representative of all groups of undergraduate members so that the administration may have the most nearly representative opinion in directing affairs of the House. These are times to elect committees who will take their work seriously, who will not dodge the limited responsibilities placed upon them and who, if they are dissatisfied, will work to trace the cause of their dissatisfaction to its roots in committee instead of venting their dissatisfaction in ill-natured griping about corridors and campus.

Initial Efforts Towards Aquatic Future Made in Csaszar Furdo by Swim Champion

Mind you, it would have made a great story!

But, unfortunately, crack aquatic star Mike Beer just couldn't oblige. No, he had never narrowly missed death by drowning. He was sorry, but he and The Grim Reaper seemed to have been swimming in different pools. Yes, it would have made a good angle! Swim champion of today almost drowns in youth! But not!

Well, what then about this speedy young U.C. swimmer? Where did he first swim? His first plunge had been taken at the age of five-and-a-half into the waters of Csaszar Furdo.

Hold on a moment here! "Csaszar Furdo," he says?

Yes, it's a famous swimming pool back in Budapest. There, guided by his mother, he had straddled a huge water-balloons and learned the swimming fundamentals which he employed in Hart House pool recently to win the breast stroke race and the Winston McCarty cup.

His time in the 200-yard affair? It was 2:52.6, just 13 seconds distant from the all-time University of Toronto record. His speed in the 100-yard event is a record-breaking 1:18.

His swim instruction since coming to Canada from Hungary shortly before the war has been in the hands of Jim Prentice, Canadian champion in the breast stroke division, and, more recently, Bill Moffat.

And how did his interest in swimming first develop? From his brother, who

Juvenile Delinquency Attributed Mainly to Absence of Mother at Age When Child's Character is Being Molded

NURSERIES INADEQUATE

The final Red and White Night of University College was presented last night in the Women's Union. The main event of the evening was the finals in the Robinette Debate. The Players' Guild of U.C. also presented a one-act play under the direction of Jack Shapiro, which featured Marsha Blackall, Lorne Cameron, Marion Jones, and Nancy Wyatt.

The subject of the debate was: "Resolved that women should retake their place in the home." The affirmative was supported by Monty Simmonds, II Pass Arts, and Telford Georges, III Political Science and Economics; the negative was upheld by Gordon Stulberg, III Law, and Gordon McCaffery, III Political Science. The affirmative carried the vote.

Speaking for affirmative, Telford Georges stated that home rather than industry should be the field of woman's chief endeavor. He also maintained that it was the duty of women to leave industry and to build up a home. Juvenile delinquency results with the absence of the mother, since the home is vital in molding the child's character. He concluded by saying that the family was the foundation of the nation. Gordon McCaffery, speaking for the negative, said that it was possible to combine business life with home life. He went on to say that there was no longer any reason for "woman to be the underdog in marital relations." He maintained that there was every reason for women to remain in the business world if they were to contribute to reconstruction after the war. McCaffery stated that jobs should be given according to specific qualifications and not sex discrimination.

Upholding the affirmative side, Monty Simmonds showed that women would be a great handicap to the rehabilitation of returned men. He stated that half a million men would return from the war and would find their previous occupations filled by women. He went on to say that emancipation of woman was complete both economically and sociologically. He concluded by saying that "freedom from work is a greater inducement to happiness than freedom to work."

Second speaker for the negative, Gordon Stulberg argued that juvenile delinquency had been much in evidence before the war and that the mother's absence was not as important a factor as was environment. He further stated that nurseries and community centres could adequately take the mother's place. (Continued on page 2)

Law, Engineering And Nursing Preferred By West Indies Students

Professor J. E. M. Hancock has been appointed official counsellor to the 63 Varsity students from the West Indies, Bermuda, and Central and South America, President H. J. Cody announced yesterday.

Professor Hancock is Assistant Professor in the School of Law and Don in Residence at Gate House, Victoria College.

President Cody also stated that he hoped some time in March to give a tea at which these students "may have the opportunity of meeting one another and some of the senior members of the staff."

Wartime inability of the West Indian students to travel to England for law courses is the principal reason for their recent influx into the Canadian universities. Of the 37 registered in the Faculty of Arts, 19 are in Law. Two more are registered directly in the School of Law, bringing the total of potential West Indian lawyers to 21. After the war they intend to take their Bar examinations at the Inns of Court in London. To this work the courses at the Toronto School of Law are accepted as a satisfactory preliminary.

Second most popular course with the West Indian and South American students is Engineering, with 10 of them registered at S.P.S. Five are in the School of Nursing, four in Medicine, two in O.C.E., and one each in Dentistry, P. & H.E., and Occupational Therapy.

Eighteen of these students hail from the British West Indian island of Trinidad, according to figures released by the President's office. Fifteen are from Jamaica and seven from Barbados. Other countries represented include Dominica, the Bahamas, Cuba, British Guiana, Puerto Rico, and Colombia.

Schizophrenia

Conservatory Concert Hall

Some pieces of music are perplexing. No matter how often I hear them, I cannot reconcile their humor with their seriousness, their meaningful passages with their empty ones. Such a work is the Shostakovich Quartet for Piano and Strings. At times it attains a perfect balance between the piano and the strings; at other times it is completely lopsided. In places it bears the mark of genius, and yet it is replete with the pretentiousness of the composer's symphonies. Even after an excellent rendition yesterday by the Conservatory String Quartet and Reginald Godden, the composition was no more understandable than usual. While it was difficult to appreciate the Quartet on its own merits, it was quite easy to enjoy the performance which was concise and apparently authentic.

The work that Mr. Godden has been doing in bringing modern music to the attention of Toronto audiences deserves mention. An artist risks his popularity by consistently playing works that are unfamiliar to the concert-going public. Mr. Godden takes the risk not only because he plays modern music well, but also because he is convinced that much good music is being produced today. More of his type are needed in Toronto.

The quartet played Haydn's G major Quartet, Op. 34, No. 1, in a manner not up to the standard set in this series of concerts. Their bowing was muddled, and the clever interplay of the several instruments was frequently hidden. This might have been attributed to the fact that one of the strings broke just before the concert and that it took the group some time to get used to the new one. And that seems to be as good a way as any of explaining away a poor performance by a usually competent ensemble.

This was the last in what has been a most gratifying series of chamber music recitals. Those responsible for them should be congratulated both for the choice of programs and for the fine playing that the series has produced. It is to be hoped that similar concerts will be given next year.

Tuesday afternoon began a new phase in this year's program of intramural sports, the beginning of the first play-offs in any one of the major winter team sports in baseball. All other winter team sports begin their playdowns within about a week. All will be finished in about three weeks.

After a full season of play in the indoor baseball league it was necessary to have a few resting-stage games played off prior to the actual play-offs, on Friday and Monday, to decide group winners. When the smoke of the pre-play-off games cleared, sixteen teams remained in the running. From the list of play-off teams, Engineers are still the big baseball promoters on the campus, with all four of their big S.P.S. teams in, as well as five smaller teams from the different engineering courses. U.C. has its first two teams in play-off slots, while Knox, Forestry, St. Mike's, Pharmacy and Dentistry fill out the balance, with one team each.

Senior School, winners of Group I, and Dents A, winners of Group II, were dropped into the most favored spots on the tournament draw sheet, and if both teams knock aside all competition in their early games, will meet in the finals. The other two seeded teams are U.S. II, runners-up in the second group, and U.C. I, the second team in the first group.

In Tuesday's first-round games, Sr. School played IV Civil, and Jr. S.P.S. played Pharmacy. Herb Stricker pitched a swell game for the senior blue and gold team, blanking the Civils 7-0. In the second encounter, School came out on top 7-4. Yesterday, three more games were played, I Chem vs. Dent A, III Civil vs. U.C. I, and St. M.C. vs. Forestry. In the noon match the seeded Dents' team walked over the Chems 12-4. U.C. won their match 22-1; Forestry score—4-0.

By next Monday the second round of playdowns should be finished, and by Tuesday (March 6) the semi-finals should be completed and the finalists chosen. On Thursday, March 8, the first or else the only final will be played. A choice of playing for the best two-out-of-three games or a sudden-death game is given the finalists.

All Stars . . .

Tomorrow is the last day for turning in all-star lists for basketball. We have received 5 lists and we know where we can force another couple out into the light. So we hope your conscience is hurting som'n awfuller if you haven't done anything about this. Anyone's list is very welcome (especially you coaches).

Now, so that they will be produced in the next few days, we want an all-star hockey list. Anyone who has seen or participated in a couple of games is urged to contribute. A little help might be had if you wander up to the final hockey game to be held between Vic I and St. Hilda's tomorrow at 12 noon.

This game is really one to watch. Vic and St. Hilda's met under the same circumstances two years ago, when we were but a lowly Freshie, and after a tie game, 1-1, Vic defeated St. Hilda's 1-0 two days later. This is a match for a bit of a reversal as far as the Saints are concerned. The Saints' team has some of the same players. For instance — In 1942 Liz Stark was in goal, Mardie Fletcher, Marg Alexander, and Laura Fletcher made up the "kid line," while Anne Gooderham was on the defence. The only change is that Laura Fletcher has been replaced by her younger sister, Joan.

Vic is also sporting the same faces with the Scarlet and Gold. Helen Patrick, Helen Stewart, Shirley Pearce, and Leone Eunson are all that we can think of at the moment. That is enough, and it's pretty good.

When you watch the teams you will see that, on the whole, the Saints are the lighter team. They have up until now beaten their opponents on their speed. U.C. was heavier, and almost, but not quite, as fast. P.H.E. was light and fast, but not as skilled in the game.

Vic is the menace. They are both heavy and fast. When they hit, the hit as though they meant to. And skate! They are steady and their passing is always to the point (of the receiver's stick), while they can sweep around a defence player at any time with that stick-handling. Anyway, the Saints still think that they have a good fighting chance, despite Helen Stewart, and that practice at Icelandia at 7:00 (a.m.) yesterday morning.

Following the debate, there were refreshments and dancing.

Blue Swimming Team Captures First Place In Four-Way Telemeet

Avenge Last Year's Defeat by Topping McGill 29-27: Walt Sharpe and Dean Peterson Star

SIX EVENTS

The fighting Varsity swim team avenged their last year's defeat at the hands of the McGill Redmen by nosing out the Montrealers 29-27 in the four-way intercollegiate telegraphic swim meet held last night between McGill, Queen's, Western, and Toronto. The meet featured a card of six events, the 300-yard medley relay, the 50-yard free style, the 100-yard back stroke, the 100-yard free style, the 100-yard breast stroke, and the 200-yard free-style relay. Toronto placed first with 29 points, just ahead of McGill with 27, followed by Queen's and Western respectively.

McGill took a lead of 6-3 over Toronto with the swimming of the first race and still had a lead before the results of the final race, the free style relay, were flashed in, which put Varsity first in the event and McGill second, to give Toronto their two-point lead in the final count.

The intercollegiate spirit was there in the telegraphic meet, but not to quite the same degree as had the meet been of the ordinary type. To a large extent the success of the Toronto team is due to the efforts of Bill Moffatt of S.P.S., who took over the coaching responsibilities of the team when they found themselves without an official coach last fall. Outstanding among the men Bill had dressed last night were Walt Sharpe and Dean Peterson, back stroke specialists. Luke Teskey, a free-stylist, and Mike Beer, a breast-stroke artist. Walt Sharpe carried a heavy load last night—he swam 100 yards of back-stroke twice, while Peterson, a past Canadian champion, just swam once, but capped a first for Toronto. Teskey, a speedy free-stylist, also swam 100 yards in each of two events, gaining a second in the 100-yard free style, and swimming on the second-place medley relay team. (Continued on page 4)

Health Exams Deadline Mar. 7

For the one hundred University girls who have failed to make appointments for their annual health examination the deadline will be extended until Wednesday, March 7. Dr. Owen Mulock, assistant director of the University Health, also announced that after next Wednesday it would be necessary to hand to the Registrar of the University a list of those who had not complied with the health examination regulations.

Since the notice in The Varsity early in February, at least 94 girls have dashed up to 44 Hoskin and made the required appointment. For delinquent Freshies it was a case of the health examination first, even before the demands of a lecture time-table. Some compromise was made with second, third and fourth students who wished to avoid missing lectures.

For those students who managed to make appointments before Christmas there were four doctors available both morning and afternoon. Appointments were made twenty minutes apart, although it just needed one late student to slow things up. Since January the morning appointments have been cancelled, but the afternoon hours have been continued, to take care of the stragglers as they appear.

To leave no doubt concerning those required to have this annual health examination at 44 Hoskin: the regulations include all women students in the University of Toronto with the single exception of girls in residence at Victoria University.

Moot Court Chief Topic Is Peaches

The question of responsibility for a box of peaches which were delivered in had condition was the case brought before the final session of the moot court yesterday afternoon.

Chief Justice J. H. McGuinness opened the court, which first decided upon the case of Superman Airline Company vs. Mr. Hoodwin, with T. Georges counsel for the plaintiff and F. Kelsick counsel for the company.

As soon as the Chief Justice and the three Justices, V. E. Purcell, C. B. Bourne, and S. L. Rotganz, had deliberated upon the decision to be taken, and Messrs. McGuinness and Bourne had read short statements, the case was decided in favor of Mr. Georges. The latter also won distinction as best counsel for the Second Year, as did Mr. Kelsick for the Third Year.

Following these preliminaries, the principal case of the afternoon was taken up in court, with Mr. J. T. Skells counsel for the appellant, who was the vendor of a box of infected peaches. In supporting his case, the counsel for the appellant cited some parallel cases which he had marked down in several bulky reference tomes. In one case the defendant had failed to pay for a shipment of shoes which had never arrived; in a similar case a Montreal company had sent away a shipment of clothes that had subsequently been lost.

He further argued that in order to establish a case, the buyer should have refused to pay the $25 involved, but he had accepted the payment. At this point the jury remarked whether such an action possibly did not stem from the respondent's moral considerations rather than from any unlawfulness. Mr. Skells maintained, however, that the buyer could have planned to resell the peaches as they were not outwardly rotten, or even to convert them into peach-wine.

After a short interlude in the procedures, Miss G. Browning took up the case for the respondent, the buyer of the unfortunate peaches. She centered her attention on the argument that the peaches were already in an infected state when they left the vendor, who could have checked the quality of any fruit sent on shipment.

The decision was in favor of a compromise, which allowed the vendor to keep the $25 already paid him. Court was then adjourned until the next session.

Keynes' Social Theory Discussed By Dr. Coper In English Writers Talk

Radio Hams Plan Set-Up In Post-War

Post-war amateur radio problems were discussed by two men at the meeting of the Wireless Association of Ontario last night in the Electrical Building.

Air Commodore Keith Russell, now retired, an ardent amateur, described his experiences in the R.C.A.F. and pointed out that in the post-war world there will be a vastly increased number of "ham" operators and there will be many new opportunities and difficulties awaiting them.

Mr. Ralph A. Hackbusch, I.R.E., of Stromberg-Carlson Company of Canada, outlined the large number of new uses for radio which have come about and described the efforts that have been made to bring about order in the allocation of radio bands.

Commodore Russell set up the Aircraft Detection Corps, now discontinued, and has been in charge of wireless schools at Calgary and Guelph as well as being on the headquarters staff in Ottawa. In these capacities he has come into contact with many men as well as women who, as a result of their training, may become "hams" after the war. Before the war and during it there has been close co-operation between the R.C.A.F. and amateurs.

Mr. Hackbusch outlined the organization of the Radio Technical Planning Board in the United States, which has been made necessary by advances in radio and their applications. Since the Wireless Association of Ontario was founded, he said, the part of the spectrum in use has been extended and allocations of the new frequencies has been made indiscriminately as expansion has occurred.

Students' Panel Will Discuss C.C.F.

This evening at eight o'clock, in the theatre of the Women's Union, a panel of students will be assembled, under the auspices of the University C.C.F. Club, to discuss the question: "What does a C.C.F. government mean to University students?"

The panel members have been chosen in such a manner that a fair cross-section of student opinion on the subject will be obtained: they include Betsy Mosbaugh, editor of The Varsity, John Speers, Barry Allen, Dennis Wrong, Agnes Fischer, R. Weaver, Gay Ramey, Ralph Shepherd, Paul Reeve and Max Rosenfeld. Professor F. H. Underhill, of the History Department, will be present in the capacity of advisor.

In an interview with The Varsity, Sid Jourard, chairman of the meeting, stated: "We hope that the panel will be held with all the spontaneity of a bull-session; we want to hear the panel members pose questions, pass judgments, and argue with one another. Whenever misinterpretations, drastically wrong opinions, or unsolved arguments arise, the problem will be referred to Prof. Underhill. After the panel discussion, members of the audience may ask questions of any of the speakers, or Prof. Underhill."

"A large turn-out is hoped for," Jourard concluded, "as it is wished to hear what fellow-students have to say about the C.C.F.—for, against, or indifferent."

Lord Keynes is Chief Economic Adviser of the British Government and Director of the Bank of England

CONTRAST WITH MARX

Lord Keynes' economic and social theory concerns itself primarily with the maintenance of individual initiative in human affairs as a basic expression of liberty, said Dr. R. Coper, speaking in U.C. yesterday. The lecture, one of the series on Representative English Writers on the Theme of Liberty, outlined Keynes' theories which make him "the foremost living creator of social and economic thought." Lord Keynes is Director of the Bank of England and chief economic adviser of the British government.

Dr. Coper discussed Lord Keynes' social theory and contrasted it with Marxian and Idealist thought. War, according to Keynes, is often a result of a dictator or like power fanning a popular flame lit by economic causes, such as pressure of population or a competitive struggle for markets; this danger can be averted if nations can learn to provide themselves with full employment by their domestic policy.

In the capitalistic system it is now functions, the speaker stated, the amount of employment depends on the estimation by "entrepreneurs" of what will give a maximum excess of profits over costs. This estimation is normally wrong, Dr. Coper asserted.

The "propensity to consume" in an economy, according to Keynes, is relatively stable, while inducement to invest is less stable. Investment, in its turn, governs demand for consumption goods. Keynes' economic theory, said the speaker, endeavors to make the system work intelligently, by selecting those variables which could be centrally controlled and stabilizing them. These are: propensity to consume, which public works and social security influence; the marginal efficiency of capital; and the rate of interest.

The ideal community, then, is conceived by Keynes to be a perfected capitalism, wherein control of independent variables eliminates unemployment. (Continued on page 4)

S.P.S. Elections Occur Today

A powerful barrage yesterday from the venerated Skule cannon announced the opening of the campaign for the elections of the Engineering Society, Athletic Association, Year Executives, Club Chairmen, and the Permanent Executive of the Faculty of Engineering.

At 11:55 noon today the Engineers, led by the C.O.T.C. Pipe Band, will parade from the Engineering Building to Hart House for dinner and thence to the polls, which will be open from 12:30 until 2:00 p.m. As usual, the Harespence system of voting will be used.

A message from the retiring president, R. F. Moore, advised the students to remember that as students in wartime they are subject to public criticism and therefore should make no attempt to organize a parade down town or to invade any of the other faculty buildings (U.C. included).

The candidates for the Engineering Society are as follows:

President—A. T. Klassen, M. D. McCulloch, D. A. White.
1st Vice-President—F. Belslaw, R. T. Sheppard.

2nd Vice-President—W. Daniel (Ac.)
Secretary—B. A. Hackl, E. Rumney.
Treasurer—D. Carruthers, T. L. Hennessey, R. Tredgett.

As voting merely involves marking 1, 2, 3 on the ballots, it is hoped and expected that all Skule men will attend.

The Future of Journalism

An article in a recent issue of Saturday Night pointed out the increasing interest of servicemen in the field of journalism. This is not without reason as was also indicated. Widely read war columnists like Ernie Pyle have written whimsically and sympathetically of the daily grind of G. I. Joe. The courage of the war reporter in covering for the readers of the world battle exploits even at the risk of personal safety has further enhanced his reputation. On many occasions the reporter has trespassed the bounds of ordinary daring in scoring a scoop for the exclusive use of his news service. This wartime performance has clothed the newspaper man with much glamour and admiration.

Furthermore topnotch news analysts like Gratton O'Leary recruited from the ranks of the fourth estate have contributed immeasurably to the high professional status of the journalist.

The result has been an added desire on the part of young men and women drawn from colleges and service personnel to enter the profession. While such an ambition is laudable, caution is to be exercised in encouraging such ambitions. Aside from the necessary writing talent required for the profession—and we may add physical endurance—the opportunities are limited.

Notwithstanding the tremendous development of spoken and written communication during the last decade, the demand for journalists has hardly increased at an equal rate. Youngsters who have served periods of apprenticeship in the city room will rise to fill coveted positions. For illustration of the lack of opportunities may be noted that schools of journalism in the United States within the last ten years have graduated candidates who, from want of professional opportunities, have entered other fields.

It is true that the scarcity of personnel owing to the war has opened up temporary opportunities. But too often the present demand for newspapermen is more apparent than real. Within the last month we received a letter from a friend who had done outstanding work as a college journalist and who wished to "break into print" on one of the large dailies. Though equipped with a liberal arts education and gifted with literary skill, his canvass of seven Canadian dailies resulted in disappointment.

Maybe we've said enough to illustrate the point. Vocational counsellors should precede any recommendation to servicemen to follow journalism with an investigation of the possibilities and needs. In this way much disappointment can be avoided.

The current agitation for a school of journalism in Canada ought to be viewed also in a critical light. In the first place, it has been questioned whether any school of journalism can replace a year or two of apprenticeship in a city room under the brusque guidance of an experienced editor, who, himself, has toiled for many years before reaching his high position.

Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier Journal, used to snort "There is but one school of journalism and that is the well-conducted newspaper office. I don't believe a journalist can be made to order."

Despite the snortings of Editor Watterson we are inclined to believe there is a place in Canadian University curricula for a proper course in journalism. With the diversity and complexity of modern events, the pace is getting pretty stiff for the traditional type of journalist who embarked on his career by carrying hot coffee to the desk of the editors. Evidence of this condition may be seen in the incapacity of news service to present with clarity the significance of such world conferences as Bretton Woods and Dumbarton Oaks. The political and economic issues involved required trained students with the concomitant skill to write clearly for the average reader.

But this is a condition which the average school of journalism, in the United States experience, has been unable to correct. Much time is spent in learning such rudimentary skills as copyreading and newspaper parlance—which can be picked up quickly in the newspaper office—instead of insisting on such necessary subjects as languages, history and the social sciences.

The inadequacy of the reporter in dealing with modern events cannot be cured by an ordinary course in subject of a purely journalistic nature. There is needed first of all a wide knowledge of men and affairs which only a liberal education can provide. With the growing prominence of the journalist in preparing newscasts and syndicated features, unusual competence must be demanded.

This liberal education is all the more indispensable because of the variety of questions upon which the daily journal must comment editorially. In many cases the reporter is drawn into the editorial circle where his writing skill is given higher recognition. With a liberal education to work with, editorial opinion would likely be raised.

Trained in the Liberal Arts, the aspirant journalist will find it useful to spend some time later on learning the rudiments of the profession in a school of journalism before he accepts his first assignment from the city editor. And the course in journalism need not be long or extensive. But it would add greatly in the ease of "fitting in" when the person hits the dailies.

Schools of journalism teaching students possessing a liberal education have a place in Canada. And their importance may be that they are training liberally educated persons for immediate service in the newspaper world.

Art, Music and Drama

Vibrant

Eaton Auditorium

The noted Chilean pianist, Mr. Claudio Arrau, playing in the Thursday evening Concert Series, presented a brilliant and emotionally exciting programme. Full of Spanish verve and humour, Mr. Arrau tinged with colour a concert which might otherwise have been rather monotonous in its preponderance of technical display.

Rondo in D, the opening selection, Mr. Arrau played with all the simple grace one associates with Mozart. Using this piece as a foil, the artist launched into Brahms' prodigious Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Handel. Clearly the highlight of the evening, Mr. Arrau succeeded in surmounting the inherent awkwardness of Brahms' piano style, thus producing an effect of ease and at the same time revealing all the variegated, delicate nuances of every variation.

The second group consisting of Chopin and Liszt carried this general impression out further. The Chopin Scherzo in E major was performed with all the latent Puckishness of a Chopin Scherzo. The sparkling lucidity of Liszt's An Bord d'un Source served as a fitting contrast to the diabolical description of sprites and spirits in the Mephisto Waltz, also by Liszt.

Debussy's Poissons d'Or with its shimmering beauty and Ravel's exotic Alborad del Gracioso were the chief points of interest in the third and final portion.

The programme as a whole was eminently successful. However one was left with the desire not only to hear more of Mr. Arrau but also to experience his interpretations of Bach and Beethoven, which, although conspicuously lacking from this concert, are quite within the scope of his fine musicianship.

"We Make You Think"

CHAPTER SEVEN

(The speeding, screeching, high-powered car crashed through the end of the Victoria College main hallway. And where McGeech had been standing against that wall, there remained now only a forlorn grease-spot. NOW READ ON.)

Who are these husky figures stepping out of the death-car, silhouetted against the sunset? Their cloaks, their masks, betoken their essential evil. They are "Q," the arch-fiend; Smuffy, creature of "Q"; the Fakir Althellalova; the hypnotist von Schnitzenschnatz; all the hierarchy of evil whose tentacles enmesh half the civilized world.

"At last," breathes Smuffy, "At last!" "As you say," was the laconic answer of "Q." "At last."

"McGeech is no more," beamed Smuffy. "He is a grease-spot."

"Ja," assented von Schnitzenschnatz. "Der Herr Doktor McGeech, he no more is. He a grease-spot has bekommen gewesen sein gelobt haben geworden."

"Let us scrape up the grease," shrieked Smuffy in a delirium of delight. "Let us, O Master, scrape up these remains of McGeech, and exhibit them in a jar, suitably labelled, beside our other victims in the Biology Museum."

"Let us," said the Fakir, "engrave a suitable label: McGeech's vulgaris; exceptionally fine specimen," and affix our signatures."

And they uncorked their specimen bottles and unfolded their portable grease-scrapers. How many victims, O reader, have these same scrapers already scraped! Take care it doesn't happen to you!

As they bowed and scraped, a movement and a voice from the shadows startled them. "Collecting pig, I see," said the voice.

The four scrapers started, shrieked, dispersed. No mere intruder could have so marred their triumph. It was the personality behind the voice that startled them—for the voice was the voice of McGeech!

"Collecting pig, I see," resumed the voice. "My portable pet pig Percy came to a sad end. But it was his life or mine. I shoved him in my stead in front of your speeding car. Any of you gentlemen would have done the same."

There was a quality of sardonic mockery in the voice that grated in the heart of "Q." "Enough of your trickery, McGeech," he rasped. "So to deceive four gentlemen of crime over a pig is in bad taste, to say the least. To suffer a dumb animal to be smashed in your stead is even worse. The Humane Society!"

The Sportswoman

By Eileen Cameron

RAH! RAH! SCARLET AND GOLD!

And Vic I has the championship for another year! The final game at Varsity Arena yesterday saw the Scarlet and Gold girls win 1-0 over the hard-fighting Saints. It was a fast and close game with both teams out to win, or else!

The Saints played their best game of the year but Vic appeared a little nervous as they missed pass after pass in front of St. Hilda's net. The play was evenly divided until the second period when the lone goal was scored by Joan Chalk of Vic. After that, St. Hilda's carried the play and several times came very near to evening up the score. Mardie Fletcher made numerous breakaways, outskating everyone on the ice and keeping Helen Stewart busy in the Vic net. However, the game ended without further score and the Vic team left the ice with their third straight championship. A notable feature of the game was that both teams received ardent support from their own colleges. Two cheering sections no doubt helped inspire the girls to play such brilliant hockey.

Stars of the game include the full line-up of the teams—

Vic I—Shirley Pearce, Betty Latimer, Leone Eunson, Joan Chalk, Ruth Hutchinson, Mary Stewart, Marylizabeth Barker, Helen Patrick, Betty Fullerton, Helen Stewart.

St. Hilda's—Marie Fletcher, Marg Alexander, Joan Fletcher, Mary Eleanor Kaufman, Dorothy Jane Sanders, Harriet Morton, Barbara Wilson, Jan Murray, Anne Gooderham, Liz Stark.

THEY'LL BOWL 'EM OVER . . .

Who will? The bowling teams, match! They'll all be playing in the tournament on Monday, March 6, at the Midtown alleys. Each faculty has entered a team of four, and these teams can play off their three games any time between two and six o'clock on Monday afternoon on the three alleys reserved. The team with the highest average score will be the winner.

TAKING THE PLUNGE . . .

at the Interfaculty Diving Competition at the U.T.S. pool. Pat Patterson of St. Hilda's was the winner, with 77 points. Second place went to Carol Manning, also of St. Hilda's, with 67.8 points, and in third place was Betty Dawson of Physio, with 64.3 points. This gives St. Hilda's eight more points, and Physio one more point, but doesn't change the standing of the teams.

McGill Zoology Prof. Will Address Institute

Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerry Ewins

MAY SHE EVER THRIVE . . .

Last night's Intercollegiate Swim Meet was just about as successful from Toronto's standpoint as it possibly could have been. Each man went out there and gave everything he had in him, and the result was a win that avenged the defeat of last year at the hands of McGill. Here was true university spirit's chance to accomplish something big, and it rose to the occasion and did a superb chore. The individual ability was also there, but aided and abetted as it was by such a fine sportsmanlike attitude among the Varsity team, the times achieved in the various events remained in the background.

The fellows who were handling the Toronto entry also deserve a lot of credit for the way they managed things during the evening. Mac and Griff were so excited towards the end when it looked like things would be really close that their enthusiasm spread to everyone in attendance, and when word came through that Toronto had won the Meet the smiles of victory that lit the faces of those around the phone in the Athletic Office were indeed a pleasant sight. Also, bouquets to Bill Moffat for his fine work in coaching the fellows and Soup Campbell and Billy Myers for their efforts in the statistical department during the night.

SKIMMING THE SURFACE . . .

The Jennings' Cup race this year is fast drawing to a close. Competition has perhaps been keener, due partly to the eligibility of players from the Blues in the Intramural setup, but the grouping has been the season's highlight. The teams have been more evenly matched than for quite a few years, showing that pre-season agenda was very accurately compiled. On Monday there will be four eliminating round games, providing a real day of hockey. U.C. I will meet the winner of today's affair between Meds III and Emmanuel, while their Group I rival Sr. S.P.S., hooks up with Forestry. The other two Group I semi-finals are to be run off Tuesday and Wednesday, with the finals slated for next week in a best two out of three game series on Monday, Thursday, and Friday if necessary.

Interfaculty basketball will need to wade through several play-down stages before much interest is developed in the competition. There were twenty-five groups this winter, and thirty will go into the play-offs, two from each of the first five divisions. The outfits to keep an eye on are: Sr. S.P.S., U.C. I, Dents A, Jr. S.P.S., P.H.E. I, and Jr. Meds B. . . . Hec Phillips' magnificent track program continues next week with the 50 yard 26" hurdles and the two-mile open. Cam Burgess has dominated the hurdles racing in former years but this time is out with a dislocated shoulder, so there appears to be no favorite here. In the two-mile, James and Fordyce are likely to turn in the best times, but Sloan and Hanley might make things interesting if they really hit their stride. . . .

H.M.C.S. York Bulldogs take the ice at 8 p.m. tonight to endeavor to establish themselves as champions of the Friday Night Hockey League. Their opposition will be the Victory Aircraft sextet, and even though the Blues are definitely out of the running the game should draw some student interest. Victory Intermediates have given Navy by far the best competition of any team in the league, and just might knock off the sailor powerhouse if they can start clicking out there in front of Lefty Wilson. Navy's brilliant goalkeeper always shines with his steady, cool netminding, and is a definite post-war prospect for the Detroit Red Wing system. . . .

And while we're on the subject of hockey, we would like to offer a plug for Junior A brand. If the St. Catharines-St. Mike's game is any indication of what will develop in the play-offs for the Memorial Cup this year, you shouldn't miss any more of these battles than you possibly have to. It's certainly great hockey to watch, and the prices are more within the student budget than those of the grossly over-rated N.H.L.

Keynes believes that ideas, not vested interests, are influential for good or evil. Dr. Coper termed Keynes a 'materialist individualist.' He is the spokesman, according to the speaker, for the millions on this continent who realize that we are in the midst of a revolutionary convulsion caused by imperfections in our system. Perfection of capitalism is the ultimate goal of Keynes, as it is the immediate goal of Marxism.

And "Q" blew his whistle. It was answered immediately. Four uniformed inspectors rose from the shadows.

"Take away this man," "Q" denounced. "He has suffered a speeding car to smash a pig."

And four burly pairs of hands closed about the shoulders of McGeech.

Horrors, the ignominy of it! To have the central ring of spies in one's grasp, and to be detained by authority for killing a pig!

In a flash McGeech acted. Gulping down a bottle of vitamin pills, he utilized the resulting surge of power to leap for the car, the four officials streaming from his neck like ribbons. Spinning the car around, he crashed back again into the Victoria College hallway—speeded to the end—and in an instant was out and ripping up the floor at the end of the hall with a pickaxe.

Franchise at 18?

The action of the Ontario Legislature in moving an amendment to the Voters' List Act last Friday to lower the voting age to 18 brings into the limelight once more the question of when a citizen is qualified to exercise his rights. Introduced by a select committee of the Legislature which was set up to study electoral reform, this matter of the age limit for the franchise was deferred for further discussion until this week.

One of the immediate comments that arises from the newspaper report of the proceedings is the fact that the move was supported by the C.C.F. Opposition, the Liberal and Labor-Progressive members, while nothing is mentioned of support by the Progressive-Conservative government. This invites the obvious conclusion that youth must therefore be considered more radical or progressive on the whole than adults.

This may or may not be true. Probably it is. The deplorable fact about such a division in the Legislature is that the 18-year-old franchise should be a question for the political arena. If the parties are to split solely according to whether the amendment to the Act is going to improve their relative position or not, the degeneration of our political system has reached its final stages. It would probably be too idealistic to assume that the question will be decided with no regard for its effect on each party's strength, but there are other issues at stake that deserve at least as serious consideration. It is reassuring to note that some of these factors were brought forward in the preliminary discussion of the amendment last Friday.

In our opinion there are two basic questions: whether the franchise should be limited to those who are qualified to exercise it; and whether, this being the case, a youth of 18 can be reckoned in that class.

Concerning the first question, there can be little argument that the ideal to aim at in setting limitations to the franchise should be to give the franchise to all citizens, regardless of race, provided of course that these citizens are above a certain minimum intelligence level. It may shed some light on the subject to see just how far this ideal is carried into practice in Canada.

One would expect at first glance that this rule would be followed closely, but on further consideration exceptions appear. We may look with disdain on the virtual exclusion of the negro from the franchise in the United States, but only until we remember that we practice the same policy on Asiatics, even when they are Canadian citizens. The only disqualification on mental grounds is complete insanity.

There may have been considerable merit in President Lincoln's statement that the good judgment of the common people should never be underestimated. But as the functions of government become ever more complex, it may be questioned whether it is safe for the franchise to include those who through illiteracy or other reasons have no understanding of the momentous issues that the electorate of today is expected to decide. One defect does not justify another, but this example should show that the question at stake is not one of age alone, but of mental qualifications.

The second question, then, is whether a teenager of 18 is qualified by education or experience, or both, to pass a judgment as intelligent as that of most of his or her older fellow-citizens on political questions. We think that under most conditions he is. Here the usual stock analogies of voting and other duties that he assumes before the age of 21 might be cited, but it is more important to remember that efficiency in performing the duties of citizenship can be increased by education, though its roots cannot be planted by this means alone. Political maturity can be fostered by this method perhaps even better than by leaving the process to the haphazard process of experience.

It is true that an 18-year-old may have a different outlook on life. Perhaps there is some truth in the statement that the teen-age vote would be more volatile, more inclined to venture along the path of change, than that of the older generation. But it does not follow that this would be a change for the worse. Indeed, considering the deeply-vested opposition to amending the British North America Act, the failure to amend the setup of the Senate or abolish it, the inaction on the question of adopting the single preferential vote in the federal field to suit the relatively new multi-party system, one might logically come to the conclusion that a little more flexibility in the workings of government might be strongly desirable.

The conclusion is that an 18 year lower limit on the franchise would be little different from the present 21-year line, and any slight difference towards a more ready acceptance of change would have more advantages than disadvantages. But we reiterate, though, that the question ought to be decided on the grounds of fitness to be a citizen rather than partisan politics. Most countries would support this aim in theory, but it is interesting to note that no democratic country has yet imposed general restrictions on the basis of intelligence levels. And, we note in passing, no country has yet seen fit to impose an upper age limit on its elder citizens on the ground that after a certain age one's judgment is sufficiently impaired to prevent the intelligent exercise of the duties of citizenship.

In Our Midst

Hart House Art Gallery

If anyone is pessimistic about the future of art in Canada, he can change his pessimism in no better way than by going to see the current undergraduate pictures in Hart House Art Gallery. It is one of the most forceful and promising undergraduate exhibitions ever shown in Hart House. The great number of contributions from first year students particularly inspire optimism for the future.

Not only well arranged and designed, E. F. Cooke's pictures reveal great proficiency in color technique. Urban Desolation, cleverly integrates brownish and steel-blue. In spite of the strong emotional effect of desolation, the work presents a definite note of order, unity and hopefulness.

Among the oil landscapes, two tree pictures by E. G. Calvert and four Landscapes by R. B. Hall, are particularly remarkable. Calvert's Arbutus Trees and Windy Point, both done in the same style, are forceful and rich in color and presentation. Hall's works reveal a great variety in the use of green for many different effects of foliage. Each of his Landscapes is an artistic entity in itself. His Seaside Scene, obviously an early work, shows a good feeling for subtlety of design in treatment of the shell, which is violently drawn in the foreground.

Lloyd Singer's still-life, Study in Wine, deserves specific mention for its rich, deep use of colors, successful pyramidal structure of objects, and its general clarity.

Cathedral by W. R. Beny, is one of the most outstanding works of the exhibition. Done in pastel, its exceptional value lies in its emotional and religious content expressed by the interchange of light

How To Relax and Influence People

CHAPTER I

Introduction or The Flea on Fala's Coat

It is not common knowledge that people become tired. However, after thorough research into the problem and after attending several lectures at the School of Practical Science, this writer found himself very tired indeed. To substantiate my case, there is the touching little anecdote about President Roosevelt, who attended a Big Three meeting not long ago (including Fala) and when he came back to Washington he told the press: "I got a lovely sun tan."

Which proves my point, that people do become tired. So, if you want to learn how not to become tired, and get the dog on, like Fala and Pres. Roosevelt, read on to the next chapter and soon you will be whistling at your work and maybe even telephoning her for a date.

CHAPTER II

How to be a Success in Life or Never Run Off with the Clergyman's Daughter

After one minute's perusal of Bernard Macfadden, Dale Carnegie and Walter Pitkin, I have finally obtained for my readers the essence of modern knowledge. To be a success, be kind, not cruel; be mild, not wet; be soft, not hard; be sweet, not bitter; be tall, not short; be you, not me.

To illustrate this, there is the touching anecdote of Henry Ford, who started out in life with nothing in his pockets but two crumbs of bread. Now, as this eminent multimillionaire revealed in an address at a recent meeting of international automobile magnates, proudly displaying the contents of his pocket, he has four crumbs.

So you see, even Ford followed our advice on how to be a healthy success.

To sum up, then, if you wish to achieve world acclaim, and to display rugged vigor, you must strike a happy medium.

CHAPTER VIII

(Chapters III, IV, V, VI, and VII have been skipped because the author didn't write them, finding they would be dull reading anyway.)

The Art of Yawning or Who Changed the Color of Maw's Pink Tooth Brush

Despite what Y.M.C.A. officials maintain in their blithe posters, exercise and hard work is silly. After another minute's perusal of those staunch intellectual iconoclasts, Macfadden, Carnegie and Pitkin, I take up the cudgel and fling it into the Y.M.C.A.'s teeth. After all, a word to the Y's is sufficient.

Here, then, are the fool-proof (are you listening, Mr. Y.M.C.A. official?) techniques of relaxation:

1. Never work.
2. Use the other method.
3. Gently remove inner workings of alarm clock and donate to scrap collectors.
4. Take a day off from the office and, stein of beer in hand, join in the chorus of a radio singing commercial.
5. Whenever you are in the doldrums (Continued on page 4)

Navy Drowns Aircraft; Wins League By 15-5

Navy Bulldogs are Champions of Friday Night Hockey League After Sudden-death Game at Varsity Arena

NO HOLDS BARRED

Navy Bulldogs, representing H.M.C.S. York, are champions of this year's edition of the Varsity Friday Night Hockey League by virtue of their surprise uprooting of the Victory Aircraft intermediates by a score of 15-5 in the sudden-death game played over the week-end at Varsity Arena.

The contenders for the laurels had previously completed the regular schedule in a tie for the first place slot, each sporting five wins and but a single loss. The Varsity Blues and Watson's A.C. were eliminated in the league race.

The Tars took no chances as they fore-stalled and possible opportunity of an upset by icing their most potent team.

Pre-game prognosticators had uncovered a close-checking game, but the two teams shattered this hope from the opening whistle as they opened the game up with long and fast end-to-end rushes.

The line of Curry, Love and Slattery opened the scoring at the three-minute mark and the eventual winners were never headed from this point on.

The game roughened up considerably as both teams resorted to roughhouse tactics in an effort to slow down the killing pace. The sailors took advantage of the Victory penalties to rap in three quick goals with but a single reply from Victory. Score at the end of the initial period was 4-1.

The Bulldogs dominated the play throughout the second stanza and skated off the ice with the score 8-3 in their favor.

Bobby Schaurr was handed a penalty early in the third period and put on a temperamental display much to the indignation of the crowd. After being herded into the penalty box he proceeded with a childish display by arguing with the surrounding spectators.

Floyd Curry was top scorer of the night with four goals. Other scorers were Slattery 3, Armstrong 3, King 2, Dillon. Love and Schurr. Victory's goalgetters were Currie 3, Buxton and Bush.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasius

WELL WELL AND WELL

One of the quaintest characteristics of the comparatively small universities in Western Canada is their enterprising manner in overcoming obvious obstacles.

Unlike their Eastern brethren, these educational institutions carried on with their intercollegiate programs until, one by one, they fell by the wayside. The Universities of Saskatchewan and Alberta were the last to succumb, and regrettably packed away their equipment.

Then, suddenly, as if the four-year dearth of intercollegiate competition were too much, the University of Manitoba shook off the cloak of anonymity to proceed to plan a monstrous renovation.

This plan evolved into a basketball tournament in Saskatoon, where male and female teams from Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan met in a round-robin series.

Post-tourney comment from all concerned has been but too favorable. Praises have been heaped upon the host college. All three have acclaimed the experiment a success from the social as well as the athletic standpoint.

Perhaps the worm has turned. Whereas these institutions formerly looked East for guidance, they have now begun to think and act for themselves. In doing so, they have set a precedent. With due restriction, they are travelling, and making no fuss about it. Their resourcefulness and subtlety are indeed very admirable traits.

TO TRAVEL OR NOT TO TRAVEL

By unfortunate incidences, the Memorial Cup play-offs coincide with the annual burdensome examinations. Thus, freshmen Gus Morton and Johnny McCormack, of the St. Michael's Majors, will have little time for anything but a steady diet of books and hockey.

These worries are meagre when compared to what is going on around Winnipeg. The Monarchs of that city are given an even chance of winning the Western junior crown. That will entitle them to a trip to Toronto to meet St. Mike's.

Four members of that team are students at the University of Manitoba, and if the Monarchs do come East they will be in a muddle. These four will be duty-bound to leave their finals behind, not only because their team needs them but also because their opportunities for hockey careers may be enhanced. Thus the mainstays of the Monarchs are in a predicament.

A similar case confronted a Winnipeg Ranger of a few years back. He decided to travel here come-what-may and it was only after considerable pressure was brought to bear that Manitoba officials condescended to allow him to write a number of examinations on the local campus.

If the Monarchs are victorious, it will be interesting to note how these players will handle the situation.

The Sportswoman

By Janice Murray

IT'S ALL OVER BUT THE CHEERING

But there has been plenty of that (cheering). This year's hockey season has produced more than the expected thrills, and far exceeds the enthusiasm of the past couple of years. The schedule under Barbie Wilson's capable leadership went off without a hitch. This brings us to a little comment on the way all the schedules have been run. With only one exception, everything has gone very well. The exception is, we hope, going to join the ranks of the "well-done" category as soon as the snow melts.

RE THE AWARDS

There were a couple of little errors made in the column on the awards of last Friday. Leone Emuson and Betty Fullerton received, not the Junior "T" but a citation to the "T" they got last year. This corresponds to a bar to a medal, and it is quite an honor. The leading "General" which appeared in bold caption should have been in italics as it referred only to the reason the award was given. It's the same old Junior "T" however. Beneath that heading come the people who do a great many things very well.

To clear up some little doubts we will explain the general things about the awards. Unless one is in the top two or three of an individual sport, or has been tops on a team which wins the championship, one cannot receive a Junior "T." The special awards are made to those who are tops in a certain sport, or, better still, several sports, and are graduating. Third colors are given to people who may be fairly outstanding in some sports, whether graduating or not, and to the lesser lights of all champion teams. Therefore, for a Freshie to win a Junior "T" she must have been tops on a winning team as, for instance, the P.H.E. Freshie basketball squad.

The Senior "T" is, of course, for the girl who is outstanding in one sport, so good that she is in the top couple in that sport in the University. Whatever the award, however, it is the girl's Athletic Honor on this campus.

ALL-STAR BASKETBALL

From the welter of names submitted we have been forced to pick two teams, a Senior team and a Freshie team. The Senior line-up: Centre forward: Shirley Pearce. Wings: Joan Davis, Mike Mahaney, Rose Marie Cunningham, Pat Flynn. Centre guard: Joan Campbell. Wing guards: Lois Dowson, Joan Christie, Jean Barnhart. And for extra duty on this team: Kay MacMillan. Also given mention were Jan Hardy, Helen Patrick, Marion Taylor, Mildred Donaldson, Mary Reid, Ann Corrigan, Barb Allen, Betty Fullerton, Joan Chalk, Mary Heffer.

The Freshie line-up consists of: Forwards: Grace Barnett, Mickey Barnett, Mary Hicks, Tracy Stinson. Guards: Fran Lee, Marion Wadsworth, Mary Louise Knoll, Ann Sheppard. Also mentioned were Curly Weatherill, Jean Kaufman, Marg Cockshutt, Marg Chisholm.

It's pretty obvious that collating the names from the lists was harder for the Senior list than for the Freshie list, but the principle worked on was to make out a list of everyone, make little marks beside their name, and then count the number of marks, one for each vote. The same was done for hockey.

Will Select All-Stars From Intramural Teams

This year's hockey all-stars will be chosen in the next few days by the various team managers in the Jennings Cup loop and several other men who are considered capable of the responsibility involved in the job of selection.

Two points will be awarded for each team choice, while second team selections will earn one point in the balloting arrangement. Last year's team was chosen by seven team managers, one intramural referee, and a sports writer. The team was composed of Bryans of Meds, in goal; Wade of U.C. and Hovson of the Army Course, on defence; S.P.S.'s Brownridge patrolling the centre lane; Jimmy Graham of U.C. at right wing; and Forester Mel Lawson at left.

McDonough of Jr. School guarded the nets for the second team, supported by a defence duo of Medico Callahan and Engineer Bain (who now plays for U.C.). Nesbitt of U.C., Crassweller of Meds, and Cooper of Vic were the other three players to make the grade.

Of this group, only half—Bryans, Wade, Lawson, Callahan, Bain and Crassweller—remain. A host of newcomers has risen to fill the ranks of the departed, and the two selected teams will show many new faces. Most of the men who played for the Varsity Blues also played interfaculty hockey, and since they were chosen as the best in the University, they will probably also be the best on the Jennings Cup contenders.

The more teams that are handed in, the more representative will these all-stars be. Along with the team managers, the intramural hockey referees are also requested to hand in their choices as soon as possible. Team lists will be received in Room 42A, University Col-

"I've used it for more years than you could count. It rubs out those little twinges of pain like magic!" There is more Sloan's being used than any other liniment. Reason? It's recognized by doctors as "tops," needs only to be applied without rubbing, gets right down to work and co-operates with nature by bringing circulation to the spot.

between sky and cathedral windows and by the wide open space beyond the steeple.

Many of the contributions from students of architecture are watercolors and of view of design. The most pleasing pencil sketches interesting from the point of these is, perhaps, the group of houses by G. A. Robb, well arranged and set in sharp contrast against a dark sky.

This year's Undergraduate Show is really a most satisfying exhibition which nobody should fail to see.

About Turn

Convocation Hall

There are very few people who think of the C.O.T.C. as an organization contributing to the cultural activities of the campus. Their number was enlarged last night when the C.O.T.C. Band, under the direction of Lieut. J. L. MacDowell and Leslie R. Bell, gave their third annual Band Concert in Convocation Hall. The program was an ambitious one and not altogether suited to a brass band. For instance, it was difficult for the players to sound dainty enough for a Mozart Minuet. Yet in works not calling for such unilitary delicateness their performance was vigorous and effective.

In the Folk Song Suite by Vaughan Williams the band displayed a unity of purpose lacking in some of the other works. German's Dances from Henry VIII proved to be particularly adaptable to this medium and they were played well. The band's playing of a Sousa march was outstanding partly because Sousa's marches are unparalleled in the realm of military music. The most notable of the soloists was Frank Chirico whose trumpet playing was faultless. Raymond Cook, trombonist, Glenn Tamblin, euphoniumist, and Wm. Hosack, cellist, performed adequately.

PHILLIP FREEDMAN

He gave his life FOR THE RIGHT TO INVESTIGATE

Roger Bacon, great scientist of the Middle Ages, carried on scientific research in metals, in agriculture, medicine, chemistry. He studied the laws of optics; suggested the use of eyeglasses; carried on experiments in magnetism, and produced gunpowder. Imprisoned for fourteen years as a magician of evil, his health finally broke down, and he died in 1292 soon after his release.

LIKE Roger Bacon of old, scientists of today seek to solve many problems through scientific research. In the Nickel industry they have explored many fields in their search for new uses for Canadian Nickel. Today practically all industries have improved their products or their manufacturing methods by using Nickel.

When the war is over the Nickel research laboratories will again turn their efforts to developing the known uses for Nickel and discovering new ones.

Canadian engineers, designers and metallurgists have free access to the scientific and technical data gathered together by International Nickel. A request for information is all that is necessary.

Still wider knowledge of the ways in which Nickel may be usefully employed will further increase the demand for Canadian Nickel, and Canada will benefit accordingly.

After a brief interlude, a member of the audience asked why a discussion of C.C.F. policy always ended up with attacks upon Canada's other progressive party or on Soviet Russia. In reply to P. Cooper, who criticized the Communists for trying to ally the two Socialist parties, several Labor-Progressive supporters then opened up with heavy artillery against C.C.F. policy for entering the North Grey by-lection and thus offering the reactionaries their only chance of victory. Questioned as to what Communist M.P.s had accomplished in Canada, B. Allen cited the case of Fred Rose, Carleton member, who from the beginning had fought anti-semitism and other fascist threats. He added: "The C.C.F. should spend more time battling reaction instead of fighting their fellow-progressives."

Professor Underhill finally hinted at the desirability of returning to the topic, and a discussion of academic freedom ensued. When the threat of indoctrination in universities was mentioned, he said: "Actually we have had it all the time; where we agreed, we called it Education; where we didn't, we called it indoctrination."

Hart House Campaign Seems Colorless, Dull

By Reg Herman

The Hart House election campaign that began five days ago has, so far, proved as typical of past years as an engineer in a philosophy lecture.

Admittedly, electioneering is limited to a five dollar maximum expenditure, barring handouts of valuable articles such as gum, yo-yos and chewing tobacco, but posters certainly do not make a campaign. It is rumored that the enraged warden is suing a candidate for sneaking in a poster half an inch longer than the limit set.

Have the days gone for ever when Hart House corridor was a blaze of color not a minute after the official opening hour had struck? Where are the back-slapping barkers and the hand-shaking electioneers? Where is the pandemonium, the din of the campaign bosses thundering across the campus, the gusto and high-pressure as the oil flows thick and free? Has the heritage of other days gone the way of butter and sweaters in Hart House?

From back files of The Varsity come accounts of candidates zipping across the campus on roller skates, sandwich boards and clanging bells, hot trumpet solos and jazz bands, and one showman who raced an old nag up and down Hoskins Avenue in a Wild-West-like buckboard. Year by year is outlined the tragedy of a slowly thinning electorate propagandized with

U.C. to Hold Smoker For Lit. Nominations

The "Smoker," a long defunct social function in University College, will be revived tonight at the Junior Common Room to supplant the annual nomination banquet of the Literary and Athletic Society. The occasion will serve to encourage college spirit among the members and to permit them to become acquainted with the nominees for the executive of the "Lit."

Members of the present executive will be on hand to give an account of their year's work and to answer questions of the members. Tickets are being sold by members of the executive.

EDITORIAL

Vote . . .

Tomorrow, the male population of the University will go to the polls to elect the committees that will represent them in the administration of Hart House, the University of Toronto's far-famed male sanctuary. Already posters outlining the merits of the competing candidates have begun to line the walls of Hart House corridors; already the candidates have begun their personal campaigning.

It is often lamented that the old back-slapping and hand-shaking electioneering of by-gone days, the din and pandemonium that was once Hart House elections, is a thing of the past. Perhaps this is only an indication that university students go about their business more seriously in these unnatural times; or perhaps, as is more likely, the students are reflecting the prevalent apathetic attitude of the general public towards public affairs. In any case, it remains the duty of every male at the University to vote.

Last year, because of the light vote in the previous years, and in order to prevent the domination of the committees by any one particular college or fraternity, the old notorious and almost incomprehensible 300-vote rule was discarded. In its place a system of counting, based on one-half the highest vote polled, was substituted. Under this system any candidate who collects at least 50 per cent of the vote of the candidate who leads the polls is eligible for election. Of the men who receive the requisite number of votes, one man is selected from each of the faculties or colleges represented until the committee is complete. Under this system the distribution of seats on the committees was improved, since candidates from small faculties had almost the same chance of obtaining a seat as did candidates from the larger faculties.

Every year many votes are wasted in the Hart House elections because of spoiled ballots. Every voter should read the instructions regarding the marking of ballots carefully before he casts his vote, or he may jeopardize his candidates' chances of being elected. Also, it is required that University Registration Cards be shown before a member is allowed to vote. Remember to bring yours along when you come to VOTE!

MEDICAL EXAMINATIONS

ROUTINE TO BE FOLLOWED IN DEALING WITH

I: AN ORDER—MEDICAL EXAMINATION

II: AN ORDER—MILITARY TRAINING

ORDER—MEDICAL EXAMINATION

1. (a) Student taking Military Training at the University
Each student who receives an Order—Medical Examination from a Divisional Registrar will present the Order to the Ship's Office, if enlisted in the U.N.T.D., or to the Orderly Room of the Battalion of the C.O.T.C. in which he is enrolled. If he wishes to make application for postponement of military service in order that he may continue at the University, he will complete the application form provided by his Unit, attach it to the Order, and leave them at the Orderly Room.

(b) Student taking Military Training with a Reserve Unit
This student will obtain the application form at the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall, fill it out and take it to the Orderly Room of the Unit in which he is enlisted; after the form has been signed by his Commanding Officer, the student will leave the Order and the application at the University Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall.

(c) Student who is not taking Military Training
A student who is not taking Military Training for any reason will bring his Order to the Registrar's Office, Simcoe Hall, if he wishes to make application for postponement. He will complete the form provided, attach it to the Order, and leave them both at the office of the Registrar, Simcoe Hall.

2. Where applicable, the Commanding Officer will certify that the student is taking Military Training satisfactorily, and forward the application to the University Registrar. The latter will certify that the student is in good standing and in full-time attendance at classes, and will forward both Order and Application to the Divisional Registrar concerned.

3. This application will be dealt with by the Mobilization Board and, if approved by the Board, a postponement order will be issued to the student. This order, when received, will be presented for noting to the Orderly Room of his Unit.

4. A student who desires extension of a postponement will make application as outlined above, at a date not less than 30 days prior to the expiration of the postponement previously granted by the Mobilization Board.

II. ORDER—MILITARY TRAINING

5. The Order—Military Training will not be issued unless:

(a) the Mobilization Board has rejected the student's application for postponement of military training, or

(b) no application for postponement has been made by the student.

6. The student may appeal against this order to the Mobilization Board, either in writing or in person.

7. The student, however, must report for military service as ordered unless he is officially advised otherwise by the Mobilization Board before the date on which he has been ordered to report.

An English film such as "Warsaw Concerts" can give us so much greater satisfaction than its average cousin from California, because it manages to centre attention on a consolidated dramatic plot. All its build-up, technical perfection and technicolor will not lift the American movie up to that level: it is still Melodrama. This British film, though laden with music, strangely remains Drama.

Champus Kitty " Rum Bars Him!

Interviewed yesterday in his basement workshop, where he was busily sawing up worn-out decoys to be served in the Great Hall as Mock Duck, Warden J. B. Lickerbreth indignantly denied rumors that Principal Kidney Myth's talking St. Bernard, "Mackenzie," had been entered as a last-minute candidate for the Knitting Committee.

"Certainly not," he stormed, chinning himself on a portable Gothic Arch. "Never, so long as I am Warden of Hart House, will a talking dog be permitted to serve on any committee." In further discussion he enumerated the following reasons:

(1) "Mackenzie's" shaggy coat is perilously like a sweater.

(2) The rum keg about the St. Bernard's neck constitutes a breach of House regulations if full, and a perennial frustration if empty.

(3) The rule that calls for a committee vote by show of hands cannot by any possible means be stretched to include paws.

(4) Knitting committee rules state that all members must have figured in the annual purling competition within the six months preceding election. There is no proof that "Mackenzie" can knit anything but his brows.

(5) Chairs at the High Table are "unsuitable" for a dog. So is the Great Hall soup. "I wouldn't serve it to a dog," admitted the Warden.

Telephoning the Myth home in quest of a statement from "Mackenzie," a Varsity reporter was told that the talking dog was no longer permitted to use the telephone.

"Last time, the receiver got lost in the tangled fur round his ears, and we were a week finding it," explained Mrs. Myth. She offered, however, to ask the talking St. Bernard anything the reporter desired to know and relay the answers.

"Mackenzie," however, claimed his comments were "unsuitable for a feminine intermediary." And there the matter rests.

The Underdog . . .

In sport, as in everyday life, the humanitarian instinct in the individual is such that he will always cast his lot with the underdog. Devotion to a cause is, of course, a definite exception to this, but when we say "the individual" we automatically characterize him as an impartial observer of events, having no bonds of affection or loyalty to either side of the contest. When the bully of the tough gang from across the tracks picks on an innocent kid, we love to see the kid stand up to him and soundly thrash the scoundrel, just like it happens in the comics.

We found ourselves in a similar situation last Wednesday night at the first game of the Junior A play-off series between St. Mike's and St. Catherine's at Maple Leaf Gardens. As a resident of Toronto, we should naturally align ourselves with St. Mike's, the pride of the local hockey circles this winter, but, being by nature a character who takes a lot of convincing, we felt very impartial as we sat there waiting for the first period to get under way. We began to construct rationally the situation thusly: the Saints have very little chance of winning tonight—we want to see them win. This was very noble indeed.

As play got started, we began to see a pre-arranged St. Catherine's plan unfolding—namely, that those villains were out there to be rough, tough and nasty to the smooth and sportsmanlike St. Mike's boys. This conclusion came to us midway through the first period, shattering our profoundly-constructed philosophy completely. We immediately reached a final and very conclusive stand in favor of St. Mike's, and to make us feel even happier, they came from behind a one-goal deficit and won the game 6-1.

There is a parallel situation on our own campus which immediately comes to mind. This concerns Schoolmen—and others who partake in intramural athletics. The stereotyped opinion which prevails is that whoever is playing S.P.S. in any shape or form must uphold the honor of "the others" and "soundly thrash the scoundrels."

This is pure hogwash. Just because there happens to be a few rugged individuals around School who really throw themselves into any game they play, regardless of the consequences to their own lives and limbs (as well as those of their opponents), this doesn't imply that there aren't the same number and more within their camp who are sportsmen in the true sense of the word. Why should School as a whole be classed in their athletics with the St. Catherine's team that appeared at the Gardens last Wednesday night?

Finals and More Finals . . .

Yes, indeed, you can certainly tell that exams are just around the corner! One by one the interfaculty sports are completing their schedules and are folding their tents like the Arabs and as silently drifting away. The latest form of athletic endeavor to write Finis to its activities is the Varsity Women's Bowling Club. Under the capable guidance of Polly Mutz from St. Mike's the club has flourished all winter down at the Olympic alleys. All faculties had teams in the league practising up for the bowling finals which were held yesterday afternoon.

St. Mike's Wins Again . . .

Every faculty was represented at the meet, and early in the afternoon the play-offs began in earnest. When the smoke of battle had cleared away, along about supper-time, U.C. was found to be in proud possession of the team high average championship. Second place in this hotly-contested team final went to P.H.E. Finally the girls set about finding out who was Varsity's top woman bowler for '44-'45. Ruth O'Shaughnessy of St. Mike's exhibited beautiful style and with deadly accuracy piled up point after point to win the individual championship.

Speaking of Finals . . .

If the weather—meaning the $30,000.00 rain the Mayor was chortling about a while back—keeps on doing what it has been doing this past week, we can look forward to the baseball finals in the not-too-distant future. It is unfortunate that the girls have no gym large enough to play the game indoors, for it would undoubtedly be very popular as a regular sport; if last fall's participation is any criterion. Better get out the gloves and start throwing the ball around, gals, for the looks of the great outdoors—IT WON'T BE LONG NOW!

ART, MUSIC & DRAMA

girl entering the scene; few words spoken . . . love . . . marriage in the United States—all this is too reminiscent of the romantic era (still very much alive) in cinematography.

The film's conflict was the familiar one of contentment in hardship battling restlessness in security; its story is that of a Polish flying musician, who left his ruined fatherland, swore to return, was married, concert-toured America amidst enthusiasm, forsook his wife to fight again, found her once more. . . . It thus shows not only a parallel of Chopin's story, it is his biography, told again and again and set upon the stage of this war.

Whatever the thoughts of a patriotic virtuoso may be, when he plays his stirring concerto, the neo-Chopinquesque concert pieces, which certainly did not approach the old master's standards, evoked battle scenes passing in front of the hero's eyes, patriotism battling with genius. We have severe doubts as to whether such phantasies are the most fitting accompaniment to the particular music played, but they present a good analysis of the hero's psychological and moral reactions.

Maurice Cody Scholarship Awarded To Ben Orenstein At U.C. 'Smoker' Last Night

Report of Year's Lit Activities Presented; Nominations for Next Year's Executive Held; Future Programs Planned

CAPACITY ATTENDANCE

Corn-cob pipes, hot-dogs, and Char-maine were feature attractions at the University College Literary and Athletic "Smoker" held last night in the Junior Common Room. A capacity crowd was in attendance to hear reports of last year's Lit activities and plans for future programs.

Bob Bell, retiring president of the Lit, presented keys to the graduating members of the executive.

During the evening, Ben Orenstein was chosen winner of the Maurice Cody scholarship, valued at $30. This scholarship is awarded annually to a graduating student showing the most ability in public speaking and other forms of endeavor throughout his undergraduate career.

A varied program of skits and songs was then put on by those campus cut-ups, Orenstein, Stapells, Walker, and Siegal, for the benefit of the rabid spectators.

After the entertainment the following nominations were held for the various offices:

Three U.C. Students To Present Papers

Three University College students will present papers on modern British and Continental writers at a Modern Letters Club meeting in the Women's Union at 8 o'clock tomorrow night.

Uma Chatterji will discuss the Hindu poet Tagore, whom she says "represents the spirit of modern India." "Though a nationalist in party, he is an internationalist in spirit," she continued, "and though a Hindu, a universalist in religion."

Several plays of the Hungarian dramatist, Ferenc Molnar, will be the topic of Henry Kreisel, III Eng. "Molnar's plays," says Kreisel, "mix romanticism and fantasy, and are marked by wit and charm, gentle cynicism, and complete freedom from didacticism."

Hugh Kenner, IV Eng., will present what he describes as "An Introduction to the Chesterbelloc." "Gilbert Chesterton and Hilaire Belloc," says Kenner, "are two strangely neglected knights-errant of modern letters, stylists in the great tradition and full of a unique social gospel in the best spirit of Catholic liberalism."

All students interested are invited to attend. Refreshments will be served, and an open discussion will follow the papers.

Owing to the greatly increased number of candidates and our restricted space available for the Tuesday and Wednesday issues this year, we are unable to publish any candidate's sketch twice, as was done last year.)

"Varsity" Swamped With Copy By Eager Hart House Candidates

Be careful when you raise your Varsity today if you don't want to drown in the honey and oil pouring off the front page from the Hart House candidates' sketches.

There are 82 men running for 32 positions on the four major committees, and despite the lack of ballyhoo from the candidates it promises to be a gory fight. From the first, student ire was aroused by the School-U.C. war, so that the natural partisanship of the electors for candidates in their own faculty has been heightened.

Cannous, smoke-bombs and Declarations of War don't make for an election by themselves, but the college spirit aroused has spread to the other faculties who are not to be outdone. In the Hart House corridor are many group posters, brilliantly expounding the nireadous abilities of Meds candidates in general, calling for a faculty vote for the Skulmen, and others.

The elections seemed destined for a poor year during the week of nominations, when The Varsity reported on the last day that only two committees had sufficient candidates to necessitate an election. The majority of candidates were nominated for their respective committees on the very last day, saving the annual event from becoming almost defunct.

This same last-minute tendency of the candidates has swamped The Varsity with campaign sketches on the final two days before the elections. However, this tardiness may be a deliberate and shrewd attempt to gain propaganda space on election day, when bewitching promises stillingle in voters' ears as they receive their ballots.

All that remains to be seen is whether the lack of dash and excitement in the campaign will prove merely that energy has been stored up for a last-minute explosion of enthusiasm to bring in the votes. On the other hand, if things continue as up till now, Hart House elections will degenerate eventually into glorified tea-parties. Next year's Varsity will read like a social column, ending with some such daring statement as "Blotters were distributed."

No murders are expected, but the maxim, "All's fair in love and politics" may yet arouse the candidates to a revival of the old colorful heritage of by-gone Hart House elections.

Director Of Health Service Will Lecture Next Monday On "Artificial Respiration"

'T's', Crests Awarded U.C. Women Athletes

"I am glad to say that the public are now regarding school sports as an important part of the school curriculum," said Mr. Fred Bartlett, director of Physical and Health Education for Ontario, in his address at the U.C. Women's Athletic banquet at the Royal York Hotel last night.

Principal Sidney Smith answered the toast to University College by stressing the necessity for team spirit and by saying that he was pleased to see how many girls turned out for sports during these war years.

"Kiddy" Faber, in a reply to Mary Mulligan's military toast to the coaches, hoped that in future years more city girls would turn out for athletics, in addition to those from Whitney Hall. He also expressed a desire that the teams would receive more active support from those who do not play, in future years.

Miss A. E. M. Parkes presented the "T's" to those outstanding in the field of sports and, while appreciating the efforts of those who played on teams, deplored the fact that in many sports U.C. entered only one team.

The U.C. Honor Crests were presented by Registrar W. J. McAndrew, who lauded the achievements of University College made under the trying circumstances imposed by the war.

Pharmacists to Canvass For Red Cross on Friday

Lectures and labs on Friday morning in the Faculty of Pharmacy have been cancelled by Dean R. O. Hurst in order that the students may canvass in the interests of the current Red Cross drive for funds.

Mr. Lloyd Wood, a district chairman of the Toronto Red Cross, said that the students had helped in the last three campaigns and had done an excellent job.

Election Platforms To Be Outlined At Meeting Of Campus Societies

For its last meeting, being held on Thursday, March 8, in Cartwright Hall in St. Hilda's College, The International Affairs Society has joined with six other campus societies to present an Election Platform Forum, featuring speakers from the major political parties.

The six joint sponsors, the Society announcements, are the Political Science Club, the C.C.F. Club, the Modern History Club, the Medical Arts and Letters Club, the Jewish Student Fellowship, and the S.P.S. Debating Society. The speakers will each give a 15-minute talk on the aims of their respective parties. The Liberals will be represented by Mr. John Hallinan, who is interested in the co-operative movement; and the Progressive Conservatives by F. G. Gardiner, K.C.

D. N. Cass-Beggs, professor of Electrical Engineering, is the C.C.F. federal candidate in Rosedale. Mr. Wm. Kash-tan is the St. Paul's candidate for the Labor-Progressives.

Since many students will be voting for the first time in the coming elections, they should find a great deal of interest in this forum, said Agnes Fischer, president of the International Affairs Society.

Doctor R. W. I. Urquhart to be Speaker; Eve Rocking Method of Artificial Respiration Will Also be Demonstrated

IN DEBATES ROOM

A lecture on "Artificial Respiration" will be given by Dr. R. W. I. Urquhart, director of the University Health Service, in the Debates Room of Hart House at 4:45 p.m. on Monday, March 12.

The lecture is part of a course which also includes a demonstration, practice, and examination which will take place on March 13. The lecture is compulsory for all men taking life-saving classes, and is also open to all students and staff.

In the fall of 1942 the course in artificial respiration was introduced by the Health Service with the co-operation of the University of Toronto Athletic Association. Open to all male students and staff in the University and held twice during the academic year, this course qualifies all men who complete it satisfactorily for the Respiration Service Badge of the Royal Life Saving Society.

According to M. G. Griffiths, assistant director of Physical Training and Athletics for Men, a knowledge of artificial respiration is vital for everyone, for in this province, with its network of lakes, bays, rivers, there is always a chance of assisting people who are apparently drowned, as well as those asphyxiated in any way.

Artificial respiration, he continued, is especially important for men in engineering and forestry, who will probably be working near bodies of water, and for students working in summer camps during their vacation.

The Eve Rocking method of artificial respiration, used in the American and British navies, will also be demonstrated during the respiration course. This method, stated Mr. Griffiths, although not a first aid one, is very successful. It was not used until this war.

Last fall, over 200 students took the course.

T.B. Bacillus Becomes Sausage-Sized Under Six Foot Electron Microscope

By Ernst R. Deutsch

"This is a T.B. bacillus," said Prof. E. F. Burton, head of the Physics Department, as he pointed to the photo of a curved object, the size of a sausage. "And here you have the edge of a perfect razor blade," he added, referring to a jaggedly bizarre outline that resembled a straight line as much as a mountain resembles a plain.

The magician who had produced all these problem patterns was an electron microscope. One of the two now in use at the University of Toronto, it is a stately apparatus, six feet high and fed by a direct current supply of 45,000 volts which must be kept constant within 1 or 2 volts. Interviewed by The Varsity yesterday, Prof. Burton said that the first North American specimen had been taken in 1938 in Canada and that it had taken one man twenty months to construct this one, which was completed in 1944.

Actually, this bewildering gadget is not very different from the conventional microscope—if you turn the latter upside down, surround a few short solenoids with absolute vacuum to substitute for glass lenses, use electrons instead of light, exchange the eyepiece for a phosphorescent screen and replace the sun by a tungsten filament discharge tube, you have an electron microscope.

Professor Burton emphasized that this most recent tool of physical science is not only valuable, it will soon become invaluable to research—simply because the Light Microscope has about reached its limit of capacity. When objects become much smaller than a light wave, we simply cannot see them. To be more exact, the smallest objects we can enlarge through a microscope, using a wavelength λ , have a diameter $d = \lambda/2 \sin A$, which is at the most only $1/125,000$ of an inch.

"This limitation, being basically a lack of illumination, is overcome in the new microscope by using a wavelength of a much shorter period—that is, electrons," said Prof. Burton. If V is the accelerating voltage freeing electrons in the discharge tube, λ is equal to only $12.24 \times 10^{-8} / \sqrt{V}$ cms. Theoretically, such a microscope could make visible objects down to one 237 millionth of a centimetre—sufficient power for a button to cover all of Canada, or for a fence-post to reach to the moon!

However, Professor Burton cautioned against overemphasizing magnification. "Most people think that all a microscope is good for is to enlarge," he said. "But the important property of a microscope must be what is called its resolving power." The latter can separate two apparently coincident points, whilst magnification only makes a blot of them, he explained, illustrating this by stressing that one can only enlarge a photograph reasonably until everything that is on the plate can be seen; after that no amount of magnification will help any more.

About to leave the microscope, we were reminded by the professor that we had not seen the whole thing yet. Really, there was a side room which contained giant generators, supplying the electric current and a voluminous array of power for creating the vacuum. "You see, electron microscopes are not obtainable in pocket edition yet," he said.

GO...

Today is the day that the male students at this University will prove whether they understand and appreciate the principles of democracy. Today the polls will open at Hart House and the undergraduate members of that marvellous institution will elect the men who will represent them in the forthcoming year on the committees which handle the gigantic administrative problems of the House. In the past few years, only a very small percentage of the total male undergraduate registration of the University exercised their franchise. As a result of this and the old 300-vote rule which required that a candidate must poll at least 300 votes to be eligible for election, the committees were dominated by men from only a few of the larger faculties and colleges.

This unhappy condition was the cause for a great deal of criticism to be levelled at the administration of the House. It was claimed by those who did not know, that the undergraduate committees were impotent and that the House was a priceless example of bureaucracy and a dictatorship in the heart of a university in a democratic country. If there were any basis for this accusation it would be that the undergraduate interest in the administration of the House had waned to such an extent that the permanent employees of the House had found it necessary to set up a very complete organization to cope with the tremendous problems that confronted them.

Today, however, political consciousness on the part of the University students appears to be once more in the ascendancy. Strong committees mean a stronger undergraduate voice in Hart House. This year the list of nominations exceeded that of last year by some 30 men, making an election for each of the six undergraduate committees possible. The candidates are there; the onus now rests with the electorate. By selecting the best available men for the committees, the students can themselves bring about a better, a more comfortable and a more democratic Hart House. There is no excuse for any male undergraduate who does not cast his vote in today's election.

The notorious 300-vote rule has been superseded by a newer system based on one-half of the highest vote polled, in order to insure a more equitable distribution of seats among the various groups on the campus.

The students at the University should be able to set an example for the voting population of the country and prove by their active interest in their own democratic system the much-debated point that a university education does make a better citizen. It is therefore more than a privilege, it is a duty for every man at university to go to Hart House today and VOTE.

Correspondence

The Editor, The Varsity, March 3, 1945.
Madam:

The editorial on "The Future of Journalism" in The Varsity of March 2, parallels, if it does not reflect, a tardy but gratifying recognition by some members of the university staff of the value of a kindergarten for reporters to prepare them for the irreplaceable but frequently disorganized tangle of the news room. The chief fault of this group is that it still clings to the outworn orthodoxy which requires any subject in an arts course to remove the slippers of practical application lest the dust of the world stain the sacred floors of the mosque of higher education.

Now I am not one to knock the humanities. A sound grounding in basic wisdom, and a period spent in the practice of contemplation in a place somewhat aloof from the hustle of a largely unthinking world can stand a newspaperman in good stead, and may even become an essential qualification for newspaper work. But any graduate who comes to a managing editor equipped only with a mass of alleged education is as useless, initially, as the lowest copy boy. He needs something else. Not a four year concentration on subjects especially designed to make him a journalistic johannes factotum and the technical terror of all his seniors, but a bare minimum of news writing, copy handling, newspaper law, and the history and function of news.

Six hours in the course of four years, one hour and a half per year, would be enough to cover this ground. This minimum is not enough to sustain a full year's graduate course, which is, after all, a fair sized oak to hope for all at once.

A graduate course would have scope for much valuable work, but most of it would be fairly advanced. Why not start with a hard minimum kernel, and let it grow? One and a half hours a year, made widely available in various undergraduate courses, would supply a very sound little acorn.

Such a course would help keep valuable recruits for the nation's press content to remain with their more leisurely studies. It would also be an encouragement against the discouragement of wise (?) elders who seek steadily to save youngsters from newspaper work which they seem to believe is the original unmentionable referred to as "a fate worse than death". Finally, and most substantially, it would help enhance the reputation (not yet too high) of college graduates in news rooms, by preparing them to step, not into editorial chairs, but into junior positions where they would be able to pull most of their own weight from the first.

Notwithstanding your horrible example, who is greatly disappointed after canvassing seven out of nearly 100 dailies in Canada, there is going to be continued demands for recruits on newspapers. The trend as foreseen by at least one managing editor, is going to be toward larger coverage and smaller stories, resulting in more manpower for every column of type than ever before.

If I seem outrageous in shouting for a useful course in an arts education, let me point out that the University of Toronto is now teaching most of the courses I suggested. The history of the newspaper and the study of its effect is buried in the economics department in unaccentuated form, the law is scattered to law students, and the English department is actually turning to the task of teaching students to write. Not, mind you, how to write a sound report in terse, understandable language, but "creative" writing—flying before walking!

Some people would doubt that creative writing can be taught, but there is no doubt that the news form of writing can be taught, although few realize how difficult the lesson is. Excuse me if I'm a bit boorish in my approach, but to this simple mind it seems harmless to bring together these existing elements and introduce another under the sanction of a trend already visible, and put them in handy form.

Yours sincerely,

Rex Wilson,
Vic. 4T3.

Correspondence

Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Madam:

Democracy? Hart House elections are a democracy. I know very well. Three years ago I voted Steinjazzer onto the House Committee on the definite understanding that a free juke-box would be installed in the Great Hall, beer would be served in the Tuck Shop, and the Warden would come to dinner in a paper hat with bells on it.

In fact, Steinjazzer swore he would live the place up. He was elected on that platform. Did he succeed? No. Only last week Steinjazzer himself came to dinner in a polka-dotted sweater and was chucked out.

It is plain that the student voice in House affairs is negligible. I shall not vote again, and shall caution all freshmen likewise.

"Disgusted."

(Ed. Note.—Let Mr. Disgusted recall that reform must make slowly—"slowly" broadening down from precedent to precedent." The thin end of the wedge must enter first. Only this year curtains of a more daring pattern were hung in the Graduate Common Room. Let no one lose heart too soon.)

The Editor, The Varsity.

Hi, Babe:

Why should anyone vote for Hart House Committees? Schoolmen always swamp the polls, and the ordinary voter's ballot is wasted. Indeed, it is a waste of paper printing those ballots at all. Why not let the defeated candidates for the Engineering Society take office in Hart House automatically, and end the whole farce?

"Passionate Pharmacist."

(Ed. Note.—We excuse our correspondent's implication that Schoolmen are not ordinary voters. However, the solution lies with the latter. By the 300-vote rule, a U.C. man who gets more than a Schoolman will be elected. This can be shown mathematically, but is too long to explain here.)

Editor, The Varsity.

Dear Mrs. Bobkurth:

Why is everybody down on us Schoolmen? We live and let live. Why can't other people do the same? It is plain that the whole Hart House election scheme is a "Beat School" frameup, and I for one shall not be a party to it. I refuse to vote.

"Toike Oike."

(Ed. Note.—As to why everybody is down on you, ask the U.C. Lit. They started this thing. As to why you should vote, we don't think you need to worry about the electoral outcome. Returning Officer Cowcatcher, as we have hinted, is a Schoolman. Beer is thicker than water.)

Editor, The Varsity.

Please, Miss:

I have a problem. I was going over the Hart House nominees, when a big brunner with a sly drool came up and said I'd better Vote School Or Else. He called himself "an expert pants remover." What should I do?

"Worried."

(Ed. Note.—This depends on whether the blake intends to remove other people's pants or his own. In the former case he is an anarchist; in the latter, a saniscultist. In neither case should you have anything to do with him.)

Editor, The Varsity.

Madam:

My sensibilities are utterly revolted by the whole disgusting carnival called Hart House Elections. People shout and wave posters and stampede the corridors and even give away blotters.

If other people want to indulge their animal nature, all right; but not for me, thanks. I shall be miles away from Hart House on election day, among my hyacinths. Do you use hyacinths for your soul?

(Ed. Note.—Nope.)

THAT OLD INTERCOLLEGIATE SPIRIT . . .

Down old McGill way, that spirit of intercollegiate conflict has seeped downward into the depths of tinged journalism. Rather than wait for the official result of the telegraphic swim meet held last Thursday, the sports staff of the McGill Daily issued forth with a vile statement questioning the honesty of the C.A.S.A. officials who clocked the events at the Hart House pool. Said the Daily: "... and the Toronto natators seem to bring all laws of mathematics, including that of averages."

Our only reply is that the aforementioned paper has broken all the laws of journalism—college, yellow, or otherwise. The meet was held under the direct jurisdiction of the C.I.A.U. The officials, at McGill's request, were all accredited members of the highest amateur association in Canada. Whilst the Daily's first duty was to cover the event and then add its supposedly unbiased comments, someone, in a dire effort to get some sleep, left the event before the final telegram had arrived and then went off the deep end. Such comments as "... seemingly absurd results of the relay" are entirely uncalled for, if the Daily had taken the trouble to find out the results from an official source.

Premedatory comment of this source tends to throw little towards the efforts to revive intercollegiate. The less there is of this, the better the chances will be for a return of these conflicts in the fall.

AND THE HOCKEY PLAY-OFFS . . .

Monday saw the first round in the Intramural Hockey play-offs fully played and finished. In the first game of the afternoon, the Meds III team met the favored U.C. I squad and played stalwartly, only to bow to the Royal Collegians by the score of 5-0. The Meds put on as good a show playing with U.C. as the Meds Senior team did at any time during the regular season's play. Following up, Senior School played Forestry and won 8-1, to gain a place in the semi-finals. Starring for Forestry was Vetter in goal, who had rubber flying at him from all directions all through the game, and kept the Engineers down to a mere eight goals.

In the doubleheader nightcap, the teams were much more evenly matched. S.P.S. III battled it out with Meds II, and came out on the top of a 3-2 score. To finish off the evening, Vic I came to a 3-2 decision over Trinity B.

The first of the semi-finals was played yesterday afternoon, between U.C. I and S.P.S. III. The powerful U.C. team had little trouble gaining their 8-1 victory over the Engineers, to win a place in the finals. Senior School and Vic I meet in the remaining semi-final game to be played today. From here it looks as if U.C. and S.P.S. will again be the finalists for the Jennings Trophy.

HITTING THE HIGH SPOTS . . .

Baseball . . . the semi-finals in the ball play-offs have been played, and the finalists are Sr. S.P.S. and U.C. I. On Monday, U.C. made the grade by eliminating Dent A to the tune of 12-6. Yesterday, Sr. School beat S.P.S. III 7-4 to make the finals. The Dents-U.C. game was the best seen on the Hart House diamond this year, the Dents' team holding back U.C. until a late stage in the game.

Water-polo . . . the competition displayed in water-polo games the past while has been of the highest calibre. The coming play-offs should provide about the keenest playing in any of the winter play-offs.

Wrestling . . . George Daly wound up his season's duties as wrestling coach last night. To finish the season, he had the senior finalists, Sklar of S.P.S. and Sayers of Dents fight it out. Sklar won the senior heavyweight title.

Track . . . among yesterday's hurdlers, top form was shown by Warren Scott, a Vic freshman. The best hurdling stylist on the track, Scott needs but a little training to speed up his time between leaps.

U.C. I Trounces School Thirds 8-1 In Jennings Cup Semi-Final Play-Off

By Jack M. Fine

U.C. I trimmed School Thirds 8-1 yesterday afternoon in the Arena to gain the final round of the Jennings Cup play-offs, to be played next week between the Artsmen and the winner of today's Sr. S.P.S.-Vic I game.

The Engineers scored their only goal in the early moments of the first period on Walker's long shot from the blue line which was screened from U.C. goalie Davidson's view. The Schoolmen bottled the much vaunted U.C. squad up in their own end for the first ten minutes of the game before U.C. got organized. Superior skill and experience soon began to show and towards the end of the first period the rubber was in the School zone repeatedly.

"Tiny" Thompson scored his first goal of the season to tie the game, and Davidson tilted towards the end of the period to make U.C. supporters breathe more easily. The period was marked by seven penalties as the heavy U.C. rear-guards threw their weight around the ice against the lighter Engineers. The second line of Purcell, Thompson and Fyfe played their best hockey of the year as they backchecked the School forwards into the ground. Vern Purcell especially turned in a fine all-round performance and was robbed of goals by Moore at least twice.

U.C. skated on the ice at the beginning of the second period determined to increase their one-goal margin. Within fifteen seconds, Furry grabbed the puck at the face-off and passed over to Davidson, who parked the rubber neatly behind Moore. Pete Ferguson scored on Davidson's rebound to put the game on ice for U.C. The School squad seemed to lose heart at this stage and the winners streamed through their defence and peppered shots at Moore until Furry got the puck in front of the cage and shot it home to give U.C. a 5-1 lead.

The goal parade continued with the resumption of play in the third and final period, with Furry getting a singleton and Ferguson counting a pair to give him the hat-trick for the day's play.

School Thirds, winners of Group III, put up a surprisingly good fight during the first period but wilted after that.

Phelan, Sutton, Shaw and Moore were the best of the Engineers.

U.C. goalie Davidson played another good game in goal, blocking every School chance and preventing rebounds

Track Standings Remain Unchanged In Hart House Indoor Track Meet

Vic, School, Meds and Trinity split the honors in this week's events in the indoor track meet, the 50-yard low hurdles, and the senior two mile. There were no changes in the track standings as a result of this week's meet, Meds still having a workable edge over the runners-up, Vic.

Seventy men entered the hurdling event—a number of them freshmen showing great promise as hurdlers for post-war development. Tied for first place were Booth of S.P.S. and Antoni of Meds, with times of 6.5 seconds. In third place were Shaw of S.P.S. and Mathew of U.C., who straddled the hurdles in 6.8 seconds. There was also a tie for fifth place, between Yeates of S.P.S. and Hickish of Vic, with a record of 6.9 seconds each.

Fewer students entered the two-mile event, only about fifteen of them. The older senior distance runners, Fielding and James of Meds, and Fordyce of School, did not run, giving the younger runners a far better chance to show their stuff. Sloan of Vic finished the race in first place, with a time of 10.32.4, considered to be good running for the event. In second place was Hamley of Trinity, with a time of 10.47.6, and in third and fourth places respectively were Mackie of Trinity and Gordon of Vic.

This was the second to the final week of indoor track competition, and to wind things up next week, Hec Phillips is going to run off the standing broad jump and the quarter-mile open.

DEMOCRACY AT WORK DEPT.

Just a scrap of this conversation was wafted our way as two determined politicians strode down the hall. Said one: "But do you think we should have called a meeting? What of the outcome?" Said the other: "Oh, there won't be much doing at this meeting—no third and fourth year joes there. We didn't notify any."

UTTER ABSENCE OF TACT DEPT.

A church notice in an evening paper recently announced its morning service thusly:

"11 a.m. The Rector. 'The Devil Roaring Up and Down.'"

And an advertiser in the King St. evening paper appeals in large-sized type:

BABY NURSE WANTED

What they call a nursing?

Your favorite morning paper has been printing Record Group programs pretty regularly without entertaining much idea of the exciting lives these people seem to lead. A recent Globe and Mail headline supplies some clue:

RECORD GROUP HOME FROM WAR'S HOT SPOTS

NOW IT CAN BE TOLD DEPT.

Some weeks ago, you may recall, the Chemistry Building was host to a slight conflagration which resulted in two alarms, a broken leg, $12,000 damages, and lots of excitement.

Late that afternoon the perennial cud-chewing Varsity reporter mentioned, casual-like, to Ye Editress, "Fire in the Chem building this morning."

"What?" shrieked the Editor.

"Fire in the Chem building."

"Big one?"

"Yup."

"Did you get the story?"

"Naw. I hadda go to lunch."

A SHOT RANG OUT . . .

Professors, as we have said before so profoundly, are abominable. This one is so abominable that it resulted in him carving a name for himself for posterity. On a wall.

His fame began two years ago, when he was invited to attend a University dinner at a Bloor Street sweetery. But, coming late, he found there were no pegs left on which to hang his coat and so he left the joint, startling the diners with his deprecating remarks.

Well, the next year he was invited to the same affair. Again he arrived late, and—you guessed it,—again no pegs.

This time, though, he muttered no deprecations. But he did rush out of the sweetery, only to return 20 minutes later, when he startled the diners and management by fishing out from a paper bag a hammer and nail and banging a peg on the wall—all his own.

NEVER UNDERESTIMATE THE POWER OF PEDAGOGUES.

Professors at some other camp are so abominable they appal even us. Or, maybe, it's just the way the McMaster Silhouette headlined their interview with a refugee pedagogue in the best traditions of yellow journalism. The story is a two-column saga of hairbreadth brushes with the Gestapo and other nasties, and the head runs:

PROFESSOR OF FRENCH CHANGED HIS CLOTHES IN PUBLIC LAVATORY

About this time of year hard-smoking Freshies may like to be reminded that they were innocent once. As innocent as the pair of ill kittens from Whitney who were accosted by a couple of Library-bound Sophs on Harbord Street weeks ago.

Well, they were so charming that the Sophs put the Library resolutely to one side and proposed a coffee date. So the Freshies led them back to Whitney Hall so they could get their leaves extended (they said).

Half an hour later a hardened Senior poked her head out from the night entrance door to find the two Sophs still stamping about patiently and smoking butt after butt.

"Are you still waiting for those two Freshies?" she queries. "Because they got so scared of you that they ducked out the back door and went to a movie by themselves."

YET THEY TALK ABOUT EQUALITY OF THE SEXES!

And since this is a literary issue, we scalp for you the passionate outpouring of a Queen's Journal bard:

"The girl was mad and called him Mr. Because for fun he merely Kr.;

And so for spite

That very night,

The nasty Mr. Kr. Sr."

pleasant appendage to an orchestra which is large enough and lucky enough to find a good player. Marcel Grandjany, internationally famous harpist, opened our eyes last night to the infinite possibilities of tone and shading that a master harpist can produce. In the Harp Concerto in B Flat major of Handel, and a group of solos, one a Debussy-like Rhapsodie by Mr. Grandjany, showed a technical skill and musical artistry that truly thrilling.

Scored for double string orchestra, Fantasia on a theme of Thomas Tallis by the modern English composer, Vaughan Williams, recreates the mystical ecclesiastical atmosphere in its startling modal contrasts, the stirring beauties of which were brought out in their fullest meaning by the perspective conducting of Mr. Mazzoleni. It is a work which cannot be fully appreciated at first hearing, but the first one leaves us with a desire to hear it again, and then again.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C Minor was performed with dynamic vitality, precision, and clarity, clear-cutting and warm fullness of tone that made the symphony as thrilling as when we heard it for the first time. With continued performances of this calibre, the orchestra would soon be placed among the outstanding organizations on this continent.

Defence: Betty Fullerton (1), Barbara Wilson (2), Jan Murray (2), Helen Patrick (3).

Also mentioned, with the number of votes out of nine in brackets: Ruth Welstead (2), Joan Chalk (1), Liz Kennedy (1), Misty Tryell (1), Cay MacMillan (1), Joan Christie (2), Fran Lee (1), Florence Weir (1), Mary Stewart (1), Helen Stewart (4).

Helen Stewart was voted down by the coach ref. combination by her rather unorthodox style of play, although her record is tops. Liz Stark won by one point and her record over Mary MacMillan. The defence job, consisting of two lines, is suggested as playing Fullerton and Patrick together, and Wilson and Murray, from the fact that they played together in these combinations all through. The people consulted were unanimous in their choice of the Eunsion-Fletcher-Pearse line. In defence, Fullerton got most votes and can play line if necessary.

Pares Discusses Russian Policies

Russia signed a non-aggression pact with Germany in 1940 only "to stall for time," Sir Bernard Pares said yesterday in a lecture at Convocation Hall.

Even after the pact was signed, Russia's attitude toward England was most amicable, Sir Bernard told his audience. In late 1940 articles written by Winston Churchill were read over the radio daily, he said, "since Stalin was ready to strengthen Anglo-American ties."

Six days before the signing of the pact, Sir Bernard prepared to leave Russia, he recalled. "While sailing down the Volga," he said, "I talked with many Russians, and they had nothing but good to say about England. Moscow officials made a film of myself and other British delegates, showing us as friends of Russia; this film was distributed throughout the Soviet Union for months after the pact had been signed."

Stalin knew that Russia's turn to be attacked would come, but meanwhile, kept out of the arena of war, Soviet scientists were able to watch from the sidelines and acquire for themselves (Continued on page 4)

Writers Discussed At Letters Club

"Words dropping into grooves with steel precision..." said Hugh Kenner, IV English Language and Literature, when describing the classicism of the great Catholic writer, Hilaire Belloc, at the meeting of the U.C. Modern Letters Club last night. Together with G. K. Chesterton, Belloc advocated a freedom, political and economical, of a small group or community. Kenner went on to say that Chesterton's use of paradox and grotesque, "he stood the world on its head so that people would look at it," are heightened by "the sunlight of surprise." Belloc fought the boasted tradition of history by his emphatic satire, stated the speaker.

"The Renaissance of India as represented by Rabindranath Tagore shows traces of his Sanskrit inheritance," said Unash Chatterji in the second paper given by the club last night. Living on his country estate, he was in close touch with the simple pastoral life around him, she continued. "I stand at the edge of the village to paint the passions of my countrymen for who better can translate their sorrows, their heartlonging?" (Continued on page 4)

S.A.C. TO GIVE DINNER

The farewell ceremony to pay tribute to Dr. H. J. Cody will be held this afternoon in Convocation Hall, starting at 1:15 with the entrance of the procession and the singing of the "Blue and White." All lectures from 1:30 p.m. to 2:30 p.m. have been cancelled.

On behalf of the student body in general, R. W. Bell, first vice-president of the S.A.C., will read the Undergraduate Message contained in the Gift Book. The book will be signed by the members of the S.A.C. on behalf of their respective faculties.

Dr. Cody will give his final official address as President of the University, after thirteen years service in that capacity.

The complete program for this afternoon's ceremony will be found elsewhere on this page.

A formal dinner will be tendered Dr. Cody by the S.A.C. tonight, to which invitations have been sent to students who hold office in campus organizations.

McGill Conferences Discuss Post-War

Montreal—(CUP)—The final sessions of the McGill University conference on Canada and the Postwar World were held here Saturday and Sunday. Several hundred students attended, including delegates from Queen's, New Brunswick and Middlebury universities.

Reports of nine committees were read Sunday afternoon, and recommendations were adopted that full proceedings be published and distributed.

The speakers on Saturday morning were: the Hon. C. D. Howe, Federal Reconstruction Minister, who gave an informal review of the government's post-war plans, and Edward J. Phelan, acting director of the International Labor Office, who spoke on international organizations.

Ceremony Programme

Students will assemble in Convocation Hall at 1:15 p.m. When the procession enters the Hall, everyone will rise and sing "The Blue and White."

After the singing of "The Blue and White" is completed and the members of the procession have reached their places on the platform, everyone will be seated.

PRESENTATION CEREMONY

Mr. T. E. Downey, President of the Students' Administrative Council, will present to the President a memento from the undergraduates of the University.

Mr. R. W. Bell, First Vice-President of the Students' Administrative Council, will read to Dr. Cody the Undergraduate Message contained in the Gift Book later to be presented.

Each member of the Students' Administrative Council will sign the Gift Book on behalf of the undergraduates of the Faculty or College which he or she represents.

Everyone rising, Mr. Bell will present the Gift Book to the President.

Dr. Cody will then deliver his final official address as President to the undergraduates of the University.

At the close of Dr. Cody's address everyone will rise and the organ will lead in the singing of "Auld Lang Syne."

Realization of Present Social Problems Necessary For Creation of Better World

Prof. Birdwhistell Addresses International Affairs Society on Race Prejudice and Minority Rule in Politics

MUST REALIZE FAULTS

"The first step in creating a better world is realizing the faults of our present society," said Professor R. L. Birdwhistell to the International Affairs Society last night at Women's Union.

Professor Birdwhistell in his speech pointed out the way in which man throughout the ages has found a scapegoat, which he blames for all his misfortunes, and used as a vent for his aggressiveness. "When there were no more frontiers to conquer, man turned his fighting instinct inwards and race (Continued on page 4)

ELECTION RETURNS HIT WAR-TIME HIGH

Forty Per Cent of Male Undergraduates Went to the Polls. P. Allen Draws Highest Vote Among Candidates

TOIKE OIKE

The largest vote registered since the beginning of the war brought 40 per cent of the University's male undergraduates to the Hart House polls yesterday. In a five per cent increase over the previous year, 1,262 electors swept at least two S.P.S. men on to each of the major committees.

The Engineers cast 465 ballots, over twice the number of the next college, U.C., with 203 votes registered. Third, was Meds, polling 199, followed by Victoria with 118 and Dentistry with 92. The faculties and colleges that sent the fewest voters to the East Common Room also provided the poorest percentage of their voting ability. Thus there was a grand total of six voters from Wycliffe, and below a 40 per cent vote in Pharmacy, Trinity, and several others.

University College, which received no seats on the Library Committee, was the only major college not represented on the four large committees. Both Medicine and Victoria College, which trailed U.C. in the number of votes cast, attained a representative on all the committees. Dentistry students occupy seats on all but the House Committee.

Like last year, there was only one minor recount, on the Library Committee. The highest vote was attained by P. Allen, on the Squash Committee, who received 624 votes. Each candidate had to poll half this number to attain election, except when there were not sufficient candidates over the half-way line to give a democratic representation to the colleges.

The results of the elections are as follows: House Committee—Dewar, D. C., III; Victoria; Gall, W. J. C., III S.P.S.; Jenkins, J. L., II Forestry; Matheson, J. G., III S.P.S.; Sharp, A. S., IV Medicine; Sharp, W. T., II U.C.; Storey, J. W., IV S.P.S.; Suggitt, R. M., II Victoria. Carried over from last year are Clipperton, W. H., III Forestry; Dunsford, R. M., II Trinity; Lamont-Havers, R. W., V Medicine.

For the Library—Brunton, L. B., IV Dents; Cook, C. R., II Victoria; Cotter, C. G., III Trinity; Cringan, A. T., II Forestry; Hazlett, J. W., IV Medicine; Hitchens, W. F., III S.P.S.; McCulloch, E. A., II Medicine; Rook, J. W., III S.P.S.; Trueman, J. H., II Victoria. Carried over from last year is Singer, R. A., III S.P.S.

Campaigning Pays Off, Makes One Candidate Sharp Enough For Two

Today's Program:

"KITTY"

By Reg Herman

At 1100 hours yesterday, the first voters cast their ballots in an early-morning atmosphere of serious reflection. Three candidates standing about the polling-room door cautiously rationed out their blotters. One of these went into an epileptic fit when he unthinkingly gave away two blotters to a man who had already voted—for an opponent.

Interest began to pick up as lunch-hour loomed, and the Battle of the Blotters was in full swing when the ear-splitting clanging of a cow-bell rang over the din. Blotter-betty mobs, hounded in by sandwich-boards on every side, were subjected to a demoralizing conglomeration of clanging, back-slapping and shouted election promises.

Apparently candidates took a cue from The Varsity and the results of the elections back to the hilt. The candidates who made the most noise swept into office, far ahead of their opposition, regardless of college affiliation. Hart House undergraduates voted for and color. Thus it was that the boys who jumped madly around outside the candidates who showed personality common room all day, clanging bells, bursting their lungs and bouncing sandwich-boards, won the seats on the committees. Perhaps they went a little too far when one candidate dragged in a huge sheet of galvanized iron and began viciously banging out appalling noises. One sidelight of the elections was provided by the running of two men of the same name for the House Committee. With a hysterical gasp of gloe, one of these Sharp characters left the field of battle with the words, "Let the other guy do all the campaigning. Nobody knows the difference, and my name comes first on the ballot!" In the end, both were elected.

The tear-jerker of the elections came at 10 o'clock last night, when a long line of grim faced candidates paced up and down the quiet Hart House corridor, waiting for the results. One candidate in particular was seen to clutch spasmodically at a much-thumbed copy of "KITTY." At high noon today on the Hart House steps this new member of the Library Committee will read aloud outstanding excerpts from the book.

Ave Atque Vale

Student will have an opportunity this afternoon of honouring the man who has for twelve years guided The University through critical and transitory times. Retiring to assume an office so fitted to climax his career, Dr. Cody will make his last speech to the undergraduate body as President of our Alma Mater.

There is no doubt that students will be eager to attend the presentation ceremony of their President. Directing the policy of a university through the dark days of depression of the thirties and guarding the rights of academic life during the dangers of wartime legislation, Dr. Cody stands high in the estimation of the vast numbers which have gone forth throughout his presidency.

Although those who gather today in Convocation Hall represent only a section of the multitude who have passed through The University portals in the last twelve years, they are nevertheless a symbol of their predecessors. They bear with them the universal spirit of esteem manifested by all who know the warm dignity and competent administrative abilities of The President.

It will be a spirit of mingled feelings of sorrow upon Dr. Cody's resignation and of happiness at the prospect of his ascendancy to the Chancellorship. That merit such as his should not go unrewarded, affords great satisfaction to the student body which holds in great respect those qualities which signify their President. It is pleasant to think that Dr. Cody's inspiring association with The University will not be severed upon his retirement.

Over The Top

Assuming a pre-war spirit once more, Hart House elections have proven singularly successful this year. Heralded by animated and intense campaigning all day yesterday, undergraduates of Hart House responded to the pleas of candidates by polling a vote of forty percent of the total registration. That the number voting has been raised six percent this year is satisfying and prefigures an even more successful attainment to student democracy in the years to come.

Forty percent, however, is still below the peace-time standards. But it nevertheless is an improvement in comparison to former years. Results of the hard working committees behind the elections have stimulated the student body to vote in increased numbers which have veritably aroused the elections from the inertia into which they have latterly fallen. The actualisation of potential election returns is a gradual process. A full vote is, year by year, becoming a possibility rather than an ideal concept. The spade work of encouraging voters has been, and is, being done. But the work of the committees is also complementary to the active desire on the part of the students themselves to get out to vote. Once their interest is stimulated, the success of the campaign is dependent on their own initiative. The only way that the urgency of voting can be impressed upon them is by handing down from year to year the tradition surrounding the actual election day itself.

The most spirited response came from S.P.S. while U.C. followed with less than half the number of voters. The Royal College nominated a number of candidates with the result that its vote was split and hence rendered ineffectual in a number of the committees sought. If the various colleges and faculties seek student representation on all of the committees, they should profit by the two main pitfalls of this year-too many nominees for each committee, and too few voters (with few exceptions) from each faculty.

Correspondence

Toronto, March 5, 1945

The Editor,
The Varsity,
University of Toronto.

Dear Editor:

Your editorial on "Open Sunday" in the February 28th, issue has prompted requests from students for further discussion of the questions raised, and we ask, therefore, for space for these comments.

You are in error in stating that our Canadian Day of legislature is dependent upon the Act of 1845. That Act is very largely outmoded, and therefore used in a very limited way. The Lord's Day Act of Canada was passed by the Parliament of Canada in 1906, and stands upon our Statutes as the only legislative guarantee to the citizens of Canada of their national weekly day of rest. In the first year of its operation, upwards of 150,000 Canadians were given much desired freedom from toil on Sundays. Each year since then this Act has continued to provide similar freedom to increasing numbers of Canadians in all lines of toil. We should, therefore, consider carefully and intelligently its benefits and privileges before subjecting it to ridicule or misrepresentation.

The Lord's Day Act of Canada is not an Act to compel the religious observance of Sunday. Ample liberties for freedom of action and decision are provided for within its provisions, and rightly understood it represents much tolerance. No attempt is made to forbid personal recreational sports on Sundays, such as tennis, golf, skating, skiing, etc. Only where sports and entertainment enter into the area of business are restrictions made, and that primarily in the theatre employees, for instance, remind us that Sunday is their only day of freedom in any week of the year, other than their brief periods of vacation. On general public holidays they are called upon to work to provide entertainment for holiday makers, and consequently they prize their Sunday freedom very highly. Should we not be willing to recognize that commercialized entertainment on Sundays means robbing fellow citizens of a day of freedom to which they are entitled? Surely six days in any week for profit-making entertainment and sports should satisfy the needs of all.

Those who regard Sunday as their day of opportunity for Christian worship do not attempt to coerce fellow citizens to accept their ideas and practices. In that regard there is much more Christian tolerance than is generally recognized. Is not tolerance a two-way principle? Have we not the right to expect similar tolerance from those with opposing ideas?

One day in the week free from the whirl of business activities gives needed quiet and leisure for relaxation and restoration of mental and physical energy. It provides also opportunity for needed emphasis upon spiritual and cultural values, without which life loses qualities essential to completeness of life.

Yours sincerely,

George G. Webber.

We Moralize

An Editorial

With just two more issues of The Varsity still to come this seems like a good time to survey the current scene in music and drama in Toronto. The current season has been an active one with the emphasis on quantity rather than quality. We find, after another season, that we cannot seriously disagree with Sir Thomas Beecham who recently accused Toronto of an extreme provincialism. At present our city is far from artistic maturity.

Probably the most serious drawback to the musical

SPRING! RIOTS! DEATH!

Ahhhhhhhhhhhhh!

(By that inimitable Russian novelist, Fedor Lugubrovitch)

The soft soothing bubble of sparkling water ebbing slowly among the dead fish of shadowy sewers, the sibilant chant of the first harbingers of Spring as they raise their voices in harmonious melody.

Toile Oile, Toile Oile . . .
Rubbers sucked unctuously from the feet of men hurrying toward a date with Death, unconsciously hurrying like all children . . .

Voices in the sunlight chanting the Cossack war-cries "Tobacco ulang squir, Rhoda in Veritas, duck ptui . . ."

"Little reader, that means, interpreted, 'Does this column smell different lately?' Did you know it? No? Smarten up, little reader!"

Turn your broad back on this panorama of beauty, little reader; squint into the beautiful sunrise. Everywhere you see men with clubs, bats, bilbies, etc.; women with etc. (so round, so firm, so fully packed), bilbies, bats (baseball!) (I love bats at dusk in the old tower, dear reader, but these are baseball bats. Does it not sadden you? Hien?) . . .

All muscular (the men), waylaid hapless, snivelling Schoolmen, who, walking on their knees in the mud, bowing obsequious heads, are turning in crumpled bills (green) for small white squares of cardboard . . .

Green the bills, white the cardboard! Ah, reader, the dizzying chroma-symphony of Spring! . . .

Everywhere queues, everywhere blipping with lead pipes, debowling with swords, chivvying of the hapless populace into line to exchange bills (green) for cards (white) . . .

Ah, the cruelty, the ravishing cruelty of it! Does it not fill you with the mystery of life, little reader? Is not all Nature brutal in Spring? Eh? . . .

In one deep puddle three artsmen are rescued by a large green frog (with the nicest legs) from the zoology lab, which proudly displays its Hart House Pool life saving certificate, pinned on its slimy tun-tun for all to see . . .

As three, wet, dishevelled, waterlogged men thanked him, he flicked his membrane coyly, hung his head, and muttered sweetly "G-toot!" Ah! . . .

Still the exchange goes on. The Campus is in turmoil. Everywhere people scream "Gimme one! Gimme one too!" All who refuse are jammed down a disused manhole for McGeech to discover . . .

Are you not thrilled, little reader? You want to go home? You want to go to the . . . Tchok!

Look! The soldiers, coming to quell the disorder. How their buttons gleam in the cruel sunlight! Someone sneezes. They mistake it for a command. Arms are discarded. They, too, fall into line, and the merciless blipping with bats, hockey sticks, lead pipes, goes on . . . "Don't twist my arm!" cries someone. "No, not on the head! I'll take one," cries another. . . Oh, the vibrant life of it all!

Finally, everyone has changed cash for tokens, the crowd thins, bodies are gathered up by medical students, silence reigns supreme. . . .

A muddy pool of bubbling, shimmering water, with floating quietly on it the cause of the whole: a white card printed "P.H.E. At Home March 9th."

How insignificantly it floats! Yet what trouble, desolation, cruelty, it has caused! That is Nature, little reader, Nature. . . .

Are you not thrilled? No? BAH!

Andison Leads Senior SPS To Close Win Over Vic I; School vs U.C. in Finals

School Nearly Slips Up In Shading Scrappy Vic I Team; Wheeler Penalty Helps Slow Victoria Squad

FINALS NEXT WEEK

Vic I hockey team almost caused consternation in the ranks of the campus hockey forecasters when they were nosed out 5-3 by a highly favored School team in the semi-final game played at the Arena yesterday. Had Lady Luck been on their side, the Arsmen might well have come out on the long end of the score.

Play was fairly even throughout the game, although Vic had more shots on goal, so the breaks decided the winner as often happens in hockey. A penalty to Wheeler of Vic in the third period proved to be the deciding factor in the game as School scored one goal while he was off and another just as he got back on the ice again. The win puts S.P.S. into the final round with U.C. to be played next week.

Vic presented a light, aggressive outfit whose close-checking tactics kept the smooth-skating School forwards fairly well bottled up for most of the game. Inability to stop Ken Andison was the major reason for the defeat of the Vic-men. The fast School centurion was going in high gear all day and rapped home three of his team's five goals. The Engineers, on the whole, displayed more finish than their less experienced opponents, especially when in close. They also showed good passing plays at times.

Both teams scored twice in the first period. Kaufman and Andison were the marksmen for S.P.S., while Barron and Hamilton got the Vic goals. Andison bulged the twine again after twelve minutes of play in the second period. This was the only goal in that stanza, and gave School a 3-2 edge at the two-thirds mark.

Midway through the last period, Andison and Walker each scored, to sew it up for Skule. Wheeler got one back for the Vic team right after he got out of the penalty box, but this was the best Vic could do. Butch O'Malley, in his last appearance for Vic, played his usual reliable game. Besides Andison, Boe and Shand went well for S.P.S.

development of the city is the conventionalized choice of programs. Although Sir Ernest MacMillan has given us several first performances this year, our programs are still overburdened with old stand-bys. The several "young artists" concerts have been particularly disappointing in this respect. These young people have seemed unduly preoccupied with virtuosos pieces and have paid little or no attention to the music being produced today. It is extremely unfortunate that the future leaders of our cultural activities should fail to distinguish good music from mediocre. The fault might lie in part with their teachers who have overemphasized the display aspect of performance. But although these people are young, it is reasonable to expect good taste from them, if not musical maturity and a certain degree of independence from their misguiding mentors.

Vocal recitals have been as numerous as ever this year. It seems that Toronto has an insatiable appetite for singers, good and bad. Melitta Korjus was greeted with the same rapture as Dorothy Maynor, an inescapable sign of an undisciplined taste. On the other hand, recitals by such great pianists as Rudolf Firkušny went almost unnoticed. This situation will continue to exist as long as our programs remain stereotyped. In music, familiarity breeds contempt. Playing popular favorites is no way to cultivate a finer taste in Toronto audiences.

We have had several excellent plays this year but few, if any, good actors. This is a consequence of the fact that Toronto has been cut out of the Theatre Guild circuit. The situation is ripe for the development of an active little theatre. We still have only one theatre, and until more of them come into existence, Toronto will remain a small town as far as drama is concerned.

An outstanding contribution to this deplorable situation has been made by the unique brand of professional criticism which flourishes here. Never has so little been said in so many words. Criticism in Toronto is so bad that The Varsity, I believe, is far ahead of its professional contemporaries. Without the reminding and the perverted use of the English language familiar to the readers of the other critics, the A.M. & D. staff has tried to give you an accurate account of the city's artistic activities. It has spoken for artistic integrity and advancement, and is thus to be distinguished from other critics who appear perfectly willing to accept things as they are.

TROPHIES

We'd like to betcha that very few of youse guys have paused long enough in your daily dash to the Great Hall to take a gander at the Athletic trophies on the library landing in Hart House. Our authorities on the subject tell us that this is the biggest collection of mugs outside of the Little Red Schoolhouse.

Seriously, though, there are some very interesting articles of silverware on view here. For instance, there are the various cups presented for interfaculty competition, such as the Mulock for rugby, the Jennings for hockey, Sifton for basketball, and so on. On each the names of the yearly champs are engraved. The amount of sweat, toil, and tears represented by these is staggering to think of. Here, too, one can trace the trend in interfaculty competition from domination by Arts and Meds to the present-day superiority of School. What names will be on here in the future, we wonder?

Probably the greatest sporting achievements of Varsity teams are those represented by the Olympic Cup and the 1910 Rugby Ball. The Olympic Cup, emblematic of the world's hockey championship, was won by the famed Varsity Grads (not really a student team, it is true) at St. Moritz, Switzerland, in the 1928 Olympics. The football we mentioned above was used in the Dominion championship 1910 when Varsity defeated Hamilton Tigers 16-7. Accompanying this valuable athletic curio, is a plaque presented by the citizens of Toronto to the champions.

These trophies are a heritage of the days when Varsity could hold its own on the athletic fields with the best non-college teams in the country. Students in those days were known as university "men" not "college boys," which may be a tip-off on the reason for this. The day is coming, however, when, aided by intensive training methods and competition in sport from the second grade as in the U.S.A., Varsity will be turning out well-coached teams which will again be the best in the country. We are assuming, of course, that this present war will stagger to its finish in the not too distant future.

In short, gentlemen, we have been trying to say in our confused way that there are some very interesting athletic trophies on display in various sections of Hart House which are well worth going around to see.

The Sportswoman

By Janice Murray

IMPORTANT QUESTION

The engrossing problem of those who have been around the athletic field for more than one year is that of the approaching elections. These elections are as important to all the girls participating in the intramural sports calendar as are those held yesterday for the Hart House committees. Here are some of the things which might be troubling you.

THE DIRECTORATE

is composed of five girls, one from each college or faculty up to that number, and these girls, although they do little at the present time, are very important, and will be even more so when peace returns. In peacetime they organize all the intercollegiate activities. At the present time they are the ruling body on constitutional changes, awards, standings of sports such as those recognized or unrecognized, and upon the eligibility of players in disputed instances.

The Directorate is elected by a panel of girls. There are: four girls from each of the four Arts Colleges and the Medical W.A.A.; six each from basketball and hockey clubs; four each from the swimming and tennis clubs, and two each from the badminton, baseball and volleyball clubs. Total, 46.

The Directorate nominations, usually, although not necessarily, come from the several college athletic associations, including Meds, P.H.E., and others. They should total about eight nominations. This election will be held Friday, March 16th, at the Household Science Building at 4:30 p.m.

CLUB ELECTIONS

There will be two elections per club this year. The first will be for the president—girls who have been especially nominated for this position—and the second will be for the various other positions in the club. This should ensure only able people being nominated for the premier position, and the clubs, athletic associations and girls who nominate these people for the presidency will think twice when they do it. It will also prevent mere swamping of the field in an endeavor to get the candidate of your college in. She will get in in the second election, and there the power method will have to reign. The endeavor is to get in the best person for the job as president, the most responsible position.

Because of the new ruling, there may be another rep. from the college concerned besides the president. This should allow the voters to take a responsible attitude and consider the girls nominated for the presidency on their merits, not on their college.

As to who votes here. Any girl who has participated in a certain sport has the right to vote for the president, and the other positions of the club concerned. All college representatives and heads should check and see that the Women's Athletic Office, in the S.A.C. office, Hart House, has lists of these players. If their names should be off, these persons lose their votes. Having done this, the college heads should get these persons out to the Household Science Building at 4:30 p.m. on Monday, March 19th. Please get them there on time, too, as the elections can't be held until people are there, and every year a great deal of time is wasted when the rules must be re-explained for the benefit of late-comers.

Since we haven't explained this, the club presidents are those people who have been called heads of (ping-pong, etc) in this column all year. They have been called head for reasons of conveniences, as their names appear often, and the term president doesn't mean as much, especially to our understocked mind.

Upon your choice for these positions rests the success or failure of next year's athletic program.

VOLLEYBALL

Any time's SHOPPING TIME!

NOW IS THE TIME for all good shoppers to look into the suit and topper question. Northway's are showing an assortment of suits and toppers in pastels, plain, navy and black as well as the season's very smart grey flannel, both plain and with stripes, the prices running from twenty-five to forty-five dollars for the suit, and the same price range for the toppers. They're all made to specific "Bronze" standards. A suit with matching topper makes smart fashion talk these days.

IF YOU CAN'T afford a new ensemble, build up the old one by a bit of clothes strategy... a new blouse for zest, a new handbag for the Million Dollar Look... Fairweather's are showing a new collection of handbags that look as if they were designed expressly to add glamour to a "just so" ensemble. Top-handled and underarm styles, box and bag designs, and look at the bags in Alligator Calf in tobacco tan if you're on the hunt for something extra suave for Spring.

THE NEW HUDNUT AID to an efficient make-up... the Du Barry Beauty Cake; just the right size to slip into a handbag, in an ultra smooth pink plastic case. You put it on with a cotton pad or sponge moistened with water or skin-freshener. It gives a flawless make-up, covers slight blemishes, and keeps the face looking petal smooth all day long. Comes in light, medium, dark, and deep tan shades. Choose your shade carefully against the predominating color of your costume as well as your own particular quality of complexion.

A GOOD HAIR RECONDITIONING JOB is about your best short-cut to good grooming. This is the time of year when such a reconditioning pays off in dividends, keeps the hair behaving itself while you try on the new millinery, and assures you of that gleam to your coiffure which makes it possible to dispense with millinery for all but important occasions, and get away with it... but, sister, there's nothing worse than a halless god with a stringy and lustreless head of hair. The picked operators at Antoine Salon, of Holt Renfrew's, are experts at hair-conditioning in the very expert Antoine tradition.

hither and yon

with frank tasky

The subject before the class today will be groundhogs. Now, everybody knows that, officially, Groundhog Day was held February 2—a day of decision, when the hog, female or otherwise, had to make up his mind and its shadow, whether to come out for a sun tan or lit the hay for another six weeks.

This department, however, has just been informed—through an intimate hog friend, of which we know many through the campus—that the fine March weather has precipitated another Groundhog Day for today. And so, to celebrate the auspicious event,

In the manner of Geoffrey Chaucer: My tale is of a groundhog as ye maye That took his council of his scif with sorwe To walken in the grounde upon the morwe And if the sun his imaigne were to telle He would turn bak in slumberlande to dwelle But would the skye be clouded oor and driere He'd stay and celebrate a meild yeare.

And how Samuel Pepys would put it: Mar. 8. Up betimes and before I went to the office on Yonge St. was taking the air in my garden when I did espy a groundhog. I was thinking to call Deb, my girl, in high hope of adding roast groundhog to the dinner which I had planned for tonight. However, this groundhog on viewing his own shadow did immediately turn tail and did disappear from view. And so to bed.

In the manner of Shelley: Spirit of adventure hail to thee O weary groundhog risen from repose Brave furry heart, I sigh and thrill to see Your shadow on the trellis as it grows For this coming spring has been the test Now goest thou ecstatic to try the rest.

And Lord Chesterfield would describe it this way in a letter to his son: Dear boy, You may rest assured that should a groundhog ever venture out into the sun today, it is most befitting and proper that if he sees his own shadow he retire again into his place of abode. And if you should, by chance, while walking along, chance upon a groundhog only to have him turn his back upon you thus, you should immediately resolve to be silent, nor consider yourself ignored, for this is a custom of these animals and you may be assured that this is a groundhog of parts.

I hope that you may continue to cherish and cultivate an inclination toward distinction in all these things,

Wordsworth would celebrate it thusly: The street I walked upon today Was overcast by sky of mottled grey Unlike the pleasant peace of country lane

Ah! Would I looked on Nature's work again Severed am I from all this heav'nly sight These pleasurable days and in th night The moon that shines aloft, and as I gazed A stroller in the public streets bedazed I saw a groundhog venture to appear And happier felt to think that spring drew near.

In the manner of Gertrude Stein: A groundhog is an animal is a horse is for riding; And how I love to take my readers for a ride! While riding by a tunnel today one of my readers (A dear soul, called Herbert, who reads my books And likes them even better than he does Little Orphan Annie)

Saw a horse is an animal is a groundhog Sniff the air with febrile snuffs (And no animal, I assure you, can sniff the air with more snuff than a groundhog can snuff) So the poor creature—(I mean the groundhog, not Herbert, of course, Who by this time had gone home)—Wrapped its tail around its neck, shivering.

"I will go back and put some coal on the grate And wait" Said the horse is an animal is a groundhog. He went back into his tunnel and read Edgar Guest for six weeks He has not been heard of since.

Finally, Franklin P. Adams ("FPA") would phrase it: Today from earth-bound fog Creeps the tim'rous groundhog. His snout Is out.

Modern Letters

Turning to a less serious artist for his topic, Henry Kressno discussed the plays of Molnar, a Hungarian playwright.

"In The Swan we find a satire on the juggling of hearts necessitated in making royal alliances. All too unfortunately The Swan, instead of royal satire, was represented as a royal romance... In Lilium, his greatest play, Molnar combines fantasy and naturalism with an unusually brilliant effect." To an English audience the deeply thoughtful utterances of his peasant characters may seem unnatural, the speaker added, but to those who have lived in Central Europe, Molnar's interpretation sounds a note startlingly true.

military tactics and inventions which the Nazis employed in the fight against England and France, Sir Bernard said. In the late 1940's, the Soviet press was filled daily with descriptions of German armament inventions, he added.

When France collapsed in 1940, Mussolini made the world's worst guess and predicted that England would surrender in a fortnight, Sir Bernard said. "But Russian newspapers reported that Britain would not be beaten and could not be beaten. Russians knew, too, that her own turn was next."

The desire "to play two tunes at one time" impelled Russia to march into Poland on September 7, 1940, the speaker said. The Russians had racial and blood ties with the White Russian population living in Poland and wished to strengthen this relationship. Moreover, "it was a race between Russia and Germany as to who would first govern the Polish White Russians; the Soviet Union did not want Germany to exercise power over these racial brethren."

"In the case of Finland it was a different matter," said Sir Bernard. The Finns, though they have never been able to support themselves, have a strong government which causes trouble to anyone interfering. When Stalin asked Finland for some naval bases, they replied with a hefty "No," so Russia picked a quarrel with Finland on some pretext. They thought that it would only be a military parade, but when the Finns got serious the Russians conquered her and then set up their own Red ruler.

Describing the "confused situation" which existed from the time of the non-aggression pact until Russia's declaration of war against Germany, Sir Bernard recalled a visit he made in May, 1941, to Russia's ambassador in London, Ivan Maisky.

"I told him bluntly that Germany was getting too strong, and what did Russia expect to do about it? He replied nothing to me. I went away. Then on June 20, 1941, I went to see him again. I saw some young Russian officers leaving his office; and I heard them say aloud in Russian among themselves, 'Fight!' Then I turned to Mr. Maisky, who was smiling. 'What now?' I asked. 'At last,' he replied. 'We are masters in our own house!'

School, gave the final address. Other sessions included individual meetings of study group committees, and a special program of documentary films was provided by the National Film Board. Recommendations in reports included Canadian participation in an international federation, far-reaching improvements in housing, and practical full employment.

The nine committees were on education, rehabilitation of veterans, scientific development, medicine, employment, housing, international science, international trade, and U.N.R.R.A.

It was reported that the results of the conference were far in excess of expectations, and that it would be established as an annual event at McGill. It will also be recommended to other Canadian universities.

The publication of the permanent record is expected before the end of the month.

prejudice came into being," he continued. He then proceeded to point out how a clever politician can exploit this to control minorities and to prevent their joining together, thereby enabling himself, or his political group, to retain his or its power or its rule.

Using many examples, he showed how a minority, in numbers, can control a group much larger than itself by dividing it, confusing it as to the causes of its troubles, and giving it the idea that it is a majority that is ruling. "A majority that hasn't the right to vote is in reality a minority," he said, in clarifying the situation.

"For a solution of the world's problems it is necessary that each group study what its position in society really is," he said in conclusion, "and each person devote his competitive energy towards becoming a better member of society."

UNDERGRADS LAUD RETIRING PRESIDENT

Political Party Platforms Are Outlined By Speakers

Discussion Sponsored by The International Affairs Soc. and Six Other Campus Groups: Free Enterprise v. Socialism

ELECTION ISSUE

The election platforms of the four Ontario political parties for the coming elections were the topics of last night's meeting of the International Affairs Society at St. Hilda's College.

"The next government will be charged with guiding the country through what may be its most critical period," observed Mr. J. Hallinan, speaker for the Liberal party. Since the family is the basic unit of society, a broad social reform within the framework of private enterprise is necessary for giving the family security, he stated. Unemployment insurance, the National Housing Act, Family Allowances, are steps in that direction. The Liberal party is prepared to meet the danger of post-war inflation, and the problems of reconversion, as capably as it dealt with the gearing of Canada's economy to war-production, and it will develop Canada's international trade, said Mr. Hallinan.

Speaking on the Progressive Conservative aims, Mr. F. G. Gardiner, K.C., stated that both the Liberals and Progressive Conservatives were unanimous in standing for free enterprise. The basis of unity in Canada, he said, is that the same sacrifice be made by all parts of the Dominion to ensure peace. Capitalism has given North America the highest living-standard in the world, he added—"it is the great North American tradition to be born in the gas-house and to end up in the White House." Under Socialism the individual would be a pawn in the hands of civil servants, he went on. The Progressive Conservative party proposed a more equitable distribution of the national income, and reforms in education, mothers' allowances, old age pensions.

Private enterprise cannot, and never could, cope with problems of employment, but detailed planning of the productive capacities of post-war Canada is needed, said Prof. Cass-Beggs, assistant professor of Electrical Engineering, and C.C.F. member running for Rosedale constituency. He pointed out that under monopolistic capitalism only a few are free and that "catch as catch can" is its slogan. Social security is a right, not a dole, of everyone, the speaker

Varsity Staff

Varsity reporters are requested to report to the News Office on their usual days next week for assignments for issue number 100.

Papers Will Be Read At Society Meeting

The 108th meeting of the Toronto Biochemical and Biophysical Society will be held in Room 13, Medical Building, on Thursday, March 15, at 7:45 p.m. Papers will be given by J. M. Grosshans and H. O. L. Fisher on "The relationship between hexoses and inositols"; by L. B. Jacques and H. J. Bell on "The reduction of hydrogen peroxide by fibrinogen and fibrin"; by H. G. M. Macmillan on "Progress in methods of pemoline assay"; and by Mary McArthur and O. C. Benson on "Thiamine in milk products."

Final Session Of Parliament Debates N.S.S.

"Resolved that National Selective Service should be continued after the war" will be the motion before the House at the last session of the term in the University College Parliament, to be held this afternoon at 4 p.m. in the Junior Common Room.

The motion will be upheld by Prime Minister Ed Safarian and Hon. Martin Shubik. The Opposition speakers will be Hon. Carmen Guild and Hon. Sid Jourard.

"National Selective Service has proven its value during the war," said the Prime Minister in a statement issued to the Press. "It is a necessary instrument with which to ensure full employment during the peace. Only by directing the worker to the job can we ensure that his abilities will be fully used to the advantage of himself and of the community."

Leader of the Opposition Carmen Guild said: "We believe the maintenance of National Selective Service after the war would be a definite infringement on the liberty of individuals in a democracy. Not only would it be unnecessary, but decidedly dangerous to the independence of John Doe, Citizen."

Income Tax Rulings

Students who undertake employment in the summer vacation, and whose earnings for the year will not reach the taxable amount for the calendar year, should complete Income Tax Form T.D.1A. This form, which may be obtained from the employer, should be completed immediately upon commencing work. This will eliminate the necessity of filing tax rebate forms after the period of employment is completed.

If the above procedure is not followed, income tax deductions are made by the employer from the student's wages and many months elapse before refunds can be made.

A. B. FENNELLS, Registrar.

Hold Discussion On Minorities

A panel on the four lectures of the Avukah Minorities Series will be held on Monday, March 12, at Wymilwood, at 8:15 p.m. Professor Hart of the Sociology Department will lead the discussion, with Uma Chatterji, Max Day, Bob Endelman, Hugh Kenner, Al Marshall, Vincent Towell and others among the panel members.

An open discussion will follow, and students from all faculties are invited to take part.

Science Students

Summer Employment for Undergraduates in Science and Engineering

It is in the national interest that undergraduates in science and engineering engage in summer employment which will as far as possible contribute to their technical advancement. With this in mind, the Wartime Bureau of Technical Personnel has compiled a list of available employment. It is made up from applications for the services of students for summer employment received by the Bureau up to February 25. One or more supplementary lists will be issued later.

Arrangements have been made with National Selective Service to provide for the issuance of the permits which undergraduates must have before seeking or taking employment. Details of these arrangements have already been announced.

While many students will obtain work of a professional nature, it must be understood that it would be impossible to provide such work for all, especially for those of the first or second year. Students are asked not to take too narrow a view of this matter and, if necessary, to take summer employment in a war industry. By so doing they aid in the war effort and, at the same time, broaden their own experience. A student who has in mind applying for what he thinks essential work which is not included in the list (and it is obvious that there will be such) should give details of the proposed work to the National Selective Service office when applying for the permit.

Students are asked to canvass openings first in areas nearest to them, and subsequently in other areas. Employers will negotiate directly with students and will make their own selection. No negotiations may be carried on until the student has a National Selective Service permit to seek employment.

The W.B.T.P. cannot undertake to find employment for or to allocate students, but it is prepared to guide and supplement the efforts students, universities and employers may make to utilize the long vacation to the best advantage.

THIS LIST IS NOT INTENDED FOR THE USE OF STUDENTS WHO EXPECT TO GRADUATE IN 1945. SUCH STUDENTS WILL NOT BE GIVEN PERMITS BY NATIONAL SELECTIVE SERVICE.

Lists of summer employment may be seen at the following places: Registrar's Office, Sincove Hall; Faculty Office, Mining Building; I, II, and III Year Drafting Rooms; Engineering Society Office; Students' Administrative Council, Hart House; Household Science Building; Forestry Building.

Students Gather in Great Hall at Banquet of S.A.C. For Dr. Cody; Retiring President Receives S.A.C. Honor Award

"A FULL LIFE"

One hundred and forty-five students, representing the student administrative officers of every college and faculty, were guests of the Students' Administrative Council last night in the Great Hall at a dinner in honor of retiring President H. J. Cody.

Dr. and Mrs. Cody sat as guests of honor at the head table. The President wore, for the first time, the cross of the C.M.G., conferred upon him recently. Following an illustrated, anecdotal survey by Mr. T. A. Reed of the development of the University before and during the President's connection with it, Bill Tambling, IV S.P.S., proposed a toast to Dr. Cody, who, he said, had "lived a full life in which nothing had been denied which could contribute to the welfare of others."

"It is not through what Dr. Cody has

Speeches, Prizes Teatime Topics

Varsity masthead and reporters will gather in Wymilwood this afternoon at 4 o'clock for their closing staff tea.

Following a long standing tradition with The Varsity, they will, at this tea hour, hear the campaign speeches of the candidates who are running for the position of editor-in-chief for 1945-46, and cast their votes.

Prizes will be awarded to the reporters who have distinguished themselves by their faithfulness and ability in this year's publishing season, as determined by the point system, and the News Editor will reveal the names of reporters who are to be allowed to wear Varsity pins.

S.C.M. Members "Meet Miller"

The Rev. Alexander ("Lex") Miller, British Student Christian Movement leader, will visit the University campus this week-end. Mr. Miller, a New Zealander who has been in Great Britain for the past six years, has just arrived in Canada and will be the chief speaker at an S.C.M. conference to be held at Emmanuel College on Saturday, beginning at 2 p.m.

Mr. Miller will also speak at an S.C.M. service in Bloor Street United Church on Sunday evening, when he will take as his theme, "Twentieth Century Churchmanship."

Students will have an opportunity to meet Mr. Miller this afternoon at 4:30 at the "Meet Miller" tea which is to be held in the Women's Union, and not at St. Hilda's as previously announced.

All members of the S.C.M. and their friends are invited to come and hear the latest news of the S.C.M. in Great Britain.

Healthy Teeth Is R.C.I. Topic

"Your Teeth—Your Health" will be the topic of an address to be given by Dr. R. G. Ellis, under the auspices of the Royal Canadian Institute, in Convocation Hall on Saturday night at 8:15 p.m.

Dr. Ellis, who is a professor of Operative Dentistry in the Faculty of Dentistry, will illustrate his talk with Kodachrome slides, and will also show a colored motion picture entitled, "In Search of Perfect Teeth," which depicts some of the experiences of himself and others and the result of several expeditions made to the remote Eastern and Western Arctic lands of Canada, where primitive Eskimos and Indian people were studied.

The speaker will outline the importance of the teeth in the preparation of the food for the digestion processes, in speech, and in appearance. The influence of the modern civilized diet will be emphasized as a primary cause of a slow degeneration which is taking place in the mouths of the human race.

Dr. Ellis was born in Australia, studied dentistry in Adelaide, and came to Canada upon being awarded a Fellowship. In 1931 he was appointed to the staff of the Faculty of Dentistry in this University, and is now professor of Operative Dentistry and director of the Dental Clinic.

Student Council President T. E. Downey Stresses Greatness of President in Educational, Religious and Political Fields

STUDENTS THANKED

"This University, now in its second century of service, has grown marvelously . . . beyond all the predictions of the wisest," Dr. H. J. Cody told the students of the University in this last official address as President, in Convocation Hall yesterday afternoon.

The meeting of the undergraduates, to pay tribute to the Honorable and Reverend Dr. Cody, was opened by Mr. T. E. Downey, president of the Students' Administrative Council. In making the presentation to Dr. Cody, Mr. Downey spoke of the great work done by the President in the fields of religion, education and politics, which places him "among the small circle of truly eminent men in Canada."

Following the presentation, R. W. Bell, first vice-president of the Students' Administrative Council, read the undergraduate message contained in the Gift Book:

"Honored and Reverend Sir: The undergraduates of the University of Toronto are deeply grateful for your years of service. From your days as a student your interest in the cause of education has not failed. As President and as churchman you were before us as a leader and an ideal. Your addresses have given direction to liberal education in Canada. In guiding the University through the dangers of the war years you defended the liberal arts for a foresight for which coming generations of Canadians will be grateful. Your interest has extended to the professional faculties, the post-graduate courses and the field of research, and has insured the University continued place among the world's foremost institutions of learning. Your unfailing cordiality has made you a leader whom we have regarded with affection as well as with pride. In appreciation and gratitude for the great good you have accomplished as President, we ask God to bless your years as Chancellor."

After each member of the S.A.C. had signed the Gift Book, it was presented to President Cody.

Expressing first his thanks to the students of the University, Dr. Cody told them that they were the jewels of the University, "the end for which it exists."

"I have been almost everything in this

Initiate Organization For Pharmacy Grants

At a convention of the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association held Tuesday in Toronto, the formation of a national organization which would allocate money to each of the seven colleges of pharmacy in Canada was approved.

The new non-profit organization will be called The Canadian Federation for the Advancement of Pharmacy. The convention agreed that bequests and grants will be solicited to provide scholarships for undergraduates in Pharmacy, to purchase additional equipment, and to enable graduates to make drug research.

Refresher courses lasting two or three weeks will be made available to veteran druggists.

Responsibility

There has been much talk in recent years of the responsibility of the citizen to his community. The macroscopic application of a principle stressing individual participation in society has, perhaps, obscured the very purpose that this principle entails. Students attending university plan and think of the day when they will graduate to take their place as respective members of a community. But while they are actually at The University they appear often to be too wrapped up in learning of the principles behind the responsibilities of citizenship to ever think of applying them during their undergraduate careers.

It may be that the fault is too obvious to perceive. If, however, we may posit an hypothesis which seems quite probable, the attitude which results in most students shirking their responsibilities is that of sheer laziness. The fact that students will become just what their past actions make them never seems to be realized. The conception that one can easily shed attitudes, characteristics and habits as easily as one changes from winter to spring coats is indeed prevalent. That we must condition ourselves to living in society is never comprehended. We may have ideals of perfection which we intend to put into practice once we enter into the fight for the actual realization of whatever goal that is set before us. But it is essential to use the same standards in undergraduate life in which we put so much stock in future graduate days.

There are two main attitudes that mark the undergraduate. He is either so carried away with the importance of becoming orientated to the so-called "intellectual" life or he is vainly attempting to acquire all the earmarks of the "smart" blasé university man, that he believes participation in university affairs to be above him. In regard to the first attitude, it is a very excellent theory to practice the idea that the primary aim of a university is intellectual. But the person who follows this principle out to its ultimate conclusion will perceive that it entails putting into action the mutual responsibility of the student to the university and vice versa. To know is to act and if we realize the principles pregnant in attending university we are intellectually bound to govern ourselves accordingly. The second attitude can be summarily dealt with by noting that such acquisitions manifest a notable lack of discipline and bode ill for the future of citizenship.

Some students (and indeed some members of the faculty) complain that the activities we have assumed since the commencement of the war have been too burdensome to the academic standard of this institution. On the contrary, it would appear that such additional plans would be beneficial inasmuch as they compel those who have the stamina to budget their time accordingly and force them to give up heretofore futile wasting of hours. The plaintive assertion that students can handle no more than their work, is a fine example of the lack of responsibility on the campus. Unless university functions are so published to the extent where they are vulgarly palatable, the turn-out is relatively small.

The fault lies entirely with the undergraduate body which refuses to accept its obligation to its Alma Mater. Each person is concentrating on individual pleasure and on impressing his own select circle that he is unable to take a long term view of university life. He cannot comprehend the fact that he is living in just as much of a community as when he leaves this campus.

But then the futility of editorialising upon such a topic strikes home when we realize that those to whom this reprimand is directed are the very ones who probably never bother to read it.

Perennial

Today's issue is more familiarly known as "number 99" to most Varsity staffers. There remains but one more issue which will appear next Friday. The appearance of "99" heralds the approach of the deadly hush which envelops the campus as frightened students settle down to one last vital effort of concentration preparatory to the final examinations.

Each year about this time we are swamped with letters which contain stringent arguments in favor of abolishing the necessary evils. It would be interesting to ascertain whether or not the introduction of credits on the year's work would change the attitude of the students. The only difficulty is that there is no valid way of finding out whether or not undergraduates merit standing on what they have accomplished throughout the year. It is possible that they might achieve a consistent plan of study from day to day, but the elimination of that treacherous habit of leaving everything until the last would be difficult to achieve.

It is at this time that resolutions of steady work for next year filter through the library stacks when a few impressive facts have penetrated heretofore apathetic brains. A superficial smattering of knowledge is all that is possible from last minute cramming. It is unfortunate that the resolutions made in May are not kept the following year. However there is a doubtful penalty which befalls those who have not worked constantly during the academic term. Aside from violently cursing the fact that they must plod through a season of the year which they think they could spend more pleasurably, they must also feel the disgrace of going to an exam prepared only with a view to "get by". If they are of the sterner stuff which can appreciate thorough knowledge, they will profit by this year's tardiness. If they are satisfied with merely "getting by", then, indeed, the survival of the fittest will decree their fate.

Eaton Auditorium

Alex Templeton claims that the informal portions of his recitals are for "those of us who don't take our music too seriously." Mr. Templeton underestimates the extent of his appeal, for even the high-brows could not help being overjoyed with his musical parodies last night. As the originator and outstanding exponent of a new form of entertainment, Mr. Templeton ranks with other great innovators. He has given us something original and delightful. The Eaton Auditorium audience greeted him with an enthusiasm which he thoroughly merits.

Space prohibits much comment on the first part of the programme which included standard works, ably if not brilliantly played.

(To inspire our readers in the forthcoming examinations, we replace the laudious illustration formerly used at the head of this serial with something brighter.)

CHAPTER EIGHT

What lay beneath the floor of Victoria College? With his axe, McGeech hacked frantically at the flooring. With a creak, a crash, first one board gave, then another. In a moment the hidden cache lay gleaming in the light of the Master Sleath's batteryless glow-worm-powered flashlight.

The minute-hand from the Tower clock.

The broken pool-cues.
The missing cash-register.

And a thousand sheets of scribbled paper, each wrapped around a tiny, bumpy object—throggle-pins by the million!

Scarcely had the eyes of McGeech taken in this find when a sixth sense warned him to wheel around. For he was McGeech, the Terror of the Underworld. He knew that creatures of "Q" were around him, behind him, closing in for the kill.

In a lightning swipe he transfixed "Q" with a pool-cue; then rapidly he speared his cowering satellites, one by one; impaling them like weiners on a fork.

Then, scooping the treasure from the cavity beneath the floor, he dropped the spited criminals inside and nailed the boards back carefully in place.

Vic men wondered next morning why a tiny square of the hallway floor was dustless. Little did they know what grisly secret those boards concealed!

"Excellent, Dr. McGeech, excellent!" said the Warden that afternoon. "I understand very well. These criminals were smuggling throggle-pins on an international scale. The clock-hand, you have explained, was for spearing frogs, in which the precious pins were smuggled. The cash-register was for keeping track of the take. But why my memoirs?"

"As a supply of paper, to wrap up tenderly each individual pin," explained McGeech.

"And why, of all chapters, the chapter on buzz-bombs?"

"Because they wanted the largest possible supply of paper. Naturally, the chapter on buzz-bombs is the longest."

"Then there is only one thing, Dr. McGeech. The pool-cues. Why, in the name of Hart House, the broken pool-cues?"

"Elementary, my dear Warden," began McGeech. "Plainly the Taddle afforded a poor place of concealment for loot. It was therefore necessary..."

A shrill scream rent the air. A shot rang out. The chandelier fell. The window shattered. The rug began curling at the corners, and the Warden's cuspidor sprouted tiny legs and waltzed across his desk-top.

"Horrors!" said McGeech. "Another devilish plot!" And in an instant he was out the window and gone, drawing his revolver as he went.

So we shall never know about those pool-cues.

great depth. His improvisations are so successful because he has all the fundamental tricks of the trade well in hand. His parody on a Mozart opera entitled "Accentuate the Positive" showed Mozart's idioms in a new light. His one-man production of H.M.S. Pinafore was hilarious.

The tour de force was his improvisations on five notes. With an awkward group of notes to work with, he produced something of pensive and lyrical beauty.

Speaking OF SPORT

By Jerry Evans

SPRING SYMPHONY . . .

When the birds and the bees and the flowers take a new lease on life from Spring, and the snow and ice have vanished for another year, that old feeling starts to smoulder deep down inside man's soul. The repercussion in the free individual is immediate and widespread in its consequences. Out comes the fishing rod, the baseball bat, the marbles, the skipping rope—Spring has crept stealthily into the depths of the human race.

But what does the student feel? His emotions are no different from those of his fellows, but what can he do? He must suppress his inner self, tie down the yearnings of his aching frame. Study—rigid, serious, uncompromising, conscientious study—this is the rapping of his Fall and Winter gallivanting, his year of college life, replete with late night escapades and non-attendance at early morning lectures. This is a bitter harvest indeed, forced on his soul when time beckons toward the realm of joy unconfined—Spring fever says he's got to get away into the great outdoors; examinations dictate a strict stay-at-home-and-study policy.

With apologies to our A.M. & D. department, and Gray's Elegy, we have written a poem, or rather a parody on a classic. The only appropriate title for this epic (the hero, for any stray English Lang. and Lit. reader, is of course the student) masterpiece is "Spring Lament." Please bear with us.

With waning brilliance, sunshine's beauteous ray

Crawls up my window, tantalizingly.

The falling light evolves the close of day,

And leaves the room to darkness and to me.

Something big ahead — Exams — no more sport — next two weeks — sweat — toil — tears — falling — Army officials — iced bun — black coffee — little brother — slamming door — radio — catfish — irises — fire reefs — squirrel in tree — buds — happy children — sweet innocence — black coffee — Exams — no study — all fun — eight a.m. — everyone wants book — campus parallel — mud — marbles — skip rope — crawfish — boats along creeks — matchsticks in gutters — tadpoles — Exams — black coffee — Spring fever — got to get out of here — call of Nature — Exams — black coffee — Exams — Exams . . .

The Sportswoman

By Janice Murray

FLEXIBLE THINGS, POLITICS . . .

That was our impression on hearing the sliding platforms of the several speakers at a campus meeting. Thinking this over, we wondered how much our ideas had changed during the year, not on politics but on the several sports questions. For instance, at the first of the year we maintained that baseball should not be treated as a major sport, and that one should be allowed to play it and basketball. We now would qualify our contention. The qualifying factor is that this obtains only if baseball remains the poor game it has been in the past. Next year, however, it should be a real game, that people can play in lieu of basketball, and get as much from it in the way of enjoyment and skill. Naturally, this is a great deal to hope. It is not as the greater sport, and there are not many good players around this campus.

But we are now changed in that we feel that its great hope is in the Directorate and Health Service's ruling that the two sports may not both be played by one player.

This ruling, which at first seemed to stifle the game, now should entice a number of players who needn't feel that they must compete with girls already noted for their basketball and athletic prowess. Had this rule been applied in the early stages of the come-back of either volleyball or baseball, neither of these games could have staged that come-back; but now, we feel that the future is bright for both. In fact, in the case of volleyball, it is not a case any longer of there being a bright future. This past year has shown that with good coaching and a well-organized schedule the game can be played as it should be played.

The quality of the volleyball leaves much still to be desired, but on the whole it has been good, especially when considered in the light of the past couple of years.

Nor should there be any worries about the number of girls who will turn out for these less highly touted games. Volleyball has shown that there will be enough people interested to get out a good number of teams, even so near the end of the year, and still have the best hockey season of the last few years.

In other ways our ideas have changed. We remember that we said that we would say something about the elections. There were a couple of clauses moved to change the way that the elections would be run this year that take care of this. We still wish that there might be a system whereby the voters at these elections—to be held on Monday, March 19th—could enter, cast their vote for the clubs with which they are concerned, and leave. This seems impossible as long as there is the lack of understanding among the feminine undergrads as to what it's all about. A great deal of time could be saved if this were not in need of explanation to every little lamb who strays into the Household Science Building, knowing that she was told to be up there and nothing more.

How this can be remedied we don't quite know. Perhaps if a meeting of the College Athletic Association in question were held and the whole procedure was explained to the voters before they went up to cast their ballot, considerable time might be saved.

Anyhow, it seems that we have a sliding platform too.

We don't want to seem apple-polishers, but we feel that this year's crop of Directors and their executives—yes, and players, too—have been of the best. It's been a successful year!

stressed, and would be assured to Canada only by a system of meeting production needs on schedule, not by leaving it to chance. The C.C.F. stands for the destruction of Fascism and the conditions which made it rise possible, and welcomes the strengthening of the Labor movements and other democratic institutions in post-war Europe. Prof. Cass-Beggs concluded.

The last speaker for the evening, Mr. Kashan, secretary of the National Committee of the Labor-Progressive party, emphasized the role of Canada in the world. "Canada cannot solve the post-war problems herself, except as part of a world solution. No Utopian schemes can replace reality, and we must keep our feet on the ground," he said. Socialism versus free enterprise is a false issue, he continued. Most Canadians desire a change of some sort, but the Gallup poll shows that no single party will be a majority in the coming election. The alternative of a Conservative-Liberal coalition government, or a progressive Liberal-Labor government is before Canada, he said, and only a coalition of the latter type would lead to an expanding economy guaranteeing social security and full employment.

A question period followed the addresses of the speakers.

done but through what he is that we can draw strength from our contacts with him," Tamilyna continued. "If it be true that we are 'part of all that have met', let us be thankful for that part of Dr. Cody which is now with us."

Referring at the opening of his speech of response to Mr. Reed's program of pictures, Dr. Cody said that his mind was drawn back into the past, "when the editor of The Varsity held parties around the fireplace carved deep with the names of fellow editors."

"When you too come to look back, you will recall what opportunities you have had and what great friends were yours. The two great things you can get out of University are friends, and the love of good reading."

"I hope as Chancellor I shall have time to read more widely," Dr. Cody continued, "to read the classics, philosophy, history. But reading and studies must not be selfishly devoted to the betterment of one's own soul. I hope to travel, to bring to graduates throughout the Dominion a message from the centre of things here."

"I hope every one of you will carry abroad some fire from the altars of learning kindled here."

Ending on a solemn note, Dr. Cody exhorted the students not to be ashamed to confess their faith in God by deeds as well as words. "None but divine power can enable you courageously and victoriously to face difficulties," he emphasized.

"Every privilege brings an urgent obligation. If you stand too long and insistently on your rights, you will wear them out. Those who have been to University should share much, help much, and bless their day of generation much."

At a brief closing ceremony, Ed. Downey, S.A.C. president, recalled that in 1935 the Council had instituted an honor award for outstanding undergraduates. "This award," he said, "I wish to confer on Dr. Cody, honoris causa."

For a moment at a loss for words as he rose to receive the gold key, President Cody exclaimed, "This, ladies and gentlemen, is the climax!"

University Students Welcome

with frank risky

An ubiquitous Varsity staffer, who haunts the most bizarre places anyway, dropped into the King Street building of our morning contemporary yesterday.

He saw, tacked on the wall, outside the plush elevator, a sign which asked all employees to contribute to the Red Cross current campaign, and it concluded with the appeal—"Please Be Liberal."

Scribbled beneath this in pencil, evidently the work of an heretic Globe reporter, was the blasphemy: "And not Conservative."

RIGHT IN THE LION'S DEN.

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY CAMEOS:

The street car was crowded. The lady was making a horrific nuisance of herself. She stepped on feet. She jostled. She elbowed. She made disgusting noises through her lips.

She made herself even more unpopular when she cried aloud raucously to the conductor: "I don't think it makes any difference to you whether you let me off or not at the stop near Prospect Cemetery."

To which one of the damaged strap-hangers nearby coldly replied: "Not to me, dear lady."

Students at the Faculty of Law, usually most exemplary characters, have been taken to task by an iambickicker in The Sheaf:

A lawyer is an animal with long funny ears
Which twist almost anything he hears.
His arms are short, but his clutch is hard,
He has a lean, hungry look, all devoid of lard.

And if you don't care a scruple or a fig
You may grow up to wear a wig.

And, finally, all young people, who are exemplary characters too, will do well to listen to this doggerel which has been scratched out for you by our family dog, who is a cynical dog anyway and whose veriest corrosive bon mot is suf-

University, though I have not been a caretaker yet." Dr. Cody continued in speaking of the many years and the many capacities in which he has been associated with the University, from undergraduate, examiner and lecturer to Senator, Governor, and President. "Now," Dr. Cody went on, "I am being elevated to the House of Lords."

The President extended his thanks to the students as a whole for their co-operation, and particularly to the Students' Administrative Council wherein the students control their own discipline. "I am proud of you," he said, "and cherish your help and your confidence during these years."

"During the war the spirit of the University has been all that could be desired," Dr. Cody stated. Dealing with the lessons of the war, he added: "You know the preciousness of liberty, justice, and a humane civilization; that isolationism is impossible for any government or any individual in such days as these. No man, no nation, can live unto himself."

Speaking of the University's program for the future, the President told of the need for new buildings, beginning with an enlarged central library. He looked forward, he said, to a vast development of research in all fields and a linking of research and teaching which would in the end fulfill the great need created by the war for more religion and more research.

"The world of the future which you enter will be based on the best of the past," Dr. Cody concluded, and in this world "we can have no better purpose than to seek the fullest development of our highest powers and dedicate them to the service of the community."

Engineers Win Third Victory in Intramural Series With Score of 7-2 Over U.C.

WALKER STARS FOR S.P.S.

By Jack M. Fine

S.P.S. dethroned U.C. as intramural hockey champs by winning yesterday's game 7-2, after emerging as a 3-1 victor in the series opened on Monday.

Only the super goal-tending of Doug Davidson held the Engineers down to a trio of goals in the opener of the two-of-three series.

U.C. played with only two defencemen, Wade and Bain, who turned in excellent performances.

Misfortune really struck the Arsenals in the second game as their presses seldom clicked and School came through with several lucky goals. On top of these, big Bill Wade dislocated his shoulder early in the middle frame, and from then on U.C. didn't stand a chance.

Boa got the only first period goal on a long, high shot which eluded Davidson's grasp. Forward Doug Davidson came through with a lucky shot from behind the net which found its way into the cords in some mysterious manner to tie the score. Anderson and Clare put School two goals up but Furry deflected the disc behind McCombe to tighten up the game. Kaufman added another goal to the Engineers' lead before Wade was hurt after a centre-ice collision. Walker scored just before the end of the period to make the board read 5-2. Kaufman scored again as the third stanza opened, and after Upper and Bain were sent off for fighting Walker notched his second goal to make the final score 7-2.

Sr. S.P.S. are now the new holders of the Jennings Cup, the symbol of the intramural championship.

ACADEMIC HONORS

By Percy Schaffer

For some years distinguished professors from this University have gone out to accept important posts outside of Toronto.

Professor E. K. Brown, now chairman of the Department of English at Cornell University, a position he received in 1941, graduated from high school with four matriculation scholarships. Graduating from the University of Toronto in 1926, he taught here from 1929 to 1935, when he was appointed head of the English Department in the University of Manitoba. In 1935 he received in Paris his Doctor of Letters degree, the highest French literary degree available. Professor Brown obtained leave from Cornell University in 1942 to serve as secretary to the Rt. Hon. W. L. M. King.

In 1941 Professor A. F. W. Plumtree, formerly of the Department of Economics in the University of Toronto, was appointed financial attaché to the Canadian Legation in Washington. Since 1940 he has been consultant to the American Office of Price Administration. He graduated from University College in 1928.

Professor L. T. Morgan, a graduate of the University of British Columbia, and later a member of the Department of Economics staff here, accepted last December a position with the Reconstruction Information Division of the Canadian Government's Wartime Information Board in Ottawa. His duties entail the dissemination of information in regard to postwar reconstruction. The releases sent to all Canadian newspapers and to all libraries, armed forces departments and other reconstruction bodies come from him.

Graduating in 1919 from Trinity College, Dublin, Professor J. L. Syngé joined the University of Toronto staff and became head of the Department of Applied Mathematics. In 1943 he was presented with the Henry Marshall Tory medal by the Royal Society of Canada for his outstanding work in applied mathematics. In the same year he accepted the post of chairman of the Department of Mathematics in Ohio State University, Columbus.

St. Michael's College and Trinity Residences are Among Outstanding New Buildings

Continued Expansion

By Blanche Stanley

The meagre depression years and the coming of war during the Cody regime could not abate the expansion of University buildings and facilities.

Since 1933 the new St. Michael's College on Queen's Park Crescent, Trinity men's residence wings, St. Hilda's College, and the School of Nursing have been erected.

A spacious new wing for the Royal Ontario Museum, the Whitney Hall library, and the University College reading room were conceived, and in 1933 the Physiotherapy and Occupational Therapy courses found a home in section 52 of U.C.

Launched as an experimental project in 1936, the men's Cooperative Residence turned out an outstanding success that shortly afterwards a women's residence was instituted, and its capacity occupation since has equalled the triumph of its predecessor.

University Shows Great Progress During Dr. Cody's 13 Years

Dr. Cody's Contributions to the University are Manifest; Hart House Has Benefited From His Presidency

WARDEN GIVES PRAISE

By Ian Alger

"During his term as President of the University, Dr. Cody has, in countless ways, made a vital contribution to the life of Hart House," stated Warden Bickersteth of Hart House in speaking of the President's resignation. "During the war years, continued the Warden, 'he has been constant in his attendance at the many functions contributing to the part Hart House played with regard to the various branches of the armed forces.'"

Mr. Bickersteth, who has been Warden of Hart House since 1921, returned to this University early last fall after spending four years in England. In 1940 he was personal adviser to General McNaughton, and later became, through request of the Secretary of State for War, director of all military education in the British Isles.

"Dr. Cody," said the Warden, "has brought many distinguished guests who were visiting the University to see Hart House as one of the outstanding features in Canada." Asked to describe the primary function of this great building, the Warden read a quotation from a pamphlet on his desk about Hart House. "In its widest interpretation, Hart House seeks to provide for all the activities of the undergraduate's life which lie outside the actual classroom."

Mr. Bickersteth said that he was looking forward to the renewal of the debates which formerly played such an important part in undergraduate life, and to the increase of musical programs in the future.

"One of the most important traditions of Hart House is the annual Committee's Dinner, and Dr. Cody has attended each of these dinners as a member of the Board of Stewards," concluded the Warden, "and, on all these occasions, he has impressed on the members and visitors the importance of the activities that make up the life of Hart House, and their wider effect on the life of the University as a whole."

Other University Presidents Send Recognition Messages

The Varsity dedicates its final issue of the academic year to Dr. H. J. Cody, who for the last thirteen years has guided the fortunes of the University of Toronto. These thirteen years have been fraught with pitfalls and perils; it was only through the genius of a great man that in the annals of the University these years will be deemed successful and epoch-making. Dr. Cody, educationalist, clergyman, and executive, accepted his heavy responsibility as President of this institution wholeheartedly and without hesitation, and throughout these years has borne it with the courage of a soldier. It is only fitting, that as a climax to this illustrious contribution to the welfare of the University he should carry on in the University as Chancellor.

From Canadian University camps have come messages from Presidents offering their tributes to Dr. H. J. Cody.

University of New Brunswick, Fredericton, N.B.

"It is a pleasure to have the opportunity to add the voice of U.N.B. in admiring tribute to your great President, Dr. Cody. His wide range of interest, dynamic energy and his high aspirations have always been a source of inspiration to us. His encouragement and kindness to many who have gone from here to activities in Central Canada within the sphere of his influence will always be remembered. We join with the great number of his friends in wishing Dr. Cody, many more years of the best that life has to offer." —Milton F. Gregg, President.

St. Francis Xavier, Antigonish, N.S.

"Dr. Cody retires from the position of President of Toronto University after a life devoted to the cause of education. Few men have had the opportunity of wielding so great an influence on the educational policies of the Dominion, and none have acquitted themselves with more distinction. On behalf of St. Francis Xavier University, in the absence of President Nicholson, I wish to pay tribute to the ability, devotedness, and broadness of vision with which Dr. Cody carried out his duties. Although retiring as President, I trust that his valued advice will for many years be at the disposal of his confreres throughout Canada." —H. J. Somers, Vice-President.

Queen's University, Kingston, Ont.

"It is a privilege to pay tribute to the great work in education that Dr. Cody has performed throughout a life of very active service. I look on Dr. Cody as a friend, generous at all times in sympathy and understanding, greatly concerned with cooperative endeavors in our university life, and rich in the qualities which mark the man of true culture. If there is any satisfaction in looking back on the accomplishments of an unusually fruitful life, that satisfaction is Dr. Cody's in ample measure.

There is nothing that I can desire more warmly for Dr. Cody than that, when the onerous responsibilities have been lessened, he may find the leisure to pursue the intellectual interests which he has so deeply at heart."

—Dr. C. Wallace, President.

University of Western Ontario, London, Ont.

"We shall miss our old friend and colleague, President Cody, from the ranks of Ontario university administrators. He has always been a facile, judicious and constructive associate in inter-university conferences and all forms of educational collaboration. He has successfully maintained the high standards of the University of Toronto and has enhanced her prestige. Through his special gift of expression, and his capacity for making friends, the University is better known and understood by the public than ever before. That Dr. Cody's influence will continue to be beneficially felt during his regime as Chancellor is the belief and hope of the Administration and the Faculties of the University of Western Ontario." —W. Sherwood Fox, President and Vice-Chancellor.

President Relates Anecdotes of Undergraduate Days; Detects No Fundamental Change in Students

REMINISCES

By Hugh Kenner

Is the class of 4T5 more earnest, more inquiring, than its predecessor of 56 years ago? Recalling his undergraduate days before a group of Varsity reporters, President H. J. Cody answered with a guarded negative.

"I don't think there has been any fundamental change in undergraduates," he said. "As my recollections go, we had just as many discussions of fundamental issues."

"Nor do I see any deterioration in the youth of today," he went on. "A greater frankness, perhaps."

There were great teachers in those days, he recalled. "Prof. George Paxton Young was an outstanding man. He used to invite his students to tea, and once he read us Whitier's poem, 'The Eternal Goodness,' which really set forth his own creed. It was one of the events of my life, and left a deep impression on me."

"One of my recollections of Sir Daniel Wilson, one of my presidential predecessors, is his appearance in a silk hat to disperse a multitude gathered at the Taddle for a ducking."

Chuckling, he recalled more student high-jinks of the eighties. "Once some lads put a stuffed monkey in the chair of a notoriously dry lecturer. 'Gentlemen,' he said on entering, 'I congratulate you on at last getting an instructor who can come down to your level!'"

"Another time the residence steward laid in a barrel of molasses, which was served meal after meal till the students were almost ready to strike. Petitions failing, they stripped the steward in the quadrangle and covered him from head to foot with a stiff mixture of flour and molasses."

"What else was there to do?" the President pleaded to the shocked reporters. "They had exhausted every constitutional means."

And the historic cow in the bell-tower? Notwithstanding sceptical aspersions, the President avows that it really happened. "The cow belonged to the steward, who used to use the back campus as pasture," he chuckled. "In the dead of night he was awakened by the tolling of the tower bell, and found his cow in the loft with the bell-rope tied to her horns."

"The problem was to get her down. She wouldn't turn around, or walk downstairs forwards or backwards. So, finally, they laid planks down the stairway and the cow slid abruptly down from landing to landing."

"I have lived all my life with youth," he concluded, and I detect no fundamental change. They were as serious in my day as now, and can be as merry in our times as then."

COMMUNITY NEEDS AND RESOURCES

On Tuesday, March 20, at 3:30 p.m., there will be a field trip to the display of the City Planning Board at Eaton's College Street store. Anyone who cannot come at 3:30 should join the trip as soon as able.

Thursday, March 22, 4 p.m.—Final lecture on "Planning for the Whole Community," the work of the Welfare Council of Toronto.

To Revive Interest in Alma Mater Dr. Cody Will Visit Varsity Grads

By Mary R. McKeown

When he retires from the presidency and assumes the chancellorship of the University, Dr. Cody has no intention of withdrawing from active life.

"As Chancellor, I hope to visit groups of graduates all over Canada," Dr. Cody told The Varsity in an interview. For the "continued welfare of the University," Dr. Cody said, he would like to visit graduates in other provinces and revive interest in their alma mater.

Dr. Cody expects that he will also dedicate much of his time to the central council of the Boy Scout Association of Canada, of which he was recently elected president.

And So To Bed

The proverbial tenor of final editorials usually embraces a multitude of feelings from regrets to examination laments. It would be in order to carry on the old sad-sack attitude but we find our sadness somewhat mitigated by the appointment of the new Editor-in-Chief, Hugh Kenner. In addition to our successor's ascendancy, the prospects offered by next year's staff does much to alleviate any misgivings that may have entered our heart.

Every person is convinced at some time or other that daily routine could never survive without his supervision and the thought of handing over a position to another, gnaws incessantly at the retiring person's spirit. Yet a closer examination of the matter dispels any such insidious worry and relegates it to the realm of innuocuity.

Kenner, as well as several other members of next year's staff have qualifications of a more than average degree. Steeped in a background of journalism ranging from technical make-up to editorial policies, Kenner is especially competent to further improvements to this paper.

It is on him as well as on the future Varsity staff that we bestow our blessings. It is with the greatest of confidence in the ability of the staff to promote the necessary spirit of co-operation and intense interest in The Varsity for The Varsity's sake that we turn over the editorial reins to the new guard. Of course our hopes for the new guard depend mainly on the two men who carry out from year to year the really hard work of The Varsity. Jimmy Taylor, the compositor, whose sound suggestions in an early morning crisis have been of tremendous help, is the veritable backbone of the paper as well as Lenny

Bennett, the linotypist, who has rendered invaluable aid to tired old night editors.

Don't Fence Me In

Concomitant with issue "100" is a sign which is a serious omen. Those old veterans of one or two years' attendance at The University will comprehend the significance of the recent erection of the fence around the campus. For years students have procrastinated in the matter of knocking down to the final period of solid plugging. But any intentions of further delay have been transformed into dynamic plans for working schedules when the fence is put up.

That the prevalent tendency is to await the arrival of spring weather and other such signs of the approaching ordeal, before settling down to study, does not augur well for the efficiency of university students. A fraction of appreciation of a course is realised only when a taste of the fundamental principles is derived from the last month's intensive study. The acquisition of such a superficial smattering leads to great old promises of self discipline for the ensuing year. But the interval of a summer invariably seems to carry into oblivion those firm resolves made in the heat of fear.

The general impression gained from the last minute pluggers is that they expect that by some miracle they will become brilliant scholars overnight. With few exceptions the breaking of a habit does not happen at the mere wave of a magic wand. Full value of a university course cannot be obtained without methodical work throughout the year, unless a student has that rare gift of a universally comprehensive mind.

Examinations are not the goal of university attendance. They are merely the final test which measures consistent preparation and amassing of knowledge during the academic year.

The fence symbolises the academic hurdle we have yet to take. Those who have remained "in training" the past few months will find slight difficulty in accomplishing this one last leap. To the rest, we wish a successful crossing of the barrier which separates them from graduation or the completion of one more year.

ART-MUSIC

Something To Shout About

Rubinstein

Artur Rubinstein, Polish pianist extraordinary, presented to a wildly appreciative audience a program which was a veritable kaleidoscope of brilliant color, subtle rhythm and sensitive imagination. He is truly the "poet of the piano." With a personable charm and a quiet sense of humour, he quickly gained the wholehearted sympathy of his audience.

Each composition took on a fresh face as the inevitable Rubinstein interpretation brought out undiscovered beauties in its depths. The full rich tonal quality of Bach's Chaconne, arranged by Busoni, succeeded as far as possible in overcoming the ornate superfluities of Busoni. Of an entirely different character was Beethoven's Appassionata Sonata, Op. 57, which, to us, was the highlight of the evening. Alternating moods of verve and pathos, of tremendous excitement and poignant depression, made this performance really memorable. True to his native Poland, Mr. Rubinstein's two Chopin numbers brought out all the fiery emotionalism of Ballade in G minor, which contrasted with the exquisite tenderness of the Berceuse. Brought back for his first encore, the C Sharp minor Waltz, Mr. Rubinstein gave its pulsating rhythms and familiar melodies an impression of something old, something new.

The moderns were reserved for the second half of the program, which had a stimulating Spanish flavour. Ravel's Alborada del Gracioso with its fascinating exoticism carried the audience in its headlong torrent. Granados' The Maiden and the Nightingale, which seems to have become quite popular

"Forget Me Not"

Dody:

"How Could I?"

"Awww," sighed Champus, snuggling up rapturously against the leg of the President's swivel chair, "so this is the end? The very end?"

"All is finished between us, most felicitous feline," replied the implacable prey.

"And I shall never flippantly or familiarly laud President Dody again?" waited Champus.

"Never, never, never, never: King Lear, Act V, Scene 4 line 342," responded the President a trifle pedantically.

"But the gay times we have had together! ... Ah, Dody, darling, why must this be?" Champus sobbed, hitting high C and the ceiling.

"We are at War," was the official response. And swivelling brusquely away he briskly applied a touch of Brasso to the Chancellorial gold braid.

"But remember, Dody dear, Remember and soften your incomprehensibly adamantine heart. Remember those rapturous evenings with the Talking St. Bernard in the Binge Hole Room ..."

"That's Kidney you're thinking about, O two-timing back-fence terpsichore," reproved Dr. Dody, who likes a wee jigger of Sc-whooops!—Greek, now and then.

"But prey mine," the Cat pleaded on, "remember our common rapture. Remember last year when you ran off with all the typical co-eds, and I didn't give you away till two whole days after you'd gone. And wasn't it fun when you dressed up and won the contest yourself?"

"Huh?" asked the President, raising an innocent eyebrow. "I don't seem to recollect ..."

"Oh, can't fool me, you silly boy. It's right here in my column in 1943, issue of Novem—"

"Never mind," he cut her off. "Diaries are never admissible as evidence. My dear old friend Judge Pixiepoop, who we have frequently ..."

"Now, don't change the subject," warned Champus, tapping the rug with her paw. "Remember how I burst in and found you standing on your head, with a teakettle to give you steamed up, writing verse for Acta Victoriana? Don't tell me you've forgotten that, too? And the time Dr. Myth was kidnapped and you thought your successor would have to be a Shetland pony?"

"I don't ...," began the President.

"Come, come, you said 'We are at War.' You can't deny it. And remember the time, last fall, when you were a Whitney Hall janitor, and somebody shot you, and you disappeared from the toes upward? That was one of our special days! O, what larks we had! And remember ..."

Here she leaned over and whispered in Dody's ear.

His color changed. "No!" he whispered.

"Yes."

"But you've never printed it?"

"No. Not if you come away with me, now—now—now!"

"All right. All right. Anything you say. But please, Champus, as you love me, don't print that!"

And they vanished into air together.

Dr. Hunter New Graduate Dean; Anderson To Head Philosophy

Pathological Chemistry Professor to Succeed the Late Dean Brett in School of Graduate Studies

NATIVE OF SCOTLAND

President H. J. Cody announces that Dr. Andrew Hunter, Professor of Pathological Chemistry, has been appointed Dean of the School of Graduate Studies of the University of Toronto, in succession to the late Dean Brett.

Born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1876, Dean Hunter was educated in his native city and was a house physician in the Royal Infirmary, then an assistant in Physiology in the University of Edinburgh; Carnegie Research Fellow; demonstrator in Physiology in the University of Leeds; assistant professor of Biochemistry in Cornell University; biochemist for the United States Public Health Service, 1914-15; and then he came to the University of Toronto, and for four years was professor of Pathological Chemistry, following which he became professor of Biochemistry in this University.

Dr. Hunter then returned to his native Scotland and became professor of Physiological Chemistry in the University of Glasgow and Dean of the Faculty of Medicine in that university for five years. But Canada attracted him again and he returned to the University of Toronto in 1935 as professor of Pathological Chemistry.

Dean Hunter has written many articles in scientific periodicals and is the author of a book entitled "Creatine and Creatinine." From 1916 to 1919 he served with the Canadian Army Medical Corps with the rank of captain.

50th LAW CLUB BANQUET TO HEAR RAY ATHERTON

His Excellency the Honorable Ray Atherton, American ambassador to Canada, will be the speaker at the fiftieth annual banquet of the Law Club of the University of Toronto, it was announced today by President Charles Bourne. The banquet is to be held on March 20 in the Great Hall of Hart House. This banquet concludes the activities of the Law Club for this year.

Undergraduates Elected To Athletic Directorate

The elections of the five undergraduates to the Athletic Directorate of the University were held last Wednesday in Hart House. The vote was closely contested, but S.P.S. won a virtual landslide when both of their candidates were elected to the next year's board.

The following were the five men:
A. N. Campbell, III Applied Science.
J. W. Fyfe, V Medicine.
K. C. Hendrick, II Applied Science.
R. W. Marshall, IV Dentistry.
M. M. Thomson, II Victoria.

Dentistry Research

Sheep, Saliva, Sodium

By Joe Rife

Without fanfare and publicity, the University's Faculty of Dentistry has, during the last decade, conducted research in the field of dental diseases that will affect the lives of many thousands of people. With the aid of the interested patronage of President Cody, a vast number of advances of a scientific nature have been achieved by the Faculty, under the direction of Dr. Harold K. Box, Professor of Research.

In extensive experiments on sheep in 1935, Dr. Box attempted to verify his earlier expressed viewpoint that an injury-producing bite was a predisposing factor leading to a serious form of pyorrhea. The experimental evidence obtained at that time confirmed the theory that the deepening of gum pockets and tooth loosening could be influenced by the abnormal closing of the teeth.

From 1935 until the present time the problems studied by Dr. Box show a wide range. They include studies on certain elements in the saliva as related to the problem of dental decay, and investigations on the effectiveness of substances like sodium fluoride in protecting the enamel surface against the attack of acids. Under this last, comes all the controversy of dental caries as a result of the water supply, which involves a $0-year experiment with Brantford's drinking water.

Latest investigations, which are considered among the most important of the last decade, tend to show that a form of pyorrhea exists in which the primary infection is caused by a specific germ!

Dr. Box graduated from the University of Toronto Faculty of Dentistry in 1914 with a scholarship in Pathology which led him from entering general practice to embarking on a career of research and teaching. As a result of his work, Dr. Box has received Fellowships in the American Academy of Periodontology, the Royal Microscopical Society, the Royal Society of Medicine of England, and honorary life member of the Academy of Dentistry, Toronto, and of the Ontario Dental Association. His papers have been published in England, Australia, the United States, and South Africa, and he has written a great many of the papers published by the Canadian Dental Research Foundation.

Dr. Box, as the leading authority on diseases of the gums on the continent, is upholding the record of Toronto's Faculty of Dentistry as one of the leading dental colleges of the world.

P. & H.E. At-Home Feature '4 Foggy Fellows'

The P. & H.E. At-Home, which was held last Friday in the Music Room of Hart House, highlighted the music of Bill Thompson and his band, and slides presented by the various years.

"The Lighthouse Keeper's Daughter," a dramatic tragedy, was performed by the first year. Following this were four third-year men who crooned "Four Foggy Fellows." The chorus and the troupe of tap-dancers united to present a song and dance routine for the finale.

Doug Whitlock, third year president, announced the election results for the new executive.

Among those present were Miss Marion B. Ferguson, Mr. J. B. Bickelstein, and members of the Faculty of Physical and Health Education.

Specialist in 17th Century Thought. Professor Anderson Famed for "Argument of Plato." Congress Organization

FLY-FISHER, TOO

By Barbara Hood

Dr. Fulton H. Anderson has been appointed Head of the Department of Philosophy, it was announced recently by President H. J. Cody. Dr. Anderson succeeds Dean Brett, who died last fall.

Best known among undergraduates as the author of "The Argument of Plato," a concise summary of Plato's thought, Dr. Anderson is better known in more mature circles as one of two persons who in the past two hundred years have had access to the private diaries of John Locke. He is also distinguished as the only person known to have succeeded in re-constructing the Oxford curriculum of the seventeenth century.

Specializing in seventeenth century thought, he has amassed from private collections and public libraries one of the largest collections of material on the continent, dealing with this subject.

In addition to his undisputed authority in these fields he claims to be an expert in the dry-fly fishing, and devotes his summers to research, wherever the salmon and speckled trout abound.

Born in Prince Edward Island, Prof. Anderson received his elementary education there. He attended Dalhousie University, the University of Toronto, and Princeton University. He taught at this university in the years 1917 to 1919 as a Fellow in Philosophy and from 1919 to 1920 at Princeton. After serving as Head of the Department of Philosophy at the University of Colorado he returned to Toronto in 1925 where he has been ever since.

Dr. Anderson was a member of a committee which organized three international congresses before the outbreak of war, at Oxford, Paris and Prague, where he was interested to observe the adherence of the German delegates to the theories of Nazism.

French Club to Close With Musical Program

A musical program will be featured at the last meeting of the U.C. French Club on Thursday, March 22. Professors R. D. C. Finch and J. G. Anderson, of the French Department, with students Kurt Levy, Paul Serson and Maurice Katz, will provide a varied program of the musical works of the 17th to the 19th century composers.

The program will also include the annual election of officers, games, refreshments and dancing. A large attendance is expected at this last meeting of the year, since a knowledge of French is not required to appreciate the music.

Ten Biggest Stories of the Year Include Theft and Rugby Cheer

By Barbara Jones

The Varsity, like everyone else, waxed nostalgic with the coming of spring and the end of another college year. Traditionally, this nostalgia takes the form of leafing through our dog-eared files and picking out the big campus newsbreaks of the past ninety-nine issues.

It has been a year of important staff changes, if Volume LXII can boost the saga of the Harvesters, and Volume LXIII the visit of Crown Prince Olaf of Norway, Volume LXIV has a new Chancellor and a new President to offer.

The death of Sir William Mulock, K.C.M.G., on the first of October was mourned by the whole University as the loss of a great Chancellor. This was followed (on the 27th of October) by a second loss in the person of Dean G. S. Brett, Dean of the School of Graduate Studies and Head of the Department of Philosophy.

The resignation of President H. J. Cody and the confirmation of Dr. Sidney E. Smith as President-elect also came in October, with the announcement that the change would take effect on June the thirtieth, 1945. The next big news story came with the election of Dr. Cody as Chancellor of the University by a unanimous Senate vote.

The Mulock Cup finals, to which the Blue Issue is dedicated, brought a revival of college spirit climaxed by the theft of the School cannon and the defeat of the S.P.S. team by University College with a score of 3-1.

The annual Christmas and Literary Issue of The Varsity was filled with the news of the BIG STORM, which had almost prevented it from going to press. The campus was completely snowbound, lectures were cancelled for two days, residences ran short of food, and students crossed Queen's Park on snowshoes and skis, if they had them.

Both of the campus charity drives were marked, as in other years, by a general spirit of carnival. The first of these, the War Services Drive on December 5, included the choice of the Typical Co-ed, Joan Cameron, the selection by Warden Bickersteth of the Best Dressed Man, and a parade of floats representing most of the University faculties and colleges, in which the unorthodox funeral cortege of Knox College won the prize. Dancing and the sale of colored ribbons boosted the total amount of money raised to $1,300.

The I.S.S. Drive, coming in January, was highlighted by Skit Nite and the auction, where the students bid for anything from a date with Joan Cameron to Frank Sinatra's tie.

Another staff change of this year came in the resignation of Colonel H. H. Madill as commander of the C.O.T.C. and the appointment of Lieutenant-Colonel W. S. Wilson as his successor.

The final big newsbreak was the fire in the Chemistry Building, a thing that the Campus Cat has been suggesting for years. Lectures and labs in the fifty-year-old building were disrupted as the sound of the explosion announced the outbreak of the fire which resulted in damage estimated at $2,500.

BUILDING EXPANSION

was the grant of 6,000 acres of Haliburton land in northern Ontario to the University's Faculty of Forestry. The government handed over the grant to the Faculty in 1941 so that the young foresters would have elbow room in which to carry out their practical experiments.

The same year saw the creation of a University men's health service at 43 St. George Street, Toronto, and, not to be outdone, the Faculty of Pharmacy carved out for itself a new building which was added to the University of Toronto.

The Rockefeller Foundation has continued to grant large sums to the School of Nursing, while medical research has been aided in recent years by the Masons. Since the war, many grants have been made in the science departments, including two for the advance of investigation in the field of geophysics, and one for study in the Psychology Department in connection with methods which would help in the appointment of pilot officers in the R.C.A.F.

The C.O.T.C. headquarters and the Connaught Laboratory farm were extended in 1943, and in 1944 the penicillin plant was opened in the old Knox College building. During the past two or three years various smaller residences have been incorporated into the University especially those for the Victoria College and University College women.

The facilities of the Margaret Eaton School have been made available for the girls in Physical and Health Education. With these buildings, the total for the whole campus is seventy, in comparison with the two that were in existence when President H. J. Cody was an undergraduate.

Unique Discoveries And Intense Research Improve Dental Faculty In Past Years

By Joe Rife

"President Cody, during his term of office, has been a great friend of Dentistry and very sympathetic to dental education," commented Dean A. D. Mason, in an interview with The Varsity. As a result of the President's patronage, Dr. Mason was able to state in last year's presidential report that "this faculty is already one of the most highly esteemed on the continent."

Despite the wartime depletion of the dental staff, the Faculty of Dentistry has maintained the teaching standards, the scientific research, and the public services at the same level that attracted students from all over the world before the war.

Until the outbreak of the war, Australia especially was regularly represented by groups of fifteen or more students. In 1942 the first woman of India to hold the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery was so recognized by the University of Toronto.

During the past decade three members of the faculty have made trips to outlying regions and peeped into thousands of throats in an investigation of dental conditions among primitive people in northern Canada. Dr. Roy Ellis, Director of the Dental Clinic, visited Aklavik in 1938 for this purpose. Then, in 1940, Dr. W. D. P. Cavanagh visited Labrador, Greenland, and Ellis Island to make a study of the natives.

Further field work includes an effort by the Faculty of Dentistry to keep the general practitioners, especially in rural areas, up-to-date with the latest advances in dental science. In connection with this type of work, Dean Mason issued a statement for The Varsity: "Post-graduate facilities have always been available in this faculty, not only for individual instruction but also for groups in organized courses. The faculty desires to meet the post-war needs of dentists for refresher and post-graduate courses although the facilities in the building are overcrowded."

The Dental Infirmary provides economical dental service to the general public and such special services as free dental care to the Royal Norwegian Air Force, the boys' clubs formed by the Kiwanis organization, and to British evacuees in this country.

Aware of the need for the study of dental problems on a broader scale and the provision of dental services on a community basis, the faculty has established a Department of Dental Public Health which will probably reach increasing importance in the fast-changing world of social and political reforms.

An interesting sidelight concerns the fact that Dr. Mason, in collaboration with Dr. Allan Roy Dufos, recorded the dental history of the Dionne quintuplets. The dental care of the children was the responsibility of the faculty. The quintuplets, as wards of the state, were given the best scientific care available, and it is to the credit of the faculty that it was entrusted with the children's dental health.

Camera Club Notes Growth

By Israel Shapostovitz

Thirteen years have passed since the Hart House Camera Club dug its way underground, and during that time the club has gradually developed into one of the top ranking photographic organizations in Canada.

Professor A. F. Coventry, who recalls the day when the club only had 30 members, can now view with satisfaction its enrolment of over a hundred undergraduates and graduates.

Although most of these men usually carry on photography only as a hobby, and devote their time to their chosen profession, several of them have become professional photographers, and are today well-known camera-men, both here and abroad. There is Randolph MacDonald, who has specialized on portraiture; Roy Kemp and Herb Knott, who are now with the Royal Navy. The members include Mr. Sangster, who did some excellent record picture taking on the Mediterranean. All these men were active during their undergraduate years on the campus, a few doing work for The Varsity as well as for other publications.

The purpose of the club during these years, however, has not been to train professional camera-men but rather to give the amateur an opportunity of developing his hobby. Just as the standard of work done by the members has improved a great deal since 1932, similarly the average enthusiast finds that his technique becomes of a higher quality during his undergraduate and graduate years.

What does the future hold? Well, there has continually been talk about the club obtaining a studio, and this is not as impossible as it seems. Increase in equipment and facilities are not only possible but highly probable.

Any time's SHOPPING TIME!

THE PAST COUPLE of Spring days are sending girls by the hundred with a business look in their eyes as shopping for the new suits and topcoats which can be worn together or separately. Northway's Fashionland is one of the favorite spots, where suits and topcoats of the Bromleigh standard in letter-perfect fashion dictation are gay in solid pastels, or classic in grey, plain or striped, or sophisticated in black or navy. Better shop before the "wolverines" pick over the best!

AND LADY LET US remind you that if you just can't make the grade financially for a new ensemble, a good new handbag and gloves are going to go a long way toward building up your present costume's la, meaning "If" quotient. The Evangeline Shops have the spring fashion ruling well in hand and as always you'll find yourself face to face with assorted inspiration in the accessory field once you get inside the door. The Evangeline Shops are the shops where the requirements of the college girl, whether they run to sports clothes or handbags, are a merchandising "must!"

A GREAT MANY PEOPLE have had a mild attack of "shoulder pain" this season, doubtless, our M.D. says, because on warmish days coats have been worn open or even thrown over the shoulders, sleeves flapping; it's not serious but can be annoying, "specially when it hits the right shoulder and results in weakening the writing hand problem. Pat Sloan's Liniment, on around the shoulder, upper spine and neck; it warms up the area like magic, sends circulation dashing in to combat the "tied up" feeling, gives the painful muscles a nice, deep-rooted feeling of security.

THE DU BARRY BEAUTY CAKE comes in an attractive plastic case. Slip it into handbag or satchel. It can be applied by moistening with water or skin-freshener. Covers freckles or slight blemishes like magic, and in addition gives a smooth, all-over foundation for a perfect make-up. Amidst the loudest fanfare in the history of University College, the executive for the year 1945-46 was ushered into office. Ingenuity was taxed by the various candidates in their efforts to outdo each other within their limited means.

Two hundred odd men students trooped to the polling booth while a like proportion of women voters also exercised their franchise.

The results for the men's Literary and Athletic Society executive are as follows:

Pres., Gordon McCaffrey; Lit. director, Ed. Safarian; athletic director, Gerry Rafelman; social director, Carmen Guild (ac.); publicity director, Bert Wilkes; Lit. secretary, Murray Still. Fourth year pres., Alec Siegal; third year pres., Sid Jourard; second year pres., Ross McLean.

S.A.C. APPOINTS NEW EDITORS OF TORONTONENSIS & VARSITY

By Frank Rasky

Elected by the staff of the Undergraduate newspaper and his appointment ratified by the Students' Administrative Council, W. Hugh Kenner, 22-year-old U.C. senior in English Language and Literature, has been appointed editor-in-chief of The Varsity for 1945-46.

Editor of the current volume of Torontonensis, Kenner, who will take over his new position next year while proceeding towards his M.A. degree in the School of Graduate Studies, is the first student ever to have edited both the S.A.C.'s major publications. Born in Peterborough, Ontario, he attended Queen Mary public school and the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, of which his father was headmaster for 35 years. Here he was active in the Camera Club, edited the school yearbook, The Echoes, and founded out a weekly column for the Peterborough Review.

"That column was my apprenticeship for the Champus Cat," says Kenner. "It taught me to discard my literary inhibitions at will."

Entering University College in the fall of 1941 with a Reuben Wells Leonard scholarship, which he still holds, Kenner became known as "the lean man with the camera." He was virtual co-editor of the U.C. Undergraduate, not only helping editor Bob Phillips to adorn the magazine with satiric verse.

In second year, he became staff photographer for almost every campus publication. His pictures appeared in The Undergraduate, The Varsity, Torontonensis, and the University of Toronto Monthly.

Still photographer for these publications in his third year, he unlimbered his literary bent as assistant feature editor of The Varsity. The high spot of this term, he recalls, was when he gave literary birth to Dr. Aloysius P. Q. R. McGeech, the Terror of the Underworld, whose sleuthing escapades in the Champus Cat column appeared over the signature "Woo."

The fabulous detective continued his Cat adventures this year when Kenner became The Varsity feature editor, also acting as editor of Torontonensis and undergraduate correspondent for the University of Toronto Monthly.

Next year's editorial policy? "I promise nothing," says Kenner, "because policies have a habit of going astray. But we should be able to raise our standards of accuracy and of literacy."

By Frank Rasky

First freshman in the University's history to receive a major S.A.C. editorial appointment, 21-year-old Evan Ross ("Bud") McLean, Pass Arts student at University College, was appointed last Monday as editor of the 1946 yearbook, Torontonensis.

Bud was born in Guelph, Ont., but attended public school in Brantford, where he became a newspaperman before passing his entrance exams. In Senior Fourth he became publisher, reporter, and pressman of a mimeographed tabloid called East End Expositor Junior. Collecting ads from local merchants, he put out 300 copies at 3 cents apiece and cleared $75.00.

At Brantford Collegiate he continued his journalistic career, editing for three years a class journal, The Informer. The publication featured a Winchellesque column, "Meandering with McLean."

In four year he was exchange editor, and in final year editor-in-chief of the school magazine, The Brantford Hello. The same year he contributed a collegiate column to the city daily, The Brantford Expositor, where he was disguised as "The School Mouse" and signed the column, "anonymously yours."

In the summer holidays he was hired as announcer and continuity writer for Brantford's station CKPC. Evenings, he acted as what is known to the trade as a "disc jockey," accompanying the playing of records with a flow of patter "and, if possible, wit."

In 1941 he took his first fling into professional journalism, becoming an Expositor cub reporter. Bud also became the paper's staff photographer — "They gave me a camera and told me what buttons to push."

Then followed a seven-month stint on the London Free Press, where he interviewed celebrities ranging from Jack Sharkey to E. B. Jolliffe. His fondest memory is the photograph he took of an army dignitary examining a tea-tray, wherein was clearly reflected his prominent, bulbous nose.

Enlisting with the Signal Corps in 1943, Bud "saw the noses of many more brass-hats" until ill-health forced his honorable discharge last May.

During the past year Bud has been a Varsity feature writer and associate editor of Torontonensis. He promises solemnly that when he becomes editor of the yearbook next year it won't contain a word of poetry.

Students Hurt; Buildings Damaged In Arts-Science Riots at Queen's

By Peggy Bates and Dot Harley
Kingston—(CUP)—Three students at Queen's University were injured in a riot which occurred there early this week when 500 Science students clashed with 100 Arts students.

Newspaper accounts of the mix-up, which began Friday and lasted through Monday, were greatly exaggerated, the Queen's Journal stated. The outbreak was only the usual interfaculty squabble, it said. The Alma Mater society executive issued a statement to the Kingston Press Tuesday denying the accuracy of the accounts. The A.M.S. also announced that all those persons already responsible, and those responsible for any future outbreaks should they occur, are liable to expulsion.

The disturbances started Friday morning after the word "plumbers" had been found painted in red (Arts color) on Science buildings the previous night.

I won't resort to platitudes to express my gratitude but Soph President McLEAN thanks all those who exercised their franchise up his alley.

Scientists blamed the Artsmen and invaded the Arts building, carrying off a piano. Arbitration took place and Arts and Science officials then reached complete accord, and the matter was believed settled.

Hostilities flared up again when the Medical house was smeared with blue and yellow paint and damaged to the extent of one hundred dollars early Sunday. A Science club room was also found painted blue.

Incensed Scientists raided the Arts building en masse at 10 a.m. Monday, clipping the hair of outnumbered Artsmen and smearing yellow paint on their chests.

J. Trevor Morgan, Arts '47, who suffered foot injuries and bruises; Andrew Kuivassier, Arts '48, who received injuries in the right eye, requiring several stitches; and Mary Black, Arts, were admitted to hospital. Their conditions were not regarded as serious by hospital attendants.

Principal R. C. Wallace did not interfere. The entire matter was left in the hands of the student government.

Many Innovations of Cody's Presidency Taken for Granted Today; New Nursing Course, Museum Re-opening Earliest

EXTENSION FEATURED

By Ernst R. Deutsch
During the last 13 years great strides have been taken to expand the University, not only as far as new buildings are concerned, but also in widening the curriculum, with the addition of new courses, departments and schools. When looking at the wide scope of study subjects now taught at the University, we find that much of what we are taking for granted today has actually been introduced during Dr. H. J. Cody's presidency.

During the season of 1932-33 the most remarkable change was a new three-year course in Nursing instead of the former two-year course, and the announcement that the attendance in the Department of Extension courses had grown to at least 5,000. 1933-34, however, saw considerable activity, for in that season the Royal Ontario Museum was reopened, and Bishop White had 50,000 books sent from Peking. There was also a new department—Engineering Physics—added to S.P.S., and a chair was established in Fine Art.

In 1934-35 the Fine Art Department was established and a chair in Geography set up under Dr. Griffith Taylor.

The main innovation of the session 1935-36 was a first-year course in "Social and Philosophical Studies," which was to be the basis for specialization in Modern History, Philosophy, Political Science and Economics, Psychology and Sociology. The honor course of English and History was separated into one in English and one in History; a pass course was set up in Fine Art, a new course in Biology and Physics, to deal principally with modern refrigeration was established, and a graduate course in Chinese Archaeology approved by the Senate.

1936-37 saw a new honor course in Music leading to a B.A. degree. The course in Optometry was lengthened to three years, and a course in "Mining Geology" introduced.

The following session was varied in its scope, and it saw a new course adopted on "Public and Business Administration," in the Department of Economics and Political Science. In that year there were 6,712 students in the Extension courses alone, and it was estimated that upwards of 25,000 persons in Ontario were reached through this department's 182 lectures.

In 1938-39 Sociology was separated from Anthropology and made a sub-department of Economics and Political Science; the School of Hygiene held its first course on Public Health Engineering.

Highlight of the 1939 session was the new Physical Health course under Dr. E. S. Ryerson, leading to the Bachelor of P.H.E. In that year the Vatican in Rome granted the new institute of Mediaeval Studies, in St. Michael's College, the power to confer theology degrees, making it a pontifical institute.

In the 1940-41 session, the School of Law was established and a chair of Chinese Studies, under Bishop White, announced. The Department of Social Science now called itself "School of Social Work." Radio and Mathematics classes were held for the armed forces.

The following session witnessed the establishment of a B.Sc. degree in the Nursing and the Doctor Juris for the recent School of Law. Sub-departments of Virus Studies and Public Health Administration, the first such divisions to be set up in Canada, were created by the School of Hygiene.

The School of Chinese Studies was founded in 1942-43. That season also saw an honor course in Modern History set up and the Master of Laws established. The School of Practical Science had a record enrolment of 1,385.

Finally, last fall, the Department of Aeronautics was added to the Faculty of Applied Science. The present session also witnessed an extension of the M. and P. course into Mathematics, Physics and Chemistry.

"Lay Hands on Eminent Men." President Counsels; Dozens of Visiting Lecturers Have Lived Last Thirteen Years

LIST IS ENDLESS

By Reg Herman

"Whenever you can lay hands on a great scholar, take advantage of it, for even if he gives only one lecture, it gives students the chance to see a great man," stated President H. J. Cody in an interview with The Varsity a few days ago.

In his first annual report in June of 1933, President Cody wrote: "The University as a whole profits from the visits of noted scholars and scientists. . . . We are thus kept in touch with the latest developments in science and scholarship in all parts of the world." And so that year, the University was visited by a long list of eminent people, among whom were the poet laureate of England, John Masefield, "who dined with the students in the Great Hall of Hart House"; Sir Josiah Stamp, Director of the Bank of England, who spoke on "The Failure of Democracy in Economic Affairs"; and Dr. C. U. Ariens Kappers, Director of the Central Institute for Brain Research in Amsterdam.

In 1933-34 students heard lectures from many world-famous personages, varying from President H. R. Mac-

HUNDREDS OF VOLUMES

By Ian Alger

"Books are the treasured wealth of the world, the fit inheritance of generations and nations."

Throughout the years, this statement of Thoreau has proven true, and in no place has it been more apparent than at universities. For the universities have been the hubs of thought around which the scholars and thinkers of every country have gathered to develop their theories and to present their ideas.

The University of Toronto has been fortunate in the number of its learned associates who have through the years put down their ideas and observations on paper so that future generations could derive benefit from them.

When Dr. Cody made his first report to the University as President in 1933 there were 852 members on the staff. Of those members, over 200 in that year had written on some phase of the work in each Faculty. It was in that year that Prof. Pelham Edgar wrote "The Art of the Novel," a discussion of the novel from 1700 until 1900. Two years later, W. S. Wallace, who is still librarian, (Continued on page 8)

All School Departments Divide Research Grants

Grants Totalling $11,000 Distributed to Aid Research Topics Include Soil Mechanics, Heat Transfer, Town Planning

BENEFITS INCALCULABLE

By Mike O'Brien

When Dr. Cody took office as President of the University in 1932 there was a grant of approximately $1,760 dollars available for research work at the Faculty of Applied Science. As Dr. Cody leaves the presidential chair, that grant has been increased to more than five times its original value.

In 1944-45 the School of Engineering Research had grants totalling more than $11,000 to distribute amongst the various departments in the Faculty to carry on research which in some cases started more than twenty-five years ago.

It was admitted by members of the Faculty that the benefits to industry from the research work done in the Faculty were far-reaching, but as to the actual value in terms of dollars and cents, that was a matter of conjecture. Nor could any mundane value be possibly put on the results of the war investigations which have been done or are in the process of solution. After the war, the complete story will be told. However, the following facts might prove of interest:

In the Civil Department a great deal of research has been done on the details of riveted and welded connections by Dean Young and Prof. W. J. London. Prof. Gillespie investigated welding and reinforced concrete design, while at the present time Prof. R. F. Leggett is actively involved in Soil Mechanics.

Prof. H. E. Haultain, with regard to Mining Research, said: "T. R. Buchanan is making a study of the defects and shortcomings of the Infrascizer, which is a piece of research apparatus designed in the department for size analysis of fine powders."

Professor E. H. Allcut, head of the Mechanical Department, has been actively engaged in investigations of heat transfer such as in concealed radiators, insulations, etc., for more than fifteen years.

An important feature of the School of Architecture has been the rise of the importance of town planning. When Dr. Cody took office, this subject had little or no place in the curriculum, but the picture has changed entirely in the interim, said Prof. H. H. Madill.

With the advent of the lightweight plane, many problems relating to its chief constituent, plywood, have arisen. (Continued on page 8)

Future of University Foretold by Dr. Cody

By Barbara Jones

"The Canadian universities will continue more and more to train leaders and to try to diffuse in society a high level of intelligence and appreciation of the best, and in doing so will make a contribution to the sane progress of democracy," President Cody stated when asked about the future of the University.

"The modern university," he continued, "is trying to serve the public. There was a time when the university regarded itself as being on some remote Olympus watching the struggle below . . . now it strives to be the servant of the public."

"We are more anxious that our students and graduates be of still higher quality than that there should be any great increase in their numbers. A university tries to do two things. It seeks to provide special advanced training for those able to receive it and also to provide a good general education for a larger number," explained the President. "A university necessarily has to deal with two groups—a select few, and the citizen above the average who will be better fitted to discharge his duties as a citizen."

"The Pass Course should be more highly regarded and taken more seriously by both staff and students," Dr. Cody went on. "This might be done either by modifying the courses or by raising the standards."

"We must always keep in mind the distinct feature of university teaching as opposed to industrial teaching. We must see the fundamental principles on which teaching is based and lay emphasis on these principles and theories. A university ought never to go too far in becoming a technological institution," the President pointed out.

"Probably in the immediate future there will be a swing to practical subjects," Dr. Cody said, "but the humanities will never be entirely neglected and eventually there will be a swing back. But they will have to be taught in the most interesting way possible in order to hold their ground."

"In regard to returning war veterans," the President added, "already the University has made detailed plans and preparatory classes have been set up in the old Normal School by the provincial government, which takes from the University the burden of such preparation. The real problem arises from those who have never been to university."

"The three important requirements in preparing for the service men are accommodation, equipment, and instruction," continued Dr. Cody. "We shall do our best to fill these requirements but, frankly, they present a very difficult problem to solve; the equipment for laboratory subjects particularly. The government has promised to let out of the services those whom we ask for as instructors," he concluded.

Minority Story Related Using 'Imaginary Letters'

By Bobs Flint

"What chance is there for equality amongst people when there is so little real understanding between them?" queried Professor Ray Birdwhistell in his "Letter from Sosu," broadcast last Thursday night. "Our smug feeling of broadmindedness in 'putting up' with people of other races which we call tolerance is no substitute for this understanding," he continued, "and does nothing to alleviate the friction between the English-speaking people and the racial minorities in this country. This he emphasized by reference to Sosu's experiences in this land of so-called equality. Sosu is the fictitious Polynesian boy Professor Birdwhistell uses to illustrate the difficulties of adjustment facing newcomers to this country."

"Racial prejudice and distrust is taught and not inherited," he added, "and this is evidenced by our many jokes concerning our minorities. This type of humor becomes vicious when passed off as knowledge, and when it tries to give a typical representation of a race by making fun of its differences."

Five Varsity Teams This Season; Intercollegiate Games Add Spice

Trackmen Maintain Two Years' Spotless Record; Navy Costs Hockey Squad League Leadership; Five Wins, Four Losses for Basketball Blues; Volleyball Squad Triumphs 3-1; Swimmers Victorious as Competition Collapses

ALL FIVE RECORDS MARK FOR FUTURE

By Mickey Michasiw

The Blues' victory in the Telegraphic Meet on March 1 brought a sudden cessation for all-Varsity sport for the current semester. Surprisingly, five Varsity teams were fielded during the last year, an increase of two over the previous outing.

The Blue and White season was initiated in the fall session when the trackmen outdistanced a comparatively weak McGill squad in the first correspondence meet ever held. Bill Kerr took this opportunity to tie the existing high jump record set by R. O. Brett in 1940 at 5'10".

A week later they swept to a convincing victory over the O.A.C. representatives by a 96-25 count. Cam Burgess was again the big noise as he paved the way with three firsts and a second. Interfaculty records again fell before School's Kerr, while James smashed the two-mile record.

Thus Hec Phillips' charges added two wins to their spotless record as they have gone undefeated in two years of subdued competition.

... hockey ...

A New team was added this season to the all-Varsity picture as the hockeyists were given their first opportunity in four years of displaying their wares. A league containing Victory Aircraft, Navy, and Watson's A.C. was formed, and six Friday night double-headers were run off.

Ace Bailey's lads ran into considerable trouble and were eliminated during league play although their season's record of three wins and three losses speaks for itself. In all, they scored 22 goals and allowed the opposing teams to plant 21 counters into their well-guarded nets.

The downfall of the hockey team can be directly attributed to the fellows from H.M.C.S. York, who handily defeated them twice. The even split with Victory and the two victories garnered at the expense of the luckless Watsons were not enough to overcome this handicap.

HOCKEY "BLUES"—1944-45

... basketball ...

For the second straight year Mac McCutcheon was again at the helm of the cage squad. They started off in an auspicious manner by defeating the league-leading Tip Top team of the City League by a convincing 61-33 score. The airmen from the Release Centre were next to face defeat as the Blues edged out a close 41-40 victory.

The first Athletic Night brought Up-lands R.C.A.F., who could do little to stop the winning ways of the Blues. The

Vic Defeats P. & H. E. For Volleyball Crown

In a close, hard-fought tussle for the Women's Volleyball championship of the University, Vic nosed out P.H.E. B team by a score of 38-30.

The score stood at 18-17 for P.H.E. at half-time, but soon after the beginning of the second half, Vic pulled into the lead and held it for the remainder of the game, despite strong measures by Mickey Barnett and Tracy Stinson.

Vic's stars were Rowena Smith and Bonnie Bell. The game was fast and all shots were carefully placed.

SPEAKING OF SPORT

By Mickey Michasiw

THOSE DRUMS AGAIN . . .

What is disliked by the masses needs inquiring into; so also does that which they have a preference for.—CONFUCIUS.

With the wistful absent-mindedness of the hundredth issue, we again gingerly accept the task of beating the old intercollegiate drum. Whilst monotony has crept up on us and our predecessors since the suspension of intercollegiate conflict, that willingness is still there, regardless of the result or lack of it.

Whilst the complete return of intercollegiate competition is the ultimate requirement, this is the proper time to attain the primary requisites. One was accomplished during the past winter when blue-and-white-clad players were again permitted to use the Arena for the first time since the ultimatum of 1940. The success of this venture cannot be questioned even though the monetary element was a slight reminder of the depression.

To the onlooker the prime requisite now, in lieu of an intercollegiate program, is an all-Varsity football club. The probabilities for such an organization are debatable.

The fact that a hockey team was organized and blessed reassures us that the governing powers of our athletics supervise with a much kinder eye than it would appear at first glance. And so, the probability of a football team next fall is not beyond our wildest dreams or expectations.

LOUDER AND LOUDER . . .

If you are planning for ten years, plant trees;

If you are planning for a hundred years, plant men.—Chinese saying.

The accomplishments of this proposed team would be twofold. Firstly, the well-rested students' clamor for a fall football diet would be better filled. How much more inspiring it would be to sit in the stands cheering for a Varsity team, rather than from the confines of the student section at an O.R.F.U. fixture!

Secondly, the formation of such a team would be the nucleus of an intercollegiate team. Western, McGill, and Queen's have all been ready to step into actual conflict, while the Varsity teams are yet in the infant stage.

Little is publicly known about just where university officials stand on intercollegiate sport. Whether they have already organized for an immediate return to competition on conclusion of hostilities is a question that can be answered only by a select few. The program they are to follow when the opportunity does arise is quite vague. Perhaps there is more than reaches the ear and eye.

It was only a week ago that the Interprovincial Rugby Union met and discussed the possibilities of resuming play this fall. After due consideration they came forward with the conclusion that should the European war end before the end of the summer the four teams would immediately organize for competition. Here is a case where it would be better to follow than lead.

After all this clamoring we are beginning to doubt the power of the Press. And so, fellows, the best of luck.

Poll Selects Star Pucksters

By Oswald (Al) Cowan

The personnel comprising this year's all-star hockey teams show that the Varsity team contained the best in local hockey talent. All the players selected for the two all-star teams played for the Blues during the season. However, there were twelve other players, not on the Big Team, whose labors in the obscurity of interfaculty competition earned them nominations for an all-star spot. In this group, Davis, Clare and Kaufman, all of Sr. S.P.S., and O'Malley, of Vic, received considerable support.

The highest vote was polled by Doug Davidson of U.C. I, who was the almost unanimous selection for goal. McCombe of Sr. S.P.S. was an equally popular choice for the understudy role. Bryan of Meds I and Appleton of Trinity were the only other netminders to be given consideration.

Bill Wade, U.C.'s bodychecking expert, nosed out Red Shand of Sr. School for the right defence position. Harvey Bain, also from U.C., was a heavy favorite over his team-mate Ian Hart for the left rearguard job. This foursome were the Blues' regulars during the season.

Allocating the forwards to a definite spot posed a bit of a problem as some of the boys have been playing in different positions during the season. All three of the first line men, for example, received votes both for centre and for wing spots.

The following are the teams as chosen by the interested managers, referees and sportswriters on the campus:

First Team—Goal, Davidson (U.C.); defence, Wade (U.C.) and Bain (U.C.); centre, Lawler (Meds I); right wing, Murray (Dents); left wing, Andison (Sr. S.P.S.).

Mulock Finals Favor Artsmen

Though confined this fall, as in the last four, to the Intramural schedule, rugby at U. of T. continued to flourish mightily. The calibre of the playing displayed and the size of the crowds attending the finals augur a bright grid picture for the first post-war autumn.

The climax of the fall rugby season was the upset scored by University College when they defeated Senior School 3-1 in the Mulock Cup final on November 23. The S.P.S. aggregation was reputed to be so strong that they were practically invincible, and when U.C. walked off the field with their first rugby championship in 23 years no one was more surprised than U.C. themselves. Their whole team turned in standout performances that day, and they really deserved to overthrow the powerful but disorganized School outfit.

The semi-finals brought together Senior Meds and U.C. in one game, and Senior School and Vic in the other. U.C. were lucky to elude a 7-5 win over the doctors in their contest, as Meds showed plenty of power, but poor organization. That same Senior School powerhouse showed its effectiveness to good advantage in the other semi-final by trouncing a game Vic outfit 19-0.

Several other thrills were evidenced before the semi-finals were reached. The minor feud between St. Mike's and Vic brought forth quite a bit of interest in Group III, with a near riot being waged in one of their games. The highly favored St. Mike's squad did not show a wide enough variety of plays in their offensive, and in spite of a very strong line succumbed before their group rivals 8-0 in the final decisive meeting.

Group II rivalry saw U.C. pitted against a well-coached Junior School team for the single play-off berth. Junior Meds were unfortunately the other members of this group, due to a false pre-season strength prediction, and proceeded to be whitewashed every time out. U.C. eliminated S.P.S. Juniors 11-5.

OF CABBAGES AND THINGS

Our swan song brings us to the oft-mentioned Women's Hart House. We are not advocates of the "Women in Hart House" party, we have more ambitious dreams. Dreams which will become a reality in the post-war U. of T. Utopia. President Cody has assured us that the Women's Hart House is one of the first things to come.

But there are difficulties. The big question is that of location, and several sites have been suggested. That receiving most prominence in rumors of the past, is the present site of Holwood House, on Queen's Park Crescent, south of Wymilwood, a building now occupied by the W.R.C.N.S. As a matter of fact, most plans suggested mention of Holwood House for the "Union half" of the proposed building.

The term "Union half" is being used to denote the part of the House other than the "for women only" gym question. Here it is proposed that there should be common rooms where men can come to spend a little time, and a Tuck Shop for men and women.

We would strongly urge that a building be built adequate to the demands of the Women Undergraduates for many years to come, not an excuse which would only be useful for five, or not more than ten years. If a more central position could be found for it, either over near St. George Street, or near the U.C. back campus (what a heresy) it would be an even greater success. A makeshift will not do. Maybe some blue fairy will contribute the necessary money to make this dream a reality. Please remember girls, that if this is pointed out enough and strongly enough in the next few years, the effort will be made to contribute the best to the future of co-eds.

As far as mentioning athletic equipment, anyone who couldn't see that something drastic should be done, is beyond redemption or cure, so we aren't even mentioning it (hardly).

AND THAT'S ALL

Well girls, it's up to you. And if you want next year's athletic program to be as successful as has the past year, and it has been of the best, go out and vote for the Club Executives, on Monday at 4.30 at the Household Science Building, and, if you have a Directorate vote, today at 4.00 at the same place. Good luck to those exams!

'THE PAST CALLS'

Now that the modern scene has been surveyed in all its complexity, lets go back to the beginning of Dr. Cody's term of office . . . all the females were interested in ONE THING—INTERCOLLEGIATE SPORT. Nostalgia sweeps over us at the mere thought—they were indeed the days! From 1932 until Intercollegiate competition was cancelled, Varsity women were definitely in there punching! There were Varsity teams in Basketball, Hockey and Tennis. The famous "Bronze Baby" Cup of Basketball got dizzier and dizzier as she visited Varsity, McGill, Varsity, Queen's, Varsity, Western, ad nauseam. In 1933 Badminton began. Our Hockey team was in a City loop, and a bitter Sportsman of that year bewailed the fact that Bobby Rosenfield, Woman's Sports Ed for the Globe, did us out of a championship by her superlative playing for Toronto Ladies.

Baseball, our new Major sport, had a hard time keeping its head above water in those early days, and in 1936 a letter to the Editor requesting a Varsity Baseball Team met with the proverbial cold shoulder . . . it seems the Editor didn't like Baseball! The next year it was still on the outs and the column filled up with info about the Women's Hart House, and, what was nearer and dearer to the feminine heart, NEW UNIFORMS. 1939 was our bumper year, bringing with it 5 Intercollegiate championships and the War with its restrictions on travelling. Telegraphic meets and women's participation in Athletic Nites were dodges adopted to keep that old Varsity spirit alive. In 1941 Interfaculty sports—the only thing left to us, were boosted by the addition of a new faculty, P.H.E., which livened the scene considerably.

'GROWING PAINS'

All this time that little gal "The Sportswoman" was growing along with our sport world. She began humbly as a single-column, initialled-only, write-up and grew steadily through a by-line column to its present double-column, campus-wide magnificence. The Sports Eds themselves have, in the past proved to be no mean Athletics—Win Flanagan, Betsy Gowan, Beryl Pollock, and Betsy Mosbaugh, to mention a few, won themselves "T's".

hasn't prevented various characters from doing exceptionally well at academics—for a glance at the files will reveal that some of our top-notch athletes are now staff members—Jean Davey, Jessie Grey, both of Meds and Betty Edwar and Freddie Baxter of the Physical Education staff, to mention only a few.

The sporting activities of University women have branched out considerably too, during this period. In 1932 there were only three sports being played at the old Alma Mammy—Basketball, Hockey and Tennis, but by the time 1945 rolled around something new had been definitely added. There was basketball, volleyball, baseball, skiing, fencing, figure-skating, tennis, badminton, bowling, swimming, etc, etc, far on into the night.

Sports, lor' huv 'em, have been and always will be with us as long as there are gals at this seat of knowledge. If it were otherwise it wouldn't be dear old U. of T.

score was 65-45. Then came that memorable game with Wayne University. Much to the surprise and embarrassment of local prognosticators, the Tartars did not walk all over McCutcheon's crew and were lucky to emerge with the 49-46 win.

York Belting plastered a weird defeat on the home team, after which West End bit the dust by a 47-39 margin. Then came a disastrous game with Trenton R.C.A.F., in which the Blues hit a seasonal low both in performance and in scoring. The final score of that game was 32-27 for the lightly-taken visitors.

As a climax, Assumption College defeated the Blues in the most thrilling game of the year. The 45-39 setback left the squad with the seasonal record of five wins and four losses.

. . . swimming . . .

For the first time in history, a four-way telegraphic meet was held. Simultaneously, swimmers at Hart House, at McGill, at Queen's, and at Western plunged into the unknown waters in a true intercollegiate competition.

The Blues avenged the defeat suffered at the hands of McGill a year ago by noosing out the Redmen 29-27. Each took three firsts, but the winning margin was attained in the relays. Queen's and Western failed to provide the expected competition.

RESEARCH . .

and in the Chemical Department many of these are being solved. In past years important work has been done for the silk industry, in textile colors, and also in the explosives field.

The most important piece of apparatus which has come from the Electrical Department of late years has been the "Automatic Frequency Regulator," the brain child of Prof. H. W. Price and Mr. C. K. Duff, of the H.E.P.C.

In the field of Ceramics, the most interesting recent development was "Glass for Artificial Eyes." At the behest of the Department of Pensions and National Health, Prof. R. J. Montgomery undertook the job of finding suitable optical glass to make eyes for the veterans of this war.

In the Mining Geology Department, many gold and iron ore deposits have been investigated; much work in the development of the Steep Rock deposits was done by the department.

Finally is the newly-created Department of Aeronautical Engineering. Under the guidance of Professor London, this department has emerged from the "bottling" stage and is now involved in the problem of building up an extensive laboratory. At the beginning of the war the core of the department was lifted out almost en masse when the government required the services of Professors London, Lazier, and McIntyre for technical posts.

an at the University, began work on "The Encyclopedia of Canada," of which he was general editor.

We can in this short sketch mention only a few of the hundreds of outstanding works which have been produced. But we would like to recall that Prof. Ashley of Trinity College was editor of "Reconstruction in Canada," being a series of lectures delivered in 1942 in co-operation with the Department of University Extension. Humorous works were included in the list as well, as evidenced by Prof. J. Robbin's popular work, "The Incomplete Angler," which was published only last year.

Prof. E. J. Pratt has made an important contribution to Canadian literature with the publication in 1914 of his "Complete Works," containing all his then-published poems.

U. of T. Athletes
Are Outstanding

By Sid Jourdard

Since 1932, when Dr. H. J. Cody became President of the University, Varsity athletes have won glory for themselves and for their "alma mater" both on the playing field and on the field of battle.

Today, more than 60 letter winners, from every sport, are on active service and, scattered throughout the armed forces, are enough men to form all-star rugby teams, Olympic swim units, champion basketball teams, track teams, gymnastic teams, and soccer teams of considerable merit.

Bob Ishister, who graduated in 1937, played Varsity intercollegiate sports for three consecutive years and made the headlines as a star for the Toronto Argonauts. Today he is bucking the line presented by heavy seas in the Royal Canadian Navy.

Lou Somers, champion rugby player, was on the last of the intercollegiate teams to play for Varsity; he met death in the same spirit as he met his football opponents and his name has been rendered immortal by Professor Lorne T. Morgan, who dedicated his classic satire, "Homo the Sap," to Lou.

"Long Jaw" Sinclair, one of the wildest backfield men that Varsity has ever seen, won awards not only in that sport but in hockey as well. A long undergraduate career in Arts as well as in Meds enabled him to play on championship teams for eight consecutive years.

Though perhaps not so publicized as team-participants, but equally meritorious, Gerald Clawson set a Canadian record for the 200-yard breast stroke event back in 1940. Since then he has been doing perhaps less swimming in the Royal Canadian Artillery.

Another international star is Larry O'Connor, who, in the years previous to 1938, won the Senior Intercollegiate Track championship. Then, in 1938, he was sent as Canadian representative to the British Empire games held in Australia.

The Brown twins, G. W. and W. H., have their names emblazoned on the record board of Hart House indoor track. After their spectacular record here, they set out together to set similar records while serving in the Air Force.

J. "Bobby" Coulter was on the junior intercollegiate rugby team which won the Dominion championship back in 1935. After three more years on the senior intercollegiate team, he graduated to further stardom on the Toronto Argonauts, and currently is coaching teams at North Toronto Collegiate.

LECTURES . .

Cracken of Vassar College, who spoke on "Education for Women," to Mr. Philip J. Noel Baker, secretary to the President of the Disarmament Conference of 1932-33, who spoke on "The Next War."

In the following years noted speakers were brought to the University, including the Right Honorable Earl Baldwin, former Prime Minister of Great Britain, inaugurator of the series of Sir Robert Falconer lectures; Dr. William Lyon Phelps, Professor Emeritus of Yale University; Senator Claude Pepper of Florida; Mr. Jan Masaryk, Foreign Minister of the Czechoslovak Republic; and Colonel George Drew.

In 1942 the first Banting Memorial lecture was delivered by Dr. C. J. Mackenzie, acting president of the National Research Council in Ottawa, on "The Life and Spirit of Banting." Since then the annual lectures have been given by Dr. E. P. Joslin, Professor Emeritus of Medicine at Harvard University, Dr. J. R. Williams of the University of Rochester, and Dr. C. H. Best, head of the University Department of Physiology.

The past year has been highlighted by the visit of Lieutenant-General Sir William G. S. Dobbie, former Governor of Malta.

Will the contemptible individual who took my brown o'coat. Tuesday, from outside Hart House Library, please put it back where he found it or else I'll find it myself and pin his ears back.
